NEW ORLE... ...GATE. ...TE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A CO.

...E IX.—NUMBER 46. ...WHOLE NUMBER 461. ...IN ADVANCE ...AMP ST.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

OTHER REMARKABLE CONVERSION.

BY A MEMBER OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

...other case which I propose to ...is that of ...Turner, of Newberb, Ala. When I first became ...acquainted with him, in 1852, he was fifty years of ...and was living an idle and useless life upon the in... ...of a few thousand dollars which he had acquired ...besides of overseeing. Having no family, he ...out, and was, entirely without employment, he ...his time about the stores and groceries of the vil... ...idle conversation, much of which was directed ...religion. So impure, sensible and wicked was his ...talk to Christians, that but few members of the ...were willing to talk with him on the subject.—He read his Bible daily, and seemed fond of any sort ...religious controversy. The writer often meeting with ...to the family, where he boarded, had several conver... ...with him; but was advised by his friends to avoid ...subject, as they regarded his case as entirely hopeless.

...the summer of that year a remarkable revival of ...prevailed in Newbern, beginning in the Pres... ...Church, and extending through the Baptist, ...to the Methodist Church. There was great inter... ...in the community about religion, but Sam Turner ...unaffected till near the close of the meeting. At ...hearing the bell rung one morning, as he supposed ...preaching, he went to the church and found it was n... ...meeting. Though he had often attended preach... ...he had never before been in a prayer-meeting; ...before he left the house he was so powerfully impressed ...resolved to seek religion. He accordingly made ...agreement with a friend to go to the altar that night, ...when the time came he was the first to lead the way. A ...sensation was produced by his coming forward, ...much interest gathered about him. Being a large ...they gave him a broad area-place to sit in and all ...to work to instruct him and pray for him. But ...was a man more easily influenced than he was then. ...though he had been before as a bear, yet now a little ...could lead him, so soft had his heart become under ...power of divine grace. For several days he sought ...Saviour with tears and penitence, both in public and at... ...Going to his room, he took the Bible and at... ...to read the parable of the prodigal son, and so ...fully did it affect him, that it was some three hours ...he could finish it. On conversing with him, it be... ...evident that his heart had been changed, but with ...natural unbelief he refused to think so, till some time ...the meeting closed, when, being at a prayer-meet... ...the Baptist Church, his soul was made happy, ...with shouts of praise he acknowledged the truth ...he had been converted. Never was a more marked ...change visible in the character and conduct of a man ...than in him. He now devoted himself to reading the ...and religious books, and you could not be in his ...company long before he would open the subject with ...which his soul was filled, and taking his Bible, would ...turn to the sacred pages with an air of delight and rever... ...that showed how deeply he was interested in their ...contents.

Like my other friend, he too became liberal ...charitable in an eminent degree, from having before ...been close and parsimonious. He also felt it his duty to ...become a regular employment: and gathering up his ...means at the end of the year, went to another place and ...settled in the business of merchandizing. But he still ...loved the precious grace that was bestowed upon ...him, and though not having seen him for some time, I ...had the pleasure of hearing his annual contribution of ...thirty dollars rendered in at the last meeting of the ...Missionary Society of the church to which he belongs.—...Many will read this, and go and do likewise?

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THOMPSON FUND—A PROPOSITION.

...object the last Alabama ...of Tuscaloosa not Sister ...female colleges of our ...was not Tuscaloosa— ...to be used in pay... ...of the daughters of the deceased and of ...sisters of the Conference, with the right of ...to discriminate in favor of the more indigent ...as circumstances ...Missionary Institute gets $7,000 of the bequest. This, ...we will be a nucleus around which other donations ...from benevolent and wealthy friends will cluster, un... ...all of our institutions of learning will have the ...put in their hands of paying the board of every ...daughter of the preachers within our bounds.—...Has it now given gratuitously by them all.

...the laymen of our beloved Methodism ever be ...until they place the means of education in the ...of our ministers, to place their children in the ..., and give them such an education as shall ...fit them usefulness in every department of life. I ...sincerely hope not.

...and he toils, labour, and privations of an itinerant ...there is nothing more depressing to the faithful man ...than to feel his inability to educate his sons and ...daughters. They may have to labor hard, live in poor ...circumstances with scarcely means of subsistence, all ...which they can and do bear for the cause of Christ. ...How much they would feel relieved if they had the assu... ...that their children were not to be raised in ignorance? ...Of all the lights in which I have looked at this sub... ...that it is the duty of the Church to place this means ...in the hands of all.

...The Centenary Institute I have had a close intimate ...acquaintance for more than fifteen years. She has done much ...for the Church in providing instruction for all classes ...and the poor. While the wealthy have shared largely ...her blessings, the poor have not been forgotten. Many ...of our young ministers have here been trained for use... ...and are now doing much for God and His cause. ...Many children of our preachers have all had gratuitous ...tuition. Yet there are many of our ministers who ...have not the means of paying board. Brethren of the ...Conference, let us see that the means are provided for all, even ...the poorest ministers shall possess the privilege of placing ...their children on the same footing of their brethren in ...more favored circumstances.

R. A. BAKER,
Pres. Board of Trustees.

...Who will be first to increase this noble fund? ...shall be glad to hear from any one.

Mobile, Dec. 20, 1859. B.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

SAVED FROM THE WATERS.

During the winter of ...22d inst. after the city of Montgomery was commenced, there lived, a distance up the river, three men, to-wit: H, D, and F, who had prepared a large raft of lumber for building purposes. When the river rose sufficiently high they ...on with it to the city of Montgomery. Just after passing ...Ferry the raft unfortunately broke; and parted in the middle, to the water not drowned immediately, being a good swimmer gained the shore, and so escaped death. As the raft gave way, F caught hold the bough of a tree under which he was passing, and hung above the water. This occurred late on the afternoon of Saturday, and about night the clouds broke and the winds set in from the north-west, extremely cold. The direction of the river at that point was such as to give him the full benefit of the chilling blast. Here he hung through the dreary hours of a December night. The next morning a man went into the river bottom to look after his cattle, and hearing the cry of distress, made his way to the shore, and beholding his fellow creature in such distress he listened to the ferry for the means of rescue, but the rapid rise of water during the night had taken off the ferry boat. It was however ascertained that there was a small canoe at the lower end of the small bend in the river: Col. B. immediately sent his wagon across the neck of the bend for the little vessel, which was speedily brought and launched. Now the inquiry arose, who will go to the relief of the man? One could not and another would not. Indeed the undertaking was dangerous, for the vessel was very small and the waters very high. After some delay there was a man volunteered his services in the perilous enterprize: he was a poor man, upon whose daily labor depended the support of a wife and children, but moved by compassion toward his fellow-man, he put his life in his hand and went to his relief. After a severe and dangerous struggle with the angry waters, he succeeded in bringing the sufferer safe to land. F, the rescued man, was one in comfortable circumstances as regarded worldly possessions, but to his deliverer he made no compensation, not even a penny up to this day. The above is a brief narration of facts.

I doubt not but every one who is made acquainted with this history will be disposed to charge F with the basest ingratitude, and yet he who enters up such a judgment is pronouncing sentence against himself. How much more deplorable the condition of man by nature, than of him who hang by the bough of the tree, when exposed to the penalty of a violated law; no eye to pity, no arm to save, at the moment of deep despair. God sent his Son to save the world, and yet how few exhibit the gratitude which becomes creatures rescued from such a death!

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

N. O., J. & G. W. R. R.—"AN OLD CITIZEN."

Mr. Editor—I read an article in your last issue, over the signature of "An Old Citizen," concerning the officers of the above named Railroad Company, which justice demands I should briefly notice. The writer complains of the treatment some of the preachers attending the late Conference at Jackson received, after they had been informed that they should return from the Conference by this road free of charge, and also have the fare they paid going to the Conference refunded to them. Now, while it is true, no doubt, that the order of the Board of Directors was not obeyed in some instances, I am sure it was because of a want of general understanding with conductors, agents, &c., and by no means designed as an indignity—for I have letters from Mr. Calhoun, president, and Mr. Hazel, general superintendent, received directly after the Conference adjourned, saying to me, that the Company was ready to refund to any member of the Conference whatever he had paid for fare on the road, to and from the Conference. Several of the brethren gave me their tickets, with authority to draw the money for them—and all can be re-imbursed who will notify Mr. Bentley D. Hazel, general superintendent, of their whereabouts, and the amount they paid. It is hoped, however, that the small item of postage, &c. will be attended to in the correspondence. As I live upon the line I am willing to serve the brethren in ...

We owe this generous company thanks for their liberality. I regret that the order was not timely and generally understood. I regret more some things said by "An Old Citizen," and have written this to disabuse, as far as possible, the public mind on the subject.

Respectfully, &c.,
H. J. HARRIS,
Sec. of Miss. Conference.

Brookhaven, Miss. Dec. 19, 1859.

THE KING AND THE CRITIC.

"God's Heroes and the World's Heroes," by the Rev. J. H. Gurney, contains the following picture of the sort of copartnership of Frederick and Voltaire:

In peaceable times Frederick's restless spirit found employment in literature, and thinking that his business was rather to enlighten mankind than to master what wiser men had written, he poured forth volume after volume, in French, of indifferent prose and worse poetry. He desired to have a critic at hand to correct what was faulty in his compositions and, as a royal author, coveted for his own the Prince of Critics. So overtures were made to Voltaire to come to Pottsdam, there to be entertained with courtesy and honors suited to his fame, and to Pottsdam in an evil hour he went.

Never did a palace hold two such men, with talents at once so great and so perverted. The king sat up stairs writing his history or dabbling in philosophy, or penning alternately lampoons and compliments, and Voltaire sat down stairs writing his "Age of Louis XIV." Their productions in manuscript were freely communicated to each other, and were profusely commended or freely criticised. For a time Voltaire was pleased and flattered; the king, he said, was as agreeable in society as he was terrible in war. Nothing could be more delightful than this mode of life, or more honorable to philosophy or literature. Voltaire delighted to quiz the poor authors who were admitted like himself to the familiar supper scenes of the palace, and Frederick resented every attack upon men whom he esteemed as prodigies of genius. As occasions of dispute multiplied, the wit could not restrain his pen nor spare his person, so stinging epigrams were written and soon reported to the king. Frederick retaliated in kind; if the weapons were less keen, sarcasm from such a quarter left a rankling wound behind them, and the great master of the mocking art, when too roughly touched, was as irritable and passionate as a spoiled child.

Other grievances followed, and scenes were enacted for the amusement of wits and courtiers which sound ludicrous beyond description, when we consider the pretensions of both parties, and the terms on which they came together. "You are a philosopher," Frederick had written in the letter of invitation, "and I am one also. What more natural than that we should enjoy each other's society? I respect you as my master in eloquence and knowledge; and I love you as a virtuous friend." The king gave his "virtuous friend" an allowance of tea, sugar, chocolate and other articles. The "virtuous friend" complained that they were bad, the purveyors being a ... Frederick replied that, in that case, the ... might do without them; his sublime studies ... interrupted by such trifles. Voltaire was in ... to reimburse himself sold his wax candles, ... when he left the royal apartments for his ... bring one along with him, which was never ... returned.

It seems ... no more than right that men should seize ... Time by the forelock; for the rude old fellow, sooner or later, pulls all their hair out.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HIS ...

New-Year's ... ter Pratt. On that ... into the world. A son... ...back upon—for Hester was an ... before she had been betrothed to Herbert ... had proved false to his plighted faith, and the ... was made widowed her in the new and wonderful ... another. That day closed the heart and hardened the nature of Hester Pratt. ... manners became frosty ... and forbidding, and the ... old maid, which she ... never became entirely ...

Within the space of ... years, Hester's ... locents; and she was ... it shone at thirty ... the hour which had ... god to the ... generations. She was used to refer ... state by admitting ... family, but ... she does ... to do, evidently ... to society.

Twenty years passed and in passing she ... left their impress on Hester Pratt. Her face became sharper, and her hair became more and more plentifully sprinkled with gray; yet her step was apparently as firm as ever, and her movements as decided. She had sufficient property and more than sufficient, for her small requirements, and every year saw something added to her account in the village bank. Her savings were not likely to be diminished by charitable offerings. She had closed up the avenues to pity; and hardly must be the beggar who should ask alms of her a second time.

It was New-Year's morning—a cold, frosty morning. On that morning Hester Pratt baked a loaf cake—a rich fruit cake—with which she intended to regale herself at ten. Not that she cared so much for the cake, but her mother had always been wont to do the same on that occasion, and Hester kept up the old practice.

Having baked the cake, she drew it from the oven, steaming hot as it was, and carried it out into the shed to cool.

With commendable care she shut up her solitary companion, an iron-gray cat, in the kitchen, fearing that the cake might otherwise present a temptation too strong for the cat's principles to withstand.

Meanwhile she busied herself in preparing for the oven the chicken which was to furnish forth her New-Year's dinner. This, too, was an old custom of her mother's. The chicken was nearly ready for roasting, when the sharp ears of Hester detected a slight noise in the woodshed, which immediately adjoined the kitchen.

She advanced hastily to the door, and threw it open.

Could she believe her eyes? Could human depravity reach such an astonishing height, or rather depth? There, almost paralyzed with astonishment, she beheld a boy in the act of carrying off her favorite New-Year's cake.

Her momentary surprise over, she proceeded to act with energy.

Striding up to the delinquent, who had stopped short in consternation, she seized him by the collar of his jacket, and choaked him vigorously, exclaiming, in angry tones,

"I've caught you, you little rascal—have I? Now tell me why you were going to steal my cake?"

The boy hesitated for a moment, and seemed undecided how to act.

"Tell me instantly, before I hand you over to the constable," repeated Hester, with another shake, while with her free hand she snatched from the boy the cake which he had appropriated.

"I was very hungry," said he, in a low voice.

"Hungry! I dare say," sneered Hester. "I guess if this had been a loaf of bread instead of cake you wouldn't have been troubled in that way."

"I would rather have bread," said the boy.

"You would!" exclaimed Hester, astonished.

"Besides, I wanted to carry it to little Bessie."

"Who is little Bessie?" inquired Hester, with something of curiosity in her manner.

"She is my sister and she is blind."

Hester looked attentively at the boy. In spite of her hardness, there was something in this allusion which touched her.

The boy was apparently about eleven years of age. He was a handsome boy, or would have been, if his pinched face had not spoken so eloquently of privation. His clothing was quite insufficient for that inclement day, and his hands were fairly red with the cold. Now Hester's prejudices were all against him. Her theory in regard to boys was that they were unmitigated nuisances—that they were a class of young vagabonds who took a malicious pleasure in lying, thieving, and kindred vices—and she had hitherto waged an uncompromising warfare against them.

Yet there was an indefinable something about this boy—something in his expression—which softened her against her will. Scarcely knowing how to proceed, she began to question him.

"Do you live in this village? I never saw you before."

"I never was here before this morning, ma'am."

"You don't find it convenient to stop long in the same place," said Hester, sarcastically, thinking of her cake.

Apparently the boy understood the allusion, for he said, earnestly:

"Indeed, ma'am, I wouldn't have taken the cake if we had'nt been so hungry. Bessie said I."

"Bessie! You've spoken of her before. How do I know but it's a story you are making up, just to get ... ?"

"I would show her to you, ma'am, if—"

"If what?" interrupted Hester, sharply.

"I was thinking you wanted to go where she is, and you might think if I offered to bring her that I was only trying to get away."

"He's sharper than I thought for," passed through Hester's mind. "And where is your sister?" she asked aloud.

"I left her in the barn over there," said the boy, he pointing across the fields.

"Is she older than you?" asked Hester.

"No, she is two years younger," was the reply.

"You might be in better business than trapesing over the country stealing cake," said Hester Pratt, in an uncompromising tone. "Why don't you stay at home with your parents?"

"They are both dead," said the boy, sadly.

"Dead!" exclaimed Hester, half-sympathetically. She remembered her own grief when her own father and mother had died, and left her alone in the world.

"Yes, ma'am. They died six months ago."

"Where?"

"In the city."

"And why didn't you go to some of your uncles and aunts?"

"We had none."

"What! had no relations of any kind?"

"None very near."

"And so you've been cruising round the country ever since, have you?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Getting your living by stealing, I suppose?"

"No, ma'am," said the boy, blushing.

"How then?"

"Sometimes people would be kind enough to give a little something, and we didn't need much. But this morning I have been to two or three places, and they told me they didn't believe my story, and so as I came through your yard, I happened to see the cake in the shed, and I thought of how hungry Bessie was, and I don't dare to ask, for fear you might refuse, and so—"

"So you stole it?"

"Yes," said the boy, in confusion.

What was Hester to do?

She more than half believed the boy's story, and yet her distrust of human nature would intrude.

She must have ocular proof of his truth, and—then—well, then she would decide what to do.

"Sit down in that chair," said she, "and I will get my things, and go over to the barn with you, and see if your story is correct."

"Will you?" exclaimed the boy, joyfully.

"He doesn't seem to be afraid for the result," thought Hester.

In two minutes she was ready to go.

They took their way across the fields. There was no path, but the upper surface of the snow was frozen still, so that there was no danger of falling through. Hester kept firm hold of the boy's arm, with the lurking suspicion that he might yet elude her in some way.

So they reached the barn.

It was in the middle of a large field, and, contrary to the usual custom in the country, at quite a distance from any house.

The boy went to the door and called, "Bessie."

"Where are you, brother?" said a sweet, childish voice.

He went into the barn, and led out a beautiful little girl of nine, with a sweet expression, but eyes, alas! forever closed to the bright sunshine and the fair world.

"Have you brought any bread?" asked the little girl.

"I am so hungry."

"No, Bessie," said the boy; but he quickly added, "I have brought a lady who was kind enough to come with me to see you."

"Where is she?" asked Bessie, stretching out her hand.

Hester did not speak for a moment. She was choking down the bitter feelings which had been aroused by the mention of her own blighted love. Did the people in the house ... when they had nearly ... "What is your father's name?" asked Hester, hoarsely. ... "Herbert Gordon."

"And your mother's name?" asked Hester, hoarsely.

"Was Ellen Gordon before her marriage."

Hester rose, and paced the floor excitedly.

These, then, were the children of her faithless lover—of him who had embittered her life. And yet she could not dislike them. Strangely enough she felt a yearning for them, as if she would like to have them live with her always. There was a fierce struggle in her heart, but the fresh, generous impulses that had so long been stifled, burst forth, and when the children rose, and, thanking her for their lunch, offered to go, she said, slowly,

"Would you like to live with me always?"

A flash of joy overspread the faces of the two orphans, and they accepted her offer with grateful thanks.

And that was the happiest New-Year's Day that Hester Pratt had ever passed.—Harper's Weekly.

PERIODICAL LITERATURE IN ENGLAND.

We published in our last number part of the prospectus of the Cornhill Magazine, which is to be edited by Thackeray. It is to be sold at a shilling—say about one-third the price of the existing British magazines—and is to be inaugurated a new era in British periodical literature. Blackwood's and the other leading magazines sell at half a crown—say sixty cents, or three shillings.

We hope the new adventure will be successful. It is high time some new adventure were discovered by the publishers of periodicals in Great Britain. With one or two exceptions, the monthly and weekly periodicals which we receive by each mail from England are hardly worth postage. Blackwood's Magazine is quite out of date, and, with the exception of Bulwer Lytton's contributions, and a stray novel at long intervals, never contains anything worth reading. The same remark will apply to the Dublin University, Frazer's, Colburn's, the Times, the National, and other monthly magazines of the same order. All these journals are modelled upon a standard which was well enough twenty years ago, but which is quite out of date now. Their tales are slow; their travels are dull; their reviews are priggish; their political articles are somniferous. Altogether, in the absence of any law obliging people to read them, one can not conceive any reason why they should be read at all.

The old quarterlies still survive—but their spirit is very different from what it was, or rather, that spirit has departed from them to rest in other abodes. The best paper which the London has lately contained have been smart reviews of trade and manufactures by such old hacks as Sir Francis Head, Doctor Doran, and their cotemporaries. The Edinburgh lives on the memory of past greatness, and on an occasional political article written by one of the first personages of the kingdom—a lord or duke perhaps. The North British staggers along, buoyed up mainly by scientific papers by Brewster and his school, and furious attacks on heterodox Churchmen. Of all the quarterlies, the free-thinking or infidel Westminster has the most vital energy. Its literary reviews have for years been the best published in our language, and it occasionally contains an article full of the ripest learning and the brightest wit. But the Westminster, besides being pernicious, is, like the other quarterlies, addressed to a select circle. All of them eschew the profane vulgar, and covet patronage from University men alone.

Within the past decade, the weekly paper has become an institution in Great Britain. Passing over the regular illustrated newspapers, such as the London Illustrated and Punch and papers devoted to specialities, such as the Athenæum and Literary Gazette, the Economist, the religious weeklies, the sensation-novel papers, such as the London Journal, the Family Herald, and others of that ilk, there have grown up in Great Britain a number of weekly papers aiming to amuse and to instruct, and employing the best intellect in the country—some of which have attained great success. These now divide themselves into two classes—the papers devoted to news and essays, such as the Examiner, Leader, Saturday Review, and Spectator; and papers which do not disdain the aid of fiction—such as Chamber's Journal, All the Year Round, Once a Week, the Leisure Hour, Every-body's Journal, the Welcome Guest, Town Talk, etc.

The former class propose to give their readers the news of the day, with comments thereon—nothing more. Their success depends on the spice of their comments; hence necessarily, that success is ephemeral. No man can be perennially amusing and clever once a week. A few years since, the Examiner, of which Foublanque was the ... Spectator, was the weekly paper. When the Examiner contradicted the ... public held its judgement in suspense. But in course of time, as was inevitable, the novelty wore off; the Examiner of to-day is as good as ever, but nobody reads it. Then the Leader came into fashion, with Forster, Harriet Martineau, with a score of other Liberals at the helm, and the way it punished the Tories was exemplary. No Englishman was well-read till he had the Leader by heart. This tasted but a short while, and its sun set. Its successor has been the Saturday Review, a paper which appears to be written by some young collegians who are out without leave. It is smart and vigorous; ignorant, priggish and snobbish; sneers at every body and everything; and is read chiefly from curiosity and the sort of pleasure most men take in seeing their neighbors abused. An occasional clever article apart, its parallel in this country is to be found in those college papers which are sometimes got up by debating societies at Harvard, Yale, and Columbia, and which dispose of Christianity and the Slavery question in four round sentences. By-and-by the editors will be put to bed and the paper will cease to appear.

Among the weekly papers which rely on fiction as a staple ingredient, Chamber's Journal is the oldest. This is a steady little magazine, which contains stories—sometimes of the heavy order, fairish magazine articles on miscellaneous topics, and a good monthly review of science, invention, and art. It is not startlingly lively, but very sound, and is said to be profitable. It is sold at three cents a number. The late Household Words, which ceased to appear seven or eight months ago, was the most successful of the first class British weeklies. When Mr. Dickens quarreled with his publishers, Household Words was divided into two papers—Once a Week published by Bradbury and Evans, and All the Year Round, published by Dickens. Both of these contain serials, short stories, brief essays, etc., etc. Once a Week has the advantage of being illustrated by Leech, Tenniel, Millais, C. Keene, Halbat K. Browne and others. All the Year Round is not illustrated. Once a Week counts among its contributors Harriet Martineau, Captain Osborne, Charles Reade, and a number of other eminent writers; still it is undoubtedly weak in its reading matter. Its stories are seldom of the first order, and many of its essays are decidedly dull. Mr. Dickens has around him, in All the Year Round, his old staff—Wilkie Collins, Sala, Mrs. Gaskil, and the scientific writers whose papers have been so popular. For reading, All the year Round is superior to Once a Week; but Leech's and Millais's illustrations are very attractive. Our arrangements, we may remark en passant, is to select the cream of both papers; HARPER'S WEEKLY contains the best illustrations which appear in Once a Week, and the best stories which are published in All the Year Round.

Of the other weekly papers which we have mentioned, the less said the better. The Welcome Guest is a publication whose life is being squeezed out by some people by the name of Brough, who write the dullest stories and the absurdest essays that ever received the honor of type. Hospitality would cease to be a virtue if one were bound to welcome such guests. How any sensible publisher could throw his money away so foolishly we can not easily conceive. The Leisure Hour is milder, but nearly as dull. A man left alone on a desert island, on a very rainy day, might possibly find a leisure hour to look at it and throw it away in disgust; but in the light of civilization, it cannot be read beyond the immediate circle of its writers. Everybody's Journal is just as insipid. A relative of the great Foublanque writes for it—poor fellow.

We imagine that Thackeray's Magazine, Once a Week, and All the Year Round, will be, for a time at least, the crack periodicals of England. All their best matter and illustrations will appear in HARPER'S WEEKLY—in most cases in advance of its arrival by mail from Great Britain.

At the risk of reiterating what the reader may probably have seen before, we must let "honest John" defend himself in this matter:

"Some say the Pilgrim's Progress is not mine,
Insinuating as if I would shine
In name and fame by the worth of another,
Like some made rich by robbing of their brother.
Or that so fond I am of being sire
I'll father bastard's; or if need require
I'll tell a lie to print to get applause.
I scorn it, John such dirt-heap never was Since God converted him. Let this suffice
To show why I my pilgrim patronize.
It came from mine own heart, so to my head,
And thence into my fingers trickled,
Then to my pen, from whence immediately
On paper I did dribble it daintily.
Manner and matter too was all my own,
Nor was it mine any mortal known
Till I had done it. Nor did any then
By books, by wits, by tongue, or hand, or pen,
Add five words to it, or write half a line
Thereof; the whole and every whit is mine."

As we do not purpose again to refer to this matter, we would here cite Mr. Offor's declaration, "that every allegorical work that could be found previous to the eighteenth century has been examined (by him) in all the European languages; and the result is a perfect demonstration of the complete originality of Bunyan. It came from his own heart. The plot, the characters, the faithful dealing are all his own. And what is more, there has not been found a single phrase or sentence borrowed from any other book, except the quotations from the Bible, and the use of common proverbs. To arrive at this conclusion has occupied much time and labor, at intervals, during the last forty years." Thus Bunyan is vindicated.—Presbyterian.

COTTON SUPPLY.

The attention of the manufacturing world has been frequently called to the necessity of securing a greater supply of cotton, if the enterprise should continue to increase in the same ratio as during the last ten years. Cotton is cultivated to a greater or less extent in various parts of the globe, yet it is confined within a zone whose boundary is 40 deg of latitude. But it does not follow that within that parallel it can be successfully grown in all countries, inasmuch as many concurring circumstances are requisite—for instance, a peculiar combination of heat and moisture and certain saline constituents of soil and atmosphere are essential, the excess or scarcity of either preventing its successful development. To this fact, more than any other, may be attributed the failure in all those attempts to seek supplies from other sources than the United States. In many sections where the plant is indigenous, it would require generations it would require generations before the habits of the population could be so changed as to warrant any hopes of a successful cultivation. Thus while the most favorable portions of India are subject to vicissitudes which are not experienced in the United States, the seasons of a large portion of that country being only of three months duration, in which the extremes of heat, of dryness and of moisture, are great, while the degree of cold is moderate, the sudden changes prevent the cultivation of a plant, which requires a long season.

The explorations of Dr. Livingston in Africa can result in little practical advantage to the cotton spinner, unless the social economy of the people in that country be very much improved by the arts of civilization. The East India Company, with all its patronage and power, was unable to effect any practical improvement in India, and we shall see similar results in Africa. It is also idle to suppose that the long staple cotton can be cultivated to any great extent in India, without an extensive system of irrigation; the product being short and inferior in other respects to that of the United States. The artificial means of producing moisture of the soil, at present inadequate to the necessities of cultivation, would involve an expenditure larger than any same body of capitalists would attempt. The efforts made to cultivate the plant in Brazil, West Indies, Algeria, as well as in other portions of the cotton zone, have proved futile or insignificant, as compared with the Southern parts of this country, both as regards the quality of the fibre, or quantity produced.

We must look to the South for the cotton supply of ... quantity ... beyond computation. This ... the strongest argument for continued peace with ... land under all circumstances, as well as one of the strongest bonds of Union between the States.—Economist.

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

The Press is destined to be the motive power which is to govern the world. The pulpit has its important mission—its indispensable work to perform; the bench has a work peculiarly its own; still, in these "latter days," the press is the sibyl, whose oracular leaves, all written over with living truth or lying words, are borne on every breeze to the four corners of the globe, and are to exert a positive influence upon the destiny of every human soul. There can be no more potent instrumentality for good or evil, adapted to reach all minds, and influence and actuate all the secret springs of action. Indeed, it is the mighty power of God in the nineteenth century, perfected and sent forth to prepare the way far the ushering in of the millennial glory of Christ's kingdom on earth, symbolized by the prophet as the time when "many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." "Men literally read as they run." The newspaper meets them at the door when they go out in the morning, and when they come home in the evening; in the street; in the counting room; at home and abroad; around the fireside and in the swiftest vehicle; whether we are in a hurry or at leisure, it obtrudes itself everywhere—a sort of ubiquitary, whose influence no man can resist.

Our newspapers will, in spite of us, form the principles and faith of our children. Their political views, prejudices, and party relations will generally be like the secular paper furnished them to read. Their religious opinions, associations and principles will be strongly based, if not positively controlled, by the same means. Newspapers must, in these days, supply the principal food for thought and the stimulus to action, and no religious parent does his duty to his household who neglects to choose, discriminately, and to introduce into his family, a religious teacher of this sort, such as he can approve, as more indispensable to the well-being of its inmates, if possible, than their ordinary food.

CENSUS OF 1860.

As the productions of the year about to close form a large proportion of the elements of agricultural returns to be embodied in the coming census, it is suggested that more than ordinary care be taken by our people in preserving an accurate account of their various products of the field; for, although the census year embraces the period between the first day of June, 1860, including the latter, the amount of agricultural products is mainly determined this winter, and unless with care, is not likely to be prepared to make a proper return upon the sudden and unexpected call of the census-agent in the summer. In fact, it would be well if every farmer and planter would have and hold in view the importance of being fully prepared with a statement wherefrom the questions of the Marshals could be promptly and correctly answered. The reasons which should induce preparation now on the part of the agricultural community are, at a later period, equally applicable to all classes of persons. It is a gratifying fact, and one creditable to the intelligence of the American people, that in taking the seventh census only three persons demurred to responding to the questions of the Marshals, and they waived their objections when appealed to by the officer having the general charge of that work.

We understand that timely notice will be given regarding the nature of the information required for the eighth census, which we hope the public press will liberally aid in spreading throughout the land, and It is not for a moment to be doubted that our people, who are to reap the benefit of the knowledge gained, will manifest a universal and cheerful alacrity in contributing each their quota of the facts, which, in the aggregate, go to illustrate the condition and progress of the nation.—National Intelligencer.

GERMAN MONUMENT TO LUTHER.

The Grand Duke of Hesse Darmstadt has sanctioned the design, by Professor Carl Rietschel, of a monument to Luther and the Reformation, to be erected in the square at Worms. The Reformer is represented standing amid a group of symbolical and historical figures within a crenellated inclosure. The statue of Luther is nearly eleven feet high, and stands on a pedestal measuring seventeen feet. It represents the Reformer in that great moment when he boldly spoke out his renowned words, "Hier steh iche ich kann nicht anders, Gott helfe mir, Amen!" Lifting his eyes to heaven, on his left stretched-out arm the Bible, he pressed his clenched right hand firmly upon the holy book, the image of manly fortitude, and deep, honest, heartfelt conviction. Rietschel is said to have admirably succeeded in this figure. The figures of the forerunners of the Reformation represented in a sitting posture on the four corners of the pedestal—Huss the Bohemian, Savonarola the Italian, Petrus Waldus the Frenchman, and Wickliff the Englishman—express the individual and national peculiarities of the men whom they impersonate. The pedestal is divided into three parts. In the lower part we see various reliefs, the sticking of the theses, the Diet at Worms, the translating the Scriptures, etc. The upper part is dedicated to the inscriptions—all Luther's own pithy words—and the middle part will be filled by eight medallion portraits of those men, who, next to the forerunners of the Reformation before mentioned, have most furthered the work of the regeneration of the Church. Ulrich von Hatten, Zwingli, Calvin, Friedrick der Grossmuthige, Bugenhagen, Justas Jonas, and Cruciger, will find here their places. The whole, when executed, will be the greatest work of monumental art of which Germany may boast.

PROPORTIONS OF THE HUMAN FIGURE.

The proportions of the human figure are strictly mathematical. The whole figure is six times the length of the foot. Whether the form be slender or plump, this rule holds good. Any deviation from it is a departure from the highest beauty of proportion. The Greeks make all their statues according to this rule. The face, from the highest point of the forehead where the hair begins to the end of the chin, is one-tenth of the whole statue. The hand, from the wrist to the end of the middle finger, is the same. The chest is a fourth, and from the nipples to the top of the head is the same. From the top of the chest to the highest point of the forehead is a seventh. If the length of the face, from the roots of the hair to the chin, be divided into three equal parts, the first division determines the point where the eyebrows meet, and second, the pince of the nostrils. The navel is the central point of the human body, and if a man should lie on his back with his arms extended, the periphery of the circle which might be described around him, with the naval for its centre, would touch the extremities of his hands and feet. The height from the feet to the top of the head, is the same as the distance from the extremities of the other when the arms are extended. These are the general measures of the species

THE TOMB OF DAVID HUME.

David Hume, who produced in his time so much skepticism as to the evidences of Christianity, does not seem to have convinced his own relatives. A correspondent of the Presbyterian says:—"By the way, speaking of Edinburg, while there I acted as guide to a brother minister from America, on a visit to the tomb of the infidel Hume. It is a circular stone building, over its iron grated door there is inscribed his name, with the dates of his birth and death. No doubt, like Voltaire, he fluttered himself that he had given the death-blow to Christianity. But, behold, there on the wall of his tomb, those who are flesh of his flesh and bone of his bone, bear testimony to the fallacy of his expectation. On its outside, and immediately above the name of Hume himself, there is a tablet containing an inscription, by a David Hume, to his wife, Jane Alder, dated 1817, closing with these words, "Behold I come quickly. Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Also, in the interior, there is another tablet, sacred to the memory of David Hume, one of the Barons of Exchequer, and his two sons, dated in 1848; the whole surmounted by those encouraging words, "I am the ... Life."

E.

RSON HAMILTON, D.D.

accompanied by Mrs. Hamilton, had y nearly a week. Upon his arrival, he icted with the complaint that has so long m—asthma; but he is now improving consid-
He leaves to-morrow, on the steamer Mosce
, for Aspinwall, and from thence farther South trust that the tour may entirely restore his health and that he may gather much valuable information.
The readers of the Advocate may look for some interesting letters. Dr. Hamilton goes attended with the good wishes and prayers of the brethren for his health and success.

A HAPPY CHRISTMAS FOR ONE MAN.

A young man named Joseph Wells, a Canadian, probably enjoyed his Christmas with a keener zest and a more grateful and happy heart than any other person in town. Some five years ago his parents died in this city, leaving him poor and friendless. Soon after this misfortune he fell victim of typhoid fever, and after an illness which fairly carried him away, he recovered only to find himself helplessly destitute of hearing, totally deaf. Being incapable to sound, he got employment; and since then he continues not only of sympathy for his misfortune—but of kindness and care for his honesty and good behavior, he has led his silent life about the courts and the cathedral at Jackson Square, regularly attending the church, and doing whatever little offices he could for his living about the Recorder's office and lockup. The officers took care of him and supplied his wants, as a sort of pet, at once useful and agreeable.

Think what must have been this young man's sensations, when, on Friday evening, going unwittingly too near the cannon, which at Jackson Square was belching forth a national salute in honor of the battle of Lake Borgne, (of which that day was the anniversary) he was shocked and thrown prostrate by the concussion! He was taken to the police office and revived by applications of cold water. To his own astonishment his ears were clear, and to the astonishment of others he spoke. Still he had a strange buzzing and rattling in his head. Half frightened, he went and prayed, and then returned to his lonely bed. In the morning he woke to find his head calm, but his hearing entirely restored; clear and sweet the torrents of the city sounds poured into his head and heart; the ring of the bells, the cough of the steamers, the rush of the drays, the laugh of the children, the bark of the dogs, the blithe voices of friends and acquaintance—new, novel, and delighted beyond expression! He tried his own voice and found it good in sound and speech, as well as in former years. In the fullness of his heart, he repaired to the Cathedral, and there on his headed knees offered up to the Great Throne the breathings of his deep gratitude. Then he sallied out to see his friends; and the scenes of astonishment and pleasure which followed may be better imagined than described. With tears in his eyes he embraced every one who had treated him kindly, and told his thanks for the favors shown him during his years of deafness and dumbness. The heartiness and deep feeling of his joy brought tears to many another eye, and his sudden and surprising restoration was the talk of the day. Who can say that this Christmas did not bring happiness to Joseph Wells?—Crescent.

MARRIAGES.

"It is not good for man to be alone."

At the residence of Col. Jos. W. Baldwin, of Caddo parish, on Dec. 22d, by the Rev. Jas. L. Chapman, Mr. Geo. W. Crowden of Shreveport, to Miss Mary E. Baldwin of Caddo parish.

At the residence of the bride, Jose Bayou, Carrol parish, on the 22d of Dec., by David Hall, Esq., Mr. Lorenzo Hawkins to Miss R. M. Sellers.

By the Rev. J. English, Mr. John Tally to Miss Mary A. Mayfield, both of St. Tammany parish, La.

By Rev. John B. Bowen, on Dec. 15, Mr. A. Whitfield Buckles to Miss Mary M. Wilkenson, both of Jefferson county, Mississippi.

On the 16th Dec., by the same, Mr. L. T. Parker to Miss Julia A. Blotcher, all of Jefferson county, Miss.

By Rev. T. J. Koger, in Pickens county, Ala., at the residence of the bride's father, on 22d Dec., W. A. Cheatham to Miss Emma J. Lipsey.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Merchant's Bank,
New Orleans, January 3, 1860.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors, a dividend of Four per cent out of the profits of the last six months, was declared payable to the Stockholders, or their legal representatives, on Monday, the 9th instant.

jan3 1t Wm. S. Mount, Cashier.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Clinton District—First Round of Quarterly Meetings.

January. Greensburg circuit, at Arcola, 21 and 22; Pouchitoula at Bradford's, 28 and 29.

February. Livingston circuit, at Kinchen's Chapel, 4 and 5; East Baton Rouge, at Salem, 11 and 12; Port Hudson, at Port Hudson, 18 and 19; Clinton station, at Clinton, 25, 26.

March. Feliciana circuit at Pine Grove, 3 and 4; Jackson station, at Jackson, 10 and 11.

A full attendance of the official members at the first quarterly meetings is earnestly desired.

B. PIPKIN, P. E.

Vicksburg District—First Round Quarterly Meetings.

December and January. Vicksburg, Dec 31 and Jan. 1; Warren circuit, 7 and 8; Jackson, 21 and 22; Raymond and Spring Ridge, 28 and 29.

February. Concord circuit, 11 and 12; Brandon circuit, 18 and 19; North Warren circuit, 25 and 26.

March. Clinton circuit, 3 and 4.

L. PEARCE, P.F.

Sharon District—First Round of Quarterly Meetings.

December and January. Canton, Dec. 31 and Jan. 1; Livingston, 7 and 8; Vernon, 14 and 15; Sharon, 21 and 22; Madisonville, 28 and 29.

February. Camden, 4 and 5; Carthage, 11 and 12; Philadelphia 18 and 19; Decatur, 25 and 26.

March. Hillsboro, 3 and 4.

JAMES WALTON, P. E.

Miss. Conf.—Brookhaven District Quarterly Meetings.

Amite, at Salem, 3 Jan 7 and 8; Covington, at Covington, 14 and 15; Franklinton, at Shillings', 21 and 22.

February—Holmesville, at Holmesville, 4 and 5; Brookhaven German mission, at Brookhaven, 11 and 12; Pearl River at Providence, 25 and 26.

March—Georgetown, at Providence, 3 and 4.

Full attendance of official members is desired. My post-office for the present is Clinton, La.

Thomas Rhea, P. E.

Miss. Conf.—Fayette District Quarterly Meetings.

December and January—Fayette circuit, at Bethel, Dec 31 and Jan 1; Port Gibson, Jan 7 and 8; Grand Gulf, 14 and 15; Rocky Springs, at State Chapel, 21 and 22; Cayuga, 28 and 29.

February—Bayou Pierre, at Pisgah, 4 and 5; Scotland, at Nobo, 11 and 12.

B. M. Drake, P. E.

Miss. Conf.—Starkville District Quarterly Meetings.

January—Middleton, 14 and 15; Bankston, 21 and 22; Attala, 28 and 29.

February—Greensboro, 4 and 5; Ostibbeha, 11 and 12; Starkville, 18 and 19; Double Springs, 25 and 26.

March—Webster, 3 and 4; Louisville, 10 and 11.

Geo. D. Wade, P.E.

Miss. Conf.—Greensville District Quarterly Meetings.

December—Bolivar, at Bolivar, 10 and 11; Lower Deer Creek at Union Chapel, 17 and 18; Greenville, 24 and 25.

January—Hampton's Plantations, 1; Upper Deer Creek, 8; Middle Deer Creek, at Col. Full's, 15; Greenville colored mission, 22; Tribula, at New Church, 28 and 29.

February—American Bend, 4 and 5; Smallower, at Indian Bayou, 11 and 12.

Wm. H. Hines, P. E.

Miss. Conf.—Yazoo District Quarterly Meetings.

January—Yazoo City, 14 and 15; Mount Olivet, new church, near Mr. Chetum's, 21 and 22; the Funeral of Rev. A. James at Cane Ridge, in North Warren circuit, 25.

February—Yazoo circuit, Benton, 4 and 5; Blackhawk circuit Jordan's Chapel, 11 and 12; Greenwood, 18 and 19; Carrollton circuit, at Edon, 25 and 26.

March—Lexington and Richland, at Lexington, 3 and 4; Howe circuit, Shady Green, 10 and 11; Ebenezer circuit at Shiloh, 17 and 18.

David M. Wiggins, P. E.

Miss. Conf.—Biloxi District Quarterly Meetings.

December and January—Gurland circuit and colored charge, at Hickory Grove, Dec 31 and Jan 1; Paulding circuit and colored mission, at Holder's, Jan 7 and 8; Westville circuit at Mount Zion, 14 and 15; Columbia circuit, at Union Academy, 21 and 22; Gainesville, at Gainesville, 28 and 29.

February—Biloxi and Handsboro, at Handsboro, 4 and 5; Fig Creek mission, at Oak Grove, 8; Augusta mission, at Enon 11 and 12; Raleigh circuit, at Flowers's, 25 and 26.

March—Ellisville mission, at Big Spring, 3 and 4.

The official members are earnestly requested to be in attendance, as important business will be brought before the quarterly Conference.

R. J. Jones, P. E.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Macon District—First Round of Quarterly Meetings.

January. Gainesville and Sumterville, at Gainesville, 7 and Belmont, at Belmont, 14 and 15; Enterprize, at Enterprize 21 and 22.

February. Scooba, at M'Intosh's, 4 and 5; Meridian, at Marion Station, 11 and 12; De Kalb, at De Kalb, 18 and 19; Marion, at Marion, 25 and 26.

March. Livingston, at Livingston, 3 and 4; Summerville, Macedonia, 10 and 11; Macon, at Macon, 17 and 18.

T. C. Wier, P. E.

Camden District—First Round of Quarterly Meetings.

January. Suggsville, at Gosport, 14 and 15; St. Stephens, Opossum Corner, 21 and 22; Grove Hill, at Jackson, and 29.

February. Choctaw Corner, at Choctaw, 4 and 5; Lower Pine Tree, at Asbury's, 11 and 12; Camden, 25 and 26.

March. Oak [illegible] at [illegible] and J. Bro[illegible]
Carmel [illegible] and [illegible] greville, at Mobileville, 31st and April 1.
April. Mount Pleasant, at [illegible]

CARR[illegible]

Greensboro' District—First Round of Quarterly Meetings.

January—Pleasant Hill circuit, at Pleasant Hill, [illegible] and Farmersville, at Farmersville, 24 and 25.

February—Layman's Store and Haynesville, at Haynesville, [illegible] Sept. 1st, at Bethel, 11 and 12; [illegible] pel, 18 and 19; Union, at Centreville, 25 and 26.

March—Troy and Orion, at Orion, [illegible] and [illegible]
Camp ground, 10 and 11; Edia, at Lebanon, [illegible]
Greenville, at Pleasant Hill, [illegible]

[illegible] JENKINS, P. E.

Montgomery District—First Round of Quarterly Meetings.

January—Tuskegee, 7 and 8; Auburn, 14 and 15; [illegible] at Lochapoka, 21 and 22; Russell, at Sandy Grove, [illegible] 29.

February—Oak Bowery, at Oak Bowery, [illegible] and [illegible]
Crawford, 11 and 12; Ridge Street, at [illegible]
18 and 19; Montgomery, at Mount Meigs, 25 and 26.

March—Montgomery, 3 and 4; Tallassee, at Oak Valley, [illegible]

I want to see for once all the members of the various Quarterly Conferences present at the first quarterly meeting.

C. B. Bl[illegible]

Columbus District—First Round Quarterly Meetings.

January—Pickensville and Carrollton, 2nd Sabbath; Columbus, 1st Sabbath; Pickens circuit, 4th Sabbath.

February—Columbus circuit, 1st Sabbath; Columbus, 2nd Sabbath; Athens, 3d Sabbath; Crawford ville, 4th Sabbath.

March—Cookville, 1st Sabbath; Brookeville, 2nd Sabbath. Commencing Saturday before in each case.

My post-office is Brookeville, Miss.

T. J. Koger, P. E.

Demopolis District—First Round Quarterly Meetings.

January—Demopolis, Jan. 7; Dayton, Jan. 15; Spring, Jan. 22; Orrville, Jan. 29.

February—Uniontown, Feb. 5th; Rembert Hill, Feb. 6; Butler, Feb. 12th; Shadon, Feb. 26th.

March—Gaston, March 4th.

Correspondents please address me at Dayton, Marengo county, Alabama.

Joshua Baker, P. E.

Summerfield District—First Round Quarterly Meetings.

December—Cahaba, Dec. 31 and Jan. 1.

January—Summerfield, Jan. 7 and 8; Selma, Jan. 14 and Autaugaville, Jan. 21 and 22; Perryville, Jan. 28 and February—Prattville, Feb. 4 and 5; Westampka, Feb. 11 and 12; Autauga circuit at Rehoboth, Feb 18 and 19; Big circuit at Randolph, Feb. 25 and 26.

March—Columbiana and Montevallo at Montevallo, [illegible] 11; Mea[illegible] at night, March 3 and 4.

W. Starr, P.

Greensboro District—First Round Quarterly Meetings.

January—Eutaw and colored mission, Jan. 7 and 8; Newport at Havana, Jan. 14 and 15; Trinity mission, Colored mission, Jan. 21 and 22; Byrd's Creek at Liberty 28 and 29.

February—Forkland and Warsaw Chapel, Feb. 4 and [illegible] hern and Oak grove at Newbern, Feb. 11 and 12; Marion 18 and 19; Greensboro, Prairie Creek colored mission, man Creek colored mission, and Greensboro colored mission Feb. 25 and 26; District Stewards' Meeting at Greensboro, Feb. 25.

Address at Greensboro, J. Hutchinson, P.

Marianna District—First Round Quarterly Meetings.

January—Marianna, Jan. 21 and 22; Spanswood circuit, Colbourn mission at Sylvania, Jan. 28 and 29.

February—Woodville and Columbia, at Woodville, Feb. 4 and Rocky Creek mission at Zion chapel, Feb. 11 and 12; van Grove at Chiles, Feb. 18 and 19; Cambellton circuit, Cambellton, 25 and 26.

March—Newton mission at Hartman, March 3 and 4; Hardy circuit at Oak Lawn, March 10 and 11; Hewitt circuit March 17 and 18.

My address is Sylvania, Jasper Co., Miss. Wm. P. Miller, P.

Eufaula District—First Round Quarterly Meetings.

January—Glenville station at Glenville, Jan. 7 and 8; Spring station at Cowikee Spring, Jan. 14 and 15; and Lewisville at Lewisville, Jan. 21 and 22; Yellow mission—a two days meeting, Jan. 28 and 29.

February—Chunnennuggee Mission—a two days meeting, 25 and 26.

March—Village circuit at Midway, March 3 and 4; Bowden mission—a two days meeting, March 10 and 11; Enon at Providence, March 17 and 18; Payne mission—2 days meeting, March 24 and 25; Clayton circuit, March 31 and April 1.

April—Lawrenceville circuit, at Lawrenceville, April 7.

N. B. The preachers of the several missions will please form me, at Eufaula, at what place on their mission they meet them to have these two days meetings. The friends of the missions are greatly desired to attend. Rulers will do all they can to accomplish this most desirable end, that the mission field may be more attractive and the complish more good.

J. W. Lee.

Talladega District—First Round Quarterly Meetings.

January—Talladega station, Jan. 21 and 22; Talladega and Hillabee mission, Talladega and Alexander's mission, at Patton's Chapel, Jan. 28 and 29.

February—Pinckneyville at Pinckneyville, Feb. 4 and 5; Plains, at Shoal Creek, Feb. 11 and 12; Attaconga at Pleasant Ridge, Feb. 18 and 19; Roanoke, at Roanoke, 25 and 26.

March—La Fayette at Emory Chapel, March 3 and 4; at Sardis, March 10 and 11; Fayetteville and Hillabee mission, at Andrew Chapel, March 17 and 18; Sodom, at Rehoboth, March 24 and 25.

W. D. M[illegible]

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Opelousas District—First Round Quarterly Meetings.

February. Thibodeaux at [illegible], Feb. 4 and [illegible] at Houma

[illegible]

March—New[illegible]
Iberia, Ma[illegible]
port, Mar[illegible]
March 24;

Monroe District—First Round Quarterly Meetings.

January—[illegible] and 8; Smithland, Jan. 14 and 15; Bastrop, at Bastrop, Jan. 21 and 22; Bartholomew and Jefferson, at Jefferson, Jan. 28 and 29.

February—Carroll[illegible] and 5; Delhi, at [illegible] and 12; Monroe, at Mt. Pleasant, Feb. 18 and 19; [illegible] and 26.

March—Ouachita, at Harrisonburg, March 2 and 3; Ouachita Rapids, at Jonesboro', March 9 and 10; Calcasieu at [illegible] March 17 and 18.

My Post Office is Alexandria, [illegible]

Lake Providence District—First Round Quarterly Meetings.

January—Waterproof, Jan. 21 and 22; Tullulah, Jan. 28 and [illegible]

February—Providence and Bunch's Bend at Providence, [illegible] and 5; Pecan Grove and Swan Lake at Pecan, Feb. 11 and 12; Richmond at Milliken's Bend, Feb. 18 and 19; Tensas and Elizabeth Chapel at Tensas, [illegible]

March—St. Joseph and Wesley Chapel at Wesley Chapel, [illegible] and 4; Whitehall at Whitehall, March 10 and 11; Greenville at Centerville, March 17 and 18; Pecan Point, March 24 and 25;

Imperial Steward's Meeting at Waterproof, Feb. 3.

Lewis Skipwith, Steward.

Shreveport District—First Round Quarterly Meetings.

February—Pleasant Hill circuit, at Pleasant Hill, Feb. 11 and 12; Mansfield station at Mansfield, Feb. 18 and 19; Natchitoches circuit, at Natchitoches, Feb. 25 and 26.

March—Grand Cane circuit at Boyd's Mills, March 3 and 4; Caddo circuit, at Greenwood, March 10 and 11; Shreveport station, at Shreveport, March 16 and 17; Mansfield, March 24 and 25;

[illegible] at Shelby Springs, April 7 and 8; [illegible] ment, at Ringgold, April 8 and 9.

G. Rey[illegible]

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY,
GREENSBORO', [illegible]

[illegible] exercises of the 3d Session of the Southern University will commence on the second Wednesday of February, and will continue [illegible] weeks, which is Commencement day. [illegible] Department of the University opened, as during the preceding session, with prospects.

FACULTY.

Dr. WIGHTMAN, President, and Professor of Intellectual Science.

Rev. DR. WADSWORTH, Prof. of Ancient Languages.

J. CASEY, A.M., Prof. of Ancient Languages.

C. WILLIAMS, Prof. of Mathematics.

T. LIPSCOMB, A.M., Prof. of Chemistry.

EXPENSES.

[illegible] Fee, per term, $25; Preparatory Department, $[illegible] Tuition Fee, $25; Contingent Fee, $2; Board, per month, $[illegible] of two terms, $[illegible], including room and fe[illegible]

PRESIDENT'S MES[illegible]

[illegible] of the Senate and House of Rep[illegible]

Our deep and heart-felt gratitude is due to the Supreme Ruler of the universe and Giver of all good, for the numerous blessings throughout the year which have been unusually [illegible] and general. [illegible] the health of the country [illegible] have been unusually [illegible] and general. [illegible] the head. [illegible], notwithstanding much reason to believe from the past that we have enjoyed the favor of Providence over since our organization as a people, exposed to many threatening and alarming progress; but on each successive occasion a cloud has been dispersed, or has passed by, before it has burst upon [illegible] heads, and we [illegible] have been [illegible] peace[illegible]

[illegible] and [illegible]
[illegible] chief [illegible] but sympathetic [illegible] which may [illegible] terminate at [illegible] every [illegible] in the [illegible] apprehension, [illegible]
[illegible] peace[illegible] sake of [illegible]

NEW VOLUME OF THE QUARTERLY.

Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Series—January, 1860. No. 1. Nashville, Methodist Publishing House.

Milton.—This elegant article is from the scholarly pen of "L." of Alabama, whose style is so terse to us, a striking harmony between Milton, the Statesman, and the reviewer. It is well.—The writer, with the highest admiration of Milton, regards Macaulay as his first adequate biographer, although [illegible] has waited for such an one [illegible] two hundred years. He allows to Macaulay, in a good degree, "the subtle combination of [illegible]," the descriptive power of Christopher North, the [illegible] of Macaulay, the vigor of Sterling, and the best features of Hallam's Life of Nelson. But one of the three volumes has yet appeared; and, as Milton was the greatest of English representative men"—a statesman, a poet, a hero—and representative and heroic age,—his biography will overflow into a history. This is well, if it is done well. The reviewer is a student of Milton—has [illegible] and though he has, in this article, we imagine he will yet say more to [illegible] character, history, and genius of the Milton should be studied by every [illegible] lover of culture, every disciple of [illegible] every friend of freedom. His history, his [illegible] should be [illegible] acquainted with him, and with [illegible] facilities for such acquaintance this article [illegible] while it will be hailed with equal [illegible] by those who have made Milton a study. It, [illegible] the price of the Quarterly.

Alexander's Theory of Conscience.—This [illegible] which is the conscience is an originally [illegible] not deny its uni[illegible] that especial[illegible] single, irresolvable faculty of the [illegible] is the product of the [illegible] action [illegible] The reasoning of the writer [illegible] the arguments skillfully set forth. He cer[illegible] tion. A review of several [illegible] at [illegible]

While we do not assume, at this [illegible] opinion on the [illegible] involved, and [illegible] Dr. Alexander [illegible] there is much in [illegible] argument to [illegible] hold and deny [illegible] chairs [illegible] [illegible] than this [illegible]

The Texas Christian [illegible] Rev. J. [illegible] is a review of Sir William Hamilton's [illegible] and Mansel's Limits of [illegible] Although the question is not thus [illegible] terms, yet it resolves itself [illegible] old dispute as to the distinction be[illegible] the Understanding and the Reason—the discursive [illegible] the logical faculty, judging according to [illegible] the first reason, the intuitional faculty, the [illegible] of God. Hamilton and Mansell either [illegible] greatly emphasize this latter faculty, [illegible] never reach higher in their philosophy than [illegible] more logical processes. Hence, in the speculation, [illegible] the human mind conceive the [illegible] the negative side. Mr. Carnes, em[illegible] philosophy of the reason, as distinguished [illegible] understanding, believes in intuitions of truths which [illegible] processes will never reach; and, hence, [illegible] the affirmative side. We [illegible] to his view of the [illegible] as merely logical philosophy we cannot abide.—[illegible] are happy to find this discussion broached in the [illegible] Mr. Carnes is somewhat unjust to h[illegible] [illegible] clearness of some of his passages. Upon [illegible] however, his style is good, his arguments sat[illegible] throughout, there is the genuine ring of [illegible] topic, as such, is severely just, and, what is [illegible] upon the basis of the intuitions of [illegible] illustrated by the imagination; without [illegible] is as the earth which formed Adam's body, [illegible] is at that body before the living soul was [illegible] it.

The Evangelist.—This is a powerful missionary [illegible] upon the text of Harris's "Great Commission." [illegible] that pungent and thrilling address [illegible] Secretary and Agent of the Alabama Conference [illegible] read this article with special pleasure. The doc[illegible] and they are most forcibly presented.—[illegible] duty of every christian to consecrate himself [illegible] the evangelization of the world, is satisfactorily [illegible] from the teaching and design of Christ, the [illegible] the history of the Church, the [illegible] and [illegible] to the fitality and [illegible] The argument in behalf of the [illegible] missionary labor for the salvation of the [illegible] If any are afflicted [illegible] nothing low—[illegible] compared to foreign [illegible] let [illegible] from the same [illegible]

A HAPPY NEW YEAR!

To every man, woman and child, who shall read this number of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, in whatever part of the world, and to all their kin, and all their friends, and all their servants, we wish a happy New Year! With all our personal friends—all whom we love, and who love us,—wherever scattered abroad—the friends of our youth and our riper years—it matters not how long since we have met,—we shake hands in our heart. "Thy friend and thy father's friend, forget not."

Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in christian love;
The fellowship, of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

We remember, to-day, with special affection, the old friends of our boyhood, in the primitive regions where the railroads have not even yet waked the echoes of "Sleepy Hollow." God bless them! We shall never forget their cabins of hewed pine-logs; the undressed floors; the clap-board roofs, innocent of a single nail, but held to their places by "weight-poles," and "knees," and "eave-bearers,"—the cracks lined with pine-boards which had never been profaned by a "drawing-knife." The "rack," made of the forks of a sapling, over the door, where the rifle and the shot-bag hang; the "pot-rack" in the wide fire-place of the kitchen, stoves never having been heard of; the cotton cards, the spinning wheel, and the pine wood loom—made of two halves of a pine log, each on the floor, the other against the wall, at angle of forty-five degrees—"factory thread" was beginning to be known, but was deemed too expensive. The well of cold water in the yard, enclosed by a pine-rail worm-fence, or the path down the hill to the spring; the cows, and horses, and pigs, surrounding the corn-crib and shuck-peh in the horse-lot; the ox-cart, the plow, the hoes, the axes, and the "gears," under the shed. The cheerful fire of blazing logs on the hearth of flat rocks, the house illuminated by the flame of pine-knots, and "the old-fashioned Bible that lay on the stand."

And there was the road "out out" across the "branch," and over the hill, and across the creek, to the "meeting house," where the popular "circuit-rider" preached once in four weeks. That great and good man, the presiding elder, came round once a quarter, and held the quarterly meeting, administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, baptized the children, and held love-feast. Six or eight miles off was the camp-ground, where every body "tented" once a year, and where the altar was full, many were converted, the shouting made the woods and hills ring, the preaching was "powerful," and the singing was glorious. What would such a country have done without Methodism, and its itinerant ministry? What would all such countries do? And how much of these United States is, or has been, of this character. May a happy New Year dawn na these dear old regions, and on all like them! Upon their living and their dead; their meetlag-houses, and their camp-grounds, and their graveyards, with graves surrounded with humble pine palings. In them rest the "pilgrim fathers" of Methodism; they were the grandest "parltaps" that ever shook the world with the enthusiasm of their zeal, the power of their faith, the might of their souls. Honored be their memory forever! Honored be the memory of every old straight-breasted, home-spun dressed circuit-rider, local preacher, exhorter, class-leader, and brother and sister! And there are others to be remembered with honor. When the writer mounted his horse, at his father's door, to go to his first circuit, he rode two miles out of his way to say "good-bye" to a fine old lady of the Primitive Baptist persuasion, commonly called "Hard-Shells," who, with her family, had always been his friends. Dismounting reverently in her presence, she placed her hands devoutly upon his uncovered head, and earnestly prayed God to attend him always with His blessing.

Driving through that country last summer, for the first time in many years, we called at a cabin for a drink of water, when who should come in response to our hail but one of the local preachers we had known in our boyhood. We immediately grasped him by the hand, and exclaimed, "How d'ye do, Brother C——?" He was without coat or vest, and his clothing drenched with perspiration from some hard labor he had been engaged in in the valley, Saturday afternoon. He was a man nearly seventy years of age, working hard all the

and
eal preacher, nd all like her! A ethren, and friends, who thers and their families.

A happy year to all our brethren in the ministry; may this year be one of great ministerial success and happiness, in all our bounds. A happy New Year to the members of the Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana Conferences. A happy New Year to all the faithful and laborious agents of this paper, who have been, and are now, getting many new subscribers for the Advocate. A happy New Year to all our Subscribers. May God bless them in their souls and bodies, in their "basket and store." May their souls be happy in God. May their wives and husbands be most loving and devoted. May their sons be manly and noble, and their daughters discreet and lovely; may their children all be converted, and all marry well. May their servants be dutiful and pious. May their crops be fine, and the prices good. May sickness and misfortune be kept far from them and theirs. A happy New Year to every man and woman of noble aims nad aspirations. A happy New Year to every honest man struggling with difficulties. A happy New Year to every sincere and worthy lover; may he find favor in the eyes of the woman of his choice. A happy New Year to all the charming women in the world. A happy New Year to all the old people, and to all the little children—to all the poor and all the sick, and all the unhappy. A happy New Year to the widow and the orphan, to the bereaved, of parents, husbands, wives, brothers, sisters, children, kindred, friends. A happy New Year to all who are seeking the salvation of their souls—may the Sun of Righteousness arise, with healing in his wings, upon their sad hearts. God grant us all a happy New Year in Heaven!

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA—IT MUST BE ENDOWED THIS YEAR.

This institution affords a fine illustration of the necessity of following that wise saying: "Line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little." If there is an institution in the South which has a right to expect success in the movement to endow it, Centenary has that right. The Southern University, at Greensboro', Ala., is succeeding gloriously in its endowment. Why may not Centenary succeed as well? Greensboro' is supported by a wealthy Conference. Centenary is supported by two Conferences, both wealthy. Greensboro' is located in the heart of a wealthy community; Centenary is also. Greensboro' has excellent buildings; Centenary has the finest College buildings in the South. It has, also, an ample patronage—over two hundred students in attendance. Greensboro' has one energetic agent in the field; Centenary has two—Rev. Vernon H. Johnson in the Mississippi Conference, and Rev. H. Avery in the Louisiana Conference. The Southern University, Auburn College, Howard (Baptist) College, all in Alabama, have each a friend to give $25,000 to endow the Biblical chair. Centenary—well, here is the rub. Who will give $25,000 to endow the Biblical chair in Centenary? Several gentlemen and ladies in Alabama have given to their respective colleges $25,000, $15,000, $12,000, $10,000, $5,000, and less amounts. We need such friends for Centenary. Even Soule University in Texas, a new institution, in a new State, has two friends who have given $12,000 each to endow it. What is to prevent Mississippi and Louisiana from endowing Centenary at once—this year? Now is the time. Fine crops have been made. The price of cotton is good. There is greater demand than ever for the education of our sons at home. Three hundred medical students from the South left Philadelphia the other day for their own schools. We have two fine agents in the field. Let the work be accomplished. Our agents are both zealous in the cause. Let all the friends meet them in the proper spirit. Which one of the agents will first find the man to endow the Biblical chair with $25,000? Will the Mississippi Conference first furnish such a friend of the College, or will the Louisiana Conference?

Have You done so too?—The antagonism in this life between the real and the ideal—between what is and what ought to be—is as much manifest in the circulation of our papers and periodicals as in anything else. Here is an illustration. Suppose this preacher goes on this way all the year; and suppose all the four hundred preachers who receive this paper gratis, as agents, do likewise, what will be the result? We leave each one to figure it out. Rev. John H. Massey, of Labutcha Mission, Mississippi Conference, sending four new subscribers, and some money for old accounts, writes:—"I begun my work with the plan given me at Conference. I have been at seven houses of worship, and met but two congregations—almost frozen. I have done a little for the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Death of Rev. Dr. Newton.—On returning home we were pained to find in our exchanges a notice of the death of Rev. A. Newton, D.D., which occurred at Jackson, Miss., the place of his residence, Nov. 27th. He was a minister of the New School Presbyterian Church, learned and distinguished as a preacher and writer. In defence of infant baptism, and of the Church Catholic, against the exclusive immersion dogma, he had but few equals. He was an able and ardent defender of Scriptural Christianity against the attacks of abolition ecclesiastical fanatics. He was a man in his time, and his memory is worthy of honor.

Pay to 1861.—We ask all our Agents, and all our subscribers, to carefully read our standing notice under the editorial head, and to conform to it in every case. Let every one, who has not done so, pay to Jan. 1, 1861, and let every new subscriber either begin with the year, or, if he begin later, let him send money enough to pay only to the end of the year, as directed in the notice. This is an important rule, and we must and will conform to it.

"Stranger make a Beginning."—Many Agents are doing noble work for us. Now subscribers are coming in at a most encouraging rate. Cash is coming for both old and new. Brethren, take hold of the matter in the beginning of the year. "Stranger, make a beginning," said the boy to Bishop Pierce, when he wished him to ask a blessing at table. Brethren, "make a beginning."

Four Hundred Agents.—We have about that number. Suppose they each send us ten new subscribers in the month of January. This, making allowance for all discontinuances, would give us over 11,000 subscribers. If they will do this, we will enlarge the paper to the extent of four additional columns.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

We are indebted to the courtesy of our neighbors of the Delta, for the use of their type—a kindness we shall not forget.

Rev. W. McBeth, who is junior preacher on Lafourche and Bayou Black circuit, with Rev. S. J. Davies, was omitted in the Louisiana Conference appointments last week.

Book Notices.—A long string of them—and other matter, crowded out by the President's Message, will appear next week.

Rev. R. Trippett had his name spelled "R. Tuppell" in the Louisiana Conference appointments last week. He is not a Dutchman yet, however.

Death of Thomas DeQuincey.—The Manchester Guardian of the 10th, announces the death of Thomas DeQuincey, of Edinburg, and says: Death has blotted out another great name from the catalogue of English authors. Thomas DeQuincey died on Thursday. This distinguished and voluminous writer was born in our city about the year 1786; but he left Manchester early in life. Since 1843 he has resided in, or in the neighborhood of, Edinburg, and in the modern Athens he breathed his last. For a considerable period before his death, he was engaged in editing a perfect collection of his productions, which, as has been well observed, had previously been buried in the periodical literature of his generation; and it will be some satisfaction to his admirers to know that the [illegible] work to which his fading energies were applied. Like Leigh Hunt, who has but just passed from among us, Mr. DeQuincy was one of the few relics left as of one of the most brilliant ages of English literature. He was one of the friends of Coleridge, Southey and Wordsworth; and, with perhaps the exception of Landor and Brougham, may be regarded as the last of that noble array of men of letters who shed such lustre over the early part of the nineteenth century.

Death of Rev. H. B. Hamilton.—The Presiding Elder of the Clarksville District, East Texas Conference, died of Typhoid fever, at Paris, on the 5th inst. The Paris Visitor says of him: "From our brief personal acquaintance with the deceased, we had a high opinion of his character, as a man, and as a sincere and devoted christian. While he was plain and straight forward in his manners, he was earnest and zealous in the service of his Master. He was one of those christians who act as well as talk religion, and hence he exerted a great influence upon those around him.

The Southern University.—The advertisement announcing the commencement of the second term of this institution, will be found on this page. Its prospects are flattering. It has already a fine company of students, who have been thoroughly examined, and who are well prepared for a thorough collegiate course. The standard of conduct, character, and scholarship demanded is high, as becomes the character of the institution, and of the very able faculty.

The Pacific Methodist College, under the control of the Pacific Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has been located at Cacheville, Yolo County, California, and near $10,000 has been subscribed as a commencement. Great enthusiasm is manifested in the movement, and we trust to hear of the continued prosperity of the enterprise. We need such an institution there, and must have it. Rev. J. C. Stewart is the Agent.

The President's Message, which we give entire, will be read with interest in the present political crisis. We are indebted to the courtesy of our neighbors of the Delta, for the use of their type—a kindness we shall not forget.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

and watchful vigilance for its preservation. In this view, let me implore my countrymen, North and South, to cultivate the kindest feelings of mutual forbearance and good-will towards each other, and strive to allay the demon spirit of sectional hatred and strife now abroad in the land. This advice proceeds from the heart of an old public functionary whose service commenced in the last generation, among the wise and conservative statesmen of that day, now nearly all passed away, and whose first and dearest earthly wish is to leave his country tranquil, prosperous, united and powerful.

We ought to reflect that in this age, and especially in this country, there is an incessant flux and reflux of public opinion. Questions which in their day assumed a most threatening aspect, have now nearly gone from the memory of men. They are "volcanoes burnt-out, and on the lava and holes and squalid scorine of old craters grow the peaceful olive, the cheering vine, and the sustaining corn." Such, in my opinion, will prove to be the fate of the present sectional excitement, should those who wisely seek to apply the remedy of caution always be content their efforts within the rule of the Constitution. If this course be pursued, the existing agitation on the subject of domestic slavery, like everything human, will have its day, and give place to other and less threatening controversies. Public opinion in this country is all powerful; and when it reaches a dangerous excess upon any question, the good sense of the people will furnish the correct and bring it back within safe limits. Still, to secure this auspicious result, at the present crisis, we ought to remember that every rational creature must be presumed to intend the natural consequences of his own teachings. Those who commence agitation destructive of the Constitution and the Union, ought not be surprised should their heated partisans advance one step further, and attempt by violence to put their doctrines into practical effect.

In this view of the subject it ought never to be forgotten that, however great may have been the political advantages resulting from the Union to every portion of our common country, these would all prove to be as nothing should the time ever arrive when they can not be enjoyed without serious danger to the personal safety of the people of fifteen members of the Confederacy. If the peace of the domestic fireside throughout these States should ever be invaded—if the mothers and families within this extensive region should not be able to retire to rest at night without suffering dreadful apprehensions of what may be their own fate and that their children before the morning—it would be vain to recount to such a people the political benefits and results to them from the Union. Self-preservation is the first instinct of nature; and therefore any state of society in which the sword is all the time suspended over the heads of the people, must at last become intolerable. But I indulge in no such gloomy forebodings. On the contrary, I firmly believe that the sense of Harper's Ferry, by arousing the people to the extent and reflect upon the possible peril to their time-honored institutions, will be the means, under Providence, of allaying the existing excitement, and preventing future outbreaks of a similar character. They will resolve that the Constitution and the Union shall not be endangered by rash counsels—knowing that, should the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken * * * at the fountain," human power could never reunite the scattered and hostile fragments."

I cordially congratulate you upon the final settlement by the Supreme Court of the United States of the question of slavery in the Territories, which had created an aspect so truly formidable at the commencement of my administration. The right has been established of every citizen to take his property of this description into the common Territories, and hold it there equally as all the States of the Confederacy, so long as it protected there under the Federal Constitution. Neither Congress, nor a Territorial Legislature, nor any human power has any authority to annul or impair this vested right. The supreme judicial tribunal of the country, which is a co-ordinate branch of the Government, has unanimously and affirmed those principles of Constitutional law, so manifestly just in themselves, and so well calculated to promote peace and harmony among the States. It is a striking proof of the sense of justice which is inherent in our people, that this property in slaves has never been disturbed, to my knowledge, in any of the Territories. Even throughout the late troubles in Kansas there has not been a single attempt, as I am credibly informed, to violate, in a single instance, with the rights of the owner. Had any such attempt been made, the judiciary would doubtless have afforded an adequate remedy. Should they fail to do this hereafter, it will be time enough to strengthen their hands by further legislation. Had it been decided that either Congress or the Territorial Legislature possess the power to annul or impair the right to property in slaves, the consequences would be intolerable. In the latter event, there would be a struggle for a majority of the members in the Legislature at each successive election, and the rights of property held under the Federal Constitution would depend for the time being on the result. Agitation would thus be rendered incessant; while each political revolution would be attended with the danger that the majority would be just

THE

...t a sort of faint... ...ntinctly after my par... ...to the door, and looked ...at the window where he ...he came back to me, and resumed ...made. The moment altered ...shiver of the reader spoke. His voice was very low, quite ...her cease for ...and he set his words short. But how dis...

"Do you fear me, sir?" he asked.

"No," said I.

"It's a ticklish thing, this shaving, isn't it?" said he. "But my hand is always ready. I can do what I please with a razor, just what I please. Be good enough to keep still, just now. I'm close on to a large vein, you see, right in your neck. Keep very still, and don't stir. I know what would happen, and so do you, if you stirred or spoke a word."

Good God! Those were hideous words; but the glare of the man's eye, as he came round in front of me, was appalling. I could not have uttered a syllable if I had died otherwise.

"Now," said he, "listen, but don't move," and he pressed the flat blade against my throat, as if by way of warning. "I don't like this. I can't stand it. I'm going? And so help me God, if you lift a finger to stop me, or make one noise, both of us will have to die. I would a little rather not hurt you; but—Remember!"

I sprang away, and caught up my cloak and hat, which lay near, still keeping the razor in his hand. The moment its frightful contact was removed my inertness vanished. I leaped up, seized the chair in which I had been sitting, and shouted lustily. He turned upon me like a tiger.

"Ah, you will have it, then!" he cried, and rushed toward me.

I thrust him aside with the heavy chair, and lifting it high in the air, brought it down crashing upon him. He sank for a second, but quickly rose again. He was heavier than I, and twice as strong, I suppose. Persons who have thus been in positions of great danger will not be astonished to hear that I forgot, after my first cry, to call out at all. I thought only of defending myself.

This state of things did not last a quarter of a minute. He would have beaten me down soon enough, had I not, in sheer desperation, made use of a trick which I had once before seen successfully employed. I moved my eyes suddenly from him, and started wildly into the space behind him, pointing, at the same time and in the same direction, with my arm. By a lucky chance I pointed to the window.

I think that movement saved my life.

He stopped, irresolute, glanced at the window, flung his hands above his head, grasped as if he were choaking, and, dashing the razor against the stone wall, fell trembling upon his knees. As I stepped swiftly across the floor he called out to me:

"Don't go, don't go!" he said. "Stand there, at the door, if you choose, but wait a minute. It's all over now; and perhaps, if you hear me, you won't wonder that I was driven mad."

I hardly knew how to act; but as I involuntarily checked my steps he continued:

"Look out at that window, Sir, and you'll see, just over the road, a woman with a child in her arms, standing in a door-way. That is my wife and baby—my poor wife and baby. She doesn't know I'm here—thank God for that. I came here under a wrong name, and she supposes I'm far away at sea. I guess it would break her heart to know the truth. Well, Sir, that's my home. I've seen it, and I've seen her, every day, now, these three months. It used to make me crazy, but I bear it better now. I got this chance—this great chance—was too much for me. And to think that I came near losing all hope of ever seeing her again!"

Could I doubt those struggling sobs and tears? There was truth in every tone. I looked through the window, and saw, as he had told me, a woman standing on a threshold opposite, with a little child. She tossed it up laughingly once or twice, and disappeared.

"You won't trust me, I know," said the prisoner; "but I want to beg you not to let the warden know of this. It's no use, I guess. Well, I swear that I'll be true to home after this. Nothing but three years solitary now, and who can live through that? No, no, you'll let this go by, won't you? You may believe me—you may be sure."

Feet shuffling along the passages announced the return of my companions. The prisoner endeavored to calm himself, and I put on an air of unconcern which I think was very successful under the circumstances.

"Have you yet?" said the warden, astonished. If he had a shave I had been through!

"I have, Sir," said Johnson, looking appealingly at me.

"Very well," said the warden, "it?" he asked me.

"I think not," said I. "Another time will do for me."

So I wiped my face, and we went on our way.

Of course I was bound to tell the warden what had happened; but even in that great excitement which naturally followed so narrow an escape I think I set forward all that I could in the poor fellow's favor. The warden received the story with perfect composure, and assured me that he would act in such a manner as he thought the occasion needed. He condemned his own heedlessness in opening a cell when an opportunity for guilt with much more earnestness than he spoke of the event itself. I could not refuse visiting the wife of Johnson. I discovered that his story was true, and learned his real name. She was happy in her ignorance of his real condition. I sought to ascertain whether she was able to sustain her self until he should rejoin her; and then she told me that M.——, the warden of the State Prison, had also come to her, shown interest in her behalf, for which she could not well account, and assured her of his aid and protection in any need that might come to her. She was most grateful, but wondered why he had done so.

A few months ago the following newspaper paragraph appeared. It was much copied, and, I suppose, will be readily remembered.

"It is the custom at the State Prison in C—— to permit prisoners whose terms are within a few weeks of expiration, to work outside the walls, under the supervision of an officer. This privilege is, in most cases, gladly accepted. A few weeks ago, however, it was declined by a man who, as his time of freedom drew near, seemed more restless under his confinement than any others. On inquiry it was found that this prisoner had a wife and child living directly within view of the walls, and that for nearly three years he had seen her daily, she being all the while ignorant of his [illegible] and supposing that her husband, who is a sailor, was at sea, on a long voyage. He was unwilling that, at the last moment, the fact should be revealed to her; and, at his own request, he continued within the walls until his liberation, which took place last week. Excepting on one occasion, his conduct while in prison had been without blemish."

LORD BROUGHAM IN HIS OLD AGE.

George Augustus Sala draws the following queer sketch of Lord Brougham, as he appears in the British House of Lords: Standing in the narrow Gothic railed-off space reserved for the public—the throne at the opposite extremity of the House—you may see on one of the benches to the right, almost every afternoon, Saturday and Sunday except, during the session, a very old man with a white head, and attired in a simple frock and trowsers of shepherd's plaid. It is a leonine head, and the white locks are bushy and profuse. So, too, the eyebrows, penthouses to eyes somewhat weak now, but that can flash fire yet upon occasion. The face is plowed with wrinkles, as well it may be, for the old man will never see fourscore years again, and of these threescores at the very least have been spent in study and the hardest labor, mental and physical. The nose is marvel—protuberant, rugose, aggressive, inquiring and defiant—unlovely, intellectual. There is a trumpet mouth, a belligerent mouth, projecting and self-asserting; his ears are large, and on his chin or cheeks no vestige of hair.

Not a beautiful man this, on any theory of beauty, Hogarthesque, Rumfordique, Winckelmannesque, or otherwise. Rather a angry, crushed, battered, weather-beaten; ugly, fateful, Scotch-collyish type. Not a soft, imploring, yielding countenance. The mouth is fashioned to the saying of harsh, hard, impertinent things; not cruel, but downright; but never to whisper compliments or simper out platitudes. [illegible] too, that can be sometimes terrible; but not a nose for a pouting Covent Garden beauty, or a Rosa, or a Rachel, or a Fanny Kemble, or even much for truffles either, I think, or the delicate aroma of sparkling Moselle. Would prefer onions or strongly-hopped malt and hops; something honest and unsophisticated. Watch this old man narrowly, young visitor to the Lords. Scan his furrowed visage. Mark his odd eaguer ways and gestures. Passing uncouth. Now he cronches, very doglike, on his crimson bench; claps one shepherd's plaid in both his hands. Bothers it. O. C., is talking nonsense, I think. Now the legs are crossed, the hand thrown behind his head; now he digs his elbows into the table writing table before him, and buries the hands into that pile of white hair of his. The celebrities of Floreem, Q. C., are in a white hair of his. The celebrities of Floreem, Q. C., are in a white hair of his. Then with a wrench, a wriggle, a shake, and human patience. start up—still very doglike, but of the Newfoundland rather, new, he asks a lawyer or a witness a question, question very couched in that which is neither broad Scotch nor Northumbrian burr, but a rebellious mixture of the two. Mark well, eye him closely; we have not much time to lose. Alas the giant is now old; though with frame yet unenfeebled, with intellect yet gloriously unclouded. But the stands are running, ever running. Watch him, mark him, eye him; score him on your mind tablets; then home; and in after years it may be your lot to tell your children, that once at least you have seen with your own eyes the famous Lord of Vaux—once listened to the voice that has shaken thrones and made tyrants tremble; that has been a herald of deliverance to millions pining in slavery and captivity; a voice that has given utterance, in man's most eloquent words, to heaven; a voice that has been trumpet-sounding these sixty years past in defence of Truth, and Right, and Justice—in advocacy of the claims of learning and industry, and of the liberties of the great English people, from whose rank he rose; a voice that should be entitled to a hearing in a Walhala of wise heroes, after Francis of Verulam and Isaac of Grantham; the voice of one who is worthy a lord, but who will be yet better remembered, and to all time—remembered enthusiastically and affectionately as the champion of all good and wise, and beautiful human things.

Obituaries:

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

MRS. SARAH MILDEN MIXSON, wife of Dr. William Mixson, and daughter of Mrs. Emily W. Andrew, was born Oct. 10, 1828, and died at the residence of her husband, in Dallas county, Ala., Dec. 4, 1859. Our dear Sally was strictly trained by her Godly mother in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and well did she repay the anxieties and cares of her mother. In life's early morning she united herself with the people of God, and continued to the close of life a consistent, humble, and cheerful follower of the Lord. She loved all the institutions of the church, and was delighted in her attendance upon them all. In the various relations of life, as a wife, as a daughter, as a sister, she was highly exemplary. She was a fine example of filial affection, even as she had been in her earliest days of constant and cheerful obedience. Her mother says she does not remember that Sally ever did anything in her life to grieve her. We had left her a few weeks before in fine health, and were listening home from the Memphis Conference on our way to Louisiana. When in Montgomery, we heard that she was very ill, and as soon as practicable, we reached her house, and the mother was permitted to minister to her dying child just forty-eight hours before she closed her eyes in death. Her disease was hemorrhage of the stomach. She suffered no particular pain but nausea and vomiting, and died of extreme prostration from loss of blood. Throughout her sickness she was calm and cheerful, and when asked as to her feelings in view of death, she said: I have tried to be a Christian and am not afraid to die." Thus has passed away from earth one who loved God from her childhood, a devoted daughter and wife, an affectionate sister, a kind mistress, a friend and neighbor universally beloved in that humble, practical Christian. My wife has buried in ten months both her daughters. The stroke to her is heavy, but she bows submissively, and while she weeps she does not murmur. Pray for us that God may give us all grace suitable for our trial.

JAS. O. ANDREW.

Franklin, La., Dec. 16, 1859.

MRS. SUSANAH COLLINS, consort of William Collins, died 10th Nov., in the seventy-first year of her age, after a long and painful illness, which she bore with great Christian resignation. She was born in New Berne, North Carolina, and moved to this State sometime in the year 1817, and settled on Bayon Boeuff, near Berwick Bay, where she resided until death. Many of our pioneer preachers who have not preceded her to the land of the blest, will mourn the loss of Mother Collins, for her house was open to preachers of every denomination, where they met a hearty welcome when there was no reception for them at any other house in this section of the country. When the Apostles received their mission, "Go ye into all the world," Jerusalem was the starting point; and we may say Mother Collins' house was the starting point in this section of the country. She always expressed a preference for the Baptist faith, still she opened her house and welcomed and loved all Protestants; and, strange to say, she never made any profession of experimental religion, and had it not been manifested in her daily walk and sisterly love, and evidenced in her triumphant death, a large circle of friends and acquaintances, and her devoted children, would have been deprived of the consolation of knowing she has gone to her reward in heaven.

Jos. KNIGHT.

B. H. K. WAILES, eldest son of Col. H. Wailes, died Dec. 10, at the residence of his father, in Catahoula parish, La. Howard had just passed the threshold of manhood—just entered upon his twenty-second year. Two years ago he graduated with honor at Centenary College, and when taken with his last illness, was on his way to New Orleans to attend medical lectures. A few weeks ago, he stood among us, full of life and strength and manly beauty, of uncommonly vigorous and sprightly intellect, affectionate, and tender-hearted, bound to earth by the strongest ties of paternal love, surrounded by an unusually large circle of doting relatives and friends.

"While in the cheering light of hope,
A smiling future lay."

But from all these, the swift messenger, with relentless haste, has hurried him away.

Howard's friends have good reason to hope. Seven years ago, during a revival at Centenary, he professed religion; and though led away, to some extent, by the gaieties and frivolities that surround the slippery paths of youth, he seemed, during his illness, to be seeking restoration to the favor of God. His disease (typhoid fever) was protracted and painful, yet he never murmured or complained, seemed grateful for every attention, and was frequently heard uttering words of prayer.

MRS MARY JANE HARRISON, wife of J. F. Harrison, and daughter of Needham and Sarah Lee, died on the 20th day of September, in Louisville, Alabama, in the 19th year of her age. She was born in Barbour county, Alabama, 24th November, 1840; embraced religion at thirteen, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; married 10th November, 1858. Her piety was calm, cheerful, and active. She exhibited in her life all the attributes of a Christian. She was devoted to the service of her Master, and the good of those around her. Her house was the minister's home. She was a constant Bible-reader; she was a model wife, a model housekeeper. She sought in many ways to render home the most pleasant and happy spot on earth to her husband; during the short time they lived together there was not on earth a happier home. But the angel of the fireside is gone. We have no doubt that her happy Spirit is one of that bright throng around the throne of God.

L. P. GELSON.

CAROLINE MATILDA BOWDEN, wife of Lemuel Bowden, and daughter of Frederick and Susannah Daniels, died Oct. 42th 1859, in her twenty-sixth year, having been married about twelve months. Her short life was not in vain. She sought not the glittering toys of earth. About twelve years ago she joined the M. E. Church, South, and made a profession of the religion of Christ. Her Christian life was uniform, her piety deep and constant. Her example as a Christian was salutary. Her religion made her a loving and devoted wife, and an unsurpassed step-mother. Her longings on marrying Bro. Bowden was, "I intend to treat his children so that I will be rewarded for it in a coming day." Her last moments were quiet and peaceful. Her last words were, "I have a home up yonder."

W. N. PRAYY.

December 1, 1859.

LITTLE MOLLIE UPTON, daughter of Rev. Thomas and Mrs. Elizabeth Upton, died in Delhi, La., of inflammation of the brain. She was born Dec. the 10th, 1855, and died Nov. the 14th, 1859. How strange and baffling some of the providences of God—often the wintry winds blast the most lovely and beautiful flowers; but when these human blossoms are nipped, they are to bloom in a heavenly clime for ever.

T. H. McCLENDON.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

W. OTKIN, New Orleans La. — M CONLY, Middleton, Mi.

MURPHY, SIKES & [illegible] ON FACTORS and General Commission Merchants jy20-6m — No. 42 Union street, New

W. A. BROADWELL. — A. F. HAYNES.

BROADWELL & HAYNES,
(Formerly BROADWELL & PAYNE)
COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
No. 40 UNION STREET, N. C.

HAVING RETIRED FROM BOSINESS, I TAKE PLEASURE IN soliciting for my former Partners, BROADWELL & HAYNES, the patronage and confidence of my friends, believing their experience, capacity and means, will merit its continuance, and enable them to give general satisfaction. [jel] M. U. PAYNE.

W. R. STUART, New Orleans. — DR D. A. JAMES, Madison Parish, La.

STUART & JAMES,
No. 42 Union street, New Orleans,

HAVE ASSOCIATED THEMSELVES TOGETHER for the purpose of conducting a COTTON FACTORAGE and GENERAL COMMISSION BUSINESS; are prepared to make the usual advances to planters, in the way of supplies, etc., and respectfully solicit patronage

B. M. LOWE & CO., COTTON FACTORS AND General Commission Merchants,
ap6 — No. 87 GRAVIER STREET, New Orleans.

MR HUGH LUCAS HAVING BECOME A PART ner in our house, from this date, we beg leave to call your attention to our increased facilities to fill all orders, from our large and well-selected Stock of GROCERIES, PRODUCE, WINES, LIQUORS, etc., etc. We remain, your obedient servants.
COOPER & NEIBERT.
New Orleans, Dec. 1st, 1859. — 27 and 29 Common st.

W. COOPER. — J. O. NEIBERT. — D LUCAS.

COOPER & NEIBERT, WHOLESALE GROCERS,
Nos. 27 and 29 Common street, New Orleans.

PILCHER, GOODRICH & CO.,
COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS and Commission Merchants, No. 47 Carondelet, corner Union street, New Orleans. jy11-1y

A. H. May & Co.,
COTTON FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION Merchants, No 94 Gravier street New Orleans. an21y

J. U. PAYNE. — J. P. HARRISON.
G. W. GUTHRIDGE. — WM B. DAMERON

Payne & Harrison.
COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 51 Union street, New Orleans. dec7-1y

R. L. WALKER. — HON. C. HUTCHINSON
Caddo Parish, La.

Walker & Hutchinson,
COTTON FACTORS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 37 Carondelet street, New Orleans. je23

J. BOYD & Co.,
Cotton Factors, Receiving & Forwarding Merchants,
No 4 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.
apr 17-1y

LEONARD FASH. — P. B. LAURANS.

L NARD FASH & Co.,
COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
45 POYDRAS STREET,
Oct 24. — NEW ORLEANS.

LANE, SALTER & CO.,
[Successors to LANE, MAYFIELD & Co.]
COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 79 St. Charles street, New Orleans. jy5-1y

JOHN F WYCHE & Co.,
COTTON FACTORS and COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No 29 Common street, New Orleans. my1-y

PROFESSIONAL.

JAS. J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
[m24] — Livingston, Alabama.
Will practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties.

DR. E. D. BEACH, HAVING RESUMED THE practice of Medicine, offers his Professional services to the citizens of New Orleans.
N. B.—Special attention paid to diseases of the RECTUM, PILES, FISTULA IN ANO, ETC.—Fistula do not positively cured without the use of the knife, cautery, pain, or confinement whatever. Office No. 6, Bayoune street near Canal. ap27.

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY AT LAW, BATON Rouge.
REFERENCES—Henderson & Caines and Chinn & Bolton, New Orleans; W. R. Pike and A. Matta, Baton Rouge.

B. D. & A. W. ROBERTS, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW,
Floyd, Carroll Parish,
jal9 — Louisiana.

J. C. FUQUA. — J. U. KILBOURNE.

FUQUA & KILBOURNE,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
CLINTON, LOUISIANA,

PRACTICE in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana, East Baton Rouge and St. Helena, and in the Supreme Court at New Orleans.
References—Payne & Harrison, Byrne, Vance & Co., Broadwell & Payne, Pritchard & Flower, Edw. Nalle & Co., Rev. H. N. McTyeire, New Orleans. mar 20-1y

P. H. WILLARD,
Coal Merchant,
18 EXCHANGE PLACE, (OPPOSITE THE POST OFFICE.)

THOSE desirous of purchasing Coal or Wood, can be supplied at short notice at this CITY COAL OFFICE, where is constantly kept on hand Pittsburgh, English, and Connel, Anthracite and Lower Ohio Coal. Families, Hotels, Cotton Presses Steamers, &c., &c., supplied at the lowest market prices. n22-1y

WATKINS & HOMAN, IMPORTERS AND DEALERS in CARPETINGS, OIL CLOTHS, WINDOW SHADES, CORNICES, and Curtain Materials, No. 30 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.

THE BROOKS HOUSE, 155 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS, next door to Odd Fellows' Hall, fronting Lafayette Square. A delightful situation for boarders; convenient for travelers; every accommodation; as good a table as the city affords. [jn16

J. H. KELLER, SOAP MANUFACTORY, CORNER of Howard and St. Andrew streets, New Orleans
A good supply constantly on hand, and all orders promptly filled.

R. A. STEWART'S NEW PROCESS FOR DEfocating and Clarifying Cane Juice, Syrup, Molasses and Saccharine matter.
Planters wishing to use this Process can obtain the right to do so by calling on or addressing STUART & JAMES, No 42, Union St., New Orleans, where samples of the Sugar may be seen. [au31]
R. A. STEWART.

EDUCATIONAL.

A CARD.

TO PARENTS, MERCHANTS, ETC.

Who wish to give their Sons or Clerks a Practical Business Education, in the shortest possible time, and young gentlemen whose time is important.

DOLBEAR
COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
OF THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS,

Founded in 1832—Chartered by the Legislature of Louisiana, with Agricultural and Mechanical Departments.

Capital Stock $250,000,

Is removed and re-opened in the new and spacious Iron Edifice known as

STORY BUILDING,
CORNER OF CAMP AND COMMON STREETS,
Entrance on both streets.
OPEN DAY AND EVENING.

N. B.—There are apartments and Professors for Book Keeping, Penmanship, Mathematics, French, Spanish, German, English, etc., so as to give the time of business men.

Persons from 12 to 60 years attend to any branch they wish, and until as perfect as they wish to be. There are probably not less than 200 of his former students in Banks and business houses in this city. Merchants supply here for Clerks and Book keepers. Country merchants, Steamboat Clerks, etc., can receive instruction to keep their books correctly, or write a free, handsome hand. Catalogues, with Terms, Opinions of the Press, the leading men of the nation, etc., sent to all who may desire them. This is the only Chartered Commercial College in the South-west, and the oldest in the United States, and has stood for MORE THAN A QUARTER OF A CENTURY on its own merits alone.

Board can be had with the Professors or other good families speaking English French, Spanish or German, from $5 to $6 per week.

N. B.—To prevent mistakes or impositions Students intended for this College should bring this Advertisement as Special Directions, as there are every winter temporary rooms open for a few months, all of course making WONDERFUL PROFESSIONS and PROMISES, and posting flaming placards to enlighten the people of New Orleans and of the South! Citizens and strangers are invited to visit the College and Judge for THEMSELVES.

BROOK.—If, as is expected, the citizens is favor of Southern practical, as he should bring this Advertisement as Special Directions, as there are every winter temporary rooms open for a few months, all of course making WONDERFUL PROFESSIONS and PROMISES, and posting flaming placards to enlighten the people of New Orleans and of the South! Citizens and strangers are invited to visit the College and Judge for THEMSELVES.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
Corner of Camp and Common Streets,
ENTRANCE NO. 80 COMMON STREET.
[Established in 1856.]

OPEN DAY AND EVENING THE ENTIRE YEAR.

A full course of Instruction in this institution embraces Double Entry Book-keeping, Commercial Calculation, Commercial Law, and Penmanship. Gentlemen can enter for the full course, or any branch they desire, and at any time, as there is no class system, no copying from books, and no memorizing of arbitrary rules.

FACULTY:

GEO. SOULE, M.A., Principal and Professor of the Theory and Practice of Double Entry Book-keeping, Lecturer on the Science of Accounts, Exchange, Commercial Correspondence, etc., etc.
W. J. KENNON, Practical Accountant, Associate Professor in Book-keeping Department.
J. M. DILLHAMMER, Esq., Lecturer on Commercial Law.
H. C. SPENCER, Professor of Plain, Ornamental, and Epistolary Penmanship.
GEO. SOULE, Teacher and Lecturer on Commercial Calculations.
J. B. ANDERSON, Esq., Special Lecturer on Exchange, Business Customs, Commercial Rules, etc., etc.
LEON LAUGRIN, Professor of Languages.

This is the only Commercial School in the city where Double Entry Book-keeping is taught practically, and as practiced in the New Orleans business houses.

Each of our young gentlemen has his respective desk, and proceeds in the opening, concurring, and closing of books, under all the variety of circumstances that can possibly occur in the various departments of business.

Merchants, Book keepers, and young gentlemen wishing instruction, are respectfully requested to call and examine our practical forms and peculiar manner of teaching.

For catalogues containing full information, and Balance-sheet Circulars, the most magnificent work of the kind ever executed in the United States, address, GEO. SOULE, New Orleans.

SAN ANTONIO FEMALE COLLEGE.

REV. JOS. CROSS, D.D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science and Belles Lettres.
MRS. JANE T. H. CROSS, S. I. C., Teacher of English branches, and French and Spanish Language.
Mdlle. FABRICUS-BRUNOW, Professor of German Language, Music and Drawing.
MISS HANNAH M. ANDERSON, Preceptress of Preparatory Department.
MR. HENRY GROSSMAN, Teacher of Music.

TERMS,
per session of twenty weeks, payable half in advance, the remainder at the close of the session.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

First Class,	$10 00
Second Class,	15 00

COLLEGIATE DEPARTMENT.

Regular Course, (including Latin)	25 00
French, Spanish, German, or Italian,	10 00
Drawing,	1t 00
Music,	25 00
Use of Instrument for practice,	5 00
Incidental Fee (charged to all),	1 00
Board per month, exclusive of washing,	15 00

Boarders are requested to bring their own pillow cases and towels.

They will not be permitted to make bills at the stores, without express order of parents or guardians.

They will never go out without the company of a teacher, nor receive visits except in a teacher's presence.

The San Antonio Female College offers the best facilities for the education of young ladies. The institution has been commenced on a sure basis; the best men of the community are engaged in the enterprise, and ample accommodations will soon be provided in the way of buildings. The course of instruction is extensive and thorough, and all the teachers are well qualified for their work. Dr. and Mrs. Cross had large experience, and been connected with some of the best institutions in the United States. Prof. Fabricus-Brunow is a native German, of extensive scholastic acquirements, with polished manners and pleasing address. Miss Anderson enjoys a well-earned reputation as an instructress, who, in courtesy, industry and fidality, has seldom been surpassed. Mr. Grossman is a German musician of high character, an excellent performer, and a most skillful and successful teacher. Other assistants will be employed, as the number and advancement of pupils shall require. dec21-6m

COLUMBUS FEMALE INSTITUTE.

SESSION BEGINS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, AND closes on the first Wednesday in July.

FACULTY:

REV. B. F. LARRABEE, M.A., ... President
J. W. M. SHATTUCK, M.D., Professor of Chemistry, Natural Philosophy, and Physiology.
Rev. J. G. NASH, M.A., Professor of Ancient Languages and Mathematics.
JULIUS ERICKSON, M.A., Professor of Music.
Assistants in Literary Department:—MISS CAROLINE R. SHATTUCK, MISS LORRAINE EVERET, MISS MARY FENET, MRS. E. E. SHATTUCK, MRS. L. EAGEN, MRS. H. NASH.
Art Department:—MISS ELIZABETH ARMINATHY.
Assistants in Music:—MISS R. E. TUCKER, MISS N. ERICKSON.
Lecturers:—Rev. JAS. A. LYON, History; Rev. B. F. LARRABEE, M.A., Literature. Familiar lectures are also given by the President and Professors, on Moral Science, Evidences of Christianity, Chemistry, Natural Philosophy, Physiology, Geology &c.

The Boarding Department will be in charge of Mr. and Mrs. LARRABEE, who, assisted by the other teachers, will give the most careful attention to the habits, manners, comfort and health of the young ladies.

EXPENSES:

Board, per scholastic year, ... $135 00

TUITION.

Regular Charges—

Primary Department, per annum,	20 00
Intermediate " "	30 00
Academic " "	40 00
Collegiate " "	50 00
Incidental Fee,	2 00

Extra Charges—

Music on Piano or Guitar,	50 00
Music on Harp,	30 00
Use of Instrument,	10 00
Modern Language,	20 00
Drawing,	20 00
Painting,	50 00

Latin, Greek, and Vocal Music taught without extra charge.

The [illegible] now one of the most complete, and most liberally organized Institutions in the country. There are, at this early period of the session, more than two hundred young ladies in attendance, and still there is room.

For particular information, catalogues, &c., apply to the President or either of the Professors.

Columbus, Miss. 1st, 1860.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE, HUNTSVILLE, North Alabama.

Rev. A. R. ERWIN, D. D., Principal.

This Establishment offers the following inducements to Southern patronage.

1. Huntsville is the acknowledged most healthy location in the South and Southwest; and is proverbially healthy. The social elegance and beautiful scenery to be found here, are great auxiliaries in the formation of character.

2. The edifice is large and elegant—supplied with gas-light; and water in the greatest abundance by pipes, from a mammoth Spring in the town. It is 164 by 52 feet, three stories high, and well furnished.

3. The domestic arrangements are such as to secure not only comfort, but the social and domestic training of the pupils. Fragility, petulitenes and grace, as well as the virtues of the heart, are habitually cultivated.

4. The facilities of instruction are unsurpassed. The [illegible] teachers and attaches, some of whom are distinguished educators, from fifteen large patronage, from among the best families of nine of the Southern States, attest the good-will of the Institution.

5. Arrangements are made to accommodate Southern pupils during the summer Vacation, and to furnish them with such instructions as the extra branches as may be desired. Pupils received at any time.

Apply for a circular to — Rev. A. R. ERWIN, D.D.,
ap6 — Huntsville, Alabama.

KENNER ACADEMY:

A Boarding and Day School, for Boys and Young Men.

VICTOR SCHELIHA, PRINCIPAL.

THIS Institution is located in the town of Kenner, Jefferson Parish, La., ten miles from New Orleans by railroad, and sixteen miles by river. The location is extremely delightful and pleasant. The health of the place is unsurpassed during the whole year.

The course of study is thorough, embracing the English, French, Spanish, German, Latin, and Greek languages. Students can be prepared for any class in college, or for business pursuits.

The Academy Year is divided into Two Sessions of Five Months each, commencing on the First of October and March, respectively. Scholars will be received at any time during the year; none for less time than one session.

For further particulars see circulars, or address Principal.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE.

THE Second Term of this Institution will commence on the 18th of January, 1860.

The Preparatory School of the College, under supervision of Prof. W. F. SLATON, will resume its exercises the 2d day of January, 1860.

It is highly important for students to be present at the opening of the Term. For further information apply to Dr. W. J. RASSETT or the undersigned. JOHN T. DUNKLIN, Auburn, Ala., Dec. 18, 1859. Sec. of Faculty.

DR. WRIGHT'S CELEBRATED REJUVENATING Elixir.—Prepared on the strictest Pharmaceutical principles, by one of the ablest chemists of the age.
FOR THE CURE of General Debility, Mental and Physical Depression, Imbecility, Determination of Blood to the Head, Confused Ideas, Hysteria, General Irritability, Restlessness and Sleeplessness at Night, Absence of Muscular Efficiency, Loss of Appetite, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, Low Spirits, Disorganization of the Organs of Generation, Palpitation of the Heart, and in fact, all the concomitants of a Nervous and Debilitated state of the System, take

The Rejuvenating Elixir,

And you will soon find yourself a new man—a bride instead of the reverse to your friends, and a healthy, sound, and worthy member of the whole human family. For sale, by the Proprietors,

J. WRIGHT, & Co., 21 and 151 Chartres st., New Orleans.

And by Druggists generally throughout the United States.

Children.

TRUTH OMNIPOTENT.—We give to our readers and the public generally the following copy of a letter received by us from J. W. Vesey, Esq., of the Aberdeen Conservative, enclosing at the same time a communication to that paper from Colonel Vasser, of North Mississippi, and who was formerly associate editor of the Conservative. The subject of the letter and communication we do not feel it necessary to comment on, as they tell the whole story, one that ought to go home to those in whose hands the rising generation of children are placed for nurture and for care. All we ask of our readers is a careful perusal of the documents.

CONSERVATIVE OFFICE,
Aberdeen, Miss., August 23d, 1858.

Messrs. Wright & Co.—As any testimonial in reference to your preparations may prove beneficial to you, I enclose the following, published at my request, in the "Conservative" of the 21st inst.

Col. Vasser was formerly associate editor of the "Conservative" and is well known in North Mississippi, as a gentleman of intelligence and strict integrity.

Respectfully, J. W. VESEY.

[For the Conservative.]

ABERDEEN, Aug. 19th, 1858.

Communicated.

DEAR VESEY: Upon the principles of justice and humanity, I am induced to ask your permission to insert this communication in your paper, believing, as I do, that it may be the means of preventing untimely sorrow in many a happy household.

On Friday last, having been for several days previous absent from my family, I found, on my return home, that my infant, aged about 15 months, was quite unwell, from some unknown cause—supposed to be teething. Upon an examination, however, I was of the opinion that her indisposition proceeded from worms; and having been told by a respectable physician that WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE was a sovereign remedy against this terrible enemy of children, I was induced to give it a trial, reluctantly, by the acquiescence of my family Physician.

On the following morning, (Saturday) I commenced administering it by directions, save in quantity, being afraid to give the amount of prescription. I was unable to detect any impression occasioned by it until late in the afternoon of that day; and should not then, but for the discharge of some thirteen worms, varying in length from two and a half to six inches. This I thought a remarkable number for a nursing infant. But, to my great amazement, about one o'clock the next morning I was aroused from my slumber to witness the incredible number of one hundred and thirty-six from one evacuation.

Before breakfast of the same morning, (Sunday) but one small dose was administered, which was followed by the discharge of fifty during the day. The next day, (Monday) none was administered; but still occasional discharges occurred during the day, varying in size and quantity as described.

On Tuesday morning following, one more small dose was administered, making in all five doses of a quarter of a teaspoonful instead of a dose, as prescribed by the label of directions. In all, the little creature has discharged to this date, the rise of three hundred worms, a majority of which will average five or six inches in length; and is running about as usual, with returning evidences of good health and spirits.

Having met with such astonishing effects in the case of my infant, I was induced to use the Vermifuge on the other children under my protection, varying in age from two to ten years old, and in every case save one, (that of the oldest) the like happy results have been produced.

These facts are elicited, 1st, because of my antipathy heretofore to nostrums of every kind; and, 2nd, because my experience has convinced me that, in the experiment I have made with WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE, it is due to suffering humanity, as well as the manufacturer of the medicine, to make public the results of my observation.

W. H. VASSER.

For sale in New Orleans, wholesale and retail, by
J. WRIGHT, & Co., 21 and 151 Chartres st., Sole Proprietors.

Himboldt Extract of Buchu,

Read! Read! Read! "Ye afflicted read" the following Certificate of a cure of over 20 years' standing.

H. T. HELMBOLD.—Dear Sir: I have been troubled with an affliction of the Bladder and Kidneys for over twenty years. I have tried Physicians in vain, and at last concluded to give your Compound Preparation a trial, as I had heard it highly spoken of. It afforded me immediate relief. I have used three bottles, and I have obtained more relief from its effects and feel much better than I have for twenty years previous. I have the greatest faith in its virtues and curative powers, and shall do all in my power to make it known to the afflicted. Hoping this may prove advantageous to you in assisting you to introduce the medicine, I am truly yours.

M. MCCORMICK.

For sale in New Orleans, wholesale and retail, by
J. WRIGHT, & Co., 21 and 151 Chartres st., General Agents.

The Goddess Hygia

When Hygeia leat medicinal aid to man,
And taught him all his evils how to scan,
Not to a favored few she showed the way
To staunch the wound and all its pain allay—
Not to the few who now claim physic theirs,
And think but what they give legitimate wares,
No! to all human kind command she gave,
"Employ your skill, and your sick broils save."
So wout he forth the Magic Salve to find—
The Magic Salve that now heals all mankind.
No Wound nor Bruise, nor Cut, can long remain,
Nor Scar its rude appearance long retain.
Use it—you'll find we are not truth's detractor,
For you'll be healed by

Wiley's Pain Extractor,

The only effective and complete remedy for Bruises Scalds, Eruptions, Piles, or Cutaneous disease whatever.

We Dont Want Any Other.

Such is the language of all who use "WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE," when they call for that and any other is offered them. They have tried it, and from experience know it to be superior to all others; therefore, when they are in want of a medicine of the kind, they purchase that which they know to be good and can be depended on. An Agent who called on us a few days ago, said "I find it difficult to sell any other Vermifuge when I have yours. I have had some in my store for a long time which I occasionally try to 'work off,' but no one will purchase it unless I warrant it as good as yours, this I cannot do." So it is, and so it will be, Winer's Vermifuge owes its unrivalled popularity to its own intrinsic merits, on this alone it has always depended, and were it not a fact that it is superior as a remedy for worms, it would ere this have shared the unenviable fate of many other articles designed for similar purposes. To all who are in want of a medicine of this kind we say try it and judge for yourselves, we are confident that it will give entire satisfaction.

Beware of Calomel.

The public generally may not be aware that nearly all Worm Lozenges contain Calomel, and that the lives of children are thereby endangered; parents should remember this, for although medicine may be easily administered when in the form of Lozenges or Candies of

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 2. WHOLE NUMBER 465.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1860.

$2 00 A YEAR, IN ADV... OFFICE—118 CAMP ST.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

Our cause on the Pacific—Conflict—Country and population—Recent Conference—Mistakes in the east to the So. Church on the Pacific—Needful there as any where—Northern route to Heaven—Oregon calls—Need of men—Some being raised up at home—Episcopal visits—Bishop Pierce—Help—Pacific Methodist—Largest circulation on the Pacific—Needs a Press.

Mr. Editor: Allow me, through your columns, to speak to your numerous readers of our beloved Zion on this coast. I would that I could speak to every brother, sister, and friend of our church east of the Rocky Mountains; and so speak that all would feel as we that are here feel. The history of our past is a history of toil, struggle, and conflict. "Fightings without and fears within," and in the minds of many, even among us, here as well as at home, there existed a problem for years, even until very lately, unsolved and exceedingly doubtful as to its final answer. That problem was, "Is it practicable and advisable to maintain the organization of a Southern Methodist Church in California?"

The question may still linger in some minds in the east, but it no longer lingers in any of our minds upon this coast. The doubtful period has passed, the problem is solved, and an answer in the affirmative been given. Almost every one knows to some extent, though he could not appreciate them unless he had been here, the peculiar circumstances that have surrounded us. Since the discovery of gold in this country, California has been the point to which men from almost every nation, kindred, and people have flocked, with one sole and all-absorbing object—gold, gold. The most never expected to reside here long; they came here to get rich, and go home to enjoy it. Hence, the population was unsettled, migratory, reckless, and a very small proportion of females, which is a misfortune and a calamity to any country, and especially in this case, where so many were not what they should be. If any thing more need be said upon this point, it may be summed up, as one has suggested, in a single sentence, viz: "We have had the devil and wicked men, the pope and abolitionism, to contend with." The last is by no means the least, and partakes of all the rest. Notwithstanding, we have been steadily advancing, and our present is greatly more flattering than any period of our past.

The ninth session of our Conference, as you have already learned, was held in this city a short time since—a body of men that no country need be ashamed of, intelligent, pious, cheerful and happy, self-denying, and ready to go any where the authorities command, without murmur or complaint. Many of them, when the year's labor is ended, have little money to get them to the conference, and less to get them away. But you will hear no word of complaint, or see any one with the blues.—The grace of God is certainly wonderfully manifested among the Methodist preachers. Including the supplies, we have between sixty and seventy men in the field; seventeen were added to our number this year. God is adding to our membership and to our ministry, and continually enlarging our borders—evidently owning and blessing our labors, and setting His seal to the word preached by us.

There is a mistaken idea in the minds of many that have not seen this country, respecting the wants and the desires of our people. I am convinced that a little experience and observation here, would remove that mistake from any Southern mind. But all cannot see—"Blessed are they that, having not seen, believe."

There is as much necessity for us as a church here, in regard to the salvation of thousands, as there is in the Southern States themselves. For there are thousands scattered all through the length and breadth of this country that must be saved alone through Methodist influence, and that must be exerted by the Southern Church. Brethren, will you believe it? I must let you have facts. I give one; many might be given. I attended a camp-meeting, where we had good attendance, a blessed meeting, and about thirty conversions and thirty accessions to the church. The meeting included the day of election, and I understood that, out of two hundred votes polled in that beat, there were two Black Republican votes. Our Northern brethren held a camp-meeting in the same region a short time previous to ours—was a perfect failure; one mourner, no conversions!—The people there, by a large majority, will not go to Heaven by the "Northern route. So they say, and so facts demonstrate. As it is in that vicinity, so it is in hundreds of others; and in all there are more or less to be saved through our instrumentality, or, us well as we can judge, not to be saved at all. And not only in California, but from Oregon the cry comes to us, wafted on every breeze, loud, earnest and importunate, for ministers, and for a Methodist Episcopal Church South in Oregon. Many are out of the church waiting, who once were in it; others have connected themselves with other churches for the present, only because they could do no better. They are not at home, and their stay becomes less and less comfortable, as most of the ministers in other churches have left the track, and pushed off in a tangent after abolitionism, which has brought them into a parched and sandy desert, where no living springs are found, and where the dews of heaven seldom fall. The people are heartily sick and tired of this beating the air, preaching politics for gospel, and unprofitably laboring to change the divine arrangement of things.

The cry is, give us the pure gospel without mixture of politics or false philosophy. The eye of the people is turned toward us; the responsibility is upon us; we can neither throw it off, nor lightly regard it. We must stand up to it; we are endeavoring to do it as best we can with our present forces. Shall we not have the sympathy and earnest prayers of all our brethren east of the mountains? Also, shall we not continue to receive increase of men and means to enable us to cultivate the field as we ought?

God is raising up men from our midst—young men—promising young men, converted at our camp-meetings and in our churches; spiritual, self-sacrificing men that are destined to do a good work, and make their mark upon the world; many of whom come from the mines, and were inured beforehand to toil and hardship, and will do as much work with as little means as any set of men in the vineyard. But we still need what has just been mentioned, and we shall get it; we are getting it. Our hearts are full of faith and hope for the future.

"Truth and right are might, and shall prevail." We intend to cleave to these, and like Paul, "know nothing" among the people "save Jesus Christ and him crucified." This seems to be the feeling that prevails in our conferences. May it ever prevail, and prevail universally. We have been greatly refreshed, built up, and encouraged, by the late visit and labors of our beloved Bishop.—These episcopal visits are of incalculable benefit to us on this coast, and the earnest prayer of the church is that they may be more frequent and of longer continuance. Like the elders of the church of Ephesus, we wept when our apostle left us. But we hope to see him again in the flesh. We shall pray for another visit. We expect to receive it; and in the meantime we are to have his earnestness, his energy, and eloquence, brought to bear upon his numerous friends, and the friends of our cause in this country, in the behalf of Zion on this coast, and especially in this city. We must be represented here, properly represented in this great metropolis. We have purchased a lot, large, well situated; shall pay for it to-morrow; expect to build this year. It will cost a handsome sum, and most of it is to be raised hereafter; it will cost much labor, but it will be done. This is our faith. But we shall look with earnest eye toward the east. We shall expect your prayers upon every breeze, and money in every mail.

But there is yet another subject that I wish to present to our brethren and friends in the east. My soul is full of it, and I do hope we shall hear from you, and that speedily. I expect we shall. "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof," and we are doing a good work here, and a great work, through the instrumentality of which I am now speaking. I refer to the Pacific Methodist—one of the best members (as we think here) of our numerous and respectable family of church papers. As to our editor, we have as clever a one as can be found among them all. There, that is saying a good deal, almost too much some may think. Can't take any thing back. Let all that doubt it, take the paper, and get acquainted with him, and you shall witness to what I have said. Its circulation is increasing; it is now near the end of the third volume, and its circulation is much greater than any religious paper on this coast. It is out of debt, save what it owes the editor, and he is responsible for that. But there is one thing we need very much and for lack of it we are put to much inconvenience and additional expense. This last, especially, is a very material item. We have no printing-press of our own; are not able to get one; and I was thinking that if some of our liberal brethren and friends in the east knew how we were situated, we should not be thus situated long; we should hear from them, and that tangibly and powerfully. I believe it. The California C. Advocate has lately been presented with a press and fixtures by one of our liberal bankers in this city; and not many years ago, as we all remember, the New Orleans C. Advocate received an engine from one of the liberal sons of the South. Is there no one that will come to our help? Why do I ask such a question! There are many. We are worthy, for, as I said just now, we are doing a good work and a great work in this country. Gen. McDougall, an Episcopalian and a farmer, Lieutenant Governor of California, said to-day that the Pacific Methodist had done more for the common cause of Christianity in this country than any one instrumentality besides.

We have our Methodist printers; we want our Methodist office, Methodist press, and all the hands that handle it here to be Methodists. We desire to send it out baptized with Methodism, in the spirit and in the letter of it. Brethren, you will help us in this matter. We believe it. We shall look for a power-press, or for an equivalent. Send to the editor, Rev. O. P. Fitzgerald, checks upon New York, New Orleans, or any where else to suit the convenience of donors. We shall wait with patience, and in hope, expecting soon to hear glad tidings, when you shall hear from us again in tones of thanksgiving to God and to the instrumentality used by Him. Brethren and friends, let us hear from you.

L. Catelv.

San Francisco, Cal., Oct. 31st, 1859.

P. S.—If it will suit those any better who wish to do something for us to send it to the editor of the N. Orleans Advocate, let them do so.

L. C.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THE SOUTHERN METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE.

Great demand for our books—Means of Supply not equal to it—Plans for increasing the means of supply—We have the largest patronage on the continent—Appeal to Southern men.

Mr. Editor: It was somewhat expected long ago, though by no means so clearly seen as it now is, that in the adjustment of our Conference Depositories and other means of producing a demand for our books, we were likely to carry the demand beyond our means of supply. This state of things is now upon us. The demand for Southern-made moral and religious reading, coming in upon the Publishing House from the Depositories and thousands of other places, is even now much greater than the ability of the House to supply it.

And when you take a careful inside view of our business, and look forward a year or two, even, you are driven to the conclusion, that, with things as they are now going, the demand is increasing and going to increase, on and on, very far beyond the manufacturing ability of the House.

The agent is increasing his facilities, too, as far and as fast as he can; but with his present immediate means and immediate prospects, it is quite impossible for him to come even very near the rapidly increasing progress of the demand.

And then again. The supply ought to keep in the advance of the demand, so as to stimulate and invite it. For there is no branch of commerce where the furnishing of supply creates a further demand so rapidly, and with such certainty, as in our business. This is a very important consideration.

It is encouraging, greatly so, to see this increasing demand for Southern-made books springing up in every part of the country; but then, on the other hand, it is worse than embarrassing to be unable to meet it.

A very important question to the South, to Southern literature and Southern morals, has been recently demonstrated in the eyes of the world. The question is settled, that books can be published and manufactured in the South as well, all things considered, as at the North. Our catalogue and our work will compare well with those of any house in the Union.

The Southern Methodist Publishing House at Nashville is in as sound, stable and prosperous a condition as any publishing house in the United States. It is doing well, very well, in a mere commercial point of view. The only difficulty is, it is too small. We have but about three hundred thousand dollars of capital, and that invested in machinery, printing materials, house, stock, etc. And then, look at our position and relation to the South.

We are the only publishing house, on anything like a large scale, in the Southern country. We stand in the midst of the country without a competitor, almost. Two and a half millions of Southern people are either in our Church or in sympathy with it.—And then there are far more than two and a half millions more of moral and religious people in the South, who greatly prefer our books to those of northern make and northern taint.

Here we have already to our hand, if we can meet it, an amount of patronage far greater than is enjoyed by any house on the continent.

And now, I affirm in all calmness and sobriety, looking at the present and prospective condition of things in the North and in the South, that to take care of this demand for wholesome, untainted moral and religious literature among Southern families and Southern people, is the business and mission of Southern philanthropy. The openings and onward movings of God's providence require it, demand it.

We have suffered long and are still suffering the effects of tainted morals and corrupted religion, pushed and peddled in amongst us from corrupt, mercenary, and for affording great relief by their softening influence. Although an entire stranger, I could not resist their entreaties to remain with them and mourn. Hour after hour passed, and we continued absorbed in the deepest grief, and it was not until the light of morning began to dawn that we ceased to lament the untimely fate of one who gave so fair a promise. But then I may say a new light broke into my soul. The sun rising with more than wonted glory, reminded me of the deep feelings of sadness with which I had noticed its departure on the previous evening. "And shall not man too rise," I involuntarily exclaimed: then turning to the marble, like features of young Edward, "yes, already has the immortal soul risen and is now before the throne of God." 'Tis true those eyes, now so still in death, shall never more open on this earth. Thou must go down to thy quiet resting place, the grave, Edward, but the word of God assures us "that this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality." What a glorious change! Then falling on our knees, we all, with one voice, exclaimed: "Heaven and earth may pass away, but thy word, O God, shall not pass away."

J.——.

Brandon, Dec. 30th, 1859.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THOUGHTS ON THE LIFE OF MRS. FLETCHER.

There are few books more capable of accomplishing good than the life of Mrs. Fletcher. Like the word of God, it will bear being read and re-read. Every word seems to develop the beauties of that remarkable lady's mind and heart. She was highly gifted in many ways; and to what a noble purpose she devoted her life. Left father, mother, brothers and sisters, and all that was near and dear, for the sake of Jesus.

She was one of those rare persons who hope even against hope, and was always encouraging the sinner to hope as she did. Though she lived on earth, yet she seemed to dwell with the blood-washed throng in heaven. How few, reared in the lap of luxury, as she was, that are willing to be followers of the meek and lowly Redeemer. She was a true pattern of piety, was not satisfied with being plucked as a brand from the burning, but had an unsatiated thirst after righteousness and true holiness. She was determined to "be perfect even as her Father in heaven is perfect," and was led on by a never dying hope, fixing her eyes on the robe washed and made white in the blood of the lamb, until she gained her soul's desire.

Her biograpy is one of rare occurrence. If we trace her from youth to hoary age, we find she was in every instance of her life, even in her daily walk and conversation, a remarkable character. Her greatest study seemed to be to promote the good and happiness of others. She often denied herself comforts, that she might have the more to give to the poor. How ready she was to look over the faults of others, and throw over them the mantle of love. How constantly she struggled to walk in the foot-steps of her Redeemer, and to be entirely conformed to his image. So wholly devoted to her God was she, that she was free from those doubting fears which so often retard the Christian's progress. She was ever progressing forward, like the great apostle, full of faith and hope, never doubting her Divine Master's promise, given her in a special manner, when at the age of nineteen, "thou shalt walk with me in white."

That thought seemed to inspire her with new power, so that her constant cry was to be filled with all the fullness of God; she was willing to suffer anything for Jesus' sake. She was always encouraging doubting souls to believe in Christ as a present Savior. The goodness of God and the great things faith will do, were themes on which she delighted to dwell. What a blessing she proved to many a poor soul, and what a blessing many of us might be to others, if we would only pursue her course of life.

How many there are who have been as highly gifted as the sainted Mrs. Fletcher, yet lived and died unknown and uncared for, while she will ever be remembered by the christian world, because she was a faithful laborer in the cause of God. She did not, in her last hours, have to exclaim: "They made me keeper of vineyards, but my own I have not kept." To the very close of life how closely she attended to self examination, not forgetting herself while helping others. Many may say, "I do not like female preachers." But is there no other way in which we may do good? Can we not act as private preachers, as she did, by entreating our families, visitors, servants, and all those around us, to flee from the wrath to come?

What great good this one small volume might do if more widely circulated and constantly read; but perhaps many who now owe this interesting little book do as I once did, throw it and toss it from corner to corner, from garret to garret, not knowing or caring what it is until drawn by the Spirit of God, as I was, to feel and know that we are lost sinners. Then, to that same old garret do we repair to seek reconciliation with God, and while rising off our bended knees, we see a dirty, worn and much abused volume; we are drawn by a kind providence to pick it up, and on looking over it carelessly we find some passage that strikes us forcibly. What a treasure I found it to be; I am much indebted to this volume; its first perusal kindled in my soul a little bright spark of grace, which blazed at length into a brilliant light, and I felt the Redeemer's love shed abroad in my heart.

Although I admire much the biographies of Mrs. Rogers, Mrs Judson, and Lady Maxwell, yet I do not think they can be compared with my now favorite Mrs. Fletcher. What a pity that this book is not more extensively read by old and young.

Bettie.

SOME FACTS ABOUT THE SHAKERS.

The Shakers exist only in this country. It is doubtful whether a community with such peculiar views and practices, would be suffered to continue their institutions without uncomfortable molestation, in any other. The first settlement was begun eighty years ago, on the site of the present town of Watervliet, about seven miles east of Troy.

The country, in this region, was at that time a wilderness; the ground on which the first family erected their buildings was little better than a swamp. The settlers, though few in number, and possessing but scanty pecuniary means, were strikingly characterized, then as now, by their industry and frugality; and being actuated, more then than now, by an unshaken faith and ever-increasing reverence for their founder and apostle, "Ann Lee," their "Mother in Christ's Second Appearing"—their prosperity was greater than could have been expected in ordinary circumstances, though their privations and sufferings were of the utmost severity, verging oftentimes on starvation.

As fresh converts were added to their number, their temporal condition steadily improved year by year, so that, at the present time, they form a community whose large wealth and few wants render them, to a great degree, independent of the outside world.

They still entertain the hope that there is to be a general revival of religion in the world, specially favorable to their cause, by which multitudes of Gentiles will flock to them as doves to the windows. But although this has been their watchword for over thirty years, the Society has not received the slightest increase in numbers since then. Marriage is forbidden among them, the propagation of the species is regarded as a crime against their religion, and they look for the end of the world to be accomplished not until its conversion to their faith, and the consequent extinction of the race. They look for recruits to their Church to converts from the Gentiles. Their chief effort in this direction is the apprenticeship of children, whom they receive from unnoticing parents, and whom, after the indentures are signed, they set to work to convert. At first, these adopted children generally grew up in the faith imposed upon them, and the Society became a large and self-supporting community of true Shakers, whom Mother Ann would most willingly have called good disciples. But within late years, elements of dissatisfaction and restlessness have been more and more apparent among this staid and slow-going people; and the growth of new ideas among them, notwithstanding the unceasing efforts of their old men and women in resistance to innovation and in the suppression of free inquiry, has advanced to such a degree as to have given rise to serious question, even among its best friends, whether some of them will not live to see it not the abandonment of their principles, at least the dispersion of their sect. Of late, the newly adopted young people have been found difficult to convert. They have become only moderate Shakers, remaining or receiving many liberal notions from the world. Many of these later disciples are found leaving the fraternity before they become of age. Comparatively few remain till they are thirty years old. Nor is this desertion from the Society confined merely to the common or lay membership; it embraces even those who have gradually risen to the position of deacons and elders. Adult persons, joining on profession of their faith, are even less reliable than younger probationers; very few of them receive the confidence of the ministry and elders to a sufficient degree to be intrusted with responsible stations.

The Society at present is largely composed of old men and women and young children, with but few middle aged members. The old people rule the young, but only so long as these continue young. They give little heed to education, except to discountenance it, and teach that intelligence is unfavorable to piety, and enterprise destructive of established institutions. Those who leave them they treat with great severity, and allow them to carry away but a small portion of the property which they have assisted in accumulating for the common wealth. For instance a man on going away after 25 years' labor, may receive from fifty to a hundred dollars, and a woman, for the same period, thirty dollars—together with a reprimand for their conduct, and a warning that they will be lost. The former foster-children of this Society who have since gone out from it, and who bear no great good will to their Alma Mater, have to its great detriment laid open its secrets to the public, and excited against it the willing ridicule of the Gentile world.

The sect of Shakers, after eighty years of partial prosperity, are at last falling into decline; and will hardly be likely to last another four score years, after their present old men and women shall have mingled their dust with old Mother Ann's.

HALLAM, MACAULAY, AND CARLYLE.

A late writer in Fraser's Magazine says the three British historians, Hallam, Macaulay and Carlyle, seem to have been given to us for the purpose of showing how different ways history may be written. The critic thus discusses the question:—

Mr. Hallam, with a style chaste even to prudery, and a judgment impartial almost to a fault; thoughtful, indeed, but thoughtful only about facts; treating all actions and events as matters of course, neither strange nor startling, nor affecting, and important only as generating certain other facts which we call social and political results; so dry and cold that you shrink from contact with him, and yet so useful and so sound that you avoid it at your peril.

Lord Macaulay, the stately yet impetuous march of whose clear and brilliant narrative, coruscating with well-polished epigram and nicely poised antithesis, "all clinquant, all in gold," carries you on with it by an irresistible impulse, yet wearies you at last by the very monotony of its elaborate excellence and the studied modulation of its vigorous and ringing tread; Macaulay, with a keen eye for the picturesque, and a large share of that sort of poetic feeling which attained its perfection in Scott, recognizing (like Hallam) the importance of events in their social and political aspect, and also (unlike Hallam) strongly affected by incidents in themselves, provided they are out of the common way, but seeing little to wonder at, or to weep over in the ordinary course of that sorrowful mystery, the life of man, looking scarcely beyond the surface of things—hating all philosophies except those which minister to material welfare, despising ethics, sneering at metaphysics, barely tolerating creeds, and distributing praise or blame without hesitation and without stint, under a strong party bias and from a standard of morality of the simplest and most conventional kind.

And Mr. Carlyle—what shall we say of Carlyle?—writing an English exclusively his own, part German, part classical, part colloquial, part poetical—in itself a wonderful creation of genius, startling indeed to Edinburgh reviewers of the "usual article" order, and to old ladies who have "no patience with such nonsense," but digging up, as it were, and bringing to light from the depths of our glorious language a power and a beauty unknown before, valuing events not for the political or social, but for the human interest that is in them, and looking upon every action or event, however ordinary, with intense interest, curiosity and almost awe, as matter for wonder, laughter or tears: as "a strange fact, not an unexampled one, for the strangest of all animals is man;" with a humor exuberant enough to rob history of her dignity, and a pathos and earnestness deep enough to restore it to her ten-fold; with a jealous and passionate love and a quick and steady discernment of all that is human action is lovely and true and great, and a graphic power which causes scenes and persons to live and move before us as they never lived in history till now; with a turn of mind singularly unjudicial, yet a judgment of character eminently impartial because of the marvelous insight which he possesses into the secret chambers of the human heart. No question but of the three, Carlyle comes nearest to the ideal of perfect history; and that is because Carlyle is a poet. Poetry, indeed, is not history, nor is history poetry: and yet it is eternally true that, except by a poet, no perfect history can be written.

MIRABEAU B. LAMAR.

The Texas papers come to us clothed in mourning for the death of this distinguished gentleman.

This melancholy event occurred at his residence in Richmond, on the Brazos, the 19th ult. The Houston Telegraph says: "He had returned home but a few days ago from the position of Minister to the Central American governments, where he had done the country signal service, while representing it. Last Monday he was taken suddenly with the premonitions of apoplexy. He remarked to the physician who stood by, 'Doctor, I feel very queerly, I believe I am going to die.' The doctor told him pleasantly, he thought not, but the General, a moment after, whirled about on his feet and fell dead.'

Gen. Lamar was a Georgian, and held, before he left his native State, a high position among its men of mark. He is better known, however, as the second President of the young Republic of Texas, whose independence he assisted to secure in the troublous hour that preceded the coming upon the political horizon of the Lone Star in the constellation of nations. His soldierly bearing, dash, and Bayard-like gallantry at the final battle of San Jacinto, are to this day spoken of with admiration by the survivors of that memorable fight. It is said that by his advocacy of an immediate attack upon Santa Anna, and strenuous opposition, with others, to the tardy measures of Gen. Houston, the locality of San Jacinto became historic as the spot of a brilliant victory.

Not long since, Gen. Lamar was sent by the federal government Minister to Central America, where he negotiated a treaty, and won by his simple and conciliatory disposition, the respect of the prominent men of that section.

In the busy scenes of political life, Gen. Lamar did not let his pen rust nor his books moulder. A scholar, a student, a literateur, and one of the biggest-hearted, and, therefore, one of the most chivalrous men that the South has ever produced, humanity in his death has lost an advocate, society an ornament, and literature a friend and devotee.

Some of Gen. Lamar's earlier literary productions are remembered with pleasurable emotions by those now in mid-manhood as well as old age. About two years ago he published "Verses Memorials," a book that will help to send his name sounding down the corridors of the sublunary Future which rarely fails to take care of the good and the gifted men of the world.

No action, no service goes current in heaven but that which is sealed up with integrity of heart, God will not be put off with the shell when we give the devil the kernel.—Brooks.

AN OCTOGENARIAN ON SLAVERY.

The Rev. Dr. Lord, for thirty years and upwards President of Dartmouth College, N. H., has long been distinguished among his brethren for his vigorous defence of the South and the institution of slavery. In a recent letter to a Virginia friend, called forth by events now agitating the country, he writes:

"But whether we have democracy, anarchy, or despotism, we shall not be rid of slavery till the day of the Lord. Its existence depends not on forms of government, or philosophical speculations, or political manœuvres, or legislative enactments, or judicial decisions, except as these may temporarily change its name, aspects or conditions, or vary its locations. The world must live on to its appointed period. It can live as things are, only as it has lived, more or less, with all varieties of race, character and condition. These will find their appropriate spheres and places, not according to mere human judgments, but by God's providential ordering of Shem, Ham, and Japhet, agreeably to physical laws and the plan of moral government, in reference to the present probationary state. Wherever there is a place and work for slaves, there they will be found. All things are fitted to all other things, and general laws will have their course. Our only wisdom is to study them, and live under them and by them, in subserviency to their mixed, righteous and benevolent design. Without a miracle, I see not but that slaves will yet be called for by New England men—slaves having the attributes, if not the name of slaves, and possibly in worse condition than we now complain of in reference to the South. Why not, if our present government should last another eighty years? For Yankees will not perform the menial work of life. They are above it now. The imported free servants of Ireland and other countries will soon be infected with Yankee independence, and have the means of living above servile work, on their own freeholds! Then who will be our servants? Shall we have Coolies or Africans to hew our wood and draw our water? And what form of government shall be over them but that which is adapted to their comparative rudeness and imbecility and conservative of the general system? The children and grandchildren of our present Abolitionists may yet be first to institute a harder serfdom than has yet been known, unless, indeed, they should themselves be compelled to sell themselves for bread, and suffer the proper chastisement of their father's sins for their rebellion against the government of God.

A STIRRING DESCRIPTION OF THE AGUE.

The primary symptoms are a sense of "goneness" in the stomach, the diaphragm feeling as though it were an imperfectly inflated balloon floating amid space without ballast, altogether in violation of the physiological unities. At the same time your head feels as though it were a bass drum, with four boys thumping at each end. This for about two hours, when the chill comes on. The chill is an institution that would, we think, have more sorely tested the patience of Job than all the "boils" in the universe. It commences at the bottom of the spine and slowly ascends until it reaches the brain. Its progress being about an inch to every five minutes, the taller the man the livelier the time he has of it. When we say lively we mean that the teeth for the time being usurp the functions of the tongue, and chatter as incessantly as a bevy of advanced spinsters at a country tea party. The only sound that can equal it is Pete Morris' race-horse solo on the bones. The peculiar sensation of the chill can be faintly imitated by suspending a cake of ice down your back by a set of pulleys passing over the ears. Draw up the chord so that the ice ascends the spinal column at the rate of an inch per hour, and you have a tolerably good idea of "the chill." Of course it is understood that the experiment is performed when the mercury stands at zero, and you stand up to your knees in a snow bank. After lying in this condition, under the weight of six heavy quilts—which impart no warmth whatever—you have an interval of rest. Then comes the fever, and you pass through the opposite extreme of heat. You imbibe a gallon—more or less—of lemonade, and then, worn out with the shake, you fall asleep. If you are in a cheap boarding house, the landlady may perhaps send up the servant with a request that you will "please get up and do your shaking on a chair, as the bed isn't accustomed to rough usage." Such things have been done, and may be again. It looks rather unfeeling, but is nothing to what is endured upon waking from that sleep. Then comes the misery of the ague. The excruciating headache, which still remains, is bad enough, but not worse than the impotency of one's underpinning, the limbs feeling as though every kneepan had its bottom knocked out, and every fire-place one met in the street was a stuffed reception chair, with extended arms, imploring you to be seated. Henceforth we shall never wish our bitterest enemy a greater misery than the ague. Compared to it, all other maladies become mere whimseys.

SUNDAY, JANUARY FIRST, 1860.

On that day we commenced a new week, a new month, a new year, and a new decade of years. The concurrence of the days of the week, the month and the year, happens often—four times, at stated intervals, in every period of twenty-eight years which lies within a century. The succession within every twenty-eighth year is in the order of 6, 5, 3, and 11—so repeated to the next series. Thus, the years beginning with Sunday, following this order, have been 1843, 1854, 1860, (11, 6,) they will return in 1955, 1871, 1882, (5, 6, 11,) to the end of the century. As the year 1900 will not be a leap year, although divisible by 4, because not divisible by 400, the series will not lap over regularly into the next century. The dropping of one leap year in the even hundreds, makes the order of recurrence true only for years within a century. With the same limitation, the days of the week return as the same days of the month every twenty-eight years. In the year of 1860, the days of the month will correspond to the same day of the week, as it did in 1832, and as it will in 1888.

It follows that, in every one of these cycles of twenty-eight years, each day of every month in the year falls four times no each of the seven days of the week—that is, the first of January is four times on Sunday, four times on Monday, and so through all the days of the week, and so with the 2nd of January, and each successive day of the year. The exception is the Intercalary day of the 29th of February, which, however, follows the principle of the law and falls once for each day of the week, in the seven leap years of the cycle of 28 years. This order of the recurrence of these leap year days is unvarying, within the cycles. The next in order, if a Tuesday, is always Sunday; then Friday, Wednesday, Monday, Saturday and Thursday, that is on every second day, counting backwards.

It is on this principle that perpetual calendars are constructed. The tables are made up in cycles of twenty-eight years, with rules for adjusting the dislocation of the order by the dropping of the leap year on the even hundreds. From these tables one can, with a few figures, determine upon what day of the week any event occurred of which we know the day of the month, in any past year, and the day of the week that would correspond, under the new style, to any day of the year, in any age of the world, before or after the Christian Era.

This concurrence has not happened before since 1760, one hundred and thirty years ago. It will not happen again until 1950.

VALUE OF THE BIBLE.

What an invaluable blessing it is to have the Bible in our own language! It is not only the oldest, but the best book in the world. Our English forefathers rejoiced when they were first favored with the opportunity of reading it for themselves.

Infidels may reject, and the licentious may sneer; but no one who ever wished to take away this foundation stone could produce any other equal to it, on which the structure of a pious mind, a solid hope, a comfortable state, or wise conduct, could be raised.

We are told that, when Archbishop Cranmer's edition of the Bible was printed in 1538, and fixed to a desk in the English parish churches, the ardor with which men flocked to read it was incredible. Those who could, procured it, and many who could not read it, or to hear it read, in churches. In some little assemblies of mechanics meeting for that purpose after the labor of the day, some learned to read in their old age, for the pleasure of instructing others.

Slavery and Christianity.—An estimate of the number of slaves in the South who are members of churches, is 468,000, or about one seventh of the population." Says the Boston Post: "When it is considered that the ancestors of these slaves were only most degraded heathens, the figures appear very remarkable. The result of all the foreign missionary labor of the whole church membership in 1855 was only eighty thousand.

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1860.

ACCOUNTS—NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

All parties interested in the Advocate—Editor, Preachers, and Subscribers—are interested in avoiding confusion in accounts.

Those well acquainted with the credit system in the newspaper business know full well that, under that system, confusion in accounts never was, never will, never can be avoided.—Uncertain mails, unavoidable oversights in agents or clerks, forgetfulness in subscribers and others, and the wearying, vexatious details of this business over all others, render it impossible. We have tried, for years, and know.

To have the subscription begin and end with the year, and to pay, if not in advance, at least once a year, is the dearest approach to a remedy that we can devise,—and this is our p—

Immediately after the Conferences, all the accounts will be made out to January, 1861, without reference to time of commencement, or time last paid for, and they will be sent to each subscriber who has not paid to January, 1861.

If all our subscribers and agents will patiently co-operate with us, this difficulty about accounts will be forever settled during the coming year. After that, when January, 1861, comes, $3 more will be due, and so on.

Will our brethren and friends, when they receive these accounts, immediately remit the money to the office, or pay to the preacher, taking a receipt? If any think the account incorrect, let him inform us, pleasantly, without quarreling. We never quarrel, though we have more cause than others.

The volume of the Advocate will hereafter begin and end with the year; and it is very desirable that subscriptions should conform to the same rule.

Therefore, new subscribers, who do not begin with the year, will please send, not two dollars, but an amount sufficient to pay for the paper till the end of the year, at the rate of Four Cents a Week.

Then, every subscriber will know, without being informed, that at the beginning of the year is the time to remit the subscription money.

And let us have scores, hundreds, thousands of new subscribers with which to begin the New Volume, January 1st, 1860.—We intend, if Providence smile on us, to make a better paper next year than ever before. Arrangements are made, and being made, for greatly increasing its attractions.—Some new writers, of the first order, will begin with the year. The paper is flatteringly approved now—we intend to merit higher approbation.

THE ANGELS OF THE CHURCHES.

The leading thought of a man's life is the educator of his life. A great life is always the incarnation of a great thought, or thoughts. Without such a germ, or germs, there can be no such thing as a great life. Our lives are not apt to rise much higher than our ideal of life. They often fall much lower. Without the ideal, they would fall lower still. This is as true of the ministry of the gospel as of any other department of life. A grand and successful ministry follows the path of the "shining light" of a grand ideal of that ministry. Without such an ideal, it would be as the camp of Israel without the pillar of cloud and of fire. The grand ideal of the gospel ministry should be the life-long study of every minister. God's thought and God's purpose in the ministry should be his lesson and his law. The fact and the significance of the Cross of Christ, which he is to preach, should be his creed and his doctrine. The purpose and grace of the Holy Ghost who called him, should be his light and his inspiration. He shall not be ignorant of the divine status of his calling, if he study the Oracles of God. He should constantly labor, in thought, in prayer, and in practice, to lift up his character and his life to the level of the divine conception of his calling, as revealed in the Scriptures. He should not lose his manhood, and his characteristic individualities, in the reveries of a sentimental pietism; but he should strive to have his individual manhood sanctified, refined, and developed to the highest possible power, and invest the energies and sympathies of a consecrated life into the great work of God on earth.

He should study his calling not only in its ideal, but also in its relations. He is the representative of God on earth. He is the representative of the Cross of Christ. He is the defender of "the faith once delivered to the saints." He is the shepherd and champion of "the Holy Catholic Church," which Christ "purchased with his own blood." He is the teacher of "sound doctrine," of the "form of sound words" inculcated by the Church, and epitomized from the Bible. He is the representative of sincerity of motive, firmness of purpose, integrity of principle, purity of thought, temperance of desire, and blamelessness of life. His place is not merely in the pulpit, but in all the relations of life. He is not only to be a christian and a preacher, but a man—a model-man—in person, in taste, in culture, in manners, in temper—in all that constitutes the excellency and beauty of the truest and noblest manhood. Parents should point him out to their children as an example not only of piety, but also as the beau-ideal of a refined and true-hearted gentleman. The ideal preacher is a saint, a student, and a gentleman.

An uncultivated preacher should mightily "study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed," or else retire, and not libel his noble vocation, and impose upon the Church of God. A worldly-minded preacher should repent speedily, or be damned for the good of his own soul and for the souls of others "for whom Christ died." A boorish, ill-mannered preacher should be taught that the Bible says, "be courteous;" that it also says, "wash you, make you clean;" that the man out of whom the "legion" was cast, was, afterwards, "clothed, and in his right mind;" if, after this, he does not improve, he ought to be sent as a missionary to the Comanches. And a preacher who will take advantage of ministerial position to say to brother-ministers, or to others, either verbally or in writing, that which would procure him a broken head, as a private citizen, should go to the altar when mourners are called, and be sent to school to learn the ordinary proprieties and decencies of life.

Want of success in the ministry is, nine times out of ten, attributable to the minister himself—from neglect of studies, neglect of piety, neglect of prudence, neglect of manners, or lack of energy. He may be able, very justly, to lay a great deal of blame upon cold church-members and ungodly people. He may, in all truth, bring up in his defence "a cloud of witnesses," in the way of difficulties, trials, negligences, provocations, temptations. But, then, he ought to have taken the world as he found it. Neither God nor the Church engaged to give him a people to his liking. He is not sent to enjoy merely, but also to labor, and to suffer if need be, and to "endure hardness as a good soldier." When "the prince of this world cometh" to try him with difficulties, he should find nothing in him" to increase these difficulties, but everything to resist and conquer them. He should "become all things to all men" in sympathies and manners. The Church has suffered much from impracticable preachers, who, though zealous for the truth, have had a zeal "not according to knowledge," and whose truthwas not the "truth in love." "Wise as a serpent and harmless as a dove" is the "wisdom that winneth souls."

But preaching is the great business of a minister of the gospel. No minister should consent to be a weak, pointless, powerless preacher. The pulpit should be rendered attractive, charming, powerful. It should be spiritual and soul-saving. It should have the power of thought, the power of truth, and the power of the Holy Ghost. Sermons should be studied. The lawyer, pleading for the life of his client, brings all his resources to bear. It is a case of life and death. The patriot-orator, to save his country, or to illustrate the great names and characters of her history, puts forth the full treasures of a mind which it has been the labor of his life to educate. And shall the messenger of Heaven—pleading for the life of souls for whom Jesus died—illustrating the glory of Christian Redemption, Providence—shall he do less?

Rev. J. B. Simmons, a Baptist minister of Indiana, writing on this subject, says: "First. If you have a printed book of plans or skeletons, throw it into the fire. Secondly. If you have a blank-book in which you have collected the plans of sermons you have heard other ministers preach, throw that in the fire too. Thirdly. If you have been in the habit of picking your sermons up from scraps and newspapers and books, stop it. Fourthly. If you have been in the habit of reading printed sermons a good many times over and then attempting to preach them, stop that. Get your Bible—fix on a passage, sit down to it, and begin reading the passage over and over again. Study every verse thoroughly, and select the verse you wish to use for a text. Of this verse study not only every sentence, but every clause and every word most diligently. Look out the meaning of individual words especially. Note down on paper whatever thoughts occur to you during this effort. Avoid commentators, except for the meaning of obscure clauses or phrases. And even then, only use them after, not before—you have sucked out of the passage all you can by your own effort. If you take this course, your thoughts will be mainly both rich and original. They will please yourself, and of course excite you to additional thought. Having worked on in this way for six, twelve, or fifteen hours of hard and prayerful study, being careful to write down all the thoughts that occur to you as you go on, you will find that you have collected a mass of thought sufficient to make three, and perhaps five sermons. But do not make three or five. Make only one. Out of this accumulation of thought, select the choicest and best, arrange them under proper headings, in one sermon. If you write on only one side of single leaves, which is an excellent plan, you can throw much of your matter into sermon form without re-writing. Imbue your soul with your theme by going prayerfully over it several times; then rising from your knees in your closet, hasten to the pulpit and try to preach just as though you never expected to address your hearers again."

HOMES OF THE EVANGELISTS.

Mary Howitt, we believe it is, has written beautifully of the "homes of the poets." Frederika Bremer has written of "hearts and homes." John Howard Payne sang: "Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home." It is not wonderful that the word home should be associated with the names of melodious poets, nor that esthetic writers should canonize it as one of the saint-words of the language, nor yet that "homes" should be regarded as the legitimate temples for the religion and worship of the heart. Homes are the fountains of civilization. The Home is the epitome of the Church and of the Nation. The home is an institution of God. When God created man, he immediately gave him a wife, and immediately afterwards he gave them a home. When they sinned, a heavy part of their punishment was to be turned out of doors—without house or home—into a wilderness world. From the beginning of the world, the absence of home has been well nigh the absence of God and everything good. The nomadic life of the savage, and the hotel life of the fashionable French, though on opposite extremes of civilization, are equally loveless and Godless. The home is the nursery of all the virtues. It is the birth-place of character—the dawning east of human life. It is the garden of the Lord, symbolized by Eden, where the infant "olive-plants" are to be nurtured. Infancy and youth and home are trinne arrangements of the triune God, and are trinne elements of the health of the world, and the happiness of heaven. Home is the appropriate cradle of all infant things. Not only infant children, but the young wife and the young husband should dwell in their own home. Connubial happiness can blossom beautifully in no other garden.

But the homes of the Evangelists, where are they to be found, and who is to build and prepare them? "I go to prepare a place for you," said the Saviour to his sorrowing disciples; and he has willed that the Church "prepare places" for his itinerant evangelists. Shall the Poet have a home, and not the Evangelist? The Evangelist is God's poet. There never was a true evangelist who was not also a poet—not in verse and rhyme, perhaps, but in nature and character. This somewhat accounts for their love of wife and children and home. The love of the beautiful is born in their natures, cultivated by their lives, and intensified by their experiences. The itinerant ministry is a poetic ministry. The "romance of the itineracy" truthfully and powerfully written, would out-read, out-"run", and out-live Waverly, Vanity Fair, Copperfield, and Jane Eyre.

God, in choosing remarkable men for remarkable deeds and purposes, has always chosen men with a strong poetic vein. A character without a strong imaginative element is incapable of sublime conceptions, sublime faith, sublime deeds, or sublime utterances. What a life-poem was the building of the ark for one hundred and twenty years. No prosaic soul could have offered up Isaac, nor wrestled all night with an angel. What romance there is in the history of Joseph, rising from the position of a captive to the governorship of Egypt; and in the history of Moses, picked up as a waif upon the waters of the Nile, and nursed upon the bosom of Pharaoh's daughter, as her son and heir. The history of these things, and the history, in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, of the sublime faith which underlay them, are more charmingly readable than Milton's Paradise Lost, or Shakspeare's Hamlet. So of the history of John the Baptist, and of the Apostle Paul. The Psalmist David and all the Prophets were poets. The poetic and heroic nature of Martin Luther was a strong element in the Reformation. The Wesleys and Whitfield, the apostles of the great "religious movement of the eighteenth century, called Methodism," were poets—the first two in nature and in fact, and the last in nature. Bishop Asbury, the great American apostle, was a hero and a poet, and almost dared to write verse. His life was an epic. All of them had the heroic element, which is never separated from the poetic. And the itinerant ministry is of the same character. It is the poetry of evangelism, just as true Methodism is the "beauty of holiness," or religion. The faith of the itinerancy is, to the faith of other forms of the ministry, just what the "faith of the elders which obtained a good report" was to the faith of their more ordinary contemporaries. As a rule, a prosaic, unheroic man does not enter the itinerancy. He chooses the ministry of another communion, or the local ministry of Methodism, or, if he enters the itinerancy, he locates whenever a sublime poetic faith is needed to sustain him.

Shall the Evangelists be without homes? Shall there be no materials, in coming years, out of which some Methodist Mary Howitt shall develop a beautiful work called the "Homes of the Evangelists?" Shall there be no homes for the poets of the Cross? Shall their very heroism, and the very sublimity of their lives, cause them to be deprived of the comforts and honors awarded to more prosaic and less sacrificing men? The love of Jesus, the honor of Methodism, and the appreciation of all that is noble and beautiful in life, forbid it. Is it a great thing that the most unselfish class of men in the world—who voluntarily and deliberately give up the privileges and blessings of homes of their own—who cheerfully submit to the humiliation of being "pilgrims and strangers on the earth," with their wives and little ones—who give up the privilege and prospect of worldly profit and preferment,—all for the sake of Christ and the Church,—is it a great thing that the Church and people whom they serve should provide them comfort able homes in all the regions where they come? The bare question is enough to shame a thousand embryo parsonages into birth!

We have been appealing somewhat to the love of the beautiful and heroic. Brethren, suffer the word of poetic exhortation a little farther. The vision of a preacher's wife should inspire a parsonage into existence. There is nothing in life more beautiful and heroic than the marriage of a charming woman to a devoted and manly Methodist evangelist. How can a circuit, or station, or district, suffer such a woman to be among them without a home? Has all chivalry and gallantry "clean gone forever" from such Methodists? Have they wives and children? Have those wives any influence over them? Do they and their wives, because they may happen not to like the present preacher and his wife, forget the minister in the man—forget the itinerancy in the itinerant—forget duty, truth, and the glory of God, in the circumstances of a day? And perhaps the Judgment will show that they disliked the best pastor and the best pastor's wife they ever had. Before their own consciences, before their own sense of self-respect, before the genius of the coming time, and before the bar of God, no excuse will stand for those who possibly can provide a home for the pastor and his wife, and fail to do so. "Let the time past suffice to have wrought the will of the Gentiles." "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

The Conferences are over. The new pastors have come, or the old ones returned. The year has just begun. The weather has been cold. Hardships have been endured. Boarding, like "total depravity," is "evil, only evil, and that continually." Have you a parsonage ready for your pastor? If not, get one—soon—immediately—and do not be ashamed any longer. God will bless you, and you will feel happy. The best preachers will be glad to come among you. Now, they come unwillingly.

HISTORY OF THE BIBLE CAUSE IN NEW ORLEANS.

We accidentally learn that a Bible meeting was held the other night at Odd Fellows' Hall, in this city, and were informed, also, that it was the anniversary of the South Western Bible Society. Some interesting reminiscences are reported as connected with the history of the Bible cause in New Orleans.

It might be supposed that New Orleans would be found behind most of the country in the inauguration of the means for the diffusion of religious truth. Last among the cities should we expect to find her organizing Bible societies, and providing for the distribution of the Scriptures among her population.

But, strange as it may seem, she was before most of the older towns of the Union in this very enterprise. In 1813, the 20th March, the Louisiana Bible Society was formed at New Orleans, three years prior to the organization of a national association.

Previous to this movement it was generally supposed that Bibles could not be given away in New Orleans. Indeed, a Mr. Reis, a Baptist missionary, who visited this city in 1812, strengthened this opinion by stating that, after two months of effort, he was unable to give away more than two or three French Bibles out of two dozen that had been entrusted to him for that purpose.

Previous to 1812, no Protestant clergy permanently resided in New Orleans, and whatever was attempted was the result of the zeal of individual laymen, who represented the different Protestant bodies.

The first step taken by those who founded the Louisiana Bible Society, was to ascertain whether the principal Catholic clergy were opposed to the circulation of the Scriptures. To their gratification, it is said, the friends of Bible distribution were assured that no opposition existed, and indeed surprise was expressed that any such supposition had been formed in regard to the Catholic clergy. The Bishop, however, could not recommend other than the regularly authorized version of the Roman Catholic Church, but having examined one of the French editions, gave it his approval, and sought several copies for distribution in the Convent of the Ursuline Nuns. Whether the priesthood of that church in New Orleans now favor Bible distribution or not, we are not informed.

Circumstances being so favorable, a subscription paper was circulated, and in a short time fifty names were procured, among which were the Governor and many members of the State Legislature. The result of the establishment of this society was a growing demand for the Bible.

When the Americans took possession of the country, it was not until after a long search that a Bible could be found, to be used in administering the oath of office, and that was a Latin vulgate, found in the possession of one of the priests. In 1813 the Bishop of Orleans declared that he did not believe ten Bibles could be found in this diocese.

Mississippi, yet a Territory, and Louisiana, thus founded an association for the diffusion of the Bible, out of which has grown the present Southwestern Bible Society—a society whose operations now extend over whole States, and which has done much to put the Bible into the hands of every family within their borders.

The American Bible Society was organized in 1816. The same year the Mississippi Bible Society passed resolutions in accordance with a proposed plan of union, and, with all its branches, became auxiliary to that society. The next auxiliary to the National Association was the Amite and Florida Bible Association, which took place in 1823.

For many years the Bible Societies of Louisiana and Mississippi pursued the great objects of their foundation, and yearly operations, though at the best feeble, indeed, were characterized with more or less success.

In 1849, the present form of the Bible Society was adopted, and the title of the Southwestern Bible Society taken. Auxiliary in one sense to the National Association, it is nominally independent in the extent character, and the points of its labors. The connection with the national organization gives it additional power, without interfering with its action.

The operations of the society are conducted under the supervision of district agents, of whom some few have the past year been in the field. At the time of the last annual report, the society numbered twenty-four parish and county auxiliary societies. During the past year, thirteen parish and county, and two town societies have been added to this number.

In 1858, New Orleans, though the operation of the association, was supplied with Bibles, so that it is now supposed no family is without a copy of the Scriptures. The same effort is made to supply the parishes and counties of Louisiana and Mississippi, and the progress in this work is most encouraging. Kemper county, Mississippi, was completely supplied with the Bible last year, by the liberality of one man—W. B. Holmes, of DeKalb county.

The Southwestern Bible Society is rapidly gathering strength, and the power for usefulness. In this association all Protestant denominations should meet as on common ground. Here rivalry, jealousy and suspicion should vanish, and all should co-operate for a common object.

The Bible House is on Camp-street. It was purchased by the contributions of members of all the Protestant churches, and should be equally under the control of all. We are sorry to say that the zeal of many in this great cause, has been dampened by the fact that associations foreign to the purposes of the society, some of them sectarian in tendency, have been allowed to establish their head-quarters there. This is in the way of the society, and will be more so in future, unless the offence be removed.

Conference Appointments, and similar matter, have left us no room for full telegraphic news lately. Happily there is but little by telegraph worth printing. We are nearly through the Conference appointments, and will soon give the news in full.

THOMAS DE QUINCY.

In the last issue of the Advocate we noticed the death of this gifted writer and remarkable man. It is stated that he died at Edinburgh on the 8th of December, but it is presumed he died at Lasswade, about twelve miles from Edinburgh, whither he removed in 1843, after leading a desultory kind of life between London and the "Lakes," and where he has resided ever since.

The DeQuincys were a very old Norman family, whose history is older than the invasion of William the Conquerer, and which enjoyed for several centuries baronial distinction under the successors of that sovereign. A branch of this family, taking the democratic side in the religious and political quarrels that followed the Protestant Reformation, dropped the aristocratic De, and some of its members settled in America, where their descendants are now known as plain Quincy. Joshia Quincy, of Revolutionary fame, was one of these, and John Quincy Adams, the sixth President of the United States, was, through his mother, descended from the same stock.

Thomas DeQuincy was born at Greenhay, a suburb of the city of Manchester, in 1786, and was seventy-three years old at the time of his death. He was the fifth child of a merchant, who spent most of his time at foreign ports, and who, at his death, in 1793, left to his family a fortune £1600 a year. His childhood was chiefly passed in rural seclusion, with three sisters for his playmates. The death of one of these, when he was between two and three years old, caused him not so much sorrow as a sad perplexity. It appalled him by its mystery, but he was soothed by a trust that she would return again, like the crocuses and roses. A few years later, the death of a second sister overwhelmed him with grief, and the sentiments of love and religion which it awakened, were nursed by him in silent reverie, and deepened the naturally solemn tone of his mind.

Alluding to that period, he says in his autobiographical memoirs: "If I should return thanks to Providence for all the separate blessings of my early situation, these four I should single out as worthy of special commemoration: that I lived in rustic solitude; that this solitude was in England; that my infant feelings were moulded by the gentlest of sisters, and not by horrid pugilistic brothers; finally, that I and they were dutiful and loving members of a pure, holy and magnificent church."

He was sent to various schools, and early distinguished himself by his proficiency in Greek; at the Grammar School, at Bath, where he studied from his twelfth to his fourteenth year, the master said of him that he could harangue an Athenian mob." Thence he went to a school at Winkfield, ran away, discontented, and after various adventures, in 1800 arrived in London, where he was poor and led a life of struggle.

For several months, houseless and penniless, he suffered the continual tortures of hunger. It was then that he fell in with Ann the Outcast, hunger-bitten like himself, but who became to him, as he relates in his "Confessions," sister, brother, mother, everything that implies love and tenderness without an imagination of impurity. That girl was his fate. She dwelt afterwards ever in his memory. She was the central figure of his dreams. She disappeared from his sight when better fortunes visited him, and there is nothing more pathetic in his writings than the account he gives of his deep unutterable yearning and anxious search for her. In his addition to the Confessions of an Opium-eater, he has painted her in the beautiful vision of the Daughter of Lebanon.

At length, in 1803, we find him at Oxford, where he studied till 1808. DeQuincy first resorted to the use of opium, in London, in 1804, with a view of lulling the pains of rheumatism. It mastered him. For ten years he says, he "lived on the earth the life of a demirgus, and kept the keys of Paradise." It was his custom to drink laudanum, either on a Tuesday or Saturday night, once in every three weeks. The pictures he saw in the dreams thus excited, are most powerfully described in his celebrated "Confessions." He soon became a confirmed daily opium-eater, and at first the black vapors seemed to roll away from his brain, his mind resumed its functions, and a latter spring came to close up the season of his youth. But within a year, he gave his "Iliad of woes," a period of his life which he has described as his "state of imbecility." During this, he essayed several works which he did not complete. He was inclined to solitude and reverie, and mentions that on summer nights, at his open window, overlooking the town and sea, at a little distance before him, he often sat from sunset to sunrise, motionless, and without wishing to move.

In 1821 he went to London for literary employment, and, as a collaborator in the "London Magazine," became at once associated with Charles Lamb, William Hazlitt, Allen Cunningham, Thomas Hood, Cary, who translated Dante, and other noted authors. In that periodical first appeared his famous "Confessions of an English Opium Eater," which was published the year after, in a volume, and is one of the most remarkable contributions ever made to English literature. It fixed his reputation, and still remains his most powerful and artistic production, throughout a long career of authorship. DeQuincy has been a voluminous contributor to Blackwood's and Tait's Magazines, and the North British Review, and he furnished several articles for the Encyclopedia Britannica. All he has written shows a wide range of learning and speculation, a delicate and subtle critical faculty, and a felicitous selection of language. His "Confessions," his "Suspiria de profundis," the "Templar's Dialogue," and his "Miscellanies," made up from his contributions to the periodicals, form his literary legacy to posterity. His works form twenty-one volumes of Ticknor & Field's Boston edition, from the publication of which, it is but justice to that eminent firm to say, the author derived a satisfactory remuneration.

In person he has been described as far from prepossessing, being diminutive in stature, and awkward in his movements, with a shriveled, yellow, and parchment-like skin. He was wont to perform daily set tasks of walking in his garden, and would often disappear for several days together from his home, untraced. Some years ago, he announced his intention to bequeath his body for dissection, after death, as a contribution to physiological science, believing, or affecting to believe, that the dreadful gnawing in his stomach which he experienced, was caused by the ravages of a living animal.

ACTUAL STATISTICS OF METHODISM.

We have had occasion, says Dr. Stevens, in the last Advocate and Journal, lately to prepare for the Methodist Quarterly Review an estimate of the actual statistical condition of Methodism throughout the world. By permission of the editor we are allowed to condense these statistics for our columns, in response to calls made for such facts. The following are the latest and most accurate estimates of its communicants:

Methodist Episcopal Church	950,555
Methodist Episcopal Church South	700,000
Canada Wesleyan Conference	43,672
Eastern British American Conference	16,935
Methodist Episcopal Church, Canada	13,352
American Wesleyan Methodists	21,000
Methodist Protestant Church	70,018
African Methodist Episcopal Church	20,000
African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church	6203
Albright Methodists	21,076
Total lay members in America	1,868,811
Add travelling preachers, (except Albrights)	11,458
Total American communicants	1,880,269

The Methodism of Europe—excepting the British and American colonies and the American and European missions, included above—exhibits similar though not equal vigor. The latest accessible returns show:

Wesleyan Methodists	435,308
Primitive Methodists	123,863
New Connection Methodists	27,000
United Free Church Methodists	43,000
Wesleyan Reformers, (who remain Independent)	12,000
Bible Christian Methodists	19,068
Church Methodists in Ireland, (called Primitive Methodists)	9158
Total British lay members	669,397
Add traveling preachers	3225
Total communicants	672,622
Grand total (see below)	2,563,091
Methodist hearers (see below)	10,250,000

Besides these divisions there are minor ones whose statistics can not be exactly ascertained; an authority gives them an aggregate of 10,000 members and 200 preachers. Summarily, then, Methodism throughout the world comprises 2,548,190 lay members, and 14,883 traveling preachers—an aggregate of 2,563,091 communicants. If we add three non-communicant members of its congregations for each communicant—a safe estimate for Methodist congregations generally—we have a population of more than ten and a quarter millions attending its ministrations. It extends densely over North America and England; it has "Conferences" in France, Germany, Africa, and Australia; its missions are in Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, Spain, Turkey, South America; they dot the coasts of Africa, India, China, and the isles of the Southern Ocean. Its great missionary organizations include more than 3000 laborers; its educational institutions comprise more than 130 colleges, theological schools, and boarding academies, and—in England—nearly 500 day schools; it has more than 2,000,000 Sunday scholars, and 300,000 teachers. Its 35,000 local preachers make, with its "itinerants," a ministerial force of nearly 50,000 men.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE IN NEW ORLEANS.

All truly Christian people are earnestly in favor of the observance of the Sabbath—as much so as they are in favor of the observance of any other requirement of the Christian religion. The eighth of January, the anniversary of the battle of New Orleans, came this year on the Sabbath. We confess our surprise and mortification that the city council, in their arrangements for the celebration of the anniversary, utterly disregarded the Sabbath, and acted as though there was no such thing in the land. In this, they not only violated the law of God, but offended the taste and conscience of the Christian community, and deprived christian people of all privilege of participation in the celebration.

Serious charges have, for years, been made by their opponents, against the party in power in the city government, which, if true, are sufficient to arouse the indignation of all honest men. Of the truth or falsehood of these charges we know nothing—we have said nothing; but this last act will not be calculated to make the moral and religious portion of the community stand up in their defence. Indeed, not christian people only are offended at their course, but all right-minded men, who believe in the Bible, and who love public morality and decency. This is a Christian country, not by legal enactment, but by the common faith and conscience of the people. And public officers, who, in their official acts, publicly violate the Sabbath, are unworthy of office in such a country.

We are sorry to see that a writer in one of the city papers endeavors to mislead its readers (they must be an erudite set) by confounding the desire for Sabbath observance in this city, with a desire to establish a Sabbath law. It is the same writer, we suppose, who, some time since, wrote with such strange and offensive zeal against giving all the formality and sacredness possible to the marriages of our servants. If this writer wishes to make a heathen of himself, we protest against his assuming to be a representative of a decent christian community, like the South, or New Orleans. A paper that professes to be the "organ of the people," and "the only literary paper" in New Orleans, should employ writers that represent the morality and taste of the people. There is sufficient desecration of the Sabbath in this city, without the advocacy of the press, and the sanction and example of city officials. So far as the press is concerned, we are happy to say that not one of the city papers of any moral or political standing has taken such a course. We are happy also to say that the Protestant population of New Orleans keep the Sabbath as well as the population of any other American city.

Since the above was in type, we are sorry to find one of the leading city dailies favoring this Sabbath desecration.

COMPLIMENTARY—RESOLUTIONS.

The South Carolina Conference, at its recent session, passed the following resolutions:

Dr. Wightman.—Resolved, That this Conference deeply feels the loss it has sustained by the transfer of the Rev. W. M. Wightman, D.D., LL.D., to another field of our common Zion; that we hold in high appreciation his long, laborious and successful services as a member of this body, and that we hereby tender him and his estimable family our kindest and most cordial regards, as well as our fervent prayers for the blessing of God upon them in all their new relations.

Bishop Early.—Resolved, That we cherish a high sense of gratitude for the presence, patient labor, and urbanity, with which Bishop Early has discharged the important duties of his high station during our Conference session, in the Chair and in all his intercourse among us, promotive of the best interests of the Church and the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

The Georgia Conference, at its recent session, after an appropriate preamble, passed two resolutions, the last of which is as follows:

Dr. Sasnett.—Resolved, That while this Conference sincerely regret the necessities which require the transfer of our beloved brother, that we can with affectionate confidence say to our sister Conference beyond the border, that we commend to her ranks, a man whose general intelligence, ministerial power, and Christian manliness, make him fully competent for the duties of the high position which they have been pleased to assign him.

The South Carolina Conference passed the following resolution.

Instruction of the Colored People.—Resolved, That we recommend to all our people and to our preachers, especially those who are stationed in towns and cities, that they appropriate Sunday afternoons, as far as practicable, to the religious instruction of the colored people.

GEORGIA CONFERENCE.

This body met at Rome, Ga., December, 14, 1859, Bishop Kavanaugh presiding. The Southern Christian Advocate says that the Missionary meeting was held on Saturday night. The weather was not good, and the house was only well filled. Rev. R. Abbey and Dr. McFerrin addressed the meeting. More than $1600 was collected on this occasion. It was reported that some $26,000 had been collected during the year. The preachers, as usual, gave liberally.

The Conference collection was unprecedentedly good. The Board of Finance was able to settle in full with nearly all the claimants. The superannuated preachers, the widows and orphans, all received their full allowance, we believe. Only some $450 was wanting to pay all claims, and this sum was deducted perhaps from the claims for deficiency of some of the preachers. This good result may be attributed to the new impulse that lay co-operation has given to the interest in this fund.

Southern Methodist Publishing House.—On our outside, there is a communication from Rev. R. Abbey, Financial Secretary of the Publishing House, to which we invite public attention. We commend it particularly to the attention of the secular press of this city, and of the country generally. Will the press of the South assist in the work of establishing and maintaining a Southern Publishing House? Religious literature is the great lever by which abolitionists seek to poison public sentiment.

NEW ORLEANS AGENCY OF THE PUBLISHING HOUSE.

Below we publish an extract from the proceedings of the recent session of the Louisiana Conference:

"Report of the Special Committe appointed to inquire into the difficulties in the way of certain subscribers paying their subscriptions to the New Orleans Methodist Depository.

"A special committee was appointed, at the Conference held at Franklin, December 14th-20th, 1859, on the New Orleans Methodist Depository, consisting of Zenas Preston, Esq., of Waterproof; Rev. Robert J Harp and Dr. Keener of Louisiana Conference, who presented the following report, which was adopted by the Conference, viz.

Whereas, Some of the subscribers of the New Orleans Methodist Depository of the M. E. Church South, have hesitated to pay their subscriptions owing to the uncertainty which existed at the last session of our Conference as to whether the Book Agent would carry on the said Depository or not:

Therefore, Be it Resolved, that inasmuch as the the general Book Agent of the M. E. Church, South, has given satisfactory assurance that he will furnish a suitable agent and a sufficient supply of books to meet the demands originally contemplated in the establishment of said Depository, we therefore advise and recommend our friends to pay their subscriptions to said Depository.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this Conference, the Board of Trustees of the New Orleans Methodist Book Depository have faithfully and judiciously administered the trust committed to them.

I certify that the above is a true extract from the Minutes of the Fourteenth Session of the Louisiana Annual Conference, held in Franklin, Dec. 14th-20th, 1859. Linus Parker,
Secretary of the Conference.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH.

The Southern Christian Advocate, of Dec. 29, says that Bishop Kavanaugh spent last Sabbath in Charleston. The Bishop was violently attacked with temporary sickness on Saturday night, and very much to the disappointment of many, was unable to preach on the Sabbath day. He was so much better that he was able to leave on the Carolina, for the Florida Conference on Monday night, with his wife and niece, Rev. R. Abbey, and the Editor of the Advocate.

From the Florida Conference Bishop Kavanaugh will go to Columbus, Ga., where he will spend a month, perhaps; afterwards he will probably spend some weeks in New Orleans.

ARCOLA.

This beautiful situation for a healthy and comfortable summer residence is situated seventy-two miles from the city, on the first hilly land after leaving New Orleans. It is in the pine woods, and the atmosphere and water are pure and healthful. A beautiful Church has been built, where service is held every Sabbath, especially after the weather becomes warm. There is a fine Sunday-school, and during the summer, an excellent day-school, by a most competent young lady. It is also in contemplation to establish a female academy of the first order at no distant day. It is pleasant, promising, and more convenient to the city than any other place suitable for country residence.

One Hundred new Subscribers.—Rev. John P. Duncan of the Georgia Conference, brother of our brother, Rev. Daniel Duncan of the Alabama Conference, who was last year on Americus circuit, writes of his year's work as follows in the Southern Christian Advocate:

Three new houses of worship have been erected and dedicated. Another will be ready by the 1st Sabbath in February. Upwards of two hundred have joined the Church. O, that they may be "faithful unto death," "and receive a crown of life." About one hundred new subscribers for the Southern Christian Advocate, and forty or more for Home Circle, some for Sunday School Visitor—all the result of small effort. How much may be done for these important interests, if we had a mind to it. Between one and two hundred dollars' worth of Books has been circulated. A Methodist Traveling Preacher's hands are full of work if he will do it. Men may preach—in the parlance of the word—fine sermons, and make long speeches, but does that promote the circulation of our periodicals and books? Does that displace our old dilapidated houses of worship and plant new ones instead? Our circuits, many of them, are running down for want of attention to these great interests.

How many preachers will send one hundred new subscribers to the New Orleans Christian Advocate this year? Yes, one hundred! Low figures and copper cents indicate a picayunish civilization.

The European Congress of 1860 is to take place at Paris on the 5th of January. The participating powers will be Austria, England, France, Russia, Prussia, Spain, Sweden, Portugal, Piedmont, Naples and Rome. The great powers will have each two representatives. The lesser powers will each have one. Count Walewski, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, will be the principal representative of France, and will preside over the deliberations of the Congress, as in 1856. Prince Gortchakoff, a very able statesman, is to represent Russia, with Count Kisseleff, Russian Ambassador to Paris. Prussia sends her Foreign Minister, Baron de Schleinitz, with Count de Pourtales, Prussian Ambassador to the French Court; and Austria, Count de Rechberg and Prince Metternich. The presiding spirit over this body, he who has brought it forth and will use it, is the Emperor of France, and his object is the annihilation of the treaties of 1815. To this end the Italian war was the first step. The Congress is called to finish what the war begun.

Thomas Poole Esq., a Wesleyan Methodist of the Frome Circuit, England, lately deceased, made in his Will munificent bequests to the Wesleyan Missionary Society, to the Methodist Preachers' Fund for the support of worn-out ministers and ministers' widows, and to the British and Foreign Bible Society. To the Missionary Society, specially for India and China, Mr. Poole has given £10,000 or $50,000; to the widows of the ministers and worn-out ministers, £1,000; and to the Bible Society, £5,000.

The Methodist Penny Weekly Newspaper in England, is for the present abandoned. The best, most learned and most enterprising members of the Conference Book Committee strongly pleaded for it, but the venerable and almost despotic Book Steward, John Mason, stoutly stood by the existing state of things, predicting all sorts of evil to Methodism, should such a journal be set on foot.

The Christian Guardian, organ of the Wesleyan Methodists of Canada, republishes the ravings of that infidel and incendiary sheet, the New York Tribune, on the execution of John Brown, the horse-thief, robber, murderer, and traitor. The Guardian is engaged in warring upon Romanism; but Romanism is better than its Methodism, if this be a sample.

Replenishing a "Kit."—"An old son of Crispin," so he signs himself, sends $5 to replenish Rev. W. P. Barton's library, lost in the river. The unknown friend calls it his "kit," as he calls his shoe-makers tools. God bless him, and may his "kit" never need replenishing.

The Contest for Speaker still goes on in Congress. Hamilton, of Texas, is the present candidate of the Democrats and conservative men. Sherman, the Black Republican candidate, oddly lacks three votes to elect him. Union ot Democrats and conservative men would defeat Sherman.

The nett increase of the membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, during the past year, as appears from the minutes of the several Conferences just published, is 17,790, making the total membership at present 832,657, with 141,688 on trial.

Dr. Wise, in the Sunday-school Advocate November 26th, says the Sunday-school Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church has between thirteen and fourteen hundred Sunday-school publications on its catalogue; a larger number than any other kindred institution.

Rev. P. Dieffenwerth is supernumerary on Texas and Elizabeth Chapel, instead of Richmond, as printed in the Louisiana Conference appointments.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

JANUARY 11, 1860.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

ADVERTISING IN THE ADVOCATE.

The business public are slowly learning that the Advocate is THE GREAT ADVERTISING PAPER OF THE SOUTH AND WEST. Advertisements in it are more valuable than in any half dozen other papers.

1.—It has the largest circulation west of Charleston, and South of Cincinnati; larger than any other two weeklies in New Orleans, and is increasing rapidly—will, in a few years, double its present circulation.

2.—Of medium size, and not crowded with advertisements, an advertisement is not lost in it, but can be easily found.

3.—In our "Editorial Notices," which we give to every advertisement, we specify the page and column on which an advertisement may be found. We seek to make every advertisement valuable to the advertiser and to the paper.

4.—The circulation is spread out over Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, principally: Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas, partially.

5.—It is the only weekly of large and widely-spread circulation in the great and growing metropolis of the South.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE.—Rev. A. R. Erwin, D.D. has been compelled, through ill health, to resign the Presidency of this institution, and Rev. John N. Hank, who has been elected to fill his place, is highly recommended. The college is firmly established, is ripe with experience, is well officered, well furnished, and delightfully situated in Huntsville, Ala., in a most healthful valley in the mountains. The advertisement of the new arrangement will be found in this paper, third page, fifth column.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE.—This institution located at Brookhaven, on the Jackson Railroad, has an Advertisement on third page, fifth column. It is well named for Rev. M. J. Whitworth, through whose energy and liberality it has been built. Through his labors, also, a fine Methodist Church has been built at Brookhaven. Well done for him and for his school. Rev. J. P. Lee, the President, is an excellent teacher, as we know, having known him as a teacher many years since.

MUSIC TEACHER.—On third page, fifth column, will be found the card of Mr. B. Hans, music teacher. He is a worthy man, and a good teacher.

HIWASSIE COLLEGE has an advertisement on third page, fifth column.

REPORTS OF CONFERENCE SESSIONS, 1859.

GEORGIA CONFERENCE APPOINTMENTS.

AUGUSTA DISTRICT—Joshua Lewis, P. E.; Augusta, St. Johns, Alex Grahmin; Augusta, St. James, Wm F Cook; Augusta, Asbury mission, Wm S Baker; Augusta, Trinity mission, David W Calhoun; Savannah, Trinity, Eustace W Speer; Savannah, Wesley Chapel, Jno T Norris; Savannah, Andrew Chapel, to be supplied; Isle of Hope, Geo W Yarbrough; Springfield, Benj F Breedlove, L L Strange; Sylvania, T S L. Harwell; Bethel and colored mission, R F Jones, one to be supplied; Waynesboro, Chas A Fullwood, R F Williamson; Burke and colored mission, James Jones; Louisville circuit and colored mission, Wm F Conley, one to be supplied; Columbia, Habersham J Adams; Richmond, and colored mission, John H Grogan, C M Smith; Warrenton, William A Florence; Glascock, to be supplied.

ATHENS DISTRICT—I O A Clark, P. E.; Athens, Jas W Hinton; Colored mission, Henry Cranford; Watkinsville, John C Simmons, W C Bowland; Factory mission, M H Hebbard; Madison, Wesley P Arnold; Morgan circuit and mission, W H Moss, one to be supplied; Greensboro, Albert Gray, A W Rowland, sup.; Lexington, Robt A Conner, Jas T Lowe; Washington, Thos F Pierce; Wilkes and colored mission, Jas M Dickey, E V G Murrough; Broad River mission, Gibson C Andrews; Lincoln and colored mission, Goodman Hughes; Elberton, Tyre B Harber, M C D Perry; Madison Female College, James L Pierce, President, W B Foote, Professor.

DAHLONEGA DISTRICT—Lewis J Davies, P. E.; Dahlonega, Wm T Norman, Samuel S Clarke; Cummings, Wm T McMichael; Clarkesville, Alexander M Thigpen; Hamilton and Morganton mission, Jos Chambers, James A Baugh; Hiwassie, to be supplied; Ellijay, I Y M Morris; Canton, Robert A Seale, Sanford Leuke; Gainesville, Daniel H McWilliams; Carnesville, Milford G Hamby; H Sanders; Clayton mission, John P Bally.

ROME DISTRICT—John W Glenn, P. E.; Rome, Weyman H Potter; Cave Springs, Jas L Lupo; Cahaniee mission, Moses A Lee; Etowah, Robert H Jones; Cedar Town, Peter M Byhurn; Cassville, John W Talley; Calhoun, Whitfield Anthony; Spring place, Wm Hemphill; Dalton station, Wesley W Hodges; Springfield, Isaac N Craven; La Fayette, John H Mashburn; Ringgold, Jacob C Neese; Summerville, Daniel J Myrick; Cassville Female College, Rufi Kelsey, Prest.

ATLANTA DISTRICT—J W Yarbrough, P. E; Atlanta, Wesley Chapel and colored charge, James B Payne; Atlanta city mission, John A Reynolds; Atlanta, Trinity, William M Crumley; Fulton, James T Ainsworth; Decatur, Thomas T Arnold; Covington, L H R Wiggins; Oxford, Robert W Lovett, one to be supplied, A Means, supernumerary; Lawrenceville, Jas D Anthony, R. H. Rogers; Monroe, Miles M Arnold; Marietta, M A Clonts; Roswell, John M Bright; Powder Springs, John Murphy; Paulding, Miss., A J Dearors; Agent of Emory College, Wm J Parks; Agent Am. Bible Society, T J Pearce.

LA GRANGE DIST.—William H Evans, P E; Lagrange, Edmund P Birch; Troup and colored mission, J J Singleton, John J Morgan; West Point, Robert W Dixon; Greenville, David Blalock, L P Neese; Coweta, John M Marshall; Newnan, John Caldwell; Franklin, W H C Cone; Houston mission to be supplied; Carrollton and Smyrna, John W Reynolds; Carroll, Thomas J Embry; Palmetto, W M D Bond; Haralson mission, John W Brady; La Grange Female College, L L Ledbetter, Agent; Young J Allen, missionary to China.

GRIFFIN DIST.—Walter B Branham, P E; Griffin, Armistead Wright; Griffin colored charge, John P Sims; Zebulon, Columbus W Howard; Fayetteville, John W McClelland; Jonesboro, James W Traywick; Thomaston, Thomas B Stewart; Upson, Cicero A Mitchell, J D Freeman; Culloden, Jesse H Littlejohn; Ollo S Means; Culloden and Knoxville mission, Morgan Bellah; Jackson, Alfred Dorman; Barnesville, James Harris; McDonough, E H Waters; Chaplain U S Navy, Charles W Thomas.

MACON DIST.—James E Evans, P E; Macon, Vineville and colored charge, H H Parks, G H Pattillo; Macon city mission, James M Armstrong; Milledgeville and Bethel, W J Scott; Sparta, J B Jackson; Hancock and colored mission, Edward J Bentz, R J Harwell; Eatonton, Caleb W Key; Putnam and colored mission, F F Reynolds, Marshal G Jenkins; Monticello and colored mission, Marshal F Maltby, J L Neese; Clinton and colored mission, T T Christian, Ed A H McGehee; Perry and colored mission, W G Allen, D E Starr; Fort Valley and colored mission, G C Clarke, one to be supplied; Everett mission, to be supplied; Forsyth station, H G N McDonell; Forsyth circuit, H G Smith; Monroe mission, to be supplied; Westleyan Female College, J. M. Bonnell, Pres., F X Forster, Prof; Book and Tract agent, J W Barke; Trav. Agent Geo, Conf. Dep. J H Blakely Smith; Editor Southern Christian Advocate, E H Myers.

COLUMBUS DIST.—C R Jewett, P E; Columbus, St Luke, Alfred T Mann; Columbus colored charge, to be supplied; Columbus, St Paul, Joseph S Key; Factory mission, W J Wardlaw; Girard and Pierce Chapel, L Pierce, Atticus H Haygood; Talbotton, Alexander M Wynn; Hamilton, J H McGehee; Whitesville, J W Knight, Jackson Rush, sup; Schley, H D Driscoll; Buena Vista, Davidson Williamson, Young F Tigner, sup; Butler, J H Robinson, L H McNamar; Flint River mission, Wyatt Brooks; Cusseta and colored mission, W W Tidwell, one to be supplied; Centreville, L Rush; Harris and Talbott colored mission, H P Pitchford, J F Berry; Muscogee, H D Cox, M H White, sup.

AMERICA'S DIST.—J T Turner, P E; Americus, R B Lester, T H Jordan, sup; Sumter circuit, J P Duncan; Terrell, W H Parks; Fort Gaines, to be supplied; Putawula, O J Dean; Cuthbert and Emmans, H W Bigham; Lumpkin and Green Hill, J H Harris, George Bright, sup; Stewart, J M Austin, Theo A Phar; Chattahoochee mission, David Crenshaw; Starkeville station, J B Wardlaw; Vienna circuit, T W Hayes; Isabella mission, J Danwody, T B Lanier; Ogiethorpe and Traveller's Rest, W A Parks; Georgetown and mission, W A Simmons; Agent for Emory College, S Anthony.

SANDERSVILLE DIST.—L B Payne, P E; Sandersville station, W J Coller; Washington circuit, J P Howell; Irwington, W S Turner; Jeffersonville, Newdygate B Ousley; Hawkinsville, J E Scintell; Dublin, C A Moore; Jacksonville, J W Turner; Reidsville and Mount Vernon mission, L Q Allen, one to be supplied; Hiuesville circuit, W M Watts; Darien, J H Reese; Methodist mission, Walter Knox; Bryan and Bullock and Statesboro mission, J Strickland, R Fraser Jones; Swainsboro mission, R N Cotter.

Philemon C Harris, transferred to Onachita conference and stationed at Pine Bluff; W A Sasnett transferred to Alabama conference, appointed Pres East Alabama College; Daniel D Henry, transferred to Florida conference.

Next Conference to be held at Augusta.

EAST TEXAS CONFERENCE APPOINTMENTS.

SAN AUGUSTINE DIST.—S A Williams, P E; San Augustine circuit, J Adams, W C Collins; Milam circuit, R B Womack; Shelbyville mission, Isaac W Overall; Carthage and colored mission, W W Caulder; Carthage circuit, W K Wilson; Melrose circuit, C L Hamil; Jasper circuit, H M Stovall; Newton circuit, Francis Wilson.

MARSHALL DIST.—H Lane, P E; Marshall station, W H Hughes; Harrison and colored mission, J W Hamill; Dangerfield circuit, H D Palmer; Bellevile circuit, J B Babb; Gilmer circuit, B M Scrivener; Limbin circuit, W B Hill; Elysian Fields, J C Wootham; Jefferson station, J T P Irvine; Macedonia mission, T W Rogers.

CLARKSVILLE DIST.—H B Hamilton, P E; Clarksville and McKenzie institute, W B Williams; Boston and colored mission, J S Mathis; Savannah mission, H W Cumming; Starkville mission, D J Cocke; Paris station, H W Moore; Paris circuit, Z B Landreth; Honey Grove circuit, A C McDougal; Boulsin circuit, to be supplied; Paris Female Institute, J Graham; McKenzie Institute, J W P McKenzie, principal.

DALLAS DIST.—J R Bellamy, P E; Dallas circuit, W T Milligen; McKinney circuit, to be supplied; Sherman station, J M Buckley; Sherman mission, E J Couch; Galesville mission, A Cumming; Montague mission, to be supplied; Decatur mission, W E Bates; Benton mission, W Shaw; Rockwall circuit, A R Bickson; Kaufman circuit, M H Neely.

GREENVILLE DIST.—L R Dennis, P E; Greenville circuit, J M Boyd; Black Jack mission, John Patillo; Ladonia circuit, L C Crume; Tremont circuit, J H Lowe; Mount Pleasant circuit, J L Terry; Quitman circuit, to be supplied; Canton circuit, H H Worden; Garden Valley circuit, W P Popham.

PALESTINE DIST.—J H Tollis, P E; Palestine station, William Witcher; Kickapoo circuit, S T Bridges; Tyler station, J W Fields; Tyler circuit, W K Mashon; Jacksonville circuit, J W Chalk; Kuxaville circuit, W F Pattillo; Athens circuit, W H McPhail; Henderson station, F M Stovall; Henderson circuit, Kesl Brown; Fowler Institute, M W Banks, principal; Starville P H school, R W S Alexander, principal.

RUSK DIST.—H S Finley, P E; Rusk station, W H Gilliam; Cherokee circuit, J A Scruggs; Crockett circuit, S Lynch and S A Kegmyer; Sompter circuit, A B Maulon; Palestine circuit, A W Goodgion; Randolph circuit, J J. Augell; Marion mission, J B Cox; Shook's Bluff mission, S U Box; Mount Enterprise circuit, W F Petty; Douglas mission, E P Rogers.

WOODVILLE DIST.—A Young, P E; Woodville mission, M Matthews; Livingston circuit, W C Simpson; Liberty station, W J Joice; East Bay mission, F C Dowdy; Sabine Pass mission, A Hinkle; Beaumont mission, J M Hall; Village creek mission, S K Stovall; Orange circuit, V C Canon; J E Carnes, editor "Texas Christian Advocate," and member of the Liberty quarterly-Conference; J Shaik, agent Book Depository and Advocate.

Next conference to be held at city of Jefferson.

HOME CORRESPONDENCE.

Colyell.

Our circuit preacher (Uncle John Higginbothan) enters upon his new work in fine spirit. Agreeably to appointment, Brother Joseph Nicholdson held a sacramental meeting with us on his return from Conference. Uncle Johny was present, cordially received by the church and all present. Here let me say that one of our old sisters (Salvator) was with us, and very much in the spirit. I could write a volume relative to the labors of this faithful sister since she has been among us. It was a peculiar time, owned and blessed by the Lord. Our oldest citizen with two of his sons, the only ones of his white family that were out of the church, came trembling to the altar and there gave themselves to the Lord and their names to the church, while there was a general weeping and rejoicing through the whole congregation. The good wife and mother (a member of the Baptist church) was with her husband and children at the altar, mingling her tears with theirs and rejoicing that her companion and all her children had at last come into the church. In all, four whites and five blacks joined the church. What a change in this country! Three years ago no preaching-place, but an open log-house, and in time of service the chase was going on; hooping, yelping, and shouting, with no little annoyance to the preacher. But now it is a rare thing to hear of hunting on Sunday, although we have bear and deer to eat now and then. We have a large framed church, fine congregations, and much interest fell upon religion. Many of our neighbors and children in the church. A flourishing Sabbath-school and a large singing-school. Colyell is not the fast place after all. A good deal of enterprise. Having good roads, comfortable dwellings, etc. Fine range, fine beeves, fat hogs, good land, fine crops; cotton, a bale to the acre, and other things in proportion. There are lands first quality to be had at two to five dollars per acre. I have been living here for three years and find it a healthy country.

Facilities for living greater than in most places. We have as fine rolling ridge magnolia lands as can be found any where, and we have also first rate water coming out of the white sand by digging from fifteen to twenty feet mostly through a stiff red clay. Our nearest shipping point is Sevicks on the Amite, thirteen miles. We are twenty-one miles from Baton Rouge, and twenty-five from the great Jackson and New Orleans Rail Road.

W. S. T.

Walker Livingston, Parish, La., Dec., 23d, 1859.

Church Dedication.

MR. EDITOR—Methodism is on the rise in Troy. On the 6th Sabbath in last month, the new Methodist Church in this place was dedicated to the worship of Almighty God. The service was conducted by Rev. A. H. Mitchell, D.D., of Montgomery. His text was taken from the 87th Psalm, verses xvii. and xviii. "If I forget thee, O, Jerusalem," &c. The discourse was plain, practical and forcible, and occasionally eloquent. It was listened to with much attention, by a large appreciative congregation. The church presents an imposing appearance, when compared with many other buildings in the town. It is neatly finished inside; it is commodious; the seats are well arranged for comfort, and will accommodate a large congregation. It is well lighted with self-generating gas lamps, which afford a much clearer and more brilliant light than the common oil. It will cost twenty-two hundred dollars, which speaks well for Troy, and many people in the country. But the best is yet to be told, the Lord was with us of a truth. The meeting commenced on Friday night before, and closed on the night of the second Sunday in this month, making seventeen days. Dr. Mitchell remained with us four days, and preached with much power and usefulness. Dr. Jennings, our worthy P. E., was present, and remained with us six days, and did efficient service, preaching much to the satisfaction of the community. Now, for the fruits; the number of conversions I have not been able to ascertain correctly, as there were several converted away from the church, in the interval of regular service. There were 32 received on probation, and I think I am safe in saying that a majority of them were converted. Among them were a number of the best citizens in the place.

A. S. DICKINSON.

OUR MEDICAL SCHOOLS.

The departure of some two or three hundred students from the medical schools of the North, more especially from Philadelphia, is made the subject of much remark in that city.

The following comments of the Pennsylvania Enquirer, on their course, are far from just to the medical schools of this city. The Enquirer asks:

"Where, but in Philadelphia, can they find such hospitals and such clinical, and therefore such practical studies? In anatomy, the very fountain of a knowledge of the human frame, and the ills to which flesh is heir, Philadelphia is deservedly regarded as pre-eminent."

Philadelphia has no pre-eminence in this regard over New Orleans. In no other city but ours, do the hospitals present the whole range of diseases to which "flesh is heir." Here only does no prejudice exist against dissection, and subjects are furnished beyond the desires of the schools or the students.

The advantages of the New Orleans Schools of Medicine, for clinical and anatomical practice, begin to be appreciated, as is evident from the rapid increase in the number of students and the wide extent of country from which they come. The North begins to furnish her quota of pupils; and we cannot think the time far distant when the schools of New Orleans shall be universally recognized as without a rival.

Accurate and practical knowledge in regard to a certain class of diseases can only be obtained in New Orleans. Indeed so varied are the cases constantly presented in our hospital, that practical knowledge of treatment cannot fail to be acquired by all who have entered with zeal upon the study of the principles of medicine.

We trust the movement of the medical students will be the cause of awakening Southern parents to a full appreciation of their duty to educate their children at home. The South has, for some years, been most energetically engaged in the work of establishing good common schools and founding institutions of learning of a higher order. But the efforts made by patriotic men have resulted only in partial success, from the persistent habit of sending sons and daughters from the slave to the free States.

The opinions and character of the coming generation depend much upon the impressions received in the schools provided for the education of those who are destined to give tone and body to public opinion and legislation. If not educated at home, we subject our sons to the danger of a false philosophy, and an unsound system of moral ethics. We teach Southern youth for another thirty years to look upon the North as the intellectual dictator of the republic.—Picayune.

DEEDS OF JOHN BROWN IN KANSAS.

The following communication bears the signature of a Christian gentleman, whose name is reliable authority for the facts stated.

LITTLE OSAGE, Mo., Dec. 3, 1859.

The terrible crimes and character of John Brown and his associates, are well known here along the border of this State, and all southern Kansas. Brown, and his company, of about forty men, appeared in the vicinity of Osoowattamie, in the summer of 1854, not as settlers, but as a company of armed men, equipped with Sharp's rifles, and Colt's navy revolvers, Bowie-knives, etc. They sometimes were all embodied together; at other times, scattered about in squads; and, during the fall and winter, they stole horses and saddles, etc., sufficient to mount the company; and also the means of subsistence, mostly from pro-slavery men, settlers in the territory. In the spring of 1856, Brown opened his bloody campaign on Pottowattomie creek, by murdering, in the most barbarous and inhuman manner, five good and worthy citizens, in one night, on the 25th of May: Wilkerson, three Doyles (father and two sons,) and William Sherman, and on the next day, displayed his sword, covered with hair and blood, and said that "sword had done some of the work for the pro-slavers, and it would do a great deal more for them."

This act of Brown was condemned by Martin White, a free statesman, which brought down the vengeance of Brown upon him, and he was forced to take his family out of the territory. But Martin White, leaving his family, returned into the Territory, and took up arms against Brown, and at the battle of Osowottomie, he killed Brown's son. The letter-writers to the abolition papers, in 1856, had this Martin White murdered several times by the border-ruffians; but Martin White still lives, in Bates county, Mo., a good citizen, and preacher of the Gospel.—Christian Observer.

The Vicksburg, Shreveport, and Texas railroad is running to De Soto city, and will be completed to Delhi by April.

Over fifty persons froze to death in Texas during the recent cold weather.

The amount of finished railroad now in Texas is 280 miles with a prospect of about 50 miles being opened in the next six months.

Mr. Charles Scott, of Virginia, has contracted to finish the N. E. and S. W. Alabama railroad to Tuscaloosa in 1860, and to Chattanooga in 1861. This road connects, via Enterprise and Brandon, Miss., with the N. O., J., and G. N. railroad, and brings New Orleans twenty-four hours nearer Washington and the North.

Senator Seward has arrived in New York from Europe.

A large fire occurred in New York, in which Cyrus W. Field's paper warehouse was burned.

Cortinas the Mexican bandit, has been defeated, and driven off from the vicinity of Brownville, Texas.

MARRIAGES.

"It is not good for man to be alone."

On the evening of the 20th, at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. J. J. Clark, Mr. EDWIN P. WALTON to Miss Martha E. Hornsby, all of Cold Spring, Miss.

In Talladega county, Ala., Dec. 22, 1859, by Rev. W. H. Matthews, Mr. J. ASBURY BALLINGER, of Franklin county, Ga., to Miss ELIZABETH E. T., daughter of Jesse Harrell, Esq., of the former place.

On the 28th December, at the residence of Mrs. John Butler, by Rev. Thomas J. Upton, Mr. EPHRAIM O. BROWN, to Miss CYNTHIA A. HEAD, all of Franklin parish, La.

COMMERCIAL.

MONDAY EVENING, January 9, 1859.

We condense the following statement from the New Orleans Price Current of the 7th instant:—

"Only a moderate business has been done in our general market during the past week, as usual during the holiday season, but prices have been very well maintained for some of our staples and for most descriptions of Western Produce, with an advance in some articles owing to a suspension of navigation in the Western rivers. For Cotton there has been a fair enquiry, and notwithstanding unfavorable advices from Europe, the medium and better qualities have been firm. The rates for Sugar have tended in favor of buyers, but in molasses we notice some improvement.

COTTON.—With respect to prices, we have to remark that yesterday the Bohemian's advices reported a further decline of ¼d., but the intelligence produced very little effect on our market, the sales amounting to 8,000 bales, and prices for good Cottons were firm at the range of our quotations, which are slightly advanced for the grades above good ordinary—the rates for the lower qualities remaining irregular and easy for buyers, with but little demand.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 929,390 bales, against 760,128 bales to same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 275,238 bales.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	5 @ 7	Good Middling	11⅛@11¼
Ordinary	8 @ 8	Middling Fair	12⅛@12⅜
Good Ordinary	9¼@ 9¾	Fair	—@—
Low Middling	10⅛@10⅜	Good Fair	—@—
Middling	10⅝@10⅞	Good and Fine	—@—

SUGAR.—The sales of the week amount to 5500 hhds. We quote for Inferior and Refining 5 to 6¼; Common to Good Common 6¼ to 7; Fair to Fully Fair 7¼ to 7¾; Prime to Choice 8 to 8¾; Centrifugal and Clarified 8¾ to 9¾ cents per pound. The above quotations apply to round lots, but small orders of 5 hhds and under, could not be filled without paying a further advance of ¼ to ½c per pound.

MOLASSES.—Total receipts of the week 19,000 barrels. The prices obtained during the week were: Inferior to Fair, 33 to 39 cents per gallon; and Prime to Choice, 40 to 42½ cents; half barrels, 42½ to 46 cents per gallon.

FLOUR.—About 11,000 bbls have been sold during the past week, at from $5 75 to $5 87½ for superfine, $6 to 6 50 for ordinary to good extra, and $6 75 to $7 00 per bbl. for choice extra brands.

GRAIN.—The receipts of Corn continue light. About 11,000 sacks have been sold at from $1 73 to 0 80 for ordinary, and $0 90 for good white. Oats have been in moderate request at 54c to 55c per bushel for good to prime St. Louis. Bran sells at $1 20 to $1 25 for ordinary to choice lots. Wheat sells at $1 15 per bushel for prime red.

PORK.—The principal sales reported through the week were at $17 00 to $17 50 per bbl. for Mess.

BEEF.—We quote Prime Mess at $15 00 per bbl. for extra brands.

BACON.—Shoulders 8¼ to 8½; Ribbed Sides 10¼ to 10½; Clear Sides 12½ to 12¾; Sugar-cured Hams 12 to 15 cents per pound.

LARD.—We quote 10½ to 11c for prime to choice prime; in tcs., and 12¾ to 13c. for kegs.

BUTTER—Western generally selling at 10 to 11 cents per pound, according to quality; and Cheese 11 to 12c.

BAGGING AND BALE ROPE.—We quote Kentucky Bagging at 12 to 14¼ cents per yard; India Bagging, 11¼ to 12c; Bale Rope, hand spun, 6½ to 7¼, and machine made, 7¼ to 7¾ cents per pound.

GUNNY BAGS.—Limited parcels sell at 10 cents for light and 11 to 11½c. to heavy and extra heavy bags.

COFFEE.—We quote fair at 11 to 12, and prime at 12½c. per pound.

LIVE-STOCK.—Beef Cattle—Western, 8 to 9c. per lb. net; Texas—ordinary to fair $14 to 20, and choice $25 to 38 per head.

Hogs, selling at 7 to 8c. per pound net.

Sheep—Selling at $2 50 to $5 00 per head.

Veal Cattle—Selling at $9 00 to $11 00 per head.

Milch Cows—Dull, at $30 to $80 per head.

NEW ORLEANS WHOLESALE PRICES-CURRENT.

BAGGING—Kentucky, ₩ yard	12	@	14
East India	12	@	—
BALE ROPE—Kentucky, ₩ lb	6¾	@	6¾
CHAIN, ₩ ton	120	@	125
COFFEE—Rio, ₩ lb	11¾	@	12¼
Havana, good prime green
Inferior to middling
Java	18	@	20
Laguayra	12¾	@	13¾
St. Domingo	12¾	@	13
CANDLES—Sperm, New Bedford, ₩ lb	40	@	42
Nantucket
Adamantine	20	@	22
Star	17½	@	21
CORDAGE—Manilla, ₩ lb	9¾	@	10
Tarred American	12	@	13
FLOUR—Ohio, etc. superfine, ₩ bbl		@	5 75
Illinois and Missouri	5 75	@	6 00
St. Louis City		@	6 75
FISH—Cod, ₩ box	85	@	95
Mackrel, No 1, ₩ bbl	16 50	@	17 00
2	15 00	@	16 00
3	8 50	@	10 50
GRAIN—Wheat, ₩ bushel	—	@	1 15
Oats	55	@	60
Corn, shelled	85	@	90
in the ear, ₩ bbl
Beans	4 50	@	5 00
GUNNY BAGS, ₩ bag	13	@	12
HAY, ₩ ton	25 00	@	31 00
HIDES—W. Indian and Mexican dried, ₩ lb	—	@	17
Dry-salted Mexican
Wet-salted, heavy	06¾	@	07¾
Dry, country	12	@	14
Kip and calf	07¼	@	07¾
IRON—Pig, ₩ ton	28 00	@	30 00
English	65 00	@	77 50
Country bar, ₩ lb	04¾	@	05
Hoop	04	@	07¼
Sheet	04	@	05¾
Boiler	05½	@	06
Nail rods	06¾	@	08
Castings, American	03¼	@	03¾
LUMBER—Boards, white pine, common, ₩ M feet	50	@	60 00
merchantable		@
Clear		@	00 00
Yellow pine	14 00	@	17 00
Cypress	25 00	@	30 00
Oak timber, ₩ cubic foot	35	@	50
Flooring and ceiling, clear	30 00	@	35 00
merchantable	27 50	@	30 00
Weather-boarding, dressed	22 00	@	25 00
rough	18 00	@	20 00
Joists	17 00	@	—
Shingles, ₩ M	3 75	@	4 50
PROVISIONS—Beef, Mess, Northern, ₩ bbl
Western		@	15 00
half bbls	8 00	@	8 75
Prime Mess, ₩ tierce		@	17 50
Prime, ₩ bbl	8 00	@	—
B Beef		@	5 50
Pork, Clear, ₩ bbl		@	—
Mess	17 00	@	17 50
M. O		@	—
Prime		@	—
Rogromd, ₩ lb		@	—
Bacon Hams, ₩ lb	10	@	14
canvassed	12	@	15
Sides	10¾	@	12½
Shoulders	08½	@	08¾
Lard, Prime	10¾	@	—
Fair		@	—
Inferior to Common		@	—
Butter, Northern	23	@	26
Western	10	@	14
Cheese, American	10	@	11
Polishes, ₩ bbl	1 50	@	2 00
SALT—Liverpool, fine, carg, ₩ sack		@	—
from store	1 10	@	—
coarse, cargo		@	—
from store	1 05	@	1 10
SUGAR—Louisiana, on plantation, ₩ lb		@	—
in the city	04	@	08¼
Havana, yellow	06¾	@	08¾
white	09	@	10¾
brown		@	—
Cucuruche		@	—
Muscovado		@	—
Loaf, Northern	11¼	@	11¾
Crushed, do	10¾	@	11
TOBACCO—Choice and Segar Leaf, ₩ lb		@	—
Fine	07¼	@	08¾
Fair		@	06¾
Common	05¼	@	05¾
Inferior	03¾	@	—
TALLOW, ₩ lb		@	10¾
TWINE—Bailing, ₩ lb	12	@	14
Solito	28	@	30

TABLE OF STOCKS AND BONDS.

Bank of Louisiana, $100 paid	$180	00@	180 00
Louisiana State Bank, $100 paid		@	187 00
Mechanics and Trader's Bank, $100 paid	—	@	104 25
Canal and Banking Company, $11⅜ paid	135	00@	135 00
Union Bank, $100 paid		@	103 25
Citizen's Bank, $100 paid		@	218 00
Bank of New Orleans, $100 paid	104	00@	104 50
Southern Bank $100 paid		@	110 00
Merchants' bank, $100 paid		@	102 00
Crescent City Bank, $100 paid		@	104 00
Bank of America, $100 paid		@	137 00
Union Insurance Company, $32 5c paid		@	65 00
La. State Insurance Company, $20 paid	25	00@	— —
Hope Insurance Company, $50 paid		@	65 00
Star Insurance Company, $100 paid	105	00@	110 00
Louisiana State Sixes	96	50@	— —
City Six per cent. Bonds, consolidated	91	00@	92 00
City 6 per cent. to Jackson Railroad	87	00@	— —
Opelousas Railroad	87	00@	— —
Pontchartrain Railroad		@	— —
Jackson Railroad Mortgage Bonds, 8 per ct	80	00@	— —
Opelousas Railroad Mortgage Bonds, 8 per ct	80	00@	80 00
Pontchartrain Railroad, $100 paid	71	00@	80 00
Carrollton Railroad Shares, $75 paid		@	50 00
Opelousas Railroad Shares, $25 paid		@	7 00
Jackson Railroad Shares, $25 paid		@	12 25
Canal Company, $100 paid		@	103 00
Commercial Water Works, $100 paid	92	00@	— —
St. Charles Hotel, $25 paid	15	00@	— —
Levee Steam Cotton Press, $100 paid		@	116 00
Southern Steamship Company, $100 paid	85	00@	88 00
Southern Oil Company par value $100	90	00@	— —

NEW ORLEANS MONEY MARKET.

American Gold	par	@	¼ ct. pm.
California Gold	$17	00@	17 50 ₩ oz.
American Silver, old issue	1¼	@	½ ct pm.
new issue,	¼	@	¼ ct. dis.
Mexican Dollars	85½	@	86¼ pm.
Five Franc pieces		@	95@96
Twenty Franc do	$1	80@	3 85
Sovereigns	4	80@	4 85
Ten Ticher pieces	7	70@	7 80
Spanish Doubloons	15	00@	15 25
Dimes do	15	5 @	15 60
U. S. Treasury Notes, 3 to 5 Incl	¼	@	¼ ct. pm.
Northern Banks	¼	@	¼ ct. dis.
Southern—Mobile	¼	@	1 2 do.
Alabama State	1	@	2 do.
Montgomery, Ala	1	@	2 do.
South Carolina	3	@	1 1-2 do.
North Carolina	1	@	2 do.
Georgia	3	@	1 1 2 do.
Virginia	1	@	2 do.
Western—Missouri	1	@	2 do.
Tennessee	1	@	2 do.
Kentucky	3	@	1 1-2 do.
Indiana	1	@	1 1-2 do.
Ohio	1	@	1 2 do.
Illinois	3	@	5 do.
Free Banks of Western States	2	@	5 do.
Land Warrants	75c	@	90c ₩ acre.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

NOTICE.—Persons having business with the NEW ORLEANS DEPOSITORY, will please direct to KEENER & PARKER.

NOTICE.

Persons living in the following counties, viz. Montgomery, Autauga, Coosa, Lowndes, Macon, Chambers and Tallapoosa, who have subscribed to the Book and Tract Society of the Alabama Conference, and have paid up a full share or more, and thus become entitled to the Benesbogical Bible, will get their Bible by presenting their certificates at the Bible House in Montgomery. All other subscribers will get theirs at the Depository in Mobile.

J. HAMILTON.

Dec. 26.

WANTED.

A gentleman (unmarried) of Southern birth and education, and a teacher of several years experience, desires a situation in that capacity in this, or an adjoining State. He brings letters of commendation from late employers and others. An early application is desired. Address

S. G.

(Care No O. Christian Advocate,

New Orleans,

Louisiana.

dec28,3t.

TO THE READERS OF THE ADVOCATE.

DR. MOATMOAR, of Louisville, Ky., has made arrangements to spend the winter in New Orleans, and has taken rooms at No. 9 Camp street, opposite the City Hotel.

DR. M. gives his sole attention to the treatment of Rheumatism in all its various forms; also Sciatica, Neuralgia, Paralysis, Disease of the Kidney and Spine, Dyspepsia (Indigestion), General Debility, and Nervous affections.

Probably no other physician of the present day has had such unbounded success in the treatment of the above complaints. He has, by personal treatment and the use of his remedies, furnished by him through the agency of all physicians and druggists, cured over twenty thousand cases of Rheumatism alone; many of these had visited the various springs, both in this country and Europe, and had been treated and given up as hopeless, incurable cripples; yet, after all others failed, he has restored the use of their limbs and perfect health.

DR. M. prepares his own remedies, suited to each case, on examination of patients; when inconvenient to visit him, they can write to him, giving history and description of their affliction. He will return answer with his terms of treatment, &c.

Apply to or address

DR. D. MORTIMORE, dec21 4t New Orleans, La.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Clinton District—First Round of Quarterly Meetings.

January..Greensburg circuit, at Areola, 21 and 22; Poneheltoula at Bradford's, 28 and 29.

February..Livingston circuit, at Kinchen's Chapel, 4 and 5; East Baton Rouge, at Salem, 11 and 12; Port Hudson, at Port Hudson, 18 and 19; Clinton station, at Clinton, 25, 26.

March..Feliziana circuit, at Pine Grove, 3 and 4; Jackson station, at Jackson, 10 and 11.

A full attendance of the official members at the first quarterly meetings is earnestly desired.

B. PIPKIN, P. E.

Yicksburg District—First Round Quarterly Meetings.

December and January..Vicksburg, Dec 31 and Jan. 1; Warren circuit, 7 and 8; Jackson, Poetry.

A SWEET REVIVAL HYMN.

Air: "The Old Arm Chair."

I once was a stranger to grace and to God;
I knew not my danger, I felt not my load:
When friends spoke in rapture of Christ on the tree,
This Jesus, this Jesus, was nothing to me!

I oft read with pleasure, to soothe or engage,
Isaiah's wild measure, or John's simple page;
But still when they pictured the blood-sprinkled tree,
This Jesus, this Jesus, was nothing to me!

Life tears from the daughters of Zion, that roll,
I wept when the water went over his soul—
Yet I knew not my sins had him nailed to the tree,
Still Jesus, still Jesus, was nothing to me!

But free grace awoke me by light from on high!
Then many fears shook me! I trembled to die!
No refuge, no hope in myself could I see—
I saw that this Jesus my Savior must be.

My terrors all vanished before the sweet name;
My guilty fears banished, with boldness I came
To drink at His fountain, life-giving and free;
And Jesus, this Jesus was all things to me!

Dear Jesus! thou shalt be my treasure and boast:
While leaning upon thee I ne'er can be lost.
In thee will I conquer by blood and by field—
My Cable, my Anchor, my Rock and my Shield!

And in the dark valley and shadow of death,
This watch-word shall rally my faltering breath;
And when from life's fever my God shall set free,
This Jesus, sweet Jesus, my death-song shall be!

Children's Column.

CHILDREN'S EDITORIAL.

The Year 1860.

Before this number of our paper reaches our dear little readers, they will nearly have forgotten Christmas and New Year's Day. Still, the Editor would like to talk to the children a little about the year 1860. He hopes they all had a "merry Christmas," and a "happy New Year." He supposes that they have now about burned all their fire-crackers, broken all their toys, eaten up all their sweet things, and got tired of frolicking generally. By the way, children, do you like fire-crackers and toys? The Editor does not like them at all. He would rather hear one fine little boy laugh, or one rosy little girl sing, than to hear all the popping of all the abominable fire-crackers in the world. They are horrible things. The Editor would much rather hear the creaking of pop-corn. And then toys! What foolishness to buy them! You soon break them, or lose them, or get tired of them. Hobby-horses for boys to ride, for instance. If the Editor were a boy, he would much rather ride a broom-stick or a barrel-hoop. Hobby-horses are always in the way. They take up so much room as a top-board, and you are sure to break your shins against them in the dark. And what poor things are dolls for little girls' babies! They are miserable, hard, dry things, and do not look, or feel, or laugh like babies. Nursing a little negro baby is better than nursing a doll, any time. And there are so many beautiful little white babies to play with. We never could bear a doll.

But we have commenced a new year. The Editor has been too busy of late to pay as much attention to the children's column as he wished. He hopes to do better in the future. Let us all do better in the year 1860 than we did in the year 1859.—This will please God, and please our friends, and make us all feel happier.

In the children's column this week, our little readers will find some interesting reading. Be sure to read it all, and tell your parents and friends what you think of it.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

LETTER FROM MRS. THOMAS.

Irving Place, New York City, Dec. 12, 1859.

To JOSEPH SCIDDER PARKER.

My Dear Sumner: It is now the season of the year in which I was with that little company of the mission church in your city, where your father's indefatigable labors had been so successfully established. My mind now turns to the consecrated place with unusual interest. I have heard of its prosperity, which rejoices my heart, and I fondly hope that many have been added to that little band which then gathered around the altar of prayer. The angel of mercy has brooded over your city the summer past, instead of the angel of death in the epidemics which have hitherto prevailed. That lovely sanctuary where we met our interesting Sabbath-school, has a claim on my heart's best affections, and lives there with peculiar freshness, like a garden of bedding flowers sparkling with the dews of heaven in their unfolding beauties. Have any of the young plants drooped and died in my absence? Let me know. What has become of our little orator, Charlie? I hope no rude blast has caused the young bud to wither; and that he is now improving under the fostering care of that school, to become a child of God. And I hope that you, who were made a subject of regenerating grace in the time of the revival during the session of our conference, are still steadfast in the faith, and progressing in a divine life. Youth is the best season to form a religious character, and the only one which has the particular promise of the Savior, who says, "They who seek me early shall find me." No one can give their hearts to God too soon, for the world, with its delusive charms and fascinating spell, becomes more powerful and attractive as you advance in years, until its snares entwine around the soul and absorb its vital energies. No mistake is greater than to suppose that children and youth cannot be religious; or that religion is calculated to make them gloomy—far otherwise. If they love their parents, they can love God, and this capacity is enlarged by its love, which expands the heart to embrace all mankind in their benevolent affections; and the mind beholds new beauties in all that He has made, and brightens every enjoyment. It does not condemn innocent mirth, nor the pleasures of childhood, but opens new resources of pleasure, more pure and elevated than those limited to earthly things, and bounded by the horizon of this changing world. It imparts new energies of moral and intellectual power, and a consciousness of self-government to meet all the contingencies of life with firmness; to gain a victory over the passions. It leads the soul into a higher life in the development of its moral faculties, and prepares them for the contest to pursue a course of integrity of principle which secures happiness under all circumstances. O! what a halo of light is thrown around the pathway of youth—what dignity and grace blends in the character of the truly good! The love of God

"Is the life of living things."

It transmutes the most adverse circumstances, like the philosopher's stone, into gold; even death itself is robbed of its terrors.

"And seems a form divinely bright,
With burnished wing all tinged with light,
To bear us to a clime more fair,
Where sorrows never cloud the air,
Opens the portals of the sky,
Where youth and beauty never die."

The treasures of wisdom and knowledge are at your command, and if you are faithful to God, the religion of Jesus will give fresh impetus to your intellect, and enable you to monopolize time to the best advantage, and make all your acquirements subservient to the highest of purposes. There is no happiness but in the constant use of our faculties, and in the continual use of them they become brighter like pure gold—the more it is rubbed, the more brilliant it shines.

Let the Bible be you guide. It is the Koh-i-noor diamond—the mountain of light which illumines the soul with the splendor of another and better world. It shows us plainly the existence of that God in whom we live, and move, and have our being, and the revelation of that Savior who died to redeem us, and give us, through his sufferings, death and resurrection, richly all things to enjoy both in this life and that which is to come.

My love to all the teachers and pupils with whom I am acquainted. Do those trees live I planted with my own hands? I hope some of them will cast their shadows over the church in which ye were so often blest.

My respects to Bro. Landrum, your father, and friends.

Yours, with kind remembrance,

S. B. THOMAS.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

LETTER FROM A LOG CABIN.

Bayou Bartholomew, Ashly County, Ark.,
December 15th, 1859.

To the little readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate:

I wish a merry Christmas and a happy New Year, and that old Santa Claus will show no partiality in the distribution of the beautiful presents he carries in his sooty wagon.

"Christmas is coming, Christmas will soon be here," is the glad shout of many a happy child, for visions of pleasant times, wonderful toys, and bright fires, the magic word Christmas brings. But stop, my gay little friends, have you thought why Christmas is such a cheerful, happy day? One says, "I have not thought much about it, but suppose it is because we always get so many presents and have so many nice things to eat."—"O, that's not it," quickly replies a curly-haired, blue-eyed little girl, "I love Christmas because we all go in the country to aunty's, and have such nice times playing all over the house, or romping through the woods, gathering the green moss and the berry bushes with their crimson berries." And then, aunty, of evenings, when we are all seated round the log-fire, tells us so many beautiful Christmas stories."

"I love Christmas," quietly remarks a modest, pleasant-looking child of eleven years, "because my dear mamma, when she was alive, used to take me on her lap every Christmas morning, after I had admired and talked over all my presents, and tell me that that day was celebrated as the Savior's birth-day; that we should be very joyful because the Good Lord had given him only son to die that we, through faith in Him, might enter heaven. And then she would read to me the 2nd chapter of Matthew, 'Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea,' &c.; and dear mamma described the scene where "the wise men presented gifts—gold, frankincense and myrrh," so beautifully that I imagined I could see the sweet babe, with a glory about his head, lying on his mother Mary's lap, and smiling on the generous wise men. Then she told me how Joseph had a dream which warned him to take the holy child and its mother, and go to Egypt; and a great was Joseph's fear, that he arose immediately and fled the same night. She spoke of Mary's care of the young babe, and how anxiously she guarded it from the cold even which fell in Judea; and when recalled by the angel, their joyful return to their old home. Also, how the blessed Savior "grew in favor with God and man;" notwithstanding all things were made by Him, yet he was subject to his parents, obedient, industrious and affectionate. She used to talk to me often about the kindness of Jesus, our Redeemer, and his love for little children. He took them up in his arms and blessed them, and would tell them to come to him, promising that their "angels should always behold the face of his Father." How much we children ought to love Jesus! I cannot now tell you all that dear ma would say to me those delightful Christmas mornings, long time ago, when I was a little girl."

"Why, you are nothing but a little girl now," laughs blue eyes, "but no matter, I think your me must have been a real good lady, and I love her, and you, too, for telling me Christmas is the Savior's birth-day, and this is the reason we should be glad and cheerful."

My young friends, will not each of you become the good Santa Claus to some orphan or poor little child, whose life is not as joyous as your own? I hope each of you will do some good deed during the holydays, which will, ever afterwards, give you pleasure to think of. Do not wait until you are grown to begin to do good. Begin now to lay up the true riches, to store away treasure in heaven. Now, let's see what you can do. You can make home happier by obedience, industry, and kindness.—Would you not rather be the sunbeam of your home, than the frowning cloud whose presence causes discontent and unhappiness? Try and think how often you were a sunbeam and how often a cloud the past year, and resolve to be the sunbeam only hereafter. "Even a child is known by its ways."

Pray to God to give you a "new heart," and "to create a right spirit within you," that you may be inclined to seek Him early. "Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth."

Your friend,

M. A. C.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

DEATH OF YOUNG LOUIS JENNINGS.

DEAR BROTHER GILLESPIE: We parted company, as you will remember, at Chehaw, you wending your way to Tuskegee, I homeward bound, which having reached by God's good providence, and having obtained some refreshment, so seeded after the labors of our annual session, and the unusual fatigue of traveling, I sat me down and prepared the programme of my district, which is already on its way to your office for publication.

To-day I received sad tidings. Death has robbed me of another son. Louie, who bore a letter of introduction to you some months since, from me, and to whom you showed kindness, has passed beyond the reach and need of human sympathy. On the 9th of this month (Nov.) in Hempstead, Texas, he received the summons, and closed his earthly career. A few more days, and he would have been twenty-two years old, having been born on the 23d November, 1837, in Northumberland County, Virginia.

These tidings have greatly afflicted me. I need the prayers of my brethren. To ask them is, I know, to secure them.

I have, thank God, much to comfort me. My son was with kind friends. Here is what Mr. Marschalk, the editor and proprietor of the Hempstead Courier, says: "I am pleased to tell you that your son was very much liked in this community. In my own family, he was cherished as one of our own, and received every attention that he required, not only in sickness but in health. My oldest son, my beloved first-born sacrificed him. self to Louie, devoting himself to his care, and never leaving his bedside till Louis was dying."

Brother Gillespie, I wish it known to all my friends, that I hold myself indebted to Mr. Marschalk and his family, to an extent only to be met by a daily offering to God of my poor prayers for him and his, and the daily shedding of grateful tears, associating, as I ever shall do, the memory of my dear boy with the kind friends he found in Texas.

I have still increased comfort in the dying message of my boy —" Tell my father, God bless him, I hope to meet him and the other loved ones in the realms of bliss, where sorrow is unknown."

My son sleeps side by side with Andrew Marschalk, who so nobly watched by his side, and three other members of Mr. Marschalk's family, all five having fallen by yellow fever.

J. M. JENNINGS.

Lowndesboro', December 13th, 1859.

☞ Texas Christian Advocate please copy.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

FREDDIE.

Little Freddie was the son of one of our writers for the children's column. She has written the "Letters from an Arkansas Log-cabin," which our little readers will remember. She sends the following:—

"Like a shadow throws
Softly and sweetly from a passing cloud,
Death fell upon him."

Freddie G. Crawley, son of J. F. and M. A. Crawley, died on the 21st November, 1859.

"Because thy smile was fair,
Thy lips and eyes so bright,
Because thy cradle-care
Was such a fond delight,
Shall love, with weak embraces,
Thy heavenward flight detain?
No, angel! seek thy place
Amid yon cherub train."

Put aside his cradle, fold away his little clothes, my baby-boy has no more need of them; he rests in the Savior's bosom, and is clothed forever in the beautiful robe of immortality.

For nine months and three days he blomed near my heart, a comfort and a blessing, for which I thank my Heavenly Father. If ever I received a consolation from Him, it was the loan of this dear child. From his earliest infancy I had dedicated my beautiful boy to the Lord, hoping He would accept of him for a minister of the gospel; but the Omniscient One would deliver him from the "evil to come," and my child is not.

Freddie's "dream of life is o'er," and a sweet fragrance, that shall not die, circles his memory. My memory of him is a lovely picture, which increases in beauty at each view. 'Tis a happiness to think of his pleasant ways, and it is a happiness to know of his beatitude in heaven. "All is well" with my baby-boy, then why should I grieve?

"Be resigned!
Bear up, bear up, the end shall tell
This dear Lord ordereth all things well!"

M. A. C.

DID THE CZAR NICHOLAS COMMIT SUICIDE?

"How did the Emperor Nicholas die? Of what did he die?" These are questions which one asks when reflecting upon the premature and wholly unexpected end of that remarkable man. There are two very different replies to these questions. The following is what is asserted publicly:

"After the annihilation of Poland and the crushing of Hungary, the Emperor Nicholas was convinced that nothing in Europe could resist him. He was impatiently awaiting news from the Crimea, firmly convinced that he should hear of the destruction of the English and French armies. A courier is announced. The Emperor, with a confident smile on his lips, bids him enter. The courier, exhausted by a journey of three thousand wrists, offers the despatch to his Majesty. "Well," says the Emperor, "we have beaten them, I suppose." "Will your Majesty please to read?" said the courier. "Was the day doubtful?" "Read sire." "Answer me, sir; I will read afterwards." "Sire, we have been beaten." "Where?" "At the Alma." The Emperor became livid, and started up. "You lie," said he. The courier bowed. "Read, sire." Nicholas opened the despatch and read it. It was the battle. Menschicoff revealed all! The French and English had been victorious. The Emperor fell back in his easy chair, as though both his legs had been broken.

"A mouth afterwards arrives the news of the battle of Inkermann. The man whom nothing had been able to resist now experiences not only a double resistance, but a double defeat. He could not bear this double reverse. From that moment his health became deranged, and he sank under the weight of this annihilation of his greatness. He died on the 18th February, 1855.

"Such is the generally received account. The following is what is asserted privately. The effect of these two pieces of intelligence had not been less terrible than as above described, but the athletic constitution of the Emperor would have borne up against it. Nevertheless, he took an exalted and terribly heroic (so says Dumas) part. He resolved to die! Should he retrace his footsteps and abandon his policy, he would have to give the lie to a reign of thirty years. Should he persist in carrying on the war, he would ruin Russia.

"But what he could not ask for without loss of honor, viz: peace, his successor might. He therefore, by pressing solicitation, obtained from his physician, who had previously resisted for two months, a dose of poison strong enough to kill him, but weak enough to allow him to live a few hours after having taken it. (Dumas should have said "after he was weak enough to have taken it.) The physician, like a wise man, left St. Petersburg on the 17th of February, having obtained from the Emperor a declaration in writing which made him safe at all points. On the morning of the 18th the Emperor swallowed the poison, after which he sent for the Grand Duke Alexander, (now Emperor) and told him all. The latter would have cried out for help, but the Emperor prevented him by an order positive so that, as a son and subject, he could not disobey his father and his sovereign.

"Then the Emperor explained to him in detail the motives which had induced him to take this rash step. The young prince, broken hearted, the tears streaming from his eyes, his utterance choked by sobs, listened to the dreadful narrative on his knees, and clasped his hands, exclaiming, "My father! my father!" The Emperor would not allow him to quit his side until he had obtained from him a solemn promise to let death take its course without attempting to stop it. But the instant the young prince was out of the room his filial love triumphed over his fidelity to his word, and he summoned the whole of the royal family, and also three physicians. The latter arrived too late. The Emperor, after a not very violent agony, expired at twenty minutes past twelve, noon, on the 18th of February, 1855. At the same instant Russia changed not only her master but her policy."

PROGRESS OF SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

It is now seventy-five years since that noble-hearted philanthropist, Robert Raikes, organized the first Sunday-school ever known to the world; and, as another has said, few institutions promising such unmingled good to our race have developed more satisfactorily, and spread more widely in the intervening time, than have Sunday-schools."

From a limited and paid agency, as it was at first, aiming at little more than to teach the poor and the ignorant the first rudiments of a common education, it has risen to be a gratuitous, self-working, and powerful auxiliary of the Church of God, for the diffusion of truth, knowledge and holiness.

It made the passage of the Atlantic the second year after its birth, and was welcomed by the apostolic Asbury to its first application in the New World, in the sparse settlements of Virginia and South Carolina. "Although thus early introduced, its progress in America for twenty years was very slow, and embarrassed by peculiar difficulties.

Our whole population was then small; the country was new and just recovering from a protracted revolutionary struggle; books and teachers were rare, and even churches and ministers were slow to comprehend the real design and character of the Sunday-school. It was not till between the years 1820 and 1830 that Sunday-schools became general in the United States.

A little more than thirty years, therefore, may be considered as about the whole period in which Sunday Schools have had an opportunity to demonstrate their adaptedness to our soil, and their power to bless our nation.—The Times.

WHAT A DEAR LITTLE HEROINE.—We find the following in the Memphis Bulletin, of the 17th. How sad and touching, yet how beautiful in the heroic exculpation of the little angel: On Friday afternoon a fatal accident happened to a little girl, daughter of Mrs. Cole, residing seven miles south of this city, on the Hernelake road. The little girl, whose age was seven years, was playing in the house with her twin brother, when he, in the wantonness of sport, seized a gun and fired at her, seventeen buckshot taking effect in her throat. She immediately ran toward the door, where meeting her mother she exclaimed, "Brother didn't go to do it!" and died almost instantly.

Obituaries:

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

MRS. MIXSON.

At a meeting of the O. K. A. Society held on Tuesday, Dec. 6, 1859, to pay a tribute to the memory of a deceased honorary member, Mrs. Mixson, H. C. Stone, J. M. Brown, and J. L. Garrett were appointed a committee to draft resolutions, as follows:

Whereas it has pleased an all wise Providence to take from us Mrs. Mixson, a most amiable lady, and a bright ornament as well to our society as to the community in which she lived;

Resolved 1st. That though we humbly submit to the decree of a merciful Father, we deeply feel our affliction in the loss of so worthy an honorary member; yet "we sorrow not as those without hope," because she left the indubitable evidence that she has passed into a more glorious state of existence.

Resolved 2d. That we do deeply sympathize with her bereaved husband and relatives in their distressing affliction, and as a token of our sorrow and sympathy, we wear our usual badge of mourning for fifteen days.

JNO. M. BROWN,
J. L. BARNETT,
H. C. STONE,
} Committee.

MRS. NANCY HOUSTON, wife of E. Houston, formerly Nancy Overstreet, died in Kemper county, Miss., Dec. 16, 1859, fifty-five years, two months and nine days old. Professed religion and joined the M. E. Church when 18 or 19 years old. Married July 20, 1825. Moved from Greene county to Sumter county, Alabama, where she lived eleven years, and no doubt the old members at Livingston will recollect their effort in building up the church. She, with her husband, moved to Kemper county near seventeen years ago, and the preachers that have traveled Dekalb circuit remember the kind reception they always met with at Brother and Sister Houston's. And at New Hope, (her church) or Camp-meeting, or protracted meeting, she seemed to be in her element. How precious was the privileges of visiting and praying with such a one, while lingering for near four months on the bed of death. And remember her holy life and Godly walk, and her earnest entreaties and advice to her children to live religious and meet her in heaven. Well may we say with the Psalmist: "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

In the graveyard at New Hope we placed her remains, read the precious promises in the burial services, said our prayers, and bid our dead a long farewell till we meet in glory.

B. HOLMES.

JOHN WESLEY McCALL, son of Daniel and Mary McCall, died Dec. 15, 1859, in Louisville, Barbour county, Ala., aged twenty-seven years, seven months and five days. He was born May 10, 1832, within a few hundred yards of the place where he died, of consumption.

During the incipiency of his illness, he took a considerable tour through the South-western States. His death was peaceful and hopeful. He bore his sufferings with becoming patience and Christian fortitude. As he belonged to a military company styled "Louisville Blues," he was therefore buried with military honors.

A. D.

Dale county, Ala., Dec. 24, 1859.

Judge BENJAMIN G. GREER, was born in Green county, Georgia, Oct: 23, 1804, and died at his residence in Columbia county, Ark., Dec. 8, 1859.

At an early age he found the "pearl of great price," and attached himself to the M. E. Church, of which he lived a faithful member until death. He was one of the best of men, a high-toned gentleman, a kind neighbor, a public-spirited citizen, a tender and affectionate husband and father, a forbearing master, and a devoted Christian. For the last twenty years he was a child of affliction, a victim of cancer. Yet he bore his affliction with great patience and resignation. God sustained him till the last, when he expired without a groan or a struggle.

J. TURRENTINE.

Camden, Ark., Dec. 24, 1859.

Resolutions adopted by the Fourth Quarterly Conference, North Warren Circuit, Mississippi Conference:

Whereas, in the Providence of God, Bro. RICHD. FEATHERSTONE, many years an exhorter in the church and member of our body, having been during the past year called from among us,

Resolved 1st. That in the death of Bro. Featherstone the church has lost a pious member, and when in health a useful exhorter, and our Conference an efficient and wise counsellor.

Resolved 2d. That we, as the representatives of the church within the limits of this circuit, do deeply sympathize with his afflicted widow and family.

WALTER BILLINGSLEA, Sec. LEVI PEARCE, Chairman.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

C. T. MURPHY, Durant, Mi. — W. SYKES, New Orleans La. — E. CONLY, Middleton, Mi.

MURPHY, SIKES & CO., COTTON FACTORS and General Commission Merchants,
No. 42 Union street, New Orleans.
jy20-6m

W. A. BROADWELL. — A. F. HAYNES.

BROADWELL & HAYNES,
(Formerly BROADWELL & PAYNE)
COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
No. 40 UNION STREET, N. O.

HAVING RETIRED FROM BUSINESS, I TAKE PLEASURE IN soliciting for my former Partners, BROADWELL & HAYNES, the patronage and consignance of my friends, believing their experience, capacity and means, will merit its continuance, and enable them to give general satisfaction. [jy1]
M. U. PAYNE.

W. R. STUART, New Orleans. — DR. D. A. JAMES, Madison Parish, La.

STUART & JAMES,
No. 42 Union street, New Orleans,
HAVE ASSOCIATED THEMSELVES TOGETHER for the purpose of conducting a COTTON FACTORAGE and GENERAL COMMISSION BUSINESS; are prepared to make the usual Advances to planters, in the way of supplies, etc., and respectfully solicit patronage

B. M. LOWE & CO., COTTON FACTORS AND General Commission Merchants;
No. 97 GRAVIER STREET, New Orleans.
ap6

MR HUGH LUCAS HAVING BECOME A PARTner in our house, from this date, we beg leave to call your attention to our increased facilities to fill all orders, from our large and well-selected Stock of BRICKELLS, PRODUCE, WINES, LIQUORS, etc., etc. We remain, your obedient servants
COOPER & NEIBERT,
New Orleans, Dec. 1st, 1858. 27 and 29 Common st.

W. COOPER. — J. O. NEIBERT. — H. LUCAS.

COOPER & NEIBERT, WHOLESALE GROCERS,
Nos. 27 and 29 Common street, New Orleans.

PILCHER, GOODRICH & CO.,
COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS and Commission Merchants, No. 47 Carondelet, corner Union street, New Orleans. jy11-1y

A. H. May & Co.,
COTTON FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION Merchants, No 94 Gravier street New Orleans. au21y

J. D. PAYNE. — J. P. HARRISON.
D. W. RUTHERFORD. — WM. H. DAMARON

Payne & Harrison,
COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 51 Union street, New Orleans.
dec7-1y

H. L. WALKER, New Orleans. — RUFT. H. DUTCHINSON, Caddo Parish, La.

Walker & Hutchinson,
COTTON FACTORS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 37 Carondelet street, New Orleans. je28

J. BOYD & Co.,
Cotton Factors, Receiving & Forwarding Merchants,
No 4 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.
apr 17-1y

EDWARD FASH. — P. H. LAURENS.

LEONARD FASH & Co.,
COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
And Dealers in Western Produce,
61 MAGAZINE STREET,
Oct 24. NEW ORLEANS

LAND, SALTER & CO.,
(Successors to LANE, MAFFIELD & CO.)
COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 76 St. Charles street, New Orleans. jy5-1y

JOHN P. WYCHE & Co.,
COTTON FACTORS and COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No 110 Common street, New Orleans. my2-1y

EDUCATIONAL.

A CARD.

TO PARENTS, MERCHANTS, ETC.

Who wish to give their Sons or Clerks a Practical Business Education, in the shortest possible time, and young gentlemen whose time is important.

DOLBEAR
COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
OF THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS,
Founded in 1832—Chartered by the Legislature of Louisiana, with Agricultural and Mechanical Departments.
Capital Stock $250,000,
Is removed and reopened in the new and spacious Iron Edifice known as
STORY BUILDING,
CORNER OF CAMP AND COMMON STREETS,
Entrance on both streets,
OPEN DAY AND EVENING.

N. B.—There are apartments and Professors for Book Keeping, Penmanship, Mathematics, French, Spanish, German, English, etc., so as to save the time of business men.

Persons from 12 to 60 years old and to any branch they wish, and will be perfect as they wish to be. There are probably not less than 50 to 100 as former students in Banks and business Houses in this city. The following are some of the Cashiers and Book-keepers: Commission and Shipping Merchants, Steamboat Clerks, etc., can learn IN A FEW DAYS to Keep their books correctly, or write a fine, handsome hand.—Catalogues, with Terms, Opinions of the Press, the leading men of the nation, etc., sent to all who may desire them. Due to the only Chartered Commercial College in the South-west, and the oldest in the United States, and has stood the test more than a quarter of a century on its own merits alone.

Board can be had with the Professors or other good families speaking English, French, Spanish or German, from $4 to $6 per week.

N. B.—To prevent mistakes of impositions Students intended for this College should bring the Advertisement as Special Directions, as there are every winter temporary rooms open for a few months, all of course looking WONDERFUL PROFESSIONS and PROMISES, and picking flaming placards to enlighten the people of New Orleans and of the South! Citizens and strangers are invited to visit the College and judge for THEMSELVES.

Stock,—If asked is expected, the citizens in favor of Southern practical, subscribe as liberally to this noble institution as they ever have to distant ones, the Agricultural and Mechanical Departments will be at once put in operations, and the whole placed on a firm basis, in stand for ages as a permanent institution of the South, and under the direction of the Stockholders themselves and the Trustees appointed by the Legislature. The Charter is perpetual. RUFUS DOLBEAR, President.
oc19

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
Corner of Camp and Common Streets,
ENTRANCE NO. 81 COMMON STREET.
[Established in 1856.]

OPEN DAY AND EVENING THE ENTIRE YEAR.

A full course of instruction in this institution embraces Double Entry Book-keeping, Commercial Calculation, Commercial Law, and Penmanship. Gentlemen can enter for the full course, or any branch they desire, and at any time, as there is no class system, no copying from books, and no memorizing of arbitrary rules.

FACULTY:

GEO. SOULE, M.A., Principal and Professor of the Theory and Practice of Double Entry Book-keeping, Lecturer on the Science of Accounts, Exchange, Commercial Correspondence, etc., etc.
W. J. KENNON, Practical Accountant, Associate Professor in Book-keeping Department.
J. M. BURKHAMMER, Esq., Lecturer on Commercial Law.
H. C. SPENCER, Professor of Plain, Ornamental, and Epistolary Penmanship.
GEO. SOULE, Teacher and Lecturer on Commercial Calculations.
J. R. ANDERSON, Esq., Special Lecturer on Exchange, Business Customs, Commercial Ethics, etc., etc.
LEON LAUGRIN, Professor of Languages.

This is the only Commercial School in the city where Double Entry Book-keeping is taught practically, and as practiced in the New Orleans business houses.

Each of our young gentlemen has his respective desk, and proceeds in the opening, conducting, and closing of books, under all the variety of circumstances that can possibly occur in the various departments of business.

Merchants, Book keepers, and young gentlemen wishing instruction are respectfully requested to call and examine our practical forms and peculiar manner of teaching.

For full pages containing full information, and Balance-sheet Circulars, the most magnificent work of the kind ever executed in the United States, address,
GEO. SOULE, New Orleans.

SAN ANTONIO FEMALE COLLEGE.

REV. JOS. CROSS, D.D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science and Belles Lettres.
MRS. JANE T. H. CROSS, S. L. G., Teacher of English branches, and French and Spanish Language.
REV. J. J. FABRICIUS-BRUNOW, Professor of German Language, Mathematics and Drawing.
MISS HANNAH M. ANDERSON, Preceptress of Preparatory Department.
MR. HENRY GROSSMAN, Teacher of Music.

TERMS,
per session of twenty weeks, payable half in advance, the remainder at the close of the session.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

First Class,	$10 00
Second Class,	15 00

COLLEGIATE DEPARTMENT.

Regular Course, (including Latin)	15 00
French, Spanish, German, or Italian,	10 00
Drawing,	10 00
Music	25 00
Use of instrument per practice,	5 00
Incidental Fee (charged to all),	1 00
Board per month, exclusive of washing,	15 00

Boarders are requested to bring their own pillow cases and towels.

They will not be permitted to make bills at the stores, without express order of parents or guardians.

They will never go out without the company of a teacher, nor receive visits except in a teacher's presence.

The San Antonio Female College offers the best facilities for the education of young ladies. The institution has been commenced on a sure basis; the best men of the community are engaged in the enterprise, and ample accommodations will soon be provided in the way of buildings. The course of instruction is extensive and thorough, and all the teachers are well qualified for their work. Its and Mrs. Cross had large experience, and been connected with some of the best institutions in the United States. Prof. Fabricius-Brunow is a native German, of extensive scholastic acquirements, with polished manners and pleasing address. Miss Anderson enjoys a well-earned reputation as an instructress, who, in courtesy, industry and fidelity, has seldom been surpassed. Mr. Grossman is a German musician of high character, an excellent performer, and a most skillful and successful teacher. Other assistants will be employed, as the number and advancement of pupils shall require. dec21-3m

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE, HUNTSVILLE, North Alabama.

REV. A. R. ERWIN, D. D., Principal.

This Establishment offers the following inducements to Southern patronage.

1. Huntsville is the nearest mountain location to the South and Southwest; and is proverbially healthful. The social elegance and beautiful scenery to be found here, are great auxiliaries in the formation of character.

2. The edifice is large and elegant—supplied with gas-light; and water in the greatest abundance by pipes, from a mountain Spring in the town. It is 164 by 52 feet, three stories high, and well furnished.

3. The domestic arrangements are such as to secure not only comfort, but the social and domestic training of the pupils. Frugality, politeness and grace, as well as the virtues of the heart, are assiduously cultivated.

4. The facilities of instruction are unsurpassed. There are fifteen teachers and attaches, some of whom are distinguished educators. The large patronage, from among the best families of sons of the Southern States, attest the good-will of the institution.

5. Arrangements are made to accommodate Southern pupils during the summer Vacation, and to furnish them with such instructions in the extra branches as may be desired. Pupils received at any time.

Apply for a circular to REV. A. R. ERWIN, D.D.,
ap6 Huntsville, Alabama.

KENNER ACADEMY:

A Boarding and Day School, for Boys and Young Men.

VICTOR SCHELHA, PRINCIPAL.

THIS Institution is located in the town of Kenner, Jefferson Parish, La., ten miles from New Orleans by railroad, and sixteen miles by river. The location is extremely delightful and pleasant. The health of the place is unsurpassed during the whole year.

The course of study is thorough, embracing the English, French, Spanish, German, Latin, and Greek languages. Students can be prepared for any class in college, or for business pursuits.

The Academic Year is divided into Two Sessions of Five Months each, commencing on the First of October and March respectively. Scholars will be received at any time during the year; none for less time than one session.

For further particulars see circulars, or address Principal.

PROFESSIONAL.

JAS. J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Livingston, Alabama.
[jan24] ☞ Will Practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties.

DR. E. D. BEACH, HAVING RESUMED THE practice of Medicine, offers his Professional services to the citizens of New Orleans.

N. B.—Special attention paid to diseases of the RECTUM. PILES, FISTULA IN ANO, &c., &c. Fistula in ano permanently cured without the use of the knife, cautery, pain, or confinement whatever. Office No. 6, Baronne street near Canal. ap27.

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY AT LAW, BATON Rouge.
REFERENCES—Henderson & Gaines and Chinn & Bolton, New Orleans; W. S. Pike and A. Matta, Baton Rouge.

B. D. & A. W. ROBERTS, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW,
Floyd, Carroll Parish,
ja19 Louisiana.

J. O. FUQUA. — J. G. KILBOURNE.

FUQUA & KILBOURNE,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
CLINTON, LOUISIANA,
PRACTICE in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana, East Baton Rouge and St. Helena, and in the Supreme Court at New Orleans.
References—Payne & Harrison; Byrne, Vance & Co., Broadwell & Payne; Pritchard & Flower; Pike, Nalle & Co.; Rev. H. N. McTyeire, New Orleans. mar 26 1y

P. H. WILLARD,
Coal Merchant,
18 EXCHANGE PLACE, (OPPOSITE THE POST OFFICE.)
THOSE desirous of purchasing Coal or Wood, can be supplied at short notice at the—CITY COAL OFFICE, where is constantly kept on hand Pittsburgh, English, and Canal, Anthracite and Lower Olde Coal. Families, Hotels, Cotton Presses Steamers, &c., &c., supplied at the lowest market prices. n22-1y

WATKINS & HOMAN, IMPORTERS AND DEALERS in CARPETINGS, OIL CLOTHS, WINDOW SHADES, CORnices, and Curtain Materials, No. 30 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.

THE BROOKS HOUSE, 155 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS, next door to Odd Fellows' Hall, fronting Lafayette Square. A delightful situation for boarders; convenient for travelers; every accommodation; as good a table as the city affords. [m16

R. A. STEWART'S NEW PROCESS FOR DEfecating and Clarifying Cane-Juice, Syrup, Molasses and Saccharine matter

Planters wishing to use this Process can obtain the right to do so by calling on or addressing STUART & JAMES, No. 42 Union St., New Orleans, where samples of the Sugar may be seen.
R. A. STEWART.

DR. WRIGHT'S CELEBRATED REJUVENATING Elixir.—Prepared on the strictest Pharmaceutical principles, by one of the ablest chemists of the age.
FOR THE CURE of General Debility, Mental and Physical Depression, Imbecility, Determination of Blood in the Head, Confused Ideas, Hysteria, General Irritability, Restlessness and Sleeplessness at Night, Absence of Muscular Efficiency, Loss of Appetite, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, Low Spirits, Disorganization of the Organs of Generation, Palpitation of the Heart, and in fact, all the concomitants of a Nervous and Debilitated state of the System, take

The Rejuvenating Elixir,

And you will soon find yourself a new man—a pride instead of the reverse to your friends, and a healthy, sound, and worthy member of the whole human family. For sale, by the Proprietors,

J. WRIGHT, & Co., 21 and 151 Chartres st., New Orleans.

And by Druggists generally throughout the United States.

Children.

TRUTH OMNIPOTENT.—We give to our readers and the public generally the following copy of a letter received by us from J. W. Vesey, Esq., of the Aberdeen Conservative, enclosing at the same time a communication to that paper from Colonel Vasser, of North Mississippi, and who was formerly associate editor of the Conservative. The subject of the letter and communication we do not feel it necessary to comment on—they tell the whole story, one that ought to go home to those in whose hands the rising generation of children are placed for nurture and for care. All we ask of our readers is a careful perusal of the documents.

CONSERVATIVE OFFICE,
Aberdeen, Miss., August 23d, 1858.

Messrs. Wright & Co.—As any testimonial in reference to your preparations may prove beneficial to you, I enclose the following, published at my request, in the "Conservative" of the 21st inst.

Col. Vasser was formerly associate editor of the Conservative, and is well known in North Mississippi, as a gentleman of intelligence and strict integrity. Respectfully, J. W. VESEY.

[For the Conservative.]

Communicated.

ABERDEEN, Aug. 19th, 1858.

DEAR VESEY: Upon the principles of justice and humanity, I am induced to ask your permission to insert the communication in your paper, believing, as I do, that it may be the means of preventing unlimited sorrow to many a happy household.

On Friday last, having been for several days previous absent from my family, I found, on my return home, that my infant, a

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH----C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 3. WHOLE NUMBER 490.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1860.

$2 50 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE OFFICE—115 CAMP ST

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate

UNSECTIONAL CULTURE.

The Sunday Delta—Unsectional Literature—Northern Religious Literature the great Bane—Communication of Rev. R. Abbey—Southern Methodist Publishing House.

Very much has been written of late years about a "Southern literature," as though literature could be meted and bounded by lines of latitude and longitude. Southern literature means, when properly understood, an unsectional literature—a literature that is not anti-South; just as Southern rights are not rights of a sectional character, but simply the rights guaranteed by the common constitution of the country. The whole country has heretofore been under the influence of a sectional literature, and, to a large extent, of a sectional education. The object of all broad-minded and patriotic men should be to unsectionalize American literature and education, by repudiating what is sectional in Northern books and schools—and they are nearly all sectional—and by building up Southern Publishing houses and Southern schools, which are not sectional. Southernism, so-called, is simply true Americanism, as understood and maintained by our revolutionary sires. We heartily endorse the following from that elegant and able paper, the Sunday Delta. Under the head of "Southern, not Sectional Education," that paper says:

Mr. Jefferson, in the latter part of his life, became fully aware of the sectional tendency of the education at the collegiate institutions of the North. In a letter to Mr. Breckenridge he said:

"If, as has been estimated, we send three hundred thousand dollars a year to Northern seminaries for the instructions of our sons, then we must have there five hundred of our sons imbibing opinions and principles in discord with those of their own country. The canker is eating the vitals of our existence, and if not arrested at once, will be beyond remedy. We are now certainly furbishing recruits to their schools."

Then, as now, many of the students who matriculate and graduate in Northern universities, might be regarded as cadets enlisted for a war against the South. But that expedient for organizing an anti-slavery army was not enough. Southern schools as well as Northern were supplied with books which converted them into engines of attack upon Southern institutions. In the pictorial child-books, the sentimental class readers, and the "higher law" text-books of Hiccok and Wayland on moral science, the great sin of slavery, and the bounden duty of every American to wipe its stains from the country, were persistently and plausibly inculcated, without any antidote or corrective but what might exist in the natural good sense and sound logic of the pupils themselves. Our schools are not yet thoroughly purged of this "pernicious stuff." It was only a year or two since that Wayland was found to be a text-book in some of our first colleges in the South; and an able writer in another part of this paper, shows the insidious matter which is contained in the leading school histories now used in the South.

The writer to whom we refer quotes passages from the histories of Wilson, Willard, and Goodrich, denunciatory of the African slave trade and slavery, and consequently reflecting upon the moral status of the South. He also alluded to their objectionableness on the score of systematic partiality for Northern statesmen, States and cities. No intelligent Southern patriot will deny the validity of these objections; but if he has kept up with the political reading of the day, the official documents of the Federal government, etc., he must also see that a vast amount of printed matter freely circulates in the South, which conveys quite as much poisonous sentiment and incendiary suggestion as the histories in question convey. Mr. Everett makes a Union speech in Boston, in which he condemns the ultraism of the John Brown Republicans on various grounds, prominent among which is the opinion that it has embarrassed the laudable endeavors of conservative philanthropists to affect the gradual abolition of slavery in the South. This speech is republished by Southern journals, and with comments which for the most part are couched in terms of unqualified approbation. Mr. Fillmore writes a letter to the Union meeting in New York, and in it makes the notable declaration that "we are all anti-slavery in sentiment at the North." This letter, like Mr. Everett's speech, is triumphantly reproduced in the South as evidence of the trustworthy and steadfast character of Northern conservatism—a conservatism which, as interpreted by Mr. Fillmore, stigmatizes the whole people of the South as enjoying the fruits of crime in perpetuating a sinful institution, and which thus plainly points to a sectional morality that must prove the unfailing source of sectional politics. Nor is that all. A formidable portion of the President's message is an argument to prove the frightful immoralities of the slave trade, which applies with scarcely less force to the purchase of negroes brought from Virginia than to the purchase of Negroes imported from Africa. As far as national politics go, we would be scarcely justified in condemning these things. They result from a system of hostile opinion and legislation against the South, to which individuals are compelled in a measure to yield obedience. To break down the system is the true work before the South, and she can never live in peace and safety until that is done.

In the meantime, as respects school books, colleges, etc., for the South, we do not demand that they shall be Southern in any sectional sense. They have already, as we have seen, been sectional in an anti-Southern sense. What we want is simply that they shall not be sectional in any sense. The highest order of education, of literature, of art, of philosophy, is cosmopolitan, and pertains to universal truth and to all time.

But we are constrained to believe that our brethren of the secular press have not emphasized, as much as is demanded, the danger to the South of the religious literature with which the North attempts to supply us. Our Sunday Schools all over the land are sought for by the agents of northern concerns as profitable markets for the flood of Sunday School literature which they are pouring from their presses. And so with their religious literature generally. The ministers of the Gospel of the different Churches are offered heavy profits to engage in the sale of their religious books. The depositories, and other agencies for the distribution of religious literature, belonging to Southern Churches, are tempted in the same way. And, in too many instances, we are sorry to say, the temptation is successful. We trust our brethren of the secular press are aware that the sectional religious literature of the North is more dangerous to a sound and healthful public sentiment than anything else. Abolitionism was not dangerous until it became a religious fanaticism.

In this connection we wish to call attention to the efforts now being made to furnish the South with an unsectional religious literature. Although it may seem somewhat selfish to thus bring forward our own Publishing House, yet we are as much opposed to sectarianism as we are to sectionalism. We pledge ourselves to give the whole power of our press to the cause of Southern independence in religious literature, as represented by any of the Churches. Let all the Churches of the South have their own publishing houses. We promise them a hearty support. We call attention to the following communication from Rev. R. Abbey, Financial Secretary of the Southern Methodist Publishing House at Nashville. Under the head of "Unstained Literature for the South," he says:

Nations are controlled not by legislation, not by courts and judicial decisions, but by influences more common, popular and diffusive. It was wisely said by one, "Let me make the songs of a nation, and you may makn the laws." And with still greater force it may be said, Let me manage the literature of a people, and you may manage the government.

The North has heretofore managed our literature, and, to a considerable extent, is doing so to this day, and the consequence is, that our very schools and colleges, our Sunday schools, our fire-sides, centre-tables and libraries, all over our country, are, to an alarming extent, stained, vitiated, corrupted, with doctrines as pestiferous in general society as they are false, unscriptural and heretical in the church.

We must publish our own moral and religious books in the South. It has become a necessity. Nor is it less a political than a moral and religious necessity. The South learns slowly. It would seem that the frequent repetition of some lessons from that quarter, and the recent introduction of some new ones, ought to cause us to look around and study, at least, the doctrine of self-protection.

The experiment of manufacturing and publishing books in the South, on a large scale, has been fairly and successfully tried. The Southern Methodist Publishing House at Nashville, Tenn., recently organized, is in healthful operation, and issues near two hundred thousand dollars' worth of good wholesome, moral and religious literature in the year. Many of these works are from Southern authors, and range through the entire field almost of moral, scientific and religious instruction; while at the same time they include a general range of standard reading. These books are published and sold at prices, take the catalogue through which will compare favorably with those of any publishing house in the United States. The enterprise has been thoroughly and fairly tested in every way, and is unmistakably successful.

The difficulty and the only difficulty in the way of this enterprise is this: we have introduced and are consummating a system of Book and Tract Depositories in our several annual Conferences, building up each of these with a local capital procured in those places, of about $50,000. The organization of these Depositories and other agencies on foot are waking up and producing a demand for books very far beyond our means of supply. Our present capital is about $300,000, but this is mostly in real estate, machinery, printing materials, etc.; so that we find our means very inadequate to the demand for sound Southern literature pouring in daily upon us, and rapidly increasing.

We appeal, in the name of truth, justice and correct principles, to the whole South for help.

We want and greatly need an enlarged capital, at least equal to any house in the North, to enable us to supply this great country, as far as may be, with a wholesome reading. And we call upon the friends of southern rights and southern morals to help us in this great emergency.

The Southern Methodist Publishing House, as is well known, is the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. No individual person has, nor ever can have, any private interest in it. It is not intended to make money. That is to say, all its profits are faithfully merged in its business so as to cheapen the price of its books, the only design of the institution being to supply the South with wholesome literature.

Our House is the first and only attempt ever made on anything like a national scale, to free the South from its long endured literary dependence upon the North. It promises a high career of usefulness, and deserves well at the hands—and the purses—of southern philanthropists, and of all good men. Thousands of noble hearted southerners have already aided us, and we now appeal to the whole country, largely and liberally, for hundreds and thousands. And of men of smaller means we ask for smaller sums. We are a large and noble charity, and we confidently appear in behalf of our country, its true morals and its uncorrupted religion.

The labors of our church in a few of its annual conferences, in the past year, have resulted prospectively in increasing our capital very handsomely; only a small portion of this, however, has, as yet, been realized. It will be coming in in annual payments.

Appeal is now most respectfully made, directly, to the men of money and liberality, in these times of general prosperity, and we ask you to correspond with our General Book Agent, the Rev. J. B. McFerrin, D.D., at Nashville, Tenn., or with any of our regular travelling ministry. We hope the response from every one reading this circular, or meeting it in the public prints, will be wise, liberal and patriotic. We confidently intimate that we will look for a remittance in cash or note or draft on time, as may meet your convenience.

We promise in each case to make the donor a suitable acknowledgment, and furnish him a proper memento of his philanthropy.

R. Abbey, Fin. Sec'y,
South Meth. Publishing House.

Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 15, 1859.

☞ All newspapers friendly to southern enterprise and southern morals, will oblige us by giving this an insertion, and by calling attention to it.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

LETTERS FROM TEXAS.—No. VII.

Night was closing around us. We were within hearing of the gurgling waters of Peach Creek, but Peach Creek itself was beyond my geographical knowledge; I could not have told where it rose, where it ran, nor where it emptied; and had I been presiding in the school room at the time, and had one of the little scholars been so impertinent as to propose these questions to me, my only resource would have been to wrap myself in a mantle of dignity, and bid her "go to her seat and examine her map." Even now, I am in some doubt as to its whereabouts. I have a kind of indefinite idea that it bursts forth into the light among some small elevations, in Hastrop or Fayette county, that are marked upon the map as mountains, and that after wandering awhile, like a wayward child, through the prairie, sinks with sleepy murmurings into the bosom of the Colorado. All that I knew certainly, however, was that we were going Westward, on a journey that might have done honor to the ages of knight-errantry, that here was a creek before us, the waters running one way or the other, that this creek had to be crossed, and that the poetic hour of twilight was growing to be rather an inconvenience. Groping along we came to a high, rough bridge, quite substantial enough to bear us across; in fact, though in fancy I made several deadly plunges into this same Peach Creek of whose rise and course I knew nothing—it was, indeed, like being buried in the waters of oblivion. Safe across, we pursued our way, amidst increasing darkness until we came to a two story house on the road-side, and this we recognized to be the place which had been recommended to us as lodging for the night. Alighting at the gate, we walked toward the house, accompanied by the owner of the mansion. I had a strange half uncomfortable feeling; in the darkness, all looked wild to me, but the odor of blossoms from the Mexican vine that hung like a verdant veil before the gallery, re-assured me—surely, no ungentle spirits can be enveloped in this fragrance!

I took my seat on the gallery and talked to the gentleman of the house, without seeing his face until supper was announced. As we were talking, I was wondering all the time how he would look when the lights came. When they did come, I saw a face strongly marked and full of energy, indicating a character fitted to grapple with the difficulties of a new country, a character that dwells in the regions of the real rather than the ideal. He gave me quite an imposing idea of the Mexican commerce with San Antonio; told me that a merchant of San Antonio would sometimes sell fifty thousand dollars' worth of goods in a day to one Mexican company, and spoke of mules coming through the streets laden with gold, until I began to dream the dreams of the old Spaniards over again—El Dorado was shining before my eyes, and all the sheep of Western Texas were glittering with golden fleece!

But the old gentleman declared that if Mexico belonged to the United States, of all places Monterey was the most desirable—a large city, spread over a fertile plain, with a delicious climate, and fruits as delicious.—The description rather took my own fancy, I confess, and the delicately flavored oranges brought from there, which I have since tasted, have in no wise diminished the agreeable impression. It is wonderful to think how these delightful places in Mexico quicken our sensibilities for this distracted and suffering people; and how, through all our reasonings, our minds are constantly brought to the same conclusion, namely, that nothing can be done for them until the American eagle takes them under the shelter of his wing, eagle-fashion. Not that you and I, Mr. Editor, ever think such things, but other people.

The next morning the wooden bench which we had occupied at the table the evening before, was replaced by chairs with skin bottoms; and this I took as a special compliment to ourselves, they judging of our respectability or "gigmanity," as Carlyle has it, from the clock ponies and tasteful buggy of Dr Wilkes'—as is the world disposed upon! We had a fried steak of wild turkey for breakfast, and no prince need wish any thing better than a turkey steak.

Another day's travel over the beautiful prairies, in the midst of which Gonzales suddenly arose before us.—Its cupolas and several large buildings burst upon you with a rather startling effect. You have been riding over sparsely populated plains, until you begin to feel symptoms of growing heroic and philosophical; in the fullness of your heart you exclaim, "Welcome, ye plains—ye wide-spread solitudes!" when lo! the town springs up as by enchantment, and you cry: "How beautiful!" After all, the works of man are not despicable, and the old gregarious feeling will come over us.

As we drove into Gonzales, we saw two large stone buildings, and heard the tinkling of a bell, when we immediately perceived, through the open windows of the buildings, rows of girls and boys moving forward to their classes; and one student I saw sitting alone at his desk—sitting, sad studying—was it alone the lore of his book he learned, or was that young heart dreaming of bliss that will never come, of honors whose green branches wave beckoning, like the phantom-trees of the desert? "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth!"

You remember it was at Gonzales that the famous quarrel took place, about the commencement of the Texan Revolution, about the cannon which the Mexican commandant at San Antonio said he had lent to the people, and which they insisted was given; and when he sent for it, you remember they proved how well they could use it, by turning it upon his troops. The commandant was satisfied with the answer, and with true Spanish courtesy, withdrew his claim.

Jane T. H. Cross.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

METHODISM IN LOUISIANA.

The Louisiana Conference has recently closed its thirteenth annual session in Franklin. It was favored with the vigorous and paternal presidency of Bishop Andrew. A judicious and brotherly spirit constantly prevailed, notwithstanding an infirmity of oratorical show from Young America. The progress of the past year, and the accession of a considerable number of ministers, chiefly by transfer, diffused a pleasing feeling of encouragement and hope. Geniality is a striking element in the character of every true-souled Methodist minister, and among these beloved brethren it was our privilege generally to discover its high development. We pity the man whose family, circumstances, or talents, are permitted to encase him in frost-work. He is morally degraded from the lofty position of the true minister, as the man of every social rank, and by erecting a false standard of elevation inflicts incalculable injury upon himself. The ministry of Christ is an embroidered network of wisdom and love to unite all men.

The mission of the Methodist ministry is to spread the knowledge of Christ through the entire population of Louisiana. Protestants, Roman Catholics, and all those living without religious forms, whether bond or free, are entitled to the services of their divine commission, and affectingly wait on the margin of both worlds for the earnest discharge of these saving duties. That the extension of the experimental and practical religion of Jesus is the most sublime philanthropy may not be questioned, and to this "labor of love" the Methodist ministers profess to address themselves in three comprehensive forms:

Public Teaching.—This includes the diligent dispensation of the word at each place and time that a company of people are assembled to hear. No considerations but those of the gravest character will induce a faithful man to decline this duty. From his lips will never be heard the hireling's sentence, "I have not sufficient time for preparation." He who knows his sufficiency to be of God, will not need profitable discourse for those who long to hear, and as he has given his reputation to the care of Christ, will not be deterred by the fear of losing intellectual status from crying in every open door, "Behold the Lamb!" Sermons of rich theological and practical vein, in simple arrangement, and conveyed in sound speech that cannot be condemned, should be diligently sought at the shrines of knowledge and prayer. If we depend chiefly on the former, the cold movement of the intellect that results, will not be an evangelical sermon, but a counterfeit; and this "prepared incense" will be worse than valueless in our sanctuaries, until it kindles with the spiritual flames of effectual prayer and zealous love. Addresses of a merely intellectual character, though ingeniously elaborated, will glance like headless arrows from the walls of that proud church that yet ignores in Louisiana faith only in Christ's redeeming blood; they will make no impression on the masses, and will turn aside the holy aspirations of the servants of God into the multiplications of merely human agencies.

"We will give ourselves continually to prayer and the ministry of the word." "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." "Meditate on these things; give thyself wholly to them." "I charge thee before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and dead at his appearing and his kingdom, preach the word; be instant in season and out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine,"—is a collation of passages that shine with steady light on the heart of every itinerant called and led by the Holy Ghost. Plantations, merchandize, wealth, and ease, are impertinences to his separated soul, determined to know nothing save Christ and him crucified.

Public teaching includes a constant attendance on prayer and class-meetings, for the purposes of intercession, exhortation, and affording aid to penitents and all who are thirsting for full salvation. A very sacred responsibility of a Methodist minister to his people is a regular appearance in their experience meetings, that by mutual faith they may be comforted together. Ministers stationed in large cities should invariably follow the example of Richard Watson, who, when performing the onerous duties of Secretary of the Wesleyan missions in the city of London, engaged in the cares of authorship and visiting the pulpits and platforms of various denominations, conscientiously attended the exercises of a class in the vicinity of his residence. Let all our ministers know that the perilous example of neglecting these meetings will end in their dissolution. It has been finely observed, "the peculiarities of Methodism are its strength." Are they fallen into disuse? "The glory is departed!" We trust the Louisiana brethren will follow the action of the Tennessee Conference, and present the question to every minister, at the annual examination of his character, "Have you attended the weekly classes, and provided for their stated meeting by the appointment of suitable leaders?"

Pastoral Visitation.—In the infant condition of our work in this old State, where religious views inimical to the simplicity of Christ have taken deep root, a large amount of guilt is incurred by the neglect of this arm of our holy warfare. By it many opportunities of removing the prejudices of those who ignorantly oppose the truth will be secured, the doctrines we teach will appear in a less repulsive light amidst the amenities of the family circle; their attraction will be felt, and encouraging instances of attendance on the public ministry, and of the faith that cometh by hearing, will follow. A minister not endued with power from on high to perform systematic pastoral visitation, and indifferent to it, creates a fearful chasm in this part of our service. In certain duties he desires to be in front, but quickly retires behind our aggressive ranks, and hangs as a weight upon the skirts of a visiting church. (Matt. xxv, 35 and 36.) As he shows incompetency for the regular pastorate, the controlling power should provide for him a more secular position in connection with some institution.—Methodism, struggling to form a holy and peculiar people in a population like ours, cannot afford to retain such a man in the pastoral office.

J. H. Bova.

[To be concluded in another paper.]

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HORRIBLE CRIMES.

The Boletin del Ejercito, which is published in Sayuta, Mexico, contains the following: "As ocular witnesses, we know the following frightful history, which ought to be registered in our most celebrated annals of crime. In an emergency the Senor General Pueblita, in the town of Ago, within the last month, imposed a forced loan which touched the curate to a certain amount. He seemed to consent to the payment; but as the money was not forthcoming at the place designated, General Pueblita commanded that it should be required of the debtor. As no response came to the repeated calls that were made at the door of his rural house, they were ordered to force the lock, and enter the dwelling. This was done, but no one was found within. The commissioned party were just about to leave when they heard a frightful voice, which came from underground, saying, 'I am hungry.' The official charged with the business reported this incident to General Pueblita, who named some reputable persons to investigate the cause of this strange voice. After a careful search of the house there was found a couch or low bench (un torimo) which covered a ladder that led to a subterranean apartment. In it the densest obscurity reigned, and there was only a small opening in the upper part. There were books, some pieces of furniture of ordinary use; and a woman who had been imprisoned for eighteen years! An account of this discovery was given to General Pueblita, and he went in person to the scene of these events. He commanded that the woman should be brought forth. The light of the sun, the presence of many witnesses, etc., filled her with a dismay from which it was difficult to disembarrass her. A thousand questions were asked her, few of which she answered. She said that she had been eighteen years entombed in that cellar, without having come forth for a single instant; that she was a married woman, and had sons of her husband, but was ignorant of the fate of all her family; that in her long captivity she had sons of the curate, but neither did she know of them, and that throughout the place an unbroken silence had reigned. While this was taking place, a sergeant of the Pueblita brigade, calling up his recollections, became agitated, having recognized, in this disfigured woman, his mother, who embraced her son with profound emotion. The son flew in search of his father, who was re-united anew to his wife. It is now fifteen years since he suffered three years in the Presidio for the murder of this woman!

"We denounce to the public these horrible clerical crimes, in order that it may form the opinion which it should of their authors; and to the authorities, in order that they may institute a suitable investigation, and that those who have committed such horrible crimes may be punished as they deserve. We promise to our readers to give them such intelligence upon this subject as we may hereafter learn.—Translated from the Spanish of "El Jaque," a paper published in Matamoras, Mexico, by Mrs. Jane T. H. Cross.

Gen. Pueblita.—The El Liberal of S. Luis announces that this strenuous defender of the popular cause has been assassinated by a friar. We dare say that the assassin is the same friar who was the principal actor in the disgraceful and tragical scene which, under the title of "Horrible Crimes, we have copied in another part of our paper.—Ibid.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

LETTER FROM MR. SMITHSON

TO THE MINISTERS OF THE METHODIST E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

Dear Brethren: The lot which I have long since desired to buy, upon which to build our Metropolitan Church, is to be sold at public auction on the 15th February next, and I have every reason to believe it may be purchased on very reasonable terms, as the sale will be positively enforced.

Now, brethren, I want to buy this lot—it is prominently and beautifully situated; but the question arises, how shall I do it?

Well, I will tell you. Let each preacher belonging to our church, in all the conferences, send me, at least $5, by the 10th of February, and I will send them (a number of preachers have already a number of copies on hand), free of postage, three copies of my book, "The Methodist Pulpit South," which they may easily sell for $6, and thereby realize a profit of $1.

Brethren, if each one of you, or if the most of you, will promptly comply with this very small request, you will never regret it, but on the contrary, at some day, rejoice at it.

I am perfectly sure that if you could come here, and see for yourselves the great necessity for the erection of such a church as I have been trying so long and so hard to build here, to the honor of Southern Methodism, you would, without hesitation, and with great cheerfulness, give me $5 in behalf of the enterprize, before leaving the city. Nay, you would do more: you would go home and speak of the enterprize as one of great and vital importance to the whole Methodist E. Church, South; you would urge your friends and neighbors to contribute freely and liberally in behalf of the noble and glorious work. I know that there is chivalry, patriotism and liberality, among our people—the great Southern Methodist family—and I am confident that they will generously assist me in this matter.

To my lay brethren I would say that if any of you are disposed to take a part in this work, and will send me per mail $5, I will send you, postage free, three copies of my book.

I propose to publish in all of our church papers the names of all who participate in this work, who comply with my earnest request.

Brethren, shall I be successful, or shall I not? Shall the great Southern Methodist family be properly represented at the Metropolis of the Union, or shall our church be allowed to remain in comparative obscurity here at the Capital of the country? I am sure your answer will be promptly given in the affirmative.

Respond promptly to this call, and I promise not to make a similar demand upon you again.

William T. Smithson.

Washington, D.C.

SHAKSPEARE'S CHARACTERS.

We have long desired to see presented in brief and convenient form something like a photographic gallery of Shakspeare's leading characters. We are not unmindful of the difficulties of the task. Nor do we admire in general the work of the intensely characterizing critics and poets who undertake to enrobe down the men of history, or of epic and dramatic poetry, into a few elected phrases. Instead of being reduced to crystals of diamond hardness and brilliancy by this species of alchemy, the subjects usually evaporate, and there's nothing left but coke and ashes in the alchemical furnace. This is eminently true of Shakspeare's characters, which are hard to comprehend, and which defy formulas, for the same reason that human nature is a mystery before which positive science stands blind and voiceless. An exhaustive essay on any one of them is impossible, inasmuch as it would swell into an essay on humanity, which involves all philosophies, and admits of no measure this side of the infinite.

But all this does not forbid us to speculate about Shakspeare's men and women, just as we may speculate about nature's men and women. There they stand. Having eyes we can look of them, if not through them. Having sympathies and intuitions, we may look into them, too, and see them truly, in part at least, and "as through a glass darkly."

Many of them may justly be regarded as generalizations of race, of class, of profession, of age, of sex, etc.; but we have no idea that he studied philosophically to make them so. If in Hamlet, Macbeth, Shylock, and others, ethnological principles are more or less marked, it is because such ingredients exist in the heaving tide of human life every where, and Shakspeare used the stuff as he found it. And so of his other creations. His old men exhibit the philosophy of old age; his women the philosophy of womanhood; never as philosophy, but always as human nature, nothing more.

In Lear, for instance, we have the romance, the poetry, the tragedy of old age and fatherhood; in Desdemona we have the romance, the poetry, the tragedy of womanhood and wifehood. The mistake of youth is to look upon old age as passionless. Its dullness of the senses; its weariness of exterior and conventional life; its growing oblivion to the excitements, pursuits, and interests of the present, resulting from an experience by which such things have been tried and found wanting—these very naturally cause the young and superficial to conclude that it is lacking in sensibility and depth of feeling. No conclusion could be more untrue or more unjust. Shakspeare knew better when he drew the grand and terrific picture of Lear, where, as some one has remarked, "old age itself is made a character," and where the passion of the wronged old man vents itself in Titanic though frenzied bursts of wisdom and eloquence "before which the very foundations of society seem to quiver." The old love more intensely perhaps than the young; at least their desire to be loved is more intense; and how many, alas! when youth's fitful fever is past, wander spectrally, with a yearning, tarnished look, and die, perishing for want of the "one thing needful" to them on earth!

True craving of Lear for love was his central passion. Had it been blessed, his old age would have been truly green, and glorious, and beneficent. But baffled, betrayed, wronged, and contemned, it broke forth into volcanic torrents, and smoke, and thunder which told of the grandeur of his desolation. The two ungrateful daughters of Lear, were not more wicked in their treatment than shallow in their judgment of the magnanimous old King. They mistook the devices to which he resorted to show his affection and more keenly enjoy theirs for the mere whimseys of dotage. There is always more or less of solitude in supreme power; Lear would come down from his throne to feel more nearly the dearness and endearments of his children. It was the very luxury of love to which he would resign himself; and, alas! for all dreams of perfect bliss on earth, the things he took to his embrace were scorn and ingratitude. He cunningly constructed a road which he fancied would lead to a paradise, and by it he descended into a hell. It is not only in Lear that we see passionate old age misunderstanding youth, and selfish youth undiscerning and unjust to old age.

In this age of woman's rights propagandism, whose female apostles do not proclaim their doctrines with the bass voice of a melodramatic desperado, and with lips garnished with a moustache that would do credit to a hussar, only because physiology is stronger than theory—in such an age who shall be found worthy to speak of the fearful innocence, the awful mystery, the fathomless love of Desdemona? Uncomprehending, men and women look upon her. Only a faith divested of all dross of the understanding is fit to penetrate into the sanctuary of her womanhood and wifehood. The sublime strength of her womanly weakness, the majesty of her wifely obedience, are almost appalling. She is not a heroine, as we are used to find heroines in the fashionable novels of the day. Nor was He who died on Calvary a hero according to the fashion of that age, though kingdoms have risen and fallen at the whisper of his name, and men and angels still stand wondering and amazed in the contemplation of his history, thrilled, they know not how, with its irresistible truth and power.

To love and to be loved—and, oh! with what depth of devotion and resignation! That was the secret of Desdemona's existence, as far as words may express what is inexpressible in words. Unkindness might ——— —defeat her life

But never taint her love;

and when she is no longer loved, it is that which kills her, not the suffocating pillow in the hands of the Moor.

As H. N. Hudson said in one of his eloquent lectures on Shakspeare, several years ago, there is an indefinable religion about Desdemona, which places her character above criticism. "The truth is," we quote from the same writer:

"The truth is, what I inwardly know and feel respecting Desdemona can not, must not, shall not be uttered here, lest I should harden your hearts, and harden my own heart, by turning the "awful modesties of sorrow" into merchandise. It seems a thing which has been imparted to me in confidence; a secret between us which shall not be wrung from me; which I scarce dare utter even to myself; which it were a betrayal of the most sacred trust to divulge; which you have a right to learn from none but herself and which none but herself has a right to impart. I can only say, let him who would know what I have known, and feel what I have felt, respecting her, go to her himself, but go as a pupil, not as a critic; and if he does not entirely approve her course, let him be assured that he is not competent to judge her, and that he has much to learn from her, or from some one else like her, before he will be worthy to speak of her. But if, throughout her whole written history, from the first infatuation of the gentle, submissive daughter, to the last groan of the ever-loving, ever-confiding, ever-obedient broken-hearted wife, he has the gift to see that there is naught but beauty and dignity and holiness, then let him weep, weep, weep for her, or rather, weep for himself, that he is not more like her; so shall he depart from her presence "a sadder and a wiser man.—Sunday Delta.

WHO IS THE DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND.

The London correspondence of the Providence (Rhode Island) Post says: But there is one case to which I wish to ask your attention, because it is so little known, and that is the case of the Duchess of Sutherland, the great English friend and patron of Mrs. Stowe, the authoress of Uncle Tom's Cabin. The Duchess of Sutherland is, no doubt, a very fine lady, but one would suppose she must have a very short memory, or otherwise she would be the last person to say anything about the mysteries of American slavery, when she herself is living in splendor upon an income derived from one of the greatest pieces of oppression recorded in history, and that, too, of very recent date.

The Sutherland tribe or clan occupied a part of the Scotch Highlands, and covered the larger part of Sutherland county. The chief had the general control of the clan and its property, not as absolute owner, but as a sort of trustee for the tribe. Gradually they introduced the English practice of giving leases, and thus acquired the absolute property. After taking a lease, no tenant could dispute his landlord's title. And about the years 1811–1820, the Countess of Sutherland, heiress in her own right to these ancient chiefs, expelled from their homes and the homes of their fathers, 15,000 of her people. Some were driven to the sea-shores, large numbers emigrated to this country, and it was charged that in some cases the houses were even set fire to, in order to expel the poor families.

At any rate the villages were burnt, and the land was then divided into large farms, and has made a splendid estate and brought an immense income to the Countess of Sutherland. She married, in 1785, the Marquis of Stafford, who received this property with her, and in 1833 was created Duke of Sutherland. She died in 1839, and her son, the present Duke, inherited the property, and it is his wife who is the great philanthopist, and who is such an enemy to American slavery.

The expulsion of 15,000 people from the homes of their fathers excited so much feeling, even in aristocratic Europe, that the Countess's agent, Mr. Loch, published a work in justification of it. You will find a full account of it, if you wish to see it, in Sismondi's Political Economy. He condemns it in the strongest terms, and so must every one who understands the facts. And yet this lady forgets all these facts in the history of her own property, and is very forward in condemning what she thinks oppression in this country, and in patronizing and entertaining at her magnificent palace those who write against slavery here.

UNCLE SAM'S FARM.

The extent of this republic is nearly ten times as large as that of Great Britain and France united, three times as large as the whole of Britain, France, Austria, Prussia, Spain, Portugal, Belgium, Holland, and Denmark combined; one and a-half times as large as the Russian empire in Europe; only one-sixth less than the area covered by the fifty-nine or sixty empires, states, or republics of Europe.

Ten of our principal rivers have an aggregate length of 20,000 miles, or a length nearly sufficient to go two-thirds round the globe. Of these may be mentioned the Mississippi, 4,100 miles long; the Missouri, 3,600 miles long, or one hundred miles longer than the distance between New York and Liverpool. The Ohio is 600 miles longer than the Rhine. The five great lakes on our northern border cover an area of 90,000 square miles, their total length being 1,534 miles. Lake Superior alone, at its greatest length, is 355 miles, its greatest breadth 160, having an area of 32,000 square miles.

The magnitude of this country is further seen in its capacity for population. Its present population is at the ratio of eight individuals to the square mile. The population of England is about three hundred and forty to the square mile. Give to the United States the same ratio of population as that of England, and we should have a nation of 1,108,884,840—or, in other words, our population would be greater by nearly 109,000,000 than the highest estimates give for the entire population of this globe. Surely we have land enough to satisfy the demands of any reasonable ambition, and none need trouble themselves with the fear that we shall soon be overflooded by a tide of living humanity. Some one has computed, taking past progress as data for the future, that in fifty years from this time the population of this country will be more than 180,000,000. Let it come; we have room enough for it all, and we can easily produce an amount of food, clothing, etc., with which to meet all its reasonable wants.

Minnesota, Oregon, and Kansas are already virtually numbered among the states. Washington, Utah, Nebraska, New Mexico, are striding with more or less rapidity toward the condition of states. Dacotah and Arizona are embryo territories.

Now it will naturally be expected that such a farm as this, if properly cultivated, will produce something. But, it is a well-known fact that comparatively little attention is paid to its culture. By far the largest portion of it is yet a wild waste, has not yet been fenced in or even laid out.

But despite these drawbacks our venerable Uncle's heritage yields him a comfortable revenue, as may be seen from the report of the United States Patent Office. Crops of the country for 1856: Indian corn, $360,000,000; wheat, $247,500,000; hay and fodder, $160,000,000; oats, $68,000,000; garden products, $50,000,000; potatoes, $41,250,000; sugar, $35,000,000; orchard products, $25,500,000; total, $1,266,250,000.

This value of products is gathered from 113,032,614 acres of improved lands. As a matter of course a very large proportion of these several grains are exported to feed the inhabitants of other lands, not so fruitful in their yields for the sustenance of their inhabitants.—Donkersley.

WHINING.

There is a class of persons in this world, by no means small, whose prominent peculiarity is whining. They whine because they are poor, or if rich, because they have not health to enjoy their riches; they whine because it is too shiny; they whine because it is too rainy; they whine because they have "no luck," and others' prosperity exceeds theirs; they whine because some friend has died, and they are still living; they whine because they have aches and pains, and have aches and pains because they whine, and they whine no one can tell why. Now, I would like to say a word to these whining persons.

First: Stop whining! It is of no use—this everlasting complaining, fretting, scolding, fault-finding, and whining. Why, you are the most deluded set of creatures that ever lived. Do you not know that it is a well settled principle of physiology and common sense, that these habits are more exhaustive of nervous vitality than almost any other violation of physiological law? And do you not know, too, that life is pretty much as you take it and make it? You can make it bright, sunshiny, or you can make it dark, shadowy. This life is meant only to be disciplinary—to fit us for a higher and purer state of being. Then stop whining, and fretting, and "go up your way rejoicing."

Second: Sing the song of life merrily. Hark! do you hear yonder bird singing joyously its merry carols, as it hops from bough to bough in its native forest home? Imitate it! Take up your song of life, using it joyously and bravely. Sing on, though you feel it not.

You are miserable, nervous, dyspeptic, in wrong relations to yourself and all God's universe, and that's all that ails you. Then stop short, take up the song of life, and leave off for ever that whine of death!

"A merry heart doeth good like a medicine; but a broken spirit drieth the bones." Live simply, cheerfully and trustingly; and by-and-by your troubles "will take to themselves wings and fly away." You will gradually grow more and more into harmony with the natural order of things, and the bright light of heaven will shine placidly down into your souls, and baptize them into a new life.

THE FIRST PRINTED BOOK.

It is a remarkable and most interesting fact, that the very first use to which the discovery of printing was applied, was the production of the Holy Bible. This was accomplished at Mentz, between the years 1450 and 1455. Guttenberg was the inventor of the art, and Faust, a goldsmith, furnished the necessary funds. Had it been a single page, or even an entire sheet, which was then produced, there might have been less occasion to have noticed it; but there was something in the whole character of the affair, which, if not unprecedented, rendered it singular in the usual current of human events. This Bible was in two folio volumes, which have been justly praised for the strength and beauty of the paper, the exactness of the register, and the luster of the ink. The work contained twelve hundred and eighty-two pages, and being the first ever printed, of course involved a long period of time, and an immense amount of mental, manual, and mechanical labor; and yet for a long time after it had been finished and offered for sale, not a single human being, save the artists themselves, knew how it had been accomplished.

Of the first printed Bible, eighteen copies are now known to be in existence; four of which are printed on vellum. Two of these are in England; one being in the Grenville collection. One is in the Royal Library of Berlin, and one in the Royal Library of Paris. Of the fourteen remaining copies, ten are in England; three being a copy in the libraries of Oxford, Edinburgh, and London, and seven in the collections of different noblemen. The vellum copy has been sold as high as eighteen hundred dollars.

Thus, as if to mark the noblest purpose to which the art would ever be applied, the first book printed with movable metal types was the Bible.—New York Sun.

ENGLISH CHURCH-GOING POPULATION.

According to calculations based upon accurate data, and carefully made, there are 7,846,948 actual church-going men of the Church of England; or 42 per cent of the gross population; and 4,466,266 nominal churchmen, but practically of no church, or 25 per cent of the gross population. So that the field of operation of her clergy, ministerial and missionary, is spread over 67 per cent, or 12,013,214 of the community at large. On the other hand, the chapel going Roman Catholics in England amount to 610,786, or 3 1-2 per cent of the entire population; the chapel going Baptists (six different kinds) to 457,181, or 2 1-2 per cent; the chapel going Independents are 1,297,810, or 7 1-4 per cent; the chapel going Wesleyan Methodists (seven different kinds) are 2,[illegible] 321 or

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1860.

ACCOUNTS—NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

All parties interested in the Advocate—Editor, Preachers, and Subscribers—are interested in avoiding confusion in accounts.

Those well acquainted with the credit system in the newspaper business know full well that, under that system, confusion in accounts never rises, never will, never can be avoided.—Uncertain mails, unavoidable oversights in agents or clerks, forgetfulness in subscribers and others, and the wearying, vexatious details of this business over all others, render it impossible. We have tried, for years, and know.

To have the subscription begin and end with the year, and to pay, if not in advance, at least once a year, is the nearest approach to a remedy that we can devise,—and this is our plan.

Immediately after the Conference, all the accounts will be made out to January, 1861, without reference to time of commencement, or time last paid to; and they will be sent to each subscriber who has not paid to January, 1861.

If all our subscribers and agents will patiently co-operate with us, this difficulty about accounts will be forever settled during the coming year. After that, when January, 1861, comes, '62 there will be no, and so on.

Will our brethren and friends, when they receive these accounts, immediately remit the money to the office, or pay to the preacher, taking a receipt? If any think the account incorrect, let him inform us, pleasantly, without quarreling. We never quarrel, though we have more cause than others.

The volume of the Advocate will hereafter begin and end with the year; and it is very desirable that subscriptions should conform to the same rule.

Therefore, new subscribers, who do not begin with the year, will please send, not two dollars, but an amount sufficient to pay for the paper till the end of the year, at the rate of Four Cents a Week.

Then, every subscriber will know, without being informed, that at the beginning of the year is the time to remit the subscription money.

And let us have scores, hundreds, thousands of new subscribers with which to begin the New Volume, January 1st, 1860.—We intend, if Providence smile on us, to make a better paper next year than ever before. Arrangements are made, and being made, for greatly increasing its attractions,—Some new writers, of the first order, will begin with the year. The paper is flatteringly approved now—we intend to merit higher approbation.

THE SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

MONTGOMERY MAIL—UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH.

This institution, already in operation, located at Greensboro', Alabama, in the very heart of the South, and in the midst of a population representing the wealth and culture of the planting population, is harmonious in name, location, circumstances and purpose, with those wants of the South which recent events are developing with an unexpected rapidity. Although located in Alabama, it is intended for the benefit of the whole South. Although inaugurated by the Alabama Conference, it is felt and acknowledged to be an interest of the whole of Southern Methodism. Although under the control of the Methodist Church, it is catholic in its purposes and spirit—free for the admission of all classes—conducted in a manner to do justice to all—and intended to be identified with the efforts of the South to free herself from all educational servitude to the section of the country at enmity with our institutions.

Although we are in hearty sympathy with every effort of the kind, under whatever denominational auspices, yet it is patent, to all reflecting and far-seeing men that the Southern Methodist Church is the only religious organization possessing the facilities and power to establish, on a large scale, a great university for the whole South. She is the only connectional Church that belongs principally to Southern soil. We state these things, not disparagingly on the one hand, nor boastingly on the other, but as simple facts. The Baptist Church is not connectional—each church is independent—and she has no power of the kind. The Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches, though connectional, are not mainly Southern—they are spread over the whole country, and can give to no institution of the kind an exclusively Southern management. Their Southern sections cannot, and would not if they could, and should not if they could, divest themselves wholly of the influence of their Northern sections. And the Southern Methodist Church has a larger membership, more wealth at command, and a larger sympathy with the masses of the great body of the people at the South, than both the Churches named combined.

And such an institution must be located in the midst of the planting region. Mark what we say. The circumstantial and social influences of the planting region, must form a part of the culture of the sons of the slaveholders of the South. In this element of our culture is to be found the prime cause of the superior tone and refinement of Southern character. The finest gentlemen in the United States are to be found in the planting region of the South. The source of this tone and refinement is not to be found so much in the schools in which they have been educated, but in the peculiar influences of slave-holding society. They are the same influences, in kind, which have made the nobles and gentlemen of England the finest class of men in the world. We have the advantage of them, even. Their subject race is a white race—their own fellow-Englishmen—which is unnatural. Our subject race is the black race, whose providential position is as palpable as is their color. There is no friction. Both races harmoniously inhere in a patriarchal society, which lacks only age to develop a genuine aristocracy, such as nature provides for, and providence indicates and approves, superior to the nobility and gentry of England; and also a laboring class, ministering to the culture of the superior class, the best cared for, and the happiest, known to the history of man. These influences must surround and be a part of the culture of a Southern University, and these are possessed in perfection by the institution at Greensboro'. No mountain-grown civilization can become the civilization of the South. So we think, and so have we acted in the location of the Southern University. Our Episcopal brethren have chosen the mountains of Tennessee for their centre, and we have chosen the wealthy centre of the richest planting State of the South. Nothing like a complete University can be established far away from our large commercial cities. Medical Colleges cannot exist upon mountain tops. And as to a central press in connection with a University so located, the idea is chimerical. A powerful periodical literature whose seat was not in a great center of commerce and population, the world has never yet seen.

The literary department of the Southern University, now in operation, is manned by scholars of the first grade in the country. It is intended to develop it, in due time, into a complete University, with all the colleges—medical, legal, theological. It is the result of the first movement based upon the idea of a great central institution for the South, and has progressed with unprecedented rapidity and success.

We have been led to make these remarks, especially the allusions to the University of the South, set on foot by our Episcopal brethren—a movement which we most heartily endorse, and will heartily support—by the unfair course of certain of our brethren of the secular press, among whom we are sorry to class our friend of the Montgomery Mail. "The Southern University" is ignored, and the "University of the South" is assumed to be the central and superior institution, to which all others must be tributary, when there is no ground for such an assumption. We indulge no selfishness, we only claim fair dealing. We trust our Episcopal brethren may accomplish all they have projected; but we desire that our own similar enterprise, having equal claims, and far superior facilities, resources and prospects, shall have a rightful recognition.

Our branch of the Church took its present form in defence of the rights of the South, before the South, as a general thing, had become aware that they were in danger. And our whole ecclesiastical labor, life and success [illegible] for the salvation of the South. And there is [illegible] discourages thinking men more in regard to our [illegible] political leadership, so far as the secular [illegible] is concerned, than the seeming obliviousness of the principal sources of those grand educational influences which have done most to build up the bulwarks of Southern manhood and moral character, as manifest in such ill-judged and partial articles as those of the Montgomery Mail of January 10th, on the University of the South.

The idea of planting upon Sewanee an institution that shall give the word of command to all the State and Church Universities and colleges in the South; with a medical college that shall give tone to those of New Orleans, now aspiring to rival those of Paris, to say nothing of the others; with a publishing house and press that shall be a fountain for the Southern Methodist Publishing House, its Depositories, its quarterly, and monthly, and weeklies, with a capital of near a million of dollars, and which is actually being increased at the rate of a quarter million annually—with its periodical circulation of about seventy thousand, and its annual book publication to the amount of a quarter million—with nearly a million membership, and unequalled wealth—the idea of doing all this, to say nothing of the other denominations, is rather high-sounding. We desire to support the "University of the South," and hope its friends will place it in right relations that we may be able to do so. This squinting toward a Southern Confederacy, and a Southern State-Church, and a Southern State-Church University, we do not admire. Southern independence, and a Southern Confederacy, if God will but no Southern ecclesiastical monopoly.

THE ADVOCATE AND ITS WRITERS.

We have observed that the most interesting and popular papers in the country are not of very large size. We have concluded, therefore, to expend our means and energies, for the present year at least, upon the improvement of the quality and appearance of the Advocate rather than upon the enlargement of its size. When our friends give us 10,000 subscribers, however, we will enlarge to the satisfaction of all. We would not have it forgotten, however, that a medium-sized paper often contains more reading matter than a large one. One secret of this is, condensation—the expurgation of all redundant verbiage. Thus many an article, which in a large paper occupies a column, is condensed into a half column in our paper. This art, we apply in all departments of the paper. It not only enables us to publish as much or more really valuable matter as larger papers, but adds greatly to the style and readableness of the paper. It makes the editorship, however, much more laborious. Again, we seek to publish only such articles as are well written, valuable, interesting, readable. All those who propose contributing to our columns—and we invite contributions, of all sorts, from all quarters—will please remember this. As a rule, we beg to be excused from long articles altogether. Sometimes, a valuable subject, in the hands of a fine writer, may be indulged to the length of a column; but, generally, half column is long enough—the fourth of a column better, much better.

We especially invite contributions from that large and unoccupied class of excellent, but unappreciated writers, who can write a real gem of an article in a fourth of a column. The editorials and essaical contributions of the New York Ledger, which has the largest weekly circulation in the world, are all of this class. If long-winded contributors or correspondents would remember that they destroy their own acceptableness, and also that of the paper, they would do well. If they do not, however, we must, and will. Many friends make the mistake of thinking that if they "take the responsibility" of their own articles, by subscribing their own names, it matters not to the editor what they say, how they write, or how long their articles. They forget that the editor is responsible for the whole paper—for its taste, character, readableness. We had rather not publish names at all, as a general thing. We invite the help of all those good writers who understand and appreciate an editor's duties, responsibilities and rights, and who are willing to co-operate with him, under his taste and direction, in making a valuable and interesting paper. But all those subjective philosophers who "love to hear themselves talk" better than to entertain and benefit our readers, and who wish to assume the editorship of all that part of the paper which their articles occupy, we recommend to seek a more appreciative channel of communication with the public ear. Neither we nor our readers have sense, taste, and grace enough to appreciate them. They are either ahead of the age, or behind it, we care not to decide which. We deal fairly with all writers. When a contribution, in our judgement, is suitable for publication, we publish it; when it is not, we decline it. "Enough said, between gentlemen." Revival notices, obituaries, conference reports, reports of conference committees, and everything of a similar character, we always publish, though we may find it necessary to revise and abridge them. To our contributors and correspondents we send greeting, as followeth: Write carefully; study condensation; write much; be satisfied if a third be published; if rejected, trust in the providence of God that all is for the best, thank the instrument of providence—the editor—and try again.

THE NASHVILLE ADVOCATE.

The "Great Official" has donned new robes in honor of the new year, and, with the increasing gravity of increasing years, it becomes more sober in its dress. Most of the Advocate family, while they were poor, wore plain "long primer," and put on the more elegant "bourgeoise" upon becoming more prosperous. The Nashville Advocate has returned to the simplicity of the primitive days, and appears in a dress of long primer. It has a grateful look—like "the old folks at home." How pleasant to the eyes that look through glasses! Being the central paper of the M. E. Church, South, it should circulate all over the connection. Every body who has passed forty, especially, should take it, the type is so large, and clear, and open. It is as lucid in appearance as is the style of the editor. Our "official" paper, and the style and manner of our Bishops, as is meet, conform to the unpretentious simplicity traditionally associated with representative and responsible position.—The influence of the Nashville Advocate is edifying, healthful. The judgment that controls its helm is good. The editor is the right man in the right place. His thought and taste are worthy of the Church it represents; of the South, of which it is the leading ecclesiastical newspaper; of the culture of his day and generation. It is worthy of general circulation. That it has not 20,000 or 30,000 subscribers, is not to the credit of the Church. The people should take the papers their Conferences patronize, and take the Nashville Advocate also. The picayunishness of some Southern people about newspaper subscriptions is unworthy of their country and character. [What is the price of two Methodist newspapers to most of the Methodists of this country? Absolutely nothing. We talk about Southern independence, and Southern literature. What can we hope for in these things when our best Southern literary enterprises are so poorly patronized? When our preachers and people do justice to our periodicals, by giving them an adequate circulation, we shall believe their talk about Southern literature.

The editor pleasantly "takes advantage" of a remark in our editorial correspondence, that, "in the old well-remembered pulpits of Eufaula and Tuskegee we felt much as we imagine the Jewish priests felt ministering in the temple for the first time after returning from the Babylonish captivity." Upon this he remarks:—

"Take care, Brother Gillespie: that is downright hard on Texas and Louisiana!"

Oh no! Not at all. Dr. McTyeire is too good a critic not to know that a "figure must not be made to go on all fours." How did he feel when—but we will not retort.

A DYSPEPTIC PULPIT.

For many years we have noticed that some morbid preachers and religious writers perversely take occasion, when the happy new year comes in, to try to frighten as many people to death as possible. The text they generally use is, "This year thou shalt die." Doleful sermons are preached upon it, and lugubrious articles written, all calculated, if not intended, to frighten the hearer or reader into the conviction that he shall certainly die before another new year dawns. There is no warrant for such a use of the text, and the sentiment has no foundation in the Christian religion. The uncertainty of life is solemnly true, and it should be taught to and remembered by all. But there is no need to impress morbid minds with a conviction, which they very frequently have not sufficient will and nerve to resist, and which has no connection with the providence of God or the teaching of the Scriptures. Dyspeptic and nervous persons, who are with difficulty kept by their physicians and friends, from dying of such morbid forebodings any how, are in poor condition to listen to such melancholy wailings from a ministry which should be to them the ministry of consolation and hope. Many a man and woman are now in their graves, who ought to be alive simply because, under the pressure of ill health, or misfortunes and griefs, or all together, they yielded to melancholy, dreamed or felt an impression that they should die soon, submitted to it as the voice of fate, and actually gave way and died.

The numerous suicides that shock and shame our christian land, many of them, have their origin in this same morbid melancholy, nursed and indulged until reason, or will, or both, are overthrown. Thousands of men and women are alive to-day only because they, like David, had the courage to say, not irreverently, but in resistance to temptation, "I shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the Lord." It is the duty of all men and women to try to live as long, and do as well, by God's help, as they can; and it is the duty of the ministry of the gospel to help them to do so. "Comfort ye my people, saith the Lord." "The Son of Man came to save men's lives, and not destroy them." "We are saved by hope," not by fear and dispair. All the solemn facts and verities of religion should be preached, but they should always be connected with the "precious promises" and cheering hopes of the gospel. We often hear strange and startling stories about "presentiments" of approaching death, which have been almost literally realized, and people retain them as though they were almost divine revelations; when the truth is, they are the results of temptation, acting upon a diseased body and a morbid mind. There is much folly, much sin, and much injury in these things. Let not the pulpit minister to this unhappy tendency. Let it be a fountain of health, sending out healing streams, and causing the flowers of joy, and hope, and gladness to spring up, and fill the moral atmosphere with their fragrance. A dyspeptical pulpit is almost as bad as a sceptical one. Deliver us from both.

YEARLY BIBLE READING.

The most unfavorable sign of the piety of these times is the neglect of the study of the Bible. But few, comparatively, read the Bible regularly; and fewer still "search the scriptures," to learn their testimony of Jesus, and the way, taught "in them," of "eternal life." This evil is not as apparent as others, and, therefore, not so much felt and sought to be remedied. People come to Church on Sabbath, listen attentively to pulpit ministrations, and many become members of the Church. The neglect of the Bible in private is not, therefore, visible on the surface. But it exists, nevertheless, and is the cause of many of the evils attributed to other things. These evils are sought to be eradicated in detail, while the root of the matter is the neglect of the Bible. Could an earnest study of the Bible be made to become common among professed Christians, and among the people of this professedly christian land, a great change for the better world soon be visible. Superficialness of christian experience, unseemly levity, selfishness, worldliness, pride, vanity, pleasure-seeking, and the train of greater evils to which they lead, or to which they are akin—intemperance, licentiousness, scepticism, infidelity—would be perceptibly diminished. Piety, morality, religious intelligence, and christian taste, would correspondingly increase.

It is a favorite practice, of puritan origin, we believe, to have tables of chapters to read every day, and special tables for Sabbath, in order to read the Bible through once a year. This, in the absence of that religious principal, and thirst for the truth, which should possess us all, and lead us to the study of the Bible, may do very well. It is a sort "judaism" which may be necessary for those in whom "the fullness of times" has not arrived when they are prepared for the "dispensation of the Spirit." "His delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night," is the description of the "blessed man" who studies the scriptures from a sense of duty and from a love of the truth. But, fearing the "more excellent way" may be too high for many, we anhjoin the best table for the daily and Sabbathly reading of the scriptures we have seen.

Read three chapters daily, and five on the Sabbath; that is, two chapters in the Old Testament, and one daily—three on the Sabbath—in Psalms, Prov., Eccl., Solomon's Song and the New Testament.

The Old Testament, without these four books, contains two chapters a day for the year; and the New Testament with the four books, has one chapter a day and three for Sabbath days, minus eight chapters.

Read Psalm 119 as eleven chapters of two divisions each, and connect the short Psalms 117 and 131 with the next, and 133 and 134 together, thus adding eight chapters to complete the year.

Five chapters a week will go through the New Testament in a year.

LECTURES AND ESSAYS.

The lecture and the essay are excellent auxiliaries of the pulpit and the newspaper. There is much to be said that is too secular for the pulpit, and much to be written, that is too elaborate for the newspaper. The platform is the place for the one, and the monthly or quarterly is the place for the other. All good thought should find expression. Not only "sow beside all waters," but sow all kinds of seed, provided it be good. Expression increases thought, as sowing increases seed. The preacher may lecture, and the lecturer may partly replenish his mental seed-bag with "the good seed of the kingdom." And both may labor in the Master's vineyard, and hope for fruit that he will accept and eternally garner. Notwithstanding its abuses—its service in some instances, and in some parts of the country, to mammon and selfishness—lectures should be encouraged, and become common. Eloquence should be cultivated, and the art of hearing should be cultivated. Every man having a good word to say, and having the gift to say it well should not fail to say it. The Sunday for sermon, and spiritual refreshing, and the week-night for lecture and mental recreation. The preacher, the lawyer, the physician, the teacher, the cultivated planter, merchant, and mechanic, could add to their own culture, and that of the country, by lecturing. Not only in cities, but at colleges, academies, country churches and school-houses, without trouble and without expense, interesting lectures might be delivered. And if there be expense, so much the better. The market for brains, and taste, and mental skill, is too limited. Let it be enlarged. Let not all the money of this rich country be spent for flour, and bacon, and luxuries, and follies. Pay for instruction, and taste, and refinement, and mental recreation and comfort, and pay well. Let us have lectures. "Buy the truth."

CONDEMN NOT THE INNOCENT.

Abolition emissaries have done great mischief in the South, and the people ought to be on the alert for them, and expel them wherever found. But there is need for great caution, sound judgment, and just discrimination, lest great injustice be done innocent persons, and odium be made to attach to a good cause. It is in sort of Lynch law, and is the only kind of Lynch law that we have ever known to be justified by the absolute necessities of the case, except some exceptional cases on the frontier, where it has been impossible to obtain legal redress for injuries, or to legally protect life and property. But, as is always the case, there are rash, and sometimes unworthy, men, who are permitted to take the lead, and who perpetrate excesses which are as shameful as the crimes sought to be punished, though not as dangerous; and thereby bring shame upon the more sober part of the community. In all cases of the kind, the soberest and discreetest men ought to have the control.

We have been led to make these remarks by observation of similar excesses in former days; by knowledge of the present justly indignant state of the public mind; and by some cases of rashness and excess which have recently come to our knowledge. A respectable gentleman was arrested at Eufaula, Ala., during the session of the Alabama Conference, and suffered considerable indignity and mortification, until recognized by those who knew him to be a gentleman above suspicion. And we have just received a communication from Percy's Creek, Mississippi, informing us of a similar affair at Scooba, in the same state. We do not publish the communication, because we are not acquainted with the writer, and because we ought to have such an affair verified by more than one witness, whom we know, before admitting it into our columns; though we do not pretend to doubt the statements of our correspondent. We repeat, let not innocent persons be endangered in consequence of the crimes of the guilty. We want now "a united South," and such injuries will not promote such unity.

SAN ANTONIO FEMALE COLLEGE.

We notice that in the report on education of the Rio Grande Conference, the heartiest sanction is given to this new institution, and the fullest confidence expressed in its success. Dr. Boring, and Dr. and Mrs. Cross, are devoting themselves with a zeal worthy of all praise to this, and the general interests of the cause of religion in far western Texas.

The San Antonio Female College commenced its career only two months ago, in the basement of the Methodist Church; and though all the city schools were then already opened for the season, it now numbers over forty pupils, and the list is constantly increasing, so that we shall not be astonished to hear that the next session opens with a hundred. Four teachers are engaged in the institution, one of whom is a thoroughly educated German musician, and incipient measures have been taken to secure a competent Professor of the German language. There ought to be a Professor of Spanish. We suppose, however, that Mrs. Cross teaches Spanish. She translates it, as a communication on our first page will show. It is intended to make the school just what its name imports, a female college, and second in educational facilities to none in the older States. The arrangement of classes is strictly collegiate; and it is the purpose of those who are engaged in the enterprise, both in the course of study and in the mode of instruction to aim at a lofty standard, and copy the worthiest models. It is proposed also, within the next five years, at the utmost, to erect, in San Antonio, a male institution, of similar character, and under the same board of trustees, to be called the Alamo College. Both these institutions are to be the property of the Rio Grande Mission Conference, and subject to its supervision and control. The best citizens of San Antonio are deeply interested in this noble work; and our people there promise to raise $60,000 to furnish the requisite buildings and fixtures; not doubting that the church will contribute an equal sum.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.

Good singing is a blessing, whether in family or in Church, and every friend of christianity and the country should earnestly and harmoniously labor to promote it. The best means for its promotion is, for every one, who has any voice and musical capacity—and there are few who have not—to learn to sing. Study all the good tunes suited to congregational singing, in all the music books; but especially study the tunes in the tune-book of your own Church. Where there are choirs and organs, let them be so managed as to increase, as well as improve, congregational singing. Where they do this, they are a blessing; where they do not, they are a curse. But then an equal curse is the miserable mangling of all music which is very common where there is neither choir nor organ. Congregational singing is the thing to be sought. Choirs and organs are incidental. Let those have them who wish, and let those do without them who wish. But, with, or without them, we must have congregational singing in all the churches. If it is asked, what is good congregational singing, we reply, hear a German congregation sing once. They all sing—they all sing correctly—they all sing with power—they all sing so as to let you hear the words distinctly. The music is simply the voice of the poetry, and both the voice of the gospel uttered in the hymn. With them no choir sings a tune the congregation does not understand. Among Americans, the voices are not as strong as those of the German children; the music only strikes the ear—the words are lost, and, consequently, the gospel too; and the choir often sings a tune the congregation does not know—which is a shame. Our Sunday schools and colleges and academies should remedy our defects in the musical part of worship.

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Our eastern co-laborer commenced its twenty-third volume with the first number for 1860. It very appropriately appears in a new dress of copper-faced type, which is quite handsome and pleasant. It has, or had at the close of the year, 11,500 subscribers—a very fine circulation, indeed. Whether or not our brother editor loses heavily by the cash system, strictly enforced, on the first of each January, and labors most of the year to recover his losses, we know not. If this difficulty can be avoided, the plan is an excellent one. The Southern Christian Advocate has always been a solidly, soundly, and ably edited paper, and never more so than under the control of Dr. Myers. The Georgia Conference resolved that it ought to have a circulation of ten thousand in the bounds of that Conference alone; and so it ought. The Georgians can do that work this year, and we trust they will. Our preachers and people, with all their zeal and liberality in other things, have never been fully awakened to a conception of their power to do good by the circulation of our newspapers. Alabama can do for the New Orleans Christian Advocate what Georgia proposes for her paper. Alabama has demonstrated what she can do when she tries. Let this be the year for the paper. We rejoice in the increasing circulation, popularity, and usefulness of all our papers. Rivalry between them should never be tolerated. Conference bounds should not limit circulation. They should stand upon their merits, and circulate according to the laws of taste and sympathy, as with secular papers. Success to them all.

"Sour Godliness," so called, is piety that has been allowed to "stand" too long, and has "turned"—to the unconscious service of the devil.

THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

There is no country in the world where the postal system is so important to the whole people as the United States. And yet it is doubted if a worse managed postal system than that of the United States exists any where. Complaints of delay and failure are almost general, especially in the South. A few days since, the Louisiana delegation in Congress waited on Postmaster General Holt, in a body, for the purpose of eliciting from him such information as he might communicate in relation to the mail service between Washington and New Orleans, and to urge the claims of Louisiana to improved facilities and the enforcement of greater regularity on the part of mail contractors in delivering the mails.

The result of the interview is not definitely known, but it is understood that Postmaster Holt gave them little encouragement to expect any improvement in the facilities afforded by the Department; on the contrary, that the Department contemplates a reduction of the present service, on the ground that arrangements for the postal service of Louisiana entailed an expense to the Department of half a million dollars per annum in excess of the revenue accruing therefrom.

While our postal system is becoming a byword for anything that denotes imbecility, extravagance, failure and irresponsibility, the British system has proved a paying concern and a valuable public convenience. The last annual return of the public revenue and expenditure in Great Britain exhibits the postoffice in very favorable financial position, the ordinary receipts having been £3,175,560 while the expenditure was £1,894,917; making the balance of receipts over expenditures, including outstanding balances and claims, £1,280,643. The expense of the foreign packet service is, however, included in the navy estimates.

The frequency of complaints of the loss of valuable letters sent through the Postoffice is seriously annoying to the losers, and to the Postoffice authorities likewise. Undoubtedly a majority of these complaints are founded upon bona fide losses, but in many others the want of proper care, and the neglect of parties designing to enclose money or drafts, lead to great trouble. If everybody who sends a money letter would be very careful, and, if need be, exceedingly punctilious to see that the intended value really forms part of the contents of a letter, and then, moreover, be particular about the right number of stamps, much of this evil would be overcome. In several instances the mistakes of correspondents have given rise to charges of thefts and misconduct, which had no other effect than to implicate a large number of honest officials erroneously. A well known merchant informed the postmaster that he had some time previous sent a letter to a certain point, containing bank notes for a large amount, but his advices from that point informed him that neither the letter nor the money had ever been received. He was questioned as to time and circumstances, and stated positively that the money was in the letter, concealed from view, and that the letter was properly covered by government stamps. Inquiry was instituted, and at first no trace of the missing letter could be found. A day or two after, one of the box clerks found it among the letters detained for non-payment of postage, as required by law. It had been advertised in two daily papers, and laid in the office among the detained letters for nearly a fortnight. The merchant was sent for, and the letter returned. As a matter of curiosity the Postmaster suggested that the letter should be opened to see that it was all straight. Lo, when this was done, there was no money in it, and on going back to his place of business, the negligent correspondent discovered that the bank notes in question had been picked up by his clerk and replaced in the safe.

A late Washington letter says that the report of the Postmaster General shows very plainly that the postal service cannot be carried on with the present rickety system which admits of no real and practical head and no steady consistent policy. Congress has burthened it with the franking privilege, and with unproductive post routes and needless offices. Congress, under the influence of the lobby, make light of running a hill through calling for an expenditure of three or four millions by the Post Office for an overland mail to California, which comparatively few persons use—one which produces only a few thousand dollars a year. Then, again, the Post Office Department is used as a political and party engine and without regard, in some instances, to its legitimate objects. Mr. Holt comes into the department at a time when its embarrassments are increased by the failure of Congress to provide for the deficiency in its revenues, and when it is really a question whether and how long it can hobble along. He has shown himself a practical reformer, and if any one can save the department and the postal service it is he. But it is much to be doubted whether Congress, and especially the House, will comply with his recommendations. They will not abandon the franking privilege during a Presidential struggle.

In the twenty-third volume of the Parliamentary History of England is the following very curious anecdote concerning this privilege. It occurred in the debate on the Post Office bill in the year 1660:

Col. Titus reported the bill for the settlement of the post office with the amendments. Sir Walter Earl delivered a proviso for the letters of all members of Parliament to go free, during their sitting. Sir Heneage Finch said it was a poor mendicant proviso, and below the honor of the house. Mr. Pyne spoke also against the proviso. Mr. Brinkley, Mr. Boscawen, Sir George Downing, and Sergeant Charlton for it; the latter: "The Council's letters went free." The question being called for, the Speaker, Sir Harbottle Grimstone, was unwilling to put it, saying he was ashamed of it: nevertheless, the proviso was carried and made part of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed. The Lords subsequently disagreed to this proviso, and it was ultimately thrown out. At a subsequent period, however, both houses did not feel it below their honor to secure to themselves this exemption from postage.

SUGGESTIONS.

When any of our preachers visit or stop for the night with a family, they ought to ask, "Do you take the Advocate?" and if they do not, they should persuade them to do so, if possible. Nearly every body will take it, if properly advised to do so.

When any of our preachers unite a couple in the bonds of holy matrimony, they should send the marriage notice to the Advocate, and, if neither the gentleman nor lady is a subscriber, they should induce the gentleman to subscribe, and send the name and money with the marriage notice.

All our preachers should make it a matter of conscience to make a public address, in each of their congregations, in behalf of the Advocate. Whenever their judgment indicates that it would be beneficial, they should make more than one address in a congregation.

At all protracted meetings, camp meetings, and revival meetings, they should make special efforts for the Advocate. The members newly added to the church should be especially supplied with it. What an inconsistency for a preacher to send an account of a revival, with perhaps fifty added to the church, and not one new subscriber for the Advocate!

We make a good paper for Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Episcopalians, and citizens of all classes.

An Afflicted Editor.—Our fellow-laborer, Rev. Samuel Watson, editor of the Memphis Christian Advocate has, we are sorry to learn, lost another of his little ones—the fifth child he has lost, or returned to the divine Giver. We are happy to see that he is consoled by the christian faith and hope.

NUMBER INSTEAD OF PAGE.

We cannot help feeling surprised that most of our ministers and preachers, in conducting public worship, continue to announce the number of the page on which the hymn is to be found, instead of announcing the number of the hymn itself. The latter plan is much the most reasonable, convenient, and satisfactory. Upon the former plan, the numbers never become associated, in the memories of the people, with the hymns, because there are generally more hymns than one on the same page. Upon the latter plan, if generally adopted, the announcement of the number would soon become almost equivalent, with all regular worshippers, to the reading of the first line of the hymn. When the number of the page is announced, and the people turn to it, they know not what hymn is to be used until the minister begins to read it. It is an old practice, and many continue it merely from habit, or because it is time-honored, or because some may have an unreasonable prejudice against a change. But it should be changed, nevertheless. There is nothing Methodistic in it, if that be pleaded in its favor; on the contrary, it is quite un-methodistic. Let us have done with it. The hymn is what we wish to find—not the page. Let us have the figures read that point to the hymn.

DEATH OF MACAULAY.

The last steamer brings the intelligence that Thomas Babington Macaulay, the most popular English writer of the nineteenth century—poet, essayist, historian, statesman,—is dead. He was born in 1800, and was therefore about sixty years old. He graduated at Cambridge at twenty-two; was admitted to the bar at twenty-six; was elected to Parliament at thirty-two; went to India as a member of the Supreme Council at Calcutta at thirty-four. He has been Chancellor of the University of Edinburgh, and was recently elevated to the peerage, as Baron Macaulay, and took his seat in the House of Lords. He was among the few instances in which literary genius has been honored with the highest political honors. Bulwer and D'Israeli are the only other instances we recollect. His poetry comprises the "War of the League," "Lays of Ancient Rome." His prose consists of his "History of England," and his "Miscellaneous Essays," which appeared in the Edinburgh Review. The elegance and beauty of his style have never been surpassed. His entire reliableness as a historian has to be decided by coming time. In all his writings there is a painful impression that he was "without God in the world."

EDITORIAL ENCOURAGEMENTS.

Encouragements come to us by every mail, and from all quarters. New subscribers, and the cash for old and new, reach us daily, and increase in number and quantity. And most encouraging words come in almost every letter. Some express approbation of the paper; some say they will exert themselves for us during the present year; and some say, and prove it, that they are now doing profitable work for us. Not only are preachers at work, but laymen, ladies and gentlemen, brethren and friends, are acting as agents for themselves, and for others, paying up to 1861 for themselves, and sending new subscribers. Well, this is all very pleasant. Brethren and friends, thanks, a thousand thanks. We have never been in better humor. We feel as if we could do any amount of labor without complaining. We are working for you; please work for us—for the Advocate—all of you. Let each preacher send us ten new subscribers, and the laymen as many as they can.

Free Papers.—We frequently receive requests to send the Advocate free to certain brethren and sisters who are too poor to pay for it. We neither doubt the worthiness nor the poverty of the persons represented. If we fail to grant the request, we are often censured as unsympathetic and hard-hearted. But if we open the door, where will the matter end? It would cost the friend who sends such a request but two dollars to send the paper himself; or, if not able to afford it, it would cost but little time to apply to some friend who is able and willing. Every church ought to take care of its own poor. We cannot do it, and a little reflection would prevent such requests. We cannot comply, and we protest against being placed in the ungracious attitude of refusing. Do your own duty to your own poor, and cease shifting the responsibility to the shoulders of others. We trust this may be sufficient, once for all.

Russian Infant Baptism.—It is a curious thing, that among the Russians, the father and mother of an infant not only can not stand as sponsors to it, but they are not even allowed to be present at its baptism. The godfather and godmother by answering for the child at baptism, become related to it, and to each other, and a lady and gentleman who have stood as sponsors to the same child are not allowed to marry each other. In christening the priest takes the child, which is quite naked, and holding it by the head so that his thumb and finger stop the orifices of the ears, he dips it thrice into water; he cuts off a small portion of the hair, which he twists up with a little wax from the tapers, and throws it into the font; then annointing the baby's breast, hands and feet with the holy oil, and making the sign of the cross with the same, on the forehead, he concludes by a prayer and benediction.

Arkansas Colleges.—The Ouachita Conference has resolved to establish a male college, to be called "Ouachita Conference College." An excellent plan for raising the money is reported. They have also established a female college, and Rev. James E. Cobb, former editor of the Memphis Christian Advocate, is President. Arkansas is moving in the way of education.

Reliableness of the Press.—What is to be thought of the purity and reliableness of the press, when, for sufficient pay, mesmeristic and spiritualistic charlatans are puffed without stint or decency. These fellows make much money out of the superstitious and curious, and they can pay well, and—the rest follows.

The Minutes of the Alabama Conference will be ready by the time this paper reaches our readers. The members of the Conference who desire them will address Rev. E. V. Levert, or Rev. Wm. Shapard, Marion, Ala., and the packages will be forwarded.

Pacific Methodist College dues.—Gov. Weller gives $100; Frank Hereford, Esq., $100; Mr. P. H. Russell, $100; a gentleman who conceals his name, $150; Hon. Mr. Vance, $200; Hon. H. Gwin, $100.

Next Week we shall give a resume of the proceedings of the Louisiana Conference from the Minutes, and we shall do the same for the other Conferences as soon as we receive their Minutes.

The Receipts will be published next week, and regularly hereafter. All monies received at the office during the week preceding each issue will be acknowledged.

The Minutes of the Louisiana Conference will be mailed to the preachers, and our Louisiana subscribers in a few days.

The Minutes of the Mississippi Conference we have not heard from. We presume they will be ready soon.

The Boston Recorder is the oldest religious newspaper in the world, and its present editor has conducted it for twenty years. It is an excellent paper.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

JANUARY 16, 1860.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

ADVERTISING IN THE ADVOCATE.

The business public are slowly learning that the Advocate is THE GREAT ADVERTISING PAPER OF THE SOUTH AND WEST. Advertisements in it are more valuable than in any half dozen other papers.

1.—It has the largest circulation west of Charleston, and South of Cincinnati; larger than any other two weeklies in New Orleans, and is increasing rapidly—will, in a few years, double its present circulation.

2.—Of medium size, and not crowded with advertisements, an advertisement is not lost in it, but can be easily found.

3.—In our "Editorial Notices," which we give to every advertisement, we specify the page and column on which an advertisement may be found. We seek to make every advertisement valuable to the advertiser and to the paprr.

4.—The circulation is spread out over Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, principally; Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas, partially.

5.—It is the only weekly of large and widely-spread circulation in the great and growing metropolis of the South.

HARPER AND BROTHERS.—On this page, sixth column will be found an advertisement of an attractive list of new books, from the great publishing house of Harper and Brothers, New York, most, if not all of which, are on sale in this city, at the book store of T. L. White, 105 Canal-street. Many of them have been laid on our table by Mr. White, and some of them are noticed, under the proper head, in this week's Advocate, viz.: Howitt's History of America; Women Artists, etc. Harper is not tainted with abolitionism, either in his Monthly, Weekly, or books; and deserves well of all portions of the United States.

ARREST THE VILLAIN.—Under the head of "Special Notices," on our third page, fifth column, will be found a notice by Rev. Oscar M. Addison, Presiding Elder of Springfield District, Texas Conference, of a villain who passed himself for a Methodist preacher, and, having stolen Mr. Addison's trunk, has assumed his name. He has been in Louisiana, as we know, and has conducted himself so suspiciously, still bearing Mr. Addison's name, as to cause inquiries to be made of us, very recently, as to Mr. Addison's character. Here is the explanation: Mr. Addison, is a worthy gentleman, and a clergyman of fine position. If any man be found calling himself "Rev. Oscar M. Addison," outside of Texas, let him be arrested at once. He is an impostor.

SPIRIT OF THE AMERICAN PRESS.—On this page, sixth column, will be found the advertisement of a new weekly paper with the above name, published in New York, and conducted by B. Everett Smith. It is intended to be a General Newspaper Review, containing leading characteristic articles from the principal papers, secular and religious, in the United States. While, through the present newspaper press we are enabled to study the life and progress of the time, to a small extent, limited as our newspaper reading necessarily is; in this paper we shall be enabled to study American Journalism, and, at the same time, to take a much wider and more satisfactory view of the world and its movements than before.

FRUIT TREES.—On this page, fifth column, will be found an advertisement which will please all who wish to purchase good fruit trees. We know Mr. Ellis, and recommend him to the patronage of the public.

SOUTHERN FIRE-PROOF ROOFING.—In the fifth column of this page will be found an Advertisement, to which we call attention. The office where the fire-proof roofing can be obtained is 57, St. Charles-street, N.O.

LITERARY NOTICES.

METHODIST QUARTERLY REVIEW. January, 1860.—This is the Quarterly of the Church, North. Its articles are: The Moral Argument for Immortality, by E. Thomson, D. D.; Jabez Bunting, by R. A. West; Results of West India Emancipation, by Rev. Henry Ilsley; Our Lord's Sermon on the Mount, by W. Nast, D.D.; Buddhism, by Heman M. Johnson, D.D.; Mysticism—Exposition of Isaiah lii, 3—liii, by Prof. J. W. Lindsay; Rome vs. Liberty, by Charles Nordhoff, Esq.; Methodism: Suggestions appropriate to its Present Condition, by A. Stevens, LL.D.; Religious Intelligence; Synopsis of Quarterlies; Quarterly Book Table. Two of the ablest articles are those by Mr Nordhoff and Dr Stevens. The Quarterly is of a high order, but its philosophy is of the fanatical abolition school throughout. D. D. Wheedon, D.D., Editor. New York: Carlton and Porter, 200 Mulberry street.

THE HOME CIRCLE. L. D. Huston, Editor. Nashville, Tenn.: Southern Methodist Publishing House. January, 1860. Vol. vi, No. 1; $2 00 a year. J. B. M'Ferrin, D.D., Agent.

The Home Circle, with its enlargement and improvement every way, will surely meet the expectations and command the support of our people, and of the country generally. It is beautiful outside, and "all glorious within." Its typography is like the sunlight to the eyes. Its contents are equal to those of any similar magazine in this country. The Home Circle is doing a good work in cultivating a taste for polite literature among the ladies and young people of the South. The home-feeling it breathes is excellent. The sketch of Col. B. A. Baker, of Alabama, is admirable and well deserved.

A POPULAR HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA: from the Discovery of the American Continent to the Present Time. By Mary Howitt. Illustrated with numerous engravings. New York: Harper and Brothers, Publishers, Franklin-square. 1860. For sale by Thos. L. White & Co., New Orleans.

Here are two beautiful volumes, by one of the most genial and popular of English lady writers. The approbation of the press is general. The study of the history of the United States should be a part of the education of every American child, and a part of the yearly reading of every American lady and gentleman. Here is a history that will read like a story.

THE ECLECTIC MAGAZINE OF Foreign Literature.—W. H. Bidwell, Editor and Proprietor. 1860. New York: Published at No. 5 Beekman street. Price, $5 a year.

In this magazine, the reader, for a small price, obtains the cream of all the foreign quarterlies and monthlies. The value of it can be seen at a glance.

WOMEN ARTISTS in all Ages and Countries. By Mrs. Ellett, author of "The Women of the Revolution," etc.—New York: Harper and Brothers, Publishers, Franklin-square. 1859. T. L. White & Co., New Orleans.

This is a book—one to be studied as well as read—one that will be read with interest. Those who wish to make themselves acquainted with the conquests of women in the realm of art should procure it by all means. It is a sort of reading that is not common—but ought to be—among our people.

A LIFE FOR A LIFE. By the author of "John Halifax, Gentleman," "Olive," "The Ogilvies," "A Hero," "Agatha's Husband;" "The Head of the Family," etc. New York: Harper and Brothers, Publishers, Franklin-square. 1859.—T. L. White & Co., New Orleans.

The author of "John Halifax, Gentleman," has a high reputation, and this is his latest work.

THE HISTORY OF THE RELIGIOUS MOVEMENT OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY, CALLED METHODISM, considered in its different denominational Forms, and its Relations to British and American Protestantism. By Abel Stevens, L.L.D. volume II. From the Death of Whitefield to the Death of Wesley. Eleventh Thousand. New York: Carlton & Porter: 200 Mulberry-street. For sale at the Methodist Publishing House, 112 Camp-street, New Orleans.

When Dr. Stevens' first volume appeared, we remarked, in these columns, that his history would be, to Methodism, what Macaulay's history was to England, with the exception of the matter of style. Our criticism is being verified. Both its accuracy and catholicity are "worthy of all acception," and it is received among all denominations, and in the literary world generally, as supplying a great want in ecclesiastical history. The present volume is biographical, as well as historical, including the Life and Times of Wesley—the best life of Wesley yet published—similar in character and importance to Masson's Life of Milton.

MEMOIRS OF REV. GEORGE WHITEFIELD, by John Gillies, D.D. Revised and corrected, with large Additions and Improvements. With an Introduction by C. E. Stowe, D.D., Professor of Sacred Literature in the Theological Seminary Andover. Philadelphia: Leary, Getz & Co.

This work is called a "Companion to Stevens' History of Methodism." Stevens gives us a good life of Whitefield, in his work, but this is Whitefield viewed from a Calvinistic standpoint; and Whitefield was a Calvinist. It is a good work.

THE LADIES' READER: Designed for the use of Ladies' Schools, and Family Reading Circles: Comprising choice selections from standard authors, in Prose and poetry; with the essential rules of elocution, simplified and arranged for strictly practiced use. By John W. S. Hows, Professor of Elocution, Author of "The Practical Elocutionist," "The Shakespearean Reader," etc., etc. Philadelphia: Published by E. H. Butler & Co. Thos. L. White, New Orleans.

The title of this work, which we give in full, is sufficient notice of it. A second copy has been laid on our table by Mr. T. H. Tallman, of the above firm, who is now in the city. There is nothing more defective, and yet more necessary, in common education, than that proposed to be supplied by this work.

Book Notices continued next week. We shall notice promptly hereafter. Necessary editorial absence, at the Conferences, has caused us to fall behind in this matter.

PERSONAL.

Victor Hugo has been hugely victorious over common sense in raving about what he calls the martyrdom of Old Brown.—Mrs. Ann S. Stephen's has replied to him.

Mr. Spurgeon has announced that he will preach no more in Surrey Gardens, if, as is proposed, it is opened for popular amusements on Sunday evenings.

Rev. Daniel Worth has been arrested in North Carolina for helping Helper's book. Who is Worth?

Mr. J. G. Wells, of England, who has published a respectable volume of poems, was, ten years ago, a day-laborer, and unable to write half a dozen lines correctly.

Rev. Henry Grattan Guinness, the young Independent revivalist preacher from England, now in Philadelphia, is not a great, but a spiritual and successful preacher. He lines the hymns, two lines at a time, Methodist-like.

Rev. Dr. Cumming, of London, is represented as exceedingly beautiful, exceedingly small, poetic, eloquent, retiring, and earnest.

Dow Jr., (Elbridge Gerry Page) once rich, esteemed for wit and culture, died recently in California in utter misery, of intemperance.

King Theodorus, of Abyssinia, distributes the Bible, and has raised the missionaries to the rank of nobles.

Chief Justice Taney is still absent from the Supreme Court on account of sickness, but he gradually improves.

The Missouri State Senate has appropriated $2500 to erect a monument to Col. Thomas H. Benton.

The once celebrated Vrels, the "Black Doctor," is in jail in Paris for debt and mal-practice.

Among the passengers of the steamship City of Washington, which left New York on Saturday for Europe, was Heenan, alias the "Benecia Boy," who goes out to fight Sayers, the English champion—the pugilistic encounter to decide the championship of the two countries.

A monument to J. Fennimore Cooper, is to be erected at Cooperstown at a cost of $3000.

Lola Montez is reported to have written a drama of great pathos and beauty, which has been accepted at one of the London theatres.

Lady Franklin is contemplating a visit to Paris, where she will be received by the different societies of the Academy with the honors usual upon the reception of royalty.

Bishop Newman, of the Catholic Church, St. Louis, fell dead in the street on the 5th, of disease of the heart.

Mr. Sherman, the Republican candidate for Speaker of the House, is of Connecticut origin. His grandfather, Taylor Sherman, built the house now occupied by Nathan Beers. His father, Chas. Sherman, was born in that house, and lived there until his removal to Ohio, in company with a large party of Norwalk people, who migrated to the Connecticut Reserve in Ohio.

The grandson of Tecumseh is living in Natchez, Miss. He is a well educated and accomplished gentleman, having traveled over a great part of Europe. He is a physician.

The half yearly tax of Nicholas Longworth, of Cincinnati, for 1859, amounted to $16,691 85. This amount in itself is certainly a small fortune.

By the election of Mr. Breckinridge from Kentucky, John J. Crittenden, the oldest member of the United States Senate, retires from a public service that has been most honorable to himself and most useful to the country. Mr. Crittenden is now in the 74th year of his age. He entered the Senate in 1817—forty-two years ago—although he then served but two years. Besides his different terms in the Senate, Mr. Crittenden served the public as Governor of Kentucky, and Attorney-General under President Harrison, and also under Mr. Fillmore.

The Alexandria (Va.) Gazette says: upon good authority, that John A. Washington has in his possession a letter from responsible parties who made a bona fide offer of $250,000 for the Mount Vernon property sold by him to the ladies of the Mount Vernon Association for $200,000. Mr. Washington sacrificed the difference in favor of the Association.

Mr. Everett has contributed nearly $70,000 toward the purchase of Mount Vernon. Over $50,000 was from his Washington lecture, and $10,000 from his contract with the Ledger.

The Correspondencia, of Madrid, says: "The Duchess of Malakoff, our fair country-woman, expects to give an heir to Marshal Pelissier next February."

LITERARY.

THE circulation of New York papers is as follows: The Sun, 49,000; Herald, 60,000; Tribune, 20,000; Times, 50,000; Express, 10,000 morning, 15,000 evening; Journal of Commerce, 5,000; Evening Post, 4,000; Commercial Advertiser, 1,500; Evening Day-book, 480; five Sunday papers, Atlas, Courier, Mercury, Dispatch, Times, 5,000 each; Saturday Leader (Douglas' organ), 25,000.

It is announced that another new weekly paper, devoted principally to literary matters, will soon be issued in Cincinnati. It is to be called the Cincinnati Herald.

The London papers speak highly of a new book on Florida, entitled "Notes on the Floridian Peninsula; Its Literary History, Indian Tribes and Antiquities, by Daniel G. Brinton."—Published by Low & Co.

Alfred Tennyson has been paid £10 a line for a poem, which is announced for the January number of Macmillan's Magazine. It is entitled, "Sea Dreams; an Idyll."

A project is on foot to start another paper at Paris in the English language, one of the purposes of which would be to do some sort of justice to American institutions and American affairs, which Galignani does not. On the contrary, that sheet seems to be animated by a peculiar hostility to everything Republican and especially American Republicanism. The English people generally have out-lived the recollections of 1776 and 1812, but with this establishment they are as fresh as if Cornwallis had surrendered yesterday.

Mr. J. L. Wyman, long editor of the Commercial Advertiser, at Apalichicola, Florida, is at present in this city, on his way to Havana, where he and his associates contemplate establishing immediately a weekly paper, to be called "The Cuban Messenger." The Messenger is to be printed in English, and will contain translations of the leading articles, and most important items, from the Spanish papers on the Island, together with foreign news, market and shipping reports, etc. Permission has already been obtained from the authorities for the establishment of this paper, and it will, doubtless, be much in request by New Orleans readers particularly.

Mr. Thackeray is to receive from the proprietors of the Cornhill Magazine £6,000 for two tales, which are to appear in the pages during the next two years, and £2,000 a year as editor.

The Cornhill Magazine is to have three serial stories, running at once—one by Mr. A. Trollope, one by Mr. Thackeray himself, and one by a lady, name unknown. It is to consist of eight sheets, 120 pages, with two illustrations, and is to cost one shilling.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung says that there is a powerful religious movement in Bohemia—whole villages are going over to Protestantism.

The French Emperor, visiting the Pyrenees in August, replied to the Protestant deputation, headed by Pastor M. Emilie Froisard, that he would protect equally all the religions of the empire.

LOCAL.

A RICH MAN.—Mr. James Burnside, twenty-five years ago, was a clerk in Virginia, at $50 per month. He bought Mr. Armand's plantation and negroes the other day for $500,000. His investments in sugar culture are about $2,000,000. He has about 1,000 slaves. Three years ago he purchased the Hermas estate, with 500 slaves, for over $1,000,000. The profits have been immense. He aspires to be the largest sugar-producer in the world. He is now the largest in Louisiana. He recently purchased the most costly residence in this city (Mr. James Robb's). He has made his fortune in this city, in the dry-goods house of Hierne and Burnside, in legitimate trade, without speculation.

Some workmen discovered a woman in full dress about to throw herself from a window, corner Magazine and Girod sts., on Wednesday last, and only prevented her by throwing stones at her. It is not known whether she was attempting suicide or escape, or whether she was insane.

A young named Droze, son of the State Librarian at Baton Rouge, was murdered, in the very arms of his resisting and entreating wife, on Sunday, the 8th inst., by a young man named Porry, at the instigation of his mother, for some fancied insult. Mrs. P. has been arrested.

A young clerk, twenty-three years old, from Canada, named Malcolm Henry Reburn, was last week detected in a systematic scheme of larceny from his employers, R. H. Mullen & Co. The goods, $2,000 worth, were recovered, and Reburn escaped.—Clerks should pray, "Lead us not into temptation."

Grant's Calcium Light, recently exhibited in this city, is said to exceed anything else of the kind, and will brilliantly and powerfully light up the city, at reasonable expense. Why do they not light up New York with it? Prof. G. is from New York.

A young man named A. W. Ardege was, last Wednesday, swindled out of $200 by a fellow named Wesley Ferguson, at the "ball game." This is quite common in New Orleans now. Chaps who are so green as to be swindled in this way, should not leave their mothers' aprons until they have more sense.

A Dr. Kauffman committed suicide in Algiers the other day.

A number of families, among whom were seventy grown persons and many children, all wealthy free colored persons, came to this city last week, by the river, from Washington, parish of St. Landry. They are bound for St. Domingo, where they intend purchasing plantations and becoming citizens of the Island.

More than $7,000 have been collected and paid out for the relief of the poor families recently burnt out by the criminal fires that have wasted parts of the city.

The city is almost over-run with itinerant hucksters and show men, with all sorts of tricks to turn a penny—novelties, monstrosities, humbugs, conveniences.

A young lady of the Lutheran persuasion, having given her heart and promised her hand to a Hebrew gentleman, has embraced his religion (Judaism) as well as himself.

A gentleman living on suburb farm, hearing a noise the other night, about one o'clock, got up, and found his French farmer driving the yoked oxen, and his Dutch gardener fixing his tools; the first in a fit of somnambulism, and the last, deceived by the first, and thinking it was about day-break.

Scarlatina is quite prevalent in New Orleans, as well as other parts of the country, owing, we suppose, to the severe winter.

The exhibit of the San Mutual Insurance Company, of this city, is another gratifying proof of the great prosperity of the corporate institutions of New Orleans, particularly of the insurance business. Despite the terrible fire casualties that have afflicted our city, this company declares a dividend of forty per cent., besides the six per cent. interest on the outstanding certificates of profits to the holders.

A most shocking rencontre occurred in the rotunda of the St. Charles hotel, between Mr. Charles N. Harris and Col. W. H. Peck, both of Louisiana, in which the former was killed, having been shot and stabbed in a dreadful manner. Mr. Harris had fired at Col. Peck the day before, in the same place. The country is being disgraced with this human butchery. Had the authorities done their duty, this dreadful affair had not happened. This took place last week.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

Colored Military Companies are decided unlawful in Massachusetts. Negroes cannot be enrolled at all.

Through Travel by the Jackson Railroad is suspended for the present by lack of stage communication over the unfinished twenty miles of the Mississippi Central road.

The Railroad Bridge across the bay at Galveston, Texas, will be completed in a few weeks, when cars will run daily, via Houston, to the interior.

San Antonio, Texas, is improving and growing rapidly. Much cotton is being carried to Mexico.

It is stated in the annul, report of the Secretary of the Interior, that the present liabilities of the United States to Indian tribes, including principal funded at five per cent for permanent annuities, amounts to $11,473,423 88. He estimates the number of Indians within the borders of the United States 450,000.

MORMONISM.—The Inferior Department has received evidence to convict one Lee, a Mormon Saint, of Utah, with having first violated the person of a young girl belonging to the party massacred at the Mountain Meadows, and then cut her throat. The Mormon authorities proposed surrenderhigly all the murderers, but only on condition they should be tried exclusively before Mormon juries. This proposition was decimed, as such a trial would only tend to screen the criminals from justice. Hence the Department urges the propriety of establishing martial law over Utah as the only means of punishing crime.

THE Congressional Harper's Ferry Committee have subpœnaed Judge Amy, of Kansas; Mr. Conway, the congressman elect from Kansas; Augustus Wattles, editor of the Kansas Herald of Freedom; Captain Montgomery, of the Kansas free state border-ruffian leaders; G. P. Dowry, at one time Adjutant General of the free state forces of Kansas; Dr. Howe, of Boston; Mr. Sanborn, of New Hampshire, and Gerrit Smith.

THE DISTINGUISHED DEAD OF 1859.—The list of distinguished dead of the United States in 1859 includes the names of William H. Prescott, the historian; Prof. William C. Bond of Cambridge; Postmaster General Aaron V. Brown; Rufus Choate; John Y. Mason, Minister to France; and Washington Irving. And abroad, greatest of all, and distinguishing the year in which it occurred, Humboldt; Hencey Hallam, the historian; DeTocqueville, the author of Democracy in America; Lardner; Metternich; Leigh Hunt; Brunel and Stephenson, the great English engineers; and Thomas de Quincey, "the opium eater." And list for 1860, Lord Macaulay, the great historian.

THE SOUTH IN CONGRESS.—The South is well represented in the Senate. Southern men are at the head of all the important committees in that body, and they shape and control to a great extent the legislation of the country. Mr. Mason remains as Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs; Mr. Clay do. on Commerce; Mr. Yulee do. on Postoffice; Mr. Green do. on Territories; Mr. Mallory, do. on Naval Affairs; Mr. Hayard do. on the Judiciary; and Mr. Brown do. on the District Columbia. All these men are from the South.

CHARITABLE.—The fund raised by the people of Great Britain for the establishment of schospital for the education of nurses, in honor of Florence Nightingale, now amounts to $48,000, which is placed at interest. The ill health of Miss Night ingale has prevented the committee from carrying the plan into execution, but there seems to be no reason why the building should not be erected now, so that with returning health the excellent lady may assume the charge of it. Another hospital, or asylum, will probably be built by M'me Jenny Lind Goldschmidt, for the benefit of decayed or worn out singers.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT.

NEW ORLEANS AND GEORGIA.—Groceries and provisions are now being shipped in considerable quantities from New Orleans to the interior towns of Georgia—Macon, Eatonton, and others, via a regular line of sea steamers to Apalachicola, Fla., and river steamers thence to Columbus, Ga. Most of this trade has heretofore gone via Mobile and Montgomery, Ala.

MEMPHIS AND THE NORTH.—On the 6th, the steamship S. R. Spalding arrived at Norfolk. One of the new line connecting Boston with Memphis, Tenn., via the Norfolk and Petersburg railroad and the other lines to Memphis. Three other steamers of the same line are shortly expected out.

NEW ORLEANS AND TEXAS.—By Opelousas railroad to Berwick Bay, thence by steamship, Galveston is but twenty-four hours' run from New Orleans. The Texas and New Orleans Air line railroad, from Houston, will soon be to Liberty, 47 miles. It will be met at the Sabine river, the line between Texas and Louisiana, by the Opelousas road, when there will be railroad connection between New Orleans and Houston, Galveston, San Antonio, and all Texas interior.

THE MISSISSIPPI CENTRAL RAILROAD is now completed to within three miles of Wenona on the north, and four on the south, leaving only seven miles of work to be done.

The trade of Baltimore for the year just closed is estimated at one hundred and fifty millions of dollars in value. The greatest article is dry goods, estimated at thirty millions; the the next, ready-made clothing, seven millions; sugar seven millions; boots and shoes three million six hundred thousand; books, three millions; grain, seven millions; flour, five millions; leather, three millions.

COTTON MANUFACTURED AT THE SOUTH.—Out of four millions of bales of cotton raised last year, only about one hundred thousand bales are estimated to have been manufactured into cloth in all of the slaveholding states—such an insignificant proportion as to be hardly worth mentioning. Of the quantity of cotton manufactured in the slaveholding States the following statement will show how it is divided:

	1855.	1856.	1857.	1858.	1859.
N. Carolina, bales,	18,500	22,000	25,000	26,000	29,000
S. Carolina,	13,500	15,000	17,000	18,000	20,000
Georgia,	20,500	25,000	29,000	24,000	26,000
Alabama,	5,500	6,500	5,000	8,000	10,000
Tennessee,	4,000	7,000	9,000	10,000	13,000

A thousand hands are at work on the Mobile and Ohio railroad between Okalona and the Tennessee line.

The new French tariff law, in course of preparation by the Council of State, and to be presented by the Legislative Assembly, which meets on the 15th of January, proposes a reduction of duties on all articles of the first necessity. Among these cotton is particularly mentioned.

The import of dry goods into New York last year, amount in value to $113,182,647; in 1858, $61,599,527; in 1857, to $90,519,-000.

The Hartford Times says: A man called at our office on Monday who is about to start for Alabama, to commence a hatter's shop and factory there. The trade from this quarter having been much injured, he removes from Connecticut and takes away the business and the hands employed here. In this way Connecticut is made to suffer.

TRADE OF BOSTON WITH NEW ORLEANS.—The immense trade of this metropolis with the great emporium of the South for the year ending Aug. 31, 1859, may be seen from the following statistics. We subjoin also the receipts at New York. It will be seen that Boston greatly leads in most articles. To show the extent of Boston's trade with New Orleans we would state that the cotton and flour alone would annually load more than one hundred and ten large ships:

Receipts at Boston and New York.

	Boston.	New York.
Cotton bales,	355,361	25,815
Sugar, hhds,	5,925	51,231
Molasses, bbls,	9,189	52,393
Flour, bbls,	247,516	71,286
Pork, bbls,	33,435	10,231
Bacon, casks,	2,122	1,820
Lard, kegs,	74,281	117,499
Beef, bbls,	6,357	5,713
Lead, pigs,	22,731	35,392
Whiskey, bbls,	1,785	1,115
Corn, sacks,	7,415	12,819

The trade of the other Atlantic cities, Philadelphia and Baltimore, with New Orleans, is very insignificant, being principally in sugar and molasses. The sale of New Orleans sugar in Boston market has greatly increased within a few years, as in 1858 we received only 1931 hhds., in 1859, 5927 hhds. The coming year's receipts may even reach 10,000 hhds. It is becoming a favorite sugar with our grocers.—Boston Traveler.

OPPOSITION TO REMOVAL OF RED RIVER RAFT.—The inhabitants of the town of Jefferson oppose the opening of the raft because it will destroy their navigation. The little city of Jefferson is situated on Cypress Bayou, which empties its waters into Ferry Lake, and is entirely disconnected with the Red River, except through the agency of this raft, which causes the submersion of a vast alluvial territory. The Caddo (Shreveport) Gazette presents the character of the opposition in the following paragraph: The Caddo lakes are immense sheets of water, formed by the obstruction of the raft in the natural channel of Red River. When the obstruction is removed the water will return to it again. These lakes will be redeemed, thus throwing into the market one of the finest bodies of alluvial land in the world; which will add millions to the wealth of Louisiana. Texas and Arkansas are also deeply interested in the reclamation of swamp lands now rendered worthless by the raft, yet all these invaluable benefits must be sacrificed to establish slack water navigation to Jefferson.

ARKANSAS COAL.—The discovery of a valuable coal region in the Southern portion of Arkansas, some two or three years since, created the belief that New Orleans might ere long obtain her supply from that quarter. A company was organized, but an unfortunate difficulty suspended its operations. The difficulties have been settled, and measures are now in progress of execution to transport a large quantity of the coal to this market. The Arkansas coal is very valuable as a fuel. It burns with great freedom, leaves no cinders, and makes little or no smoke. It is superior to most of the coals brought to our market, and inferior to none.

In this city it has been fairly tried in engines, in the grate and the cooking stove, with complete success. The coal lands lie upon and in the neighborhood of the Ouachita. Ten thousand barrels have been mined and now await transportation to this city. In flatboats or barges it is believed the coal may be brought to the market during eight months of the year. The short distance it is to be transported—the ease with which it can be mined, promises, in case the company succeed in their project, a considerable reduction in the price of this important article of home consumption. As an oil bearing product the Arkansas coal is superior to the Breckenridge. It is probable that for the purpose of gas making it will prove a cheaper article than that now used by our Gas Company. The coal fields of Arkansas are almost inexhaustible. The coal measures traverse several counties.

TELEGRAPHIC.

From Washington.

The 32d ballot for Speaker; whole number of votes cast 219; necessary to a choice 110; Sherman 105; Hamilton 88; Gilmer 13; Reynolds 3; Hickman 2; Scattering 4. Seward recommends the Republicans to concentrate on Gilmer or Corwin. Mr. Gartrell made a speech advocating the peaceable secession of the Southern States. Organization of the House seems as distant as ever.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—A serious personal altercation took place in the House of Representatives yesterday, between Horace F Clark and John T. Haskin, Representatives of the eighth and ninth Districts of New York respectively, in consequence of which there is great excitement here in political circles today.

It is also believed now that the House will never come to a direct vote on the resolution of Mr. Clarke, of Missouri, which declares that no member who has endorsed the Black Republican circular is fit to occupy the Speaker's chair. This is the expressed opinion of Mr. Sherman, who at the same time gives out that should the resolution be withdrawn, he has an explanation to make to the House.

This, however, is generally believed to be a bid of Mr. Sherman and his friends for more votes, and is received for nothing. The common remark of the most disinterested observers, is that a dangerous explosion in the House is now inevitable.

Confirmations in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The greater part of yesterday was spent by the Senate, in executive session, and the following appointments by the President were confirmed: Mr. Patterson of Mississippi, U. S. Consul at Genoa. Mr. Smith, of Mississippi, Consul General at Constantinople. Mr. Barnels, of Texas, Consul at San Juan del Sur. Mr. Leavenworth, of New York, Consul to the Bay Islands. A. H. Brentwood, Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Mr. Hendrick, of Mississippi, Indian Agent for the Territory of New Mexico, and Collector at the port of San Diego, on the Pacific.

Alabama State Convention.

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 12.—The Democratic State Convention continued its session to day, but in making very slow progress. The proceeding were less stormy than on yesterday, although considerable excitement prevailed. The committee on credentials offered a report favorable to the Yancy delegation from Montgomery county. The report was sustained in the convention by a large majority, the vote being 211 yeas against 110 nays. Mr. Scott, of Monroe county, introduced a resolution asserting the right of the Territories to introduce slavery and to demand Legislative and Congressional protection. The resolution requires that the delegates to the Charleston Convention be instructed to insist upon this principle being inserted in the platform of the National Democratic party, and if that convention should fail to recognize this right, the Alabama delegates are instructed to withdraw and call a State Convention, composed of the present delegates. The reports and resolutions were referred to the committe on platform.

Nebraska Territorial Legislature.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 12.—Advices from Nebraska were received here to-day to the 3d inst., from Omaha. The Territorial Legislature commenced its session on the 1st.

A bill has been introduced and passed, providing for abolishing slavery in the Territory. It is believed the Governor will veto the bill.

A bill has also passed the Legislature calling a convention for the purpose of forming a State constitution.

Indiana State Convention.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 12.—The Democratic State Convention assembled in this city to-day, for the purpose of appointing delegates to the Charleston Convention. A large number of delegates were in attendance. In the series of resolutions adopted, was one instructing the delegates to the National Convention to vote for Stephen A. Douglas for President. This resolution was passed by a vote of 265 to 129.

Free Negroes in Missouri.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 12.—Advices from the State capital to-day announce that the bill, for some time pending before the Legislature, in reference to free negroes, has passed both Houses and become a law. It provides that, after a specified time, all negroes found within the limits of the State shall emigrate or return to slavery.

Peace between Buenos Ayres and the Confederation.

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—By an arrival at this port to-day, we have advices from Montevideo to the 15th of November. They confirm the advices before received of a conclusion of a treaty of peace between Buenos Ayres and the Argentine Confederation. The treaty, moreover, had been ratified, and amicable relations permanently restored.

New York Counterfeits in Circulation.

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—Some 50,000 of counterfeit bills on the bank of Kent were put in circulation in this city yesterday. The police are on the track of the offenders.

Judge Boone of New Mexico.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 12.—The Hon. W. F. Boone, Judge of the U. S. District Court for the Territorial District of New Mexico, died in this city to-day.

Two or three hundred persons, mostly girls, were killed on the 10th, at Lawrence, Mass., by the falling of the Pemberton cotton factory.

A man was hung by the people of Natchez, Miss., on the 10th, for attempting rape on a young girl.

On the thirty-third and thirty-fourth ballots, Sherman lacked first, three, then five votes of election. An attempt was made to withdraw him, but fifty members of the party positively refused.

Gen. Johnson and the Army of Utah, go to Arlaona, and Col. Summer's command to New Mexico.

MARRIAGES.

"It is not good for man to be alone."

On the 10th inst., by Rev. Lleus Parker, at the residence of Mrs. L. N. Lane, New Orleans, Mr. WINFIELD SCOTT, of Burtonton, Copiah county, Miss., to Miss EMMA V., daughter of J. A. Lane, of New Orleans.

By the Rev. H. D. Ilerry, on the 11th inst, Rev. JAMES ENGLISH, of the Mississippi Conference, to Miss FRANCES J. OTT, of Washington parish, La.

COMMERCIAL.

MONDAY EVENING, January 16, 1859.

We condense the following statement from the New Orleans Price Current of the 14th instant:—

A fair amount of business has been done in Cotton during the week just closed, but operations have been of quite a moderate character in most other articles, including nearly all descriptions of Western Produce, which continue dull and depressed. In Sugar we noticed some improvement in the early part of the week, since which there has been no important change in that article. The movement in Tobacco is still very limited.

COTTON.—With respect to prices, we have to remark that running lots of Middling, and clean descriptions generally command very full rates, and are to be obtained with difficulty even at outside or still higher figures.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 929,936 bales, against 760,428 bales to same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 273,238 bales.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	6 @ 7	Good Middling	11⅜@11½
Ordinary	8 @ 8	Middling Fair	12⅛@12⅜
Good Ordinary	9⅛@ 9⅜	Fair	—@—
Low Middling	10⅛@10⅜	Good Fair	—@—
Middling	10⅜@10⅞	Good and Fine	—@—

SUGAR.—The sales of the week amount to 5500 hhds. We quote for Inferior and Refining 5 to 6¼; Common to Good Common 6¼ to 7; Fair to Fully Fair 7¼ to 7¾; Prime to Choice 8 to 8½; Centrifugal and Clarified 6¼ to 6¾ cents per pound. The above quotations apply to round lots, but small orders of 5 hhds and under, could not be filled without paying a further advance of ¼ to ⅛ per pound.

MOLASSES.—Total receipts of the week 19,000 barrels. The prices obtained during the week were: Inferior to Fair, 33 to 35 cents per gallon; and Prime to Choice, 40 to 42½ cents; half barrels, 42½ to 46 cents per gallon.

FLOUR.—About 11,000 bbls have been sold during the past week, at from $5 75 to $5 87½ for superfine, $6 to 6 50 for ordinary to good extra, and $6 75 to $7 00 per bbl. for choice extra brands.

GRAIN.—The receipts of Corn continue light. About 11,000 sacks have been sold at from $0 73 to 0 80 for ordinary, and $0 90 for good white. Oats have been in moderate request at 54c to 55c per bushel for good to prime St. Louis. Bran sells at $1 20 to $1 25 for ordinary to choice lots. Wheat sells at $1 15 per bushel for prime red.

PORK.—The principal sales reported through the week were at $17 00 to $17 50 per bbl. for Mess.

BEEF.—We quote Prime Mess at $15 00 per bbl. for extra brands.

BACON.—Shoulders 8½ to 8¾; Ribbed Sides 10½ to 10¾; Clear Sides 12½ to 12¾; Sugar-cured Hams 12 to 15 cents per pound.

LARD.—We quote 10½ to 11c for prime to choice prima, in tes., and 12½ to 13c. for kegs.

BUTTER.—Western generally selling at 10 to 14 cents per pound, according to quality; and Cheese 11 to 12c.

BAGGING AND BALE ROPE.—We quote Kentucky Bagging at 12 to 14½ cents per yard; India Bagging, 11½ to 12c; Bale Rope, hand spun, 7½ to 7¾, and machine made, 7½ to 7¾ cents per pound.

GUNNY BAGS.—Limited parcels sell at 10 cents for light and 11 to 11½c. to heavy and extra heavy bags.

COFFEE.—We quote fair at 11 to 12, and prime at 12½c. per pound.

LIVE-STOCK.—Beef Cattle—Western, 8 to 9c. per lb. net; Texas—ordinary to fair $14 to 20, and choice $25 to 38 per head.

Hogs, selling at 7 to 8c. per pound net.

Sheep—Selling at $2 50 to $5 00 per head.

Veal Cattle—Selling at $9 00 to $11 00 per head.

Milch Cows—Dull, at $30 to $80 per head.

NEW ORLEANS WHOLESALE PRICES-CURRENT.

BAGGING—Kentucky, ₩ yard		12 @	14
	East India	12 @	.....
BALE ROPE—Kentucky, ₩ lb		06¼@	08
GRAIN, ₩ 100 ₩		1 20 @	1 25
COFFEE—Rio, ₩ lb		11¼@	12½
	Havana, good prime green
	Inferior to middling
	Java	18 @	20
	Laguayra	12½@	18¼
	St. Domingo	12¼@	13
CANDLES—Sperm, New Bedford, ₩ lb		40 @	42
	Nantucket
	Adamantine	20 @	22
	Star	17½@	21
CORDAGE—Manilla, ₩ lb		9¾@	10
	Tarred American	12 @	13
FLOUR—Ohio, etc. superfine, ₩ bbl		@	5 75
	Illinois and Missouri	5 75 @

Poetry.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

OUR EVENING WALK.

BY SALLIE M. WHITE.

We saw the slanting sunlight set
Behind the tomb-stones white and bare,
Where waved the long, grey wintry moss,
In deep spoke in the mournful air.

And for vastly we left those haunts,
With silence brooding in their shades;
And on the prairie's yellow grass
Our light feet kissed the bending blades.

Row softly to the balmy air
Flowed out your carelessl, silken curls;
Your rosy cheeks glowed like the west,
My young and happy, joyous girls.

O, beauteous as in olden days
The moon arose up her pathway bine;
And on the purpling sky of eve
The red star in the west was through.

All suddenly the diamond stars
Hung from the heavens o'er moses there;
They brightened in the clear, deep lake;
The stars were shining everywhere.

We saw the long grass on the shore
Mirrored in fringes golden-brown:
And saw another brilliant moon
Floating in depths unmeasured down.

We could have lingered till the stars
Crowned midnight in her royalty;
But duty called my heart away
To the young babe on grandpa's knee.

But this is sad. May your young hearts
Be joyous long, dear girls, ere care—
The highway robber on your path—
Stenle all your dreams and hopes so fair.

Children's Column.

LITTLE CLARA WRIGHT.

Little Clara was the only daughter of Rev. J. L. and Mrs. Mary A. Wright. Mr. Wright was pastor of the Bastrop circuit, Louisiana Conference. Not long since, he left home to attend Conference at Franklin. He told his sweet little Clara and her dear mother, good bye, and kissed them, and commended them to the protection of their Heavenly Father, until he should return home. As soon as Conference was over, he hurried to his little family. How happy he hoped to be when he should be united by his own fireside, his wife seated by him, and little Clara on his knee! But, when only a few steps from his door, some friend meets him and tells him little Clara is dead! Poor little thing, she wished so much to live till her father should reach home. Again and again she said, "O mamma, I do wish papa would come home; don't you, mamma?" But little Clara has gone to her home in heaven, and papa and mamma can meet her there. Jesus has taken her, and will take good care of her. The Editor hopes all his little readers will be so happy as to live with Jesus after they die.

THE ROSE OF SHARON.

Two little girls, of the ages of eight and six, ran merrily about a lovely garden, picking flowers, here a rose, there a lily, and again a violet, till their aprons were full of beauty and fragrance, and they sat down on a mossy bank with their precious load.

"What a splendid heap!" laughed little Ellie, as they compared the flowers between them.

But Marion did not stop to admire. Her head was too full of business ideas, and Ellie soon followed her example, and the two were making wreaths of flowers as diligently as if their lives depended on their exertions.

The birds sang, the bees hummed, the butterflies flitted gaily from flower to flower; but merrier than all were the little girls in the bright sunlight of that warm June day. Suddenly little Ellie plunged her little fat fingers into the heap, and drew out a lovely crimson rose, sparkling with dew drops. "O you beauty!" cried she, and was proceeding to weave it into her wreath. It was indeed the gem of the whole.

Marion looked up. "That's mine, Ellie!" she said quickly, with a flushed cheek, "I picked it;" and she held out her hand, but Ellie drew back. "The heap was for both, Marion; I shall keep the rose."

"Ellie, give it me, I say!" Marion seized her arm violently, half throwing her down; but Ellie wrenched herself from her grasp, and ran, treading upon her own fallen wreath in her haste, while Marion followed with hers dangling from her hand, with the flowers dropping one by one on the new mown grass, shouting aloud in her anger.

What a sad change! Did you ever, dear children, hear the report of a gun on a beautiful spring day, and see a sweet shining bird fall? I do not think it could have been more sad than the sight of these little girls as the sweet bird of peace fell wounded from their hearts. Ellie escaped round the corner of the house, and Marion walked quickly within with her complaint. Ellie was called, and the mother listened to their story by turns.

"Give me the rose, Ellie," she said. Ellie put it in her hand, "I am the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley," said the mother, in a tremulous voice. "Who is speaking, my children?"

"Jesus Christ," said Ellie, instantly sobered.

"Mother is very sorry to see her little girls quarreling about a poor perishing rose, and forgetting Him so soon. Do you remember last night, when we talked of this rose of immortal bloom, how you each hoped it might be planted in your hearts and shed its fragrance there? And do you remember how you knelt and prayed to God for his Spirit to make it grow? And look at this rose," she continued, holding it up before them; "see how its beautiful leaves have fallen through your anger. You have wounded this poor rose, but O, dear children, how have you wounded the Savior?"

Ellie burst into tears. "O mamma, I have been very naughty," she sobbed; "you may have the rose, Marion. Kiss me, and let us play."

That night the children knelt to pray. Ellie again asked earnestly for forgiveness and a new heart. Marion said her prayers and went to bed; but the mother did not neglect to pray that night for her sinful, erring child. That night Marion dreamed she and Ellie were in a beautiful garden filled with many lovely flowers than she had ever seen. Glorious angels were winging their way among groups of little children dressed in white, and singing sweetest hymns. Ellie joined; but Marion's heart was heavy, and she could not sing.

Slowly the voices swelled into exulting harmony, and died away, while an angel chanted the words, "Behold, he cometh!" and a form of surpassing majesty, appeared, attended by blessed spirits. The children flew to meet him, and caught the light of his smile on their joyous faces. Marion advanced too, but the smile vanished as he pointed to a lovely rose which she was treading under foot. Then a cloud came over all, and a voice came forth as Marion sank weeping on her knees: "I love them that love me, and those that seek me early shall find me. To this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and that trembleth at my word."

Still Marion awoke, and throwing her arms around Ellie, prayed earnestly for forgiveness. And the Rose of Sharon was remembered by each young heart.

A LIST OF WONDERS.

Among the thousands of marvelous inventions which American genius has produced within the last few years, are the following, compiled from the Patent Office record:

The report fully explains the principles of the celebrated Hobb's Lock. His "unpickability" depends upon a secondary or false set of tumblers, which touches the real ones. Moreover, the lock is powder proof, and may be loaded through the key-hole and fired off till the burglar is tired of his fruitless work, or fears that the explosions will bring to view his experiments in utterances than he desires.

A harpoon is described which makes the whale kill himself. The more he pulls the line the deeper goes the harpoon.

An locomobile machine has been patented which is worked by a steam engine. In an experimental trial, it froze several bottles of champ, and produced blocks of ice the size of a cubic foot, when the thermometer was up to eighty degrees. It is calculated that for every ton of coal put into the furnace, it will make a ton of ice.

From Dr. Dale's examiner's report, we gather some idea of the value of patents. A man who has made a slight improvement in straw cutters, took a model of his machine through the Western States, and after a tour of eight months, returned with forty thousand dollars. Taxes are ordinary cases—while such inventions as the telegraph, the planting machine, and India rubber patents, are worth millions.

Examiner Lane's report describes new electrical inventions. Among these, is an electrical signaling apparatus, by which the whole is literally "shocked to death." Another is an electro-magnetic alarm, which rings bells and displays signals in case of fires and burglaries. Another is an electric clock which wakes you up, tells you what time it is, and lights a lamp for you at any hour you please.

There is a "sound gatherer," a sort of huge ear-trumpet, to be placed in front of a locomotive, bringing to the engineer's ear all the noise ahead, perfectly distinct, notwithstanding the noise of the train.

There is an invention that picks apples from a confused heap, turns them around with their heads up, and sticks them in papers in regular order.

Another goes through the whole process of cigar-making, taking in leaves and turning out finished cigars.

One machine cuts cheese, another one scours the knives and forks, another rocks the cradle, and seven or eight take in washing and ironing.

There is a parlor chair patented that cannot be tipped back on two legs, and a railway chair that can be tipped back in any position, without any legs at all.

Another patent is for a machine that counts passengers in an omnibus and takes their fare. When a fat gentleman gets in it counts two and charges double.

There are a variety of guns patented that load themselves; a fishing line that adjusts its own belt, and a rat-trap that throws away the rat, and then baits itself and stands in the corner for another.

There is a machine, also, by which a man prints, instead of writes his thoughts. It is played like a piano forte. And speaking of pianos, it is estimated that nine thousand are made every year in the United States, giving constant employment to one thousand nine hundred persons, and costing over two millions of dollars.

LITTLE READERS: The Editor hopes you liked the Children's columns last week, and that you like it this week also. He promises to do a good part by you this year.

Family Circle.

LADIES' SIGNATURES.

It is common, and appropriate, for gentlemen, in signing their names to a letter, or other writing, to use only the initials of their christian names. Ladies, however, should sign the christian name in full, or one of them, if the name be double. The propriety of this will be seen at once, if we remember that, when the initials only are used, it cannot be determined whether the signature is that of a lady or a gentleman, unless it be known in some other way. Mrs. Susan B. Johnson writes to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, enclosing her subscription for the year, 1860—$2 00—and subscribes herself, "S. B. Johnson." A receipt is sent to her as "S. B. Johnson, Esq." And, then, as that is feminine is taken from a lady's name, if only the initials appear. Always write the first name, if you have a double, and the full name, if you have only single christian name. Initials are masculine appendages, like mustaches. And ladies, after they are married, should adopt their former surnames as their middle names, instead of dropping them altogether. Miss Edith Mayfield, marries Mr. James Shannon. She should then be Mrs. Edith Mayfield Shannon, and so sign her name. It is pleasant and appropriate, every way.

THE CLERGYMAN'S LIEUTENANT.

The following amusing story, will, we trust, do good. Some of the readers of the Advocate may be acquainted with Miss Jellaby, for aught we know. If we should "hurt her feelings," or the feelings of any of her relations, by publishing this joke upon her, we should be very sorry, but it is too good to be lost. However, we must say that we do not admire the practice of marrying cousins.

Miss Jellaby rose at six one beautiful August morning, and throwing open her chamber window, sniffed once or twice at the fragrance coming up from the roses in the garden below. Then she busted a moment for her spectacles upon the bureau, and putting them on, looked eagerly at Randall Cottage over the way. A very modest, pretty little house it was, with roses and syringas growing under each window, and woodbine and jessamin climbing over the door; but Miss Jellaby was not admiring its beauty just then. She looked up at a front window on the second floor, and gave a vicious snort.

"As I expected! She isn't up yet, and here it is six o'clock! And where is he, I wonder?"

Before she had time to answer the question, as it was asked—mentally—the front door of the cottage opened, and Miss Jellaby, shrinking behind her curtain, saw a handsome, sun-burned man come out, and go down the garden walk, with a cigar in his mouth. It was easy to see by the slight roll in his walk, that he was a sailor, though for the matter of that, his bearing, handsome face, and frank, hearty manner, would have told the tale, if he had never stirred a step. With his hands in his pockets, he sauntered among the roses, bending down now and then, as if to say good morning to the fairest, and always removing the cigar from his lips when he did so.

"He couldn't do more if he was speaking to a woman," said the spinster, applying her eye to a hole left purposely in the white curtain. "The man is mad about flowers, I do believe, and she is a touch beyond him, if such a thing can be. Ah, there she comes—and dressed in blue gingham, too. I wonder what her morning gowns cost her through the year? And her slippers—oh, mercy, there they go right through the wet—well, there——"

Words failed the worthy spinster. Meanwhile the owner of the slippers (and very pretty little affairs they were—bronze, laced daintily and rosetted with a spangle that shone like a dew-drop) tripped down the walk, so lightly that the gentleman did not hear her step, and coming upon him as he bent over a bed of violets, gave him a push that sent him on his face among them. To see her laugh—to see him slunder up and chase her through the alleys—to see him kiss her, when he pursued her at last in his strong arms—and to see her pretend to box his ears for it—was a sight for a loving heart to watch—but Miss Jellaby, over opposite, nearly fainted away with horror. She rang her bell violently, and a square-faced, sour-looking woman, who had lived with her for years, made her appearance.

"Susan!"

"Well," said the amiable domestic, briefly.

Before Miss Jellaby could speak, the unconscious pair on the opposite garden transgressed against propriety again.

"Walking up and down in broad daylight, with his arm around her waist—just look at her, Susan! Do you mean to stand there and tell me that that man is only her brother?"

"Dear me, ma'am—how can I tell? I only know that they look alikn, and that they have the same name."

"How do you know?"

"Because I saw their linen one day at the laundresses, and here was marked Helen Graham, and his Philip Graham. And their servant told the woman that she had always lived with Miss Helen and Master Philip, when they were at their own home in England. What more do you want?"

"Susan, you will break my heart yet—I am sure of it! Is it possible you knew all this? When did you find it out?"

"Tuesday."

"And this is Friday. For three whole days you have kept me in this disgraceful ignorance! Susan, we shall have to part!"

"Good Lord, Miss Jellaby, how was I to know that I ought to come and tell you!" said Susan, tartly. "I'm sure it's no great news, after all is said and done."

"Humph! That we shall see, later on. It's my opinion that some one ought to speak to Mr. Fullerton."

"The minister? What for?"

"Are you such a fool, Susan, as not to see what it all means. Miss Helen and Master Philip, indeed! I wondnr at your swallowing such a story. They are no more brother and sister than you and I are!"

"Well, what are they, then?"

"That remains to be told—the wretches! But Mr. Fullerton will soon set them to rights. I shall go and see him after breakfast. I don't know what the poor man would do without me."

"Have some peace, I anppose," muttered Susan, under her breath, as she followed Miss Jellaby down to the parlor. Susan loved her mistress, and was a faithful servant to her, but she detested scandal of all kinds, and never could be brought to take that interest in other people's business, which was considered right and proper by the worthy spinster.

Breakfast being over, Miss Jellaby sallied forth to the parsonage.

The good pastor looked up with a meek sigh, as that lady entered his study.

The clergyman was a quiet, peace-loving man, somewhat timid withal, and the spinster always overpowered him with her arguments, when she attempted to do so. She stayed nearly half an hour with him; at the expiration of that time people who were on the lookout saw her conveying the unhappy parson in the direction, and, at last, through the very gate of Randall Cottage.

A tidy-looking old servant admitted them, ushered them into a pleasant nursery-room, and said she would go and tell her mistress of their arrival. Mr. Fullerton sat on the edge of his chair, very uneasy in his mind, and wishing with all his heart that he was at home again. Miss Jellaby strode up and down the room like a dragoon, eying everything about her, and making observations in an under tone, which, however, he could not help hearing.

"Such extravagance! Look at that carpet, now—all roses and lilies, and straggling green vines. Why can't they be contented with drugget, as I am."

She took another turn.

"And a guitar! Spaniards, I don't doubt; or Italians; and the rest follows, as a matter of course. Mr. Fullerton, I believe these people are heathens!"

"Hardly, I think, or they never would come to church last Sunday."

"Oh, you don't know that; perhaps they had some private end to gain by it," said Miss Jellaby.

The spinster's unreasonable suspicions tickled Mr. Fullerton beyond measure. She saw him laughing, and grew indignant.

"Let those laugh that win, I say, Mr. Fullerton. I don't doubt you will feel more like crying before this business is settled."

"Nut I," said the minister, with a rueful look.

"A crucifix, as I am a sinner!" she murmured a moment afterwards. "There, Mr. Fullerton, what did I tell you! hanging on the wall here in broad daylight. Shall I pull it down?"

"Are you beside yourself, Miss Jellaby!" said Mr. Fullerton, springing up and arresting her hand just in time.

The sound of voices and laughter in the garden prevented her giving him what she called, "a piece of her mind." There was a race up the broad path, that sobered into a walk when the young couple neared the windows, followed by the old servant, who had been into the grounds to call them.

They entered the room together, flushed with their frolic, but looking happy and pleased to meet the clergyman.

"Sin wears a different face from that," he said, to himself, as he shook hands with them. They turned to the spinster, who had bolstered herself up against the chimney piece, and stood eying them with sour disdain.

"Your neighbor, Miss Jellaby," said Mr. Fullerton, adding, in a low whisper to her, as they sought about the room for easy chairs: "It's all a mistake, my good creature—there's nothing wrong here. I'll have nothing to do with the matter. Say nothing, and let this pass as a morning call."

"'Say nothing' indeed! Mr. Fullerton, I am astonished at you!" was her reply, too audibly made, however, for Mr. Graham heard it, though he was too courteous to look surprised.

"Pray take this easy chair, Miss Jellaby. Can I offer you some wine, Mr. Fullerton?" said Helen, who wondered inwardly at the strange behavior of her guests.

"No, my child," said the clergyman, kindly, "I will touch nothing during this visit. Some other time I hope to come again. I can only express my sorrow at having been pursuaded against my better judgment to enter these doors on such an absurd errand—and leave you."

"My dear sir, forgive me if I say I do not quite understand!" exclaimed the captain, while Helen made up her mind that both her visitors were mad.

"I will tell you at another time," said Mr. Fullerton, nervously. "I will only say, in explanation of this intrusion, that it was caused by a most ridiculous mistake. Miss Jellaby, will you allow me to accompany you home?"

Miss Jellaby folded her arms, looked at them all viciously, and thundered out—

"No!"

"Is she mad?" whispered Helen to the clergyman. "What does it all mean?"

Miss Jellaby heard her.

"It means this, madam, this and nothing more, that if Mr. Fullerton is to be ensnared by a pretty face, and frightened out of doing his duty, I am not!"

"Was there ever such an unfortunate piece of business. Miss Jellaby, I cannot allow you to commit such an act of folly, or to insult these young creatures. I command you, as your master, not to speak."

"I take no orders from a man who shrinks from his duty," said the spinster, loftily,

"My dear sir, (turning to the captain,) it seems I cannot spare you this infliction, so I may as well tell you what this good lady means. She lives opposite you, as you already know ——"

"And she has seen you, time and again, when you thought yourselves quite alone—remember that!" chimed in the sharp voice of the spinster.

"Do be quiet, my dear Miss Jellaby. As she says she has often seen you——"

"Kissing!" exploded from the thin lips.

"Miss Jellaby, either you or I must be silent. From these things she has drawn her own conclusions, and I am ashamed to say that for a brief space she persuaded me into believing them. I need not add that from the instant you entered this room, my suspicions vanished, and I would readily stake my life, this moment, upon your perfect integrity."

"But, my dear sir," said Captain Graham, smiling, "of what does this lady suspect us?"

"Tell them, Miss Jellaby, I will not!"

"Pretty behavior, I am sure, to leave the worst part to me, Mr. Fullerton. However, no one shall say I shrunk back from my duty!"

"We are waiting to know what heinous crime we have committed," said Captain Graham, drawing the bewildered Helen close to his side. Miss Jellaby gasped at the caress; then it seemed to give her fresh energy.

"Before my very eyes, sir!"

"What do you mean?"

"I suppose you will kiss her next."

"Well—now you mention it—I think I will." And he did! Miss Jellaby nearly fainted away with horror.

"Mr. Fullerton—how can you stand there so quietly, and watch this shameless conduct? As for you, sir," she added, turning to the good-humored captain, "you need not think every one will tolerate your audacious——"

"Take breath, my dear Miss Jellaby."

"It is infamous," shouted the enraged spinster. "Brother and sister, indeed! You are no more her brother than you are mine, Captain Graham!"

"I know it. I never said I was."

Mr. Fullerton looked rather puzzled, Miss Jellaby was triumphant.

"Well—you are brazen about it, I must say! This town will soon be too hot to hold you, you may depend upon it."

"I never knew it was a crime not to be a woman's brother, before," said the captain, quietly. "However, there is a relation between us, if it please you any better."

"What is it?"

"I am her cousin—the ward of her father, and I have always lived with her family in England."

"Oh!"

There was a world of meaning in that simple ejaculation.

"Also, I have the honor to be ——"

"Her Husband!"

Mr. Fullerton uttered a most unclerical "hurrah!" and shook hands with the young couple over and over again.

"Her—her husband!" faltered the old maid. "I—I never thought of that!"

"Allow me to hope, madam, that you will have your wits about you before you try to create another scandal," said the captain, suavely. "I have the honor to wish you a very good morning."

He held the door open as he spoke—she could but take the hint, and rushed out of the house, and into her own, in a state of mind verging upon distraction. Staying to be laughed at and sympathized with, was what she could not endure—the cottage was shut up the next morning and she and Susan were far away. Miss Jellaby had found her match, and the village has known peace since her departure—for the first time!

Obituaries:

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

REV. WATERS W. GREER, was born in Green county, Ga., August 11, 1796, and died in Claiborne parish, La., Sep. 9, 1859, aged sixty-three years and twenty-nine days.

At an early age he was made a subject of saving grace, and united himself to the M. E. Church, and lived a faithful member, till called to his reward. For many years he served the church as class leader, in which he was greatly blessed. In 1856 he was licensed to preach, and served the church acceptably, until he became the victim of that terrible disease, cancer, which ended his career.

Bro. Greer was a Christian of fervent piety, being happy almost all the time. In his long and painful affliction he was never heard to murmur. His confidence in Divine grace was unshaken. He died in great peace, leaving a large family and numerous friends to mourn.

Atlanta, Ark., Dec. 28th 1859. J. TURRENTINE.

MISS MARY A. BENNETT, daughter of Mrs. S. E. Bennett, was born in Green county, Ala., Dec. 9, 1834, professed religion and joined the M. E. Church in 1854, and died at the residence of her mother, in Sumter county, Alabama, December 23, 1859.

The closing scenes of the life of this pious young lady were such as we rarely witness. Hers was a most triumphant death. Addressing her mother, she spoke thus: "It seems hard for you, dear mother, that myself and sister should be taken almost simultaneously from you, but it is well for us; my sister embraced religion one day, and I the next—she was called from earth in one week, and I in the next. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away—blessed be the name of the Lord." Finally calling all her friends and relations around, she bade each farewell and exhorted them to meet her in heaven, and with an countenance glowing with the radiant light of heaven itself, she repeated "farewell to all, and to all the things of this life; I am going to a land where sickness, sorrow, pain and death are felt no more," and requesting the lines of a beautiful hymn to by sung, and prayer, she gently fell asleep in Jesus.

The testimony of all is, that her conversation gave to each more enlarged ideas of Christian experience, and a more distinct conception of the power and preciousness of religious truth.

Therefore, though she crossed the threshold of eternity, yet her name will continue to be embalmed in the memory of many sorrowing friends.

J. S. B.

Sumterville, Ala., Jan. 8, 1860.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

C. V. MURPHY, Durant, Mi. W. SYKES, New Orleans La. S. DONLY, Middleton, Mi.

MURPHY, SIKES & CO., COTTON FACTORS and Genaral Commission Merchants, No. 42 Union street, New Orleans.
jy 20-6m

W. A. GROADWELL. A. P. HAYNES.

BROADWELL & HAYNES, (Formerly BROADWELL & PAYNE) COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 40 UNION STREET, N. O.

HAVING RETIRED FROM BUSINESS, I TAKE PLEASURE IN soliciting for my former Partners, BROADWELL & HAYNES, the patronage and confidence of my friends, believing their experience, capacity and means, will merit its continuance, and enable them to give general satisfaction. [jel] M. U. PAYNE.

W. R. STUART, New Orleans. DR. R. A. JAMES, Madison Parish, La.

STUART & JAMES, No. 42 Union street, New Orleans.

HAVE ASSOCIATED THEMSELVES TOGETHER for the purpose of conducting a COTTON FACTORAGE and GENERAL COMMISSION BUSINESS; are prepared to make the usual Advances to planters, in the way of supplies, etc., and respectfully solicit patronage

B. M. LOWE & CO., COTTON FACTORS AND General Commission Merchants, No. 97 GRAVIER STREET, New Orleans.
ap6

MR HUGH LUCAS HAVING BECOME A PARTner in our house, from this date, we beg leave to call your attention to our increased facilities to fill all orders, from our large and well-selected Stock of GROCERIES, PROVISIONS, WINES, LIQUORS, etc., etc. We remain, your obedient servants

COOPER & NEIBERT,
New Orleans, Dec. 1st, 1858. 27 and 29 Common st.

W. COOPER. J. C. NEIBERT. H. LUCAS.

COOPER & NEIBERT, WHOLESALE GROCERS, Nos. 27 and 29 Common street, New Orleans.

PILCHER, GOODRICH & CO., COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS and Commission Merchants, No. 47 Carondelet, corner Union street, New Orleans. jy11-1y

A. H. May & Co., COTTON FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION Merchants, No 94 Gravier street New Orleans. an21y

J. O. PAYNE. J. P. HARRISON. G. W. HUNTINGTON. WM H. DAMERON

Payne & Harrison, COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 51 Union street, New Orleans. dec7-1y

S. L. WALKER, New Orleans. SOBT. C. HUTCHINSON Caddo Parish, La.

Walker & Hutchinson, COTTON FACTORS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 87 Carondolet street, New Orleans. je28

J. BOYD & Co., Cotton Factors, Receiving & Forwarding Merchants, No 4 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.
apr 17-1y

LEONARD FASH. P. B. LAURANS.

LEONARD FASH & Co., COMMISSION MERCHANTS, And Dealers in Western Produce, 61 MAGAZINE STREET, NEW ORLEANS.
Oct 24.

LANE, SALTER & CO., (Successors to LANE, MAYFIELD & Co.) COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 79 St. Charles street, New Orleans. jy5-1y

JOHN F WYCHE & Co., COTTON FACTORS and COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No 119 Common street, New Orleans. my2-1y

TEXAS LAND AND STOCK FOR SALE.

FOR SALE a tract of land situated in San Patricio County, within a few miles of the coast, containing about 4,500 acres, well timbered with musqueet, oak, pecan, &c., and having near its centre a never-failing lake of clear, fresh water.

To parties desirous of emigrating to Texas either for farming or stock-raising purposes, this land offers inducements unsurpassed by any location in the State

ALSO,

One tract containing about 2,500 acres, situated on the Sans Creek, in Refugio County, within five miles of saltwater, and about the same distance from the town of St. Mary's, the terminus of the proposed Aransas and San Diego Railroad.

Titles to both the above tracts perfect.

A Stock of Cattle will be sold with either of the above tracts, if desired.

For terms and further particulars address the undersigned, at New Orleans, La.

dec21 3m P. R. RYRNE, 41 Magazine street.

Glad Tidings to the Afflicted!
RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

Can be Cured, without hindrance from business or restriction of diet

THE ANTI-ARTHRITIC WINE is the most effectual remedy for Gout, Rheumatism and Neuralgia ever discovered. It is

SANCTIONED BY THE FACULTY and endorsed by hundreds who have used it. If you are a sufferer, send at once and get a bottle and be cured.

J. C. DuBOSE & CO., Agents for the U. S., Mobile, Ala.
For sale in New Orleans by J. WRIGHT & CO., dec.28 1y Chartres street.

To Merchants and Planters.
MANUFACTURERS' COMMISSION HOUSE: LARGE STOCK OF BOOTS, SHOES, AND HATS.
CALL AND EXAMINE THE STOCK,
....AT....
No. 41 Magazine st., opposite the Arcade, NEW ORLEANS.
nov 14 R. W. RAYNE.

FOR SALE—TWO VALUABLE TRACTS OF LAND, SUITABLE for Sugar or Cotton Plantations, fronting on each side of Vermillion river: one, about three quarters, and the other a mile below Perry's Bridge, where there is a flourishing Methodist Church.

Apply to E. EWING, Abbeville, La., or,
E. OLIVER, Christian Advocate Office, New Orleans.

EDUCATIONAL.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE, ALABAMA

THE patrons and friends of the Huntsville Female College are hereby informed that the state of my health having compelled me to retire from the discharge of the active duties of the Presidency, the Trustees have elected Rev. J. N. Hank, A. M., President pro tem. Assisted by the faithful and efficient corps of teachers so long connected with the institution, he will conduct the entire routine of College duties upon the plan which past experience has shown to be so successful in properly training the minds, morals, and manners of the pupils.

To those who are acquainted with our town and college, it is unnecessary to say anything more. To others I would present the following statement of facts:

1. Huntsville, on the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, in a charming valley, girt about by mountains, is far famed for its beauty and for its healthfulness. Pure water is abundantly supplied from a mammoth spring near the centre of the town.

2. The College edifice, erected at a cost of between thirty-five and forty thousand dollars, is 164 feet in length, 52 feet in breadth, and three stories high.

It is supplied with gas-light, and furnished with all requisite modern conveniences.

3. The officers and teachers, fourteen in number, are of the highest talents and attainments. All of those employed in the Literary department, and nearly all of those in the Ornamental and Domestic departments, are Southerners by birth and education.

4. The institution is supplied with a large collection of maps, globes, a geological cabinet, and very full and costly apparatus for the illustration of Natural Science.

☞ Rev. Wellborn Mourey, appointed by the Tennessee Conference of the M. E. Church to the charge of Huntsville station, will assist in the duties of the chaplaincy; and while no sectarian views will be inculcated, he will give especial attention to the moral culture of the pupils. He and his lady will reside in the College.

☞ The Boarding department will be under the supervision of Mrs Walpole, who is admirably adapted to the duties of her position.

☞ The next Session will commence on Monday, the 30th of January, 1860. For further particulars address Rev. J. N. Hank, Huntsville, Ala. 51 A. R. KIRWIN.

Whitworth College for Young Ladies, BROOKHAVEN, LAWRENCE CO., MISS.,

Rev. J. P. Lee, President; assisted by efficient and thorough teachers.

THE exercises of the above Institution will commence January 4th, 1860, and close June 20th.

Commencement of 1860—Wednesday, June 20th. Annual examination begins Friday, June 15th. Commencement Sermon on Sunday, June 17th.

EXPENSES, RATES OF TUITION, &c.

(The term will embrace two sessions of twenty weeks each.)

BOARD, (including Furniture, Rooms, Attendance of Servants, Washing, Lights, Fuel, &c.,) per session of 20 weeks,	$70 00
PRIMARY DEPARTMENT.—Reading, Spelling, Writing, Mental Arithmetic and Geography	15 00
ADVANCED CLASS.—The above with History, Grammar, Arithmetic, etc.,	20 00
SOPHOMORE CLASS.—Ancient Geography, Rhetoric, Physiology, Botany, Arithmetic, History, Composition, Algebra begun,	25 00
JUNIOR CLASS.—Algebra, Geometry, Philosophy, Chemistry, Astronomy,	25 00
SENIOR CLASS.—Moral and Intellectual Philosophy, Logic, Political Economy, etc.,	25 00
CONTINGENT FEE each Session,	1 00

EXTRAS.

French and Latin, each,	12 00
Lessons on Piano or Guitar,	25 00
Use of Instrument,	5 00
Lessons in Embroidery,	12 00
Drawing,	10 00
Painting in Water Colors,	15 00
Grecian and Oriental, each	12 00
Painting in Oil,	25 00

☞ TERMS OF PAYMENT—Each Session in advance.

The Boarding Department will receive the especial attention of Rev M. J. Whitworth, Proprietor.

For circulars apply to Rev. J. P. Lee, or Rev. M. J. Whitworth.

January 2nd, 1860. 4t

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, GREENSBORO', ALA.

THE exercises of the Second Term of the Scholastic year will commence on the second Wednesday of February, and close on the first Wednesday of July, which is Commencement day. The Collegiate department of the University opened in October last, with very flattering prospects.

FACULTY:

Rev. BR. WIGHTMAN, President, and Professor of Moetal and Moral Science.
Rev. DR. WADSWORTH, Prof. of English Literature.
O. F. CASEY, A.M., Prof of Ancient Languages.
J. C. WILLS, A.M., Prof. of Mathematics.
N. T. LUPTON, A.M., Prof. of Chemistry.

EXPENSES:

Tuition per session, $25; Contingent Fee, $2; Boarding for session of Two terms, $160, including room and furniture.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE.

THE Second Term of this Institution will commence on the 18th of January, 1860.

The Preparatory School of the College, under supervision of Prof. W. F. SLATON, will resume its exercises the 2d day of January, 1860.

It is highly important for students to be present at the opening of the Term. For further information apply to Dr. W. J. FLEMMIT, or the undersigned. JOHN T. DUNKLIN, Auburn, Ala., Dec. 16, 1859. Sec. of Faculty.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, Corner of Camp and Common Streets, ENTRANCE NO. 80 COMMON STREET.

[Established in 1856.]

OPEN DAY AND EVENING THE ENTIRE YEAR.

A full course of instruction in this institution embraces Double Entry Book-keeping, Commercial Calculation, Commercial Law, and Penmanship. Gentlemen can enter for the full course, or any branch they desire, and at any time, as there is no class system, no copying from books, and no memorizing of arbitrary rules.

FACULTY:

GEO. SOULE M A, Principal and Professor of the Theory and Practice of Double Entry Book keeping, Lecturer on the Science of Accounts, Exchange, Commercial Correspondence, etc., etc.

W. J. KENNON, Practical Accountant, Associate Professor in Book-keeping Department.

J. M. DILLINHAMMER, Esq., Lecturer on Commercial Law.

H. C. SPENCER, Professor of Plain, Ornamental, and Epistolary Penmanship.

GEO SOULE, Teacher and Lecturer on Commercial Calculations.

J. B ANDERSON, Esq., Special Lecturer on Exchange, Business Customs, Commercial Ethics, etc., etc.

LEON LAGRIN, Professor of Languages.

This is the only Commercial School in the city where Double Entry Book-keeping is taught practically, and as practiced in the New Orleans business houses.

Each of our young gentlemen has his respective desk, and proceeds in the opening, conducting, and closing of books, under all the variety of circumstances that can possibly occur in the various departments of business.

Merchants, Book keepers, and young gentlemen wishing instruction, are respectfully requested to call and examine our practical forms and peculiar manner of teaching.

For catalogues containing full information, and Balance-sheet Circulars, the most magnificent work of the kind ever executed in the United States, address, GEO. SOULE, New Orleans.

KENNER ACADEMY:

A Boarding and Day School, for Boys and Young Men.

VICTOR SCHELINA, PRINCIPAL.

THIS Institution is located in the town of Kenner, Jefferson Parish, La., ten miles from New Orleans by railroad, and sixteen miles by river. The location is extremely delightful and pleasant. The health of the place is unsurpassed during the whole year.

The course of study is thorough, embracing the English, French, Spanish, German, Latin, and Greek languages. Students can be prepared for any class in college, or for business pursuits.

The Academy Year is divided into Two Sessions of Five Months each, commencing on the First of October and March, respectively. Scholars will be received at any time during the year; none for less time than one session.

For further particulars see circulars, or address Principal.

PROFESSIONAL.

JAS. J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Livingston, Alabama.
[au24] ☞ Will Practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties.

DR. E. D BEACH, HAVING RESUMED THE practice of Medicine, offers his Professional services to the citizens of New Orleans.

N. B.—Special attention paid to diseases of the SEXTUM, PILES, FISTULA IN ANO, ETC.—Fistula in ano permanently cured without the use of the knife, cautery, pain, or confinement whatever. Office No. 9, Barracks street near Canal. ap27.

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY AT LAW, BATON Rouge.
REFERENCES—Henderson & Gaines and Chinn & Bolton, New Orleans; W. S. Pike and A. Matta, Baton Rouge.

B. D. & A. W. ROBERTS, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Floyd, Carroll Parish, Louisiana.

J. O. FUQUA. J. G. KILBOURNE.

FUQUA & KILBOURNE, ATTORNEYS AT LAW, CLINTON, LOUISIANA,

PRACTICE in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana, East Baton Rouge and St. Helena, and in the Supreme Court at New Orleans. References—Payne & Harrison, Byrne, Vance & Co., Broadwell & Payne, Pritchard & Flower, Edw. Nalle & Co., Rev. H. N. McTyeire, New Orleans. mar 20-1y

Five Hundred Educated Gentlemen.

DESIROUS TO ENGAGE IN A POPULAR EDUCATIONAL ENTERprise. Such is the demand for the introduction of MULKEY'S SYSTEM OF ORTHOEPY AND ORTHOGRAPHY into the Schools of the country, that the Author solicits the above mentioned number of men to assist in its dissemination. The system is the result of nearly forty years' labor by a Native Georgian; is decidedly popular; and Teachers who are using it a la mode Mulkey, say they are teaching children to read and spell two or six times as fast as they did by the ordinary plan, besides securing uniformity of pronunciation. For the encouragement of those who wish to engage in the business I would say, as son of the author, it is paying me about Twenty Five Hundred Dollars per year, clear of all expenses, beside the advantage of constant intercourse with the most intelligent and refined of the land. To engage would only require fifty or a Hundred Dollars Capital; and to acquire the System, only two or three weeks tuition of the author at Nashville, Tennessee. If not convenient to visit the city, one can recover by mail the Charts, Orthoepical and Articulating, used by Lecturers; also a Key to the same, by remitting Three Dollars to my address, Nashville, Tennessee. W. A. MULKEY.

H. H. HAUS, Teacher of Vocal and Instrumental Music, 390 BARONNE STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

☞ Particular attention given to the reading of Music.

PRINTERS' ROLLERS.—THE UNDERSIGNED IS PREPARED TO cast Printers' Rollers of the best quality, upon reception of orders either from city or country, at short notice. It is just as foolish for each press man to cast his own rollers as it is for each man to make his own shirt. Work warranted to be of the best kind.

Address, T BEAULIEU, Office of the Christian Advocate, 112 Camp st

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.—C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 4. WHOLE NUMBER 407.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 25, 1860.

$3.00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE. OFFICE—123 CAMP ST.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

CORRESPONDENCE FROM CHINA.

Shanghai, China, Oct. 17, 1859.

DEAR BROTHER GILLESPIE—I hope to write you a few lines every month, if the Lord permits. I may not always write in an encouraging way, as some of my kind christian brethren would desire, and as I myself would desire. There are many more difficulties attending the christianizing the poor pagan Chinese than some imagine. I have often wept and prayed over the hardheartedness of this people. I have preached day after day, and have related the story of the Cross, and that too with tears in my eyes, and yet not one have I ever seen so deeply convicted as to come then and there and ask me to pray for him. I have seen our native Christians weep and feel their need of more of the love of God. Often have I wept over my congregation, and have returned home with my heart greatly burdened and grieved, that so little regard was paid to the salvation of their immortal souls. I have been ready to cry out "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken us?" They abuse us, and we are derided by them, even when persuading them to turn and live forever. Their minds are filled with prejudices against the christian religion; it has been much more so during the past three months. Every Missionary notices the great change which has taken place, and I fear it will not be better for six or eight months to come, until the difficulty which now exists between England and China shall be settled. It may be worse. We know not what the difficulty may yet lead to; but our trust is in God. Pray for us, dear brother, and our eleven native church members, for they share our abuse. They are persuaded to forsake the religion they have professed, and they are threatened in many ways. Sometimes it is as they go along the street, and when in church, and in their own homes. Placards have been put up on several occasions, threatening destruction to all who believe in the doctrine of Jesus, and especially the native christians. Some are ready to suffer anything, but in others, whose faith is not so strong, there is fear lest they should be persecuted by their own countrymen.

These poor heathen are so attached to the customs of past generations, and to the traditions and fabulous notions of their fathers, that the missionary has that as another great barrier to his laboring among them; and even as to those who have professed the name of Christ, we have daily to teach them, line upon line, and precept upon precept, in order to keep their minds and hearts fixed upon the great truths of the plan of salvation. Man is not able to do this work, but the power is in the hands of God, and we may be the humble instruments in His hands to bring about the conversion of this people unto himself. O, that our christian brethren would unite with us in continual prayer for those who have already come out from among the heathen, that their hearts may be "kept in the love of God." One of our greatest difficulties in preaching to the Chinese is to convince them of the immortality of the soul,—also to convince them that they are sinners and need a Saviour to redeem them from the power of sin. They believe a man has three souls and six spirits, and that these are all separated at death, and are under the immediate direction of Ne-La-Wong, who presides over Hades. They believe what he does with them will be all right, and they become so indifferent as to their future state, that you can scarcely get them to give it an earnest thought. They attach no importance to a renewed state here, and think but little, if at all, about preparation for a future world. But I have found in my experience in China, that preaching from the pulpit is not always the best way to interest them, or engage their earnest attention about their souls. I find that a particular and close dealing with them in private is far more successful. They then are made to feel what is said with a great deal more intelligence, and are led to weigh the matter more seriously, as directed to them, and having particular reference to their own souls. I praise God that on yesterday, Sabbath, there were some four or five men and women, all strangers to me, who seemed touched by the Spirit of God. Perhaps the Lord is about to pour out his blessing upon the work when we were least expecting it. O, that he would so incline their hearts to him that they may be constrained by the love of Christ to flee from sin and perfect themselves in righteousness. May God aid us to continue in the faith, and that our hands may be continually upheld in prayer and earnest supplication for the conversion of this heathen people.

I am very thankful to my kind christian brethren and friends for the earnestness which they have manifested to aid me in my work, and to send aid to our China mission. Within the last six months I have received several small amounts at different times. Last year I received two small remittances, of which I gave account to my Conference. Within the last three months I have received three small remittances, which are still in my hand, of which I will give account to my Conference at its next annual meeting. The last remittance was mostly the contributions of the brethren of Yazoo City. And I am happy to say that a goodly portion of it was from the colored congregation. How this rejoices my heart; poor as they are in this world's goods, they are, many of them, rich in the love of God, and are willing to give of their mite to send the gospel to the benighted heathen. May God abundantly bless them and reward them for their good desires to convert the heathen.

I earnestly desire your prayers that this people may be made to understand their duty toward God as the people of our own beloved land. All of these little mites from the poor are not forgotten by me. They cause tears of gratitude to flow for the love which others manifest for the salvation of this poor heathen people. And I am sometimes made to tremble, lest I use these funds injudiciously. Pray for me, dear brethren, that a poor worm of the dust, a fellow-laborer with you in the glorious work of saving souls, may at all times have the direction of God's Holy Spirit. I would be much pleased if those who give of their bounty or of their penury, would state for what purpose it was sent. O, that God would aid all his people to feel more for the heathen who are without the light of the gospel.

I hope our Board will take into consideration the port of Tangchau, on the promontory of San-Tong province, north of this. It will be a healthy place, among the mountains, and immediately on the sea coast. We ought to have a station there. It is not far from the city of Peking.

By the time this reaches you, Mrs. Lambath, with our two little children and the Chinese boys, will have arrived in New York, if the Lord in mercy favors them while upon the great deep. I will say to brother Miller, as I would say to all who have any desire to see the two boys sent back to preach the gospel to their own dying fellow-countrymen, that intellectual education is not enough to induce them to forsake the loaves and the fishes, but unless they return with the love of God burning in their hearts, and are immediately taken into the interior, away from the poisoning influences of this foreign community, their education only paves the way for their destruction. When they return, let them come with hearts full of love for dying souls. Brother Miller must be the judge about their costume, whether it be Chinese or foreign. May the Lord bless his own glorious work, and "shake all nations," is my earnest prayer.

Your brother in Christ,
J. W. LAMBATH.

Friday, 21st October.

There is no news of any importance politically that I could communicate to you. Our minister, Mr. Ward, has just returned from Japan, and is now in Shanghai. The Chinese have refused to open the ports according to the American treaty, and it remains yet for us to see what course Mr. Ward will take. Our treaty, as it stands now, is considered by almost every body as a mere treaty in words, and consequently valueless. O that God would save this people from any more bloodshed and war. They are beset on every side; and it seems that the old form of Government must be overthrown. The present dynasty has lasted over two hundred years, which is about the usual time for a change.

The three hundred and seventy-five dollars sent to me as a special donation from friends in Mississippi, through the board, I have received, and handed it immediately over to our China mission in this place, for the purpose of renting a house in the city of Shanghai. I pray God's blessing upon the work, and I sincerely desire the prayers of my brethren that I may yet be made the humble instrument in the hand of God in doing some good for this heathen land.

J. W. L.

For the New-Orleans Christian Advocate

SOUTH WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

After reading your recent article on the "Bible Cause in New Orleans," the writer has thought that a few additional remarks would not be altogether inappropriate.

The Anniversary Meeting of the S. W. Bible Society was held on the 25th of December, agreeably to notices in the papers and in the Churches. This meeting, in common with the previous anniversary meetings of the Society, showed the pleasing sight of Churches meeting in fraternal union on the great Protestant platform, the Bible and the Bible Cause. The Rev. Dr. Howard, of the Baptist Church, was to have delivered the sermon or address, but the day preceding the meeting he was unexpectedly called to attend the death-bed of his Mother. Though his absence was regretted, the duties of the evening were ably carried through by Dr. Palmer, of the Presbyterian Church, and Dr. Walker, of the Methodist Church.

The occasion, apart from the able addresses of the speakers, was one of much interest. The statement of the Directors shows the increasing activity and usefulness of the Society. The Report presented was incomplete inasmuch as statistics are still wanting from our Auxiliaries. So soon as issued a copy will as usual be laid on your table.

The outline of Bible progress given in your article comes from some old documents partly in the possession of the Society, and partly in the hands of one of our oldest citizens; they date back to 1813. They are full of interest as throwing light on the progress of religious truth in the early history of our two States—Louisiana and Mississippi. Extracts from these will, if time and space permit it, be published in the forthcoming report. A brief paragraph from the report of the Louisiana Bible Society for 1815, will be interesting, as it shows the state of the great South-western field at that time, as regards the diffusion of God's holy Book: "Some of the Tennessee militia, on their way to New Orleans," says the report "when passing through Nashville, had inquired there in vain for a Bible, not one was to be found for sale. In the month of December last a similar inquiry was fruitlessly made in this city by a gentleman from the Amite, nor is there at this moment a Bible to be purchased in a book store in the city of New Orleans. Last year, 1859, the issues from the Bible House on Camp street, in sales and donations, fell only a little short of $9,000 in value. And there is on hand an average stock of $6000 to supply all the demands of our South-western field.

Union of action is an element of strength; yet individual christians, in general, but little know how much their personal efforts will accomplish. Our report gives an instance of this, which is quoted in your article, but reproduced here, both to correct a typographical error and to do justice to the man. B. Holmes, of De Kalb, a worthy minister and brother, with whom the writer tented at Camp meeting, nearly two years ago, in his Bible tour, took hold of the Bible Cause for his county, Kemper, Miss., hired a distributor, and by his energy and christian liberality had every family called upon and their Bible wants supplied. Over $360 worth of Books were sent him to accomplish this.

The closing paragraph of your article calls for a few words. The Bible work was continued from 1815, but with interruptions and suspensions. The great drawback was in the want of a suitable Depository, and also in the difficulty of providing means for keeping the same. This was so forcibly felt, that in 1850, the Society reorganized itself as the S. W. Bible Society, and set out with the plan of "purchasing or erecting a permanent Depository building." It was further intended to make this building subservient to Bible progress, by having it on such a scale and with such accommodations as would yield a revenue. Hence, one of the early reports of the Society speaks "of the importance of securing an annual income from rentals of the building to defray the current expenses of the Depository." Thus it was, that the present roomy lot, on which the Bible House stands, was purchased by special donations from some of our citizens, whose names appear in the report of 1852. And in the erection of the building itself, the plan adopted was chosen with that especial intention.

One of the constitutional rules of the Society, adopted at a general meeting, and which becomes a law to the Board of Directors, condenses in a few lines the intentions of the founders. It is this:

"The affairs of the Bible House shall be kept distinct from the missionary affairs of the Society."

"The business capabilities of the Bible House shall be turned to the best advantage, so that it may be self-sustaining."

Hence, the Directors have always endeavored to turn the available space to the best advantage, so as to diminish expenses by securing a rental. The present Board of Directors, all business men, and equally apportioned among the denominations, viz.: three Baptists, three Episcopalians, three Methodists, and three Presbyterians, in the exercise of zeal, tempered with sound practical sense, have resolved to lease the available portions of the House, but only to such persons and for such purposes as would comport with the general character of the House. No support is thereby extended to any lessees, it is purely a commercial transaction, in which the parties leasing pay for the accommodation obtained. At the present time, owing in part to the removal of the Young Men's Christian Association from the Bible House, two large and noble rooms are vacant, and are now for lease.

The Directors are desirous of realizing this self-sustaining plan, that all donations to the Bible Cause may be exclusively applied to the Missionary operations of the Society in the supply of its field. This is not so easy of execution as may at first glance appear. Publishers sell their books at an advance on the cost of manufacture so as to realize a profit; the American Bible Society sells its Bibles at or about the cost of manufacture. Booksellers purchasing from publishers, sell at an advance, so that after covering all expenses, they may have a surplus as profit. The South-western Bible Society selling at New York prices, not only does not make any profit, but bears all the expenses consequent on selling, and these are not a few.—Fire Insurance for House; fixtures and stock, or near $20,000. Salaries. State and City taxes; State and City licences; tax on capital; repairs, stationary, &c., &c. Now it is clear that if the rents of the Bible House can be made to pay these expenses, the books can be sold at a lower rate, almost at the cost of manufacture, as it is now. So, that (a fact not generally known) an eight dollar Bible, commercially valued, is sold for five dollars and a half, and others in the same proportion. Books, the finer class of which, it may be added, for type, paper and binding are unsurpassed. To the usual issues of the American Bible Society our Society has added a supply of Bibles in a costlier and richer style of finish, so as to meet the taste of our Southern field.

The above statements merit attention. no religious Society, it is believed, except the Bible Society, sell their books at, or near cost. All add to the price so as to realize a profit. The South-western Bible Society must either add to the price of its books so as to cover expenses, or it must apply a part of its collections to that purpose, or it may turn its house room to use in defraying expenses. Honest differences of opinion may and will exist on these points, but the careful course of the Directors, gentlemen who serve the Society gratuitously may satisfy the friends of the Bible Cause that the interests of the Bible Society are judiciously attended to.

P. M. OZANNE.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

SOUTHERN CHURCH AT WASHINGTON.

MR. EDITOR:—The desire to erect a Southern Representative Church edifice in this city is generally known; but the importance of the undertaking seems not fully to be appreciated. Though only a sojourner, I profess to be acquainted with the facts in the case, and beg leave to offer a few suggestions in regard thereto.

The writer thinks he will place this subject in its true light, by arguing the necessity of this enterprise from the present condition of our country. Torn and dismembered, we are now two distinct peoples under one government. We are divided both politically and religiously. Proscription is uttered from the pulpit, and slave-holders are proclaimed as in league with the devil. Excommunicated, they stand a denounced, unrighteous sect, not fit to hold communion with their maker. You who are more remote from the scene of conflict feel not these things. The battlefield is here. The lion is bearded in his den. Every year brings deeper and more bitter wrongs. We stand a small band, the representatives of Southern rights and Southern institutions, and we hope also, of pure and undefiled religion. Why are we called Southern Methodists? Why this contradistinctive term? The "irrepressible conflict" is begun in the Church. We are not the agressors but the denounced. We abhor mingling slavery or any other political issue with the worship of our Eternal King. The issue has been forced upon us; we are compelled to accept the position we hold. We cannot force ourselves into synagogues from which we have been expelled, and worship and commune with those who denounce us as unholy and unrighteous, for it is expressly declared that no slave-holder can be a man of God. Not only Southern Methodists but Southerners generally behold our situation.

Can we not have a place in which to worship? Shall the thousands who come from your midst have no peculiar temple of worship? Is it possible that the Capital of the United States on Southern soil cannot have one Southern Representative Church? Many read and cast these petitions by, and say, why do they not build it themselves? For eight years have they toiled in pursuit of this object. They have built and paid for one little edifice which stands in a secluded spot. The members are increasing in numbers, and the interest in this cause is on the advance. They desire now to erect a more suitable and commodious building, in a more central part of the city, and one in which they would wish every Southern man to have stock. Do not mistake this for a selfish move. It is not. The congregations are almost half strangers. They desire a large, convenient, and if possible, a splendid edifice for you and for me and for the scattered thousands who are sojourners here, to go and worship the God who has commanded them to be kind to their servants. Let every man immediately respond. Send just anything you please to Mr. W. T. Smithson, who employs half his capital in this enterprise. You will not miss it, and we offer good security.—"He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord."

Mr. Smithson has published at his own expense a Book of Sermons of rarest worth. I believe he proposes to send three books for $5, all the profits to be given to the Church. If you do not want the books send him one dollar by the next mail. It will be "bread cast upon the waters." The money is wanted immediately to buy the lot with. It makes no difference whether you are a Methodist or not, and when you come to Washington you shall have a seat in our Church, in your Church, free of charge.

W. H. B.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

ROBBERS OF GOD!

Who? Why, those Church-members who have not paid their preacher, who served them the past year. The proof. Every church had proper representatives who doubtless attended the first Quarterly meeting. The assessment was, after due discussion, made for the circuit, and each church assessed what was thought they could and would pay. Well, they returned and reported to each church; all knew or might have known how much their church was expected to pay towards the support of the preacher for the year.

They received the preacher; he rendered them the service expected at his hands; they were pleased with him, desired his return—but failed to pay him the amount assessed. Are they able? Yes, fully so—are heaping up to themselves riches daily. But are they morally bound to day? They certainly are. The service has been rendered; they have been the beneficiaries; they promised to pay; and if they do not pay, they have robbed God, through his servants. "In as much as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my servants, ye have done it unto me."

The Lord has solemnly charged the Jews with robbing him in tithes and offerings; and will not God, the judge write these down robbers, now, who thus defraud his servants of their living? Many a preacher's heart has been made to ache, and because of the covetous idolators who live and thrive in Christ's Church, and rob Christ's faithful self-sacrificing servants, to buy more property, and lay up more treasure on earth. And yet such men expect to get to heaven! They are blinded by the God of this world. They are travellers in the broad way that leads to eternal death. Such men are to be pitied. In many respects they are clever, kind, and affable. But they have thought of money, dreamed of money, schemed for money, worked for money, until the love of money has absorbed or blunted their sense of christian duty. They have forgotten what use God intended them to make of it. They make haste to be rich, and lay up treasure on earth, violate the commandment of God, rob Him, and yet hope to get to heaven! May God help them to see their duty and do it, is the prayer of

AN ITINERANT.

WHITEFIELD A PENNSYLVANIA "BARON!"

SCHOOL FOR NEGROES.

The history of Whitfield's "Orphan-House" Academy in Georgia, and, like Cokesbury College, its destruction by fire, is well-known. That Whitefield also had a landed estate, and slaves there, is matter of equal notoriety. All of which he left by will, comprising, "that building commonly called the Orphan-House, at Bethesda, in the province of Georgia, together with all the other buildings lately erected thereon; and likewise all other buildings, lands, negroes, books, furniture, and every other thing whatsoever which I now stand possessed of in the province of Georgia aforesaid, to that elect lady, that mother in Israel, that mirror of true and undefiled religion, the Right Honorable Selina Countess Dowager of Huntingdon."

It is not, however, so well known, that he was also a large land owner in Pennsylvania—in fact a "baron;" but such is the truth. That he held one tract at Nazareth, of 5000 acres is certain; and that he possessed property at Ephrata is, we think, equally true. These interesting facts we gather from the following extracts from the "History of Nazareth Hall, from 1755 to 1855," by Rev. Levin T. Reichel, of Salem, North Carolina. "Nazareth Hall" is the name of a Moravian Academy for boys:

"A century ago the spot now crowned by the stately pile, Nazareth Hall, was still covered by a portion of those primeval forests from which the State of Pennsylvania derived its name. A tract of land, about five thousand acres in extent, Upper Nazareth township, had been purchased in the year 1740 by George Whitefield, the well known Methodist Preacher, but was by him transferred to the Moravian brethren in the year 1743. This domain was known as the 'Barony of Nazareth,' and was nominally the property of the Countess of Zinzendorf. It had the right of Court Baron, the only manor held by the proprietors with that privilege, and was, and indeed is yet, held on the condition of rendering service to them and their heirs, by paying, if demanded, a red rose in June of each year forever.

"Various settlements were gradually formed at Ephrata, Old Nazareth, Gradenthal, Christian Spring, and Friedenthal, which in 1754 included two hundred and seventy-nine souls; but a central point, a manor-house for the large estate, containing a convenient hall for the purposes of religious worship for all the Moravians scattered here and there in the neighborhood, was wanting. This was an indispensable requisite, according to the feudal notions of the time. It was, moreover, confidently hoped and expected that Count Zinzendorf, who had spent about a year in Pennsylvania, would speedily repeat his visit, and extend it to a longer space of time. This was the more desirable as the Brethren's congregations in America were rapidly increasing in numbers and importance, and needed the superintendence of a master-spirit like his. To accommodate him and his retinue of co-laborers, at times not a few in number, the erection of a large edifice on Nazareth estate was resolved upon. Ardent as were the hopes and expectations of the Brethren in Pennsylvania, they were doomed to disappointment, for Count Zinzendorf ended his eventful career of usefulness with his life, in 1760, before he could again accomplish his purpose of revisiting this country.

"Although the original design for which Nazareth Hall was built, was frustrated by the death of the Count, the edifice was subsequently used for purposes in accordance with the general principles of Zinzendorf's plans and ideas. The needful plans and preparations having been completed, the third day of May, A. D. 1756, witnessed the laying of the corner stone of the building. This was an event of great interest, and many brethren and sisters from Bethlehem and other neighboring settlements, took part in the solemnities. The beautiful lawn in front of the stone house at Ephrata, which had been begun by Whitfield and finished by the Brethren, was selected for the religious services of the occasion. * * * *

"The services having been concluded, the congregation formed in solemn procession, and headed by a corps of musicians and the clerical brethren, moved to the site of the proposed building, where the ceremonies of laying the corner stone were conducted by Bro. Lembke, the pastor of Nazareth, aided by Bishop Spangenberg and Bro. Schaly, the architect. The congregation then returned to Ephrata, and a love-feast in imitation of the Agape of the primitive Christian Church was held on the lawn, in the afternoon; first for the children, and afterward for the adult portion of the assembly. Bro. P. Boehler made use of this occasion to narrate his personal recollections of the first commencement of Nazareth in 1740, pointing out the tree under which he had held the first divine service, May 30, 1740, and giving a full and very interesting account of the difficulties and trials attending the first settlement."

Whitefield's Pennsylvania enterprise appears to have been abortive, and the only other reference to it that I have been able to discover—his biographers seem to be silent upon the subject—is in the Memoirs of James Hutton, of London, a celebrated Moravian, and, in early life, a friend of John and Charles Wesley. He was also acquainted and corresponded with Dr. Franklin. Hutton died in 1795, aged eighty, but his memoirs, by Daniel Denham, were not published until 1856. They contain some new and singular facts concerning Mr. Wesley. But to the extract in reference to Whitefield.

It appears that about the year 1753, the Moravian brethren, with Count Zinzendorf at their head, had fallen into great financial embarrassments, that great efforts had been made to discharge their pressing liabilities, and that some of their creditors were pacified. All the creditors, however, were not satisfied; for some of them, especially among the Methodists, were very bitter. One was Miss Stonehouse, a member of the London congregation; the sister of George Stonehouse. She had bought of Mr. Whitefield his claim of £2000 on the land surrounding Nazareth, in America, which was yet unpaid for by the diaconate, although Spangenberg had repeatedly solicited them to discharge it.

"Whitefield's 'Expostulatory Letter' to Zinzendorf was just then (4th of May, 1753), published, containing the most violent attacks upon the character of the Count and his brethren. It caused much uneasiness to their political and mercantile friends, on account of its probable effect upon the public mind. Legal proceedings for the recovery of the aforesaid debt soon followed; on which occasion Mr. Heaton himself (a lawyer who had been the Count's attorney), alarmed the brethren by avowing his intention of making the Count a bankrupt, and leaving him in the hands of the creditors. Miss Stonehouse continuing to press her claim, Messrs. Hankey and Reid advanced the money at the request of the Count."

Concerning the troubles through which the Count and brethren passed this year, Mr. Benham remarks, "It was regarded as a portion of the 'sifting time,' such, however, as rather strengthened than destroyed faith, and drew closer, at least externally, the bond of union."

It is matter of interesting conjecture what Mr. Whitefield's object was in purchasing the land, and building the large stone house at Ephrata, for the account states, "that edifice contained, in addition to the meeting-hall of the congregation, an establishment for the care of the infant children of the Moravian settlements, and hence was familiarly termed the 'Nursery.'" Was this to be another Orphan house?

Such was the tenor of the inquiry that occupied our mind, while intently searching for an answer, when we rather unexpectedly fell upon the following satisfactory solution. Dr. Gillies, in his Memoirs of Whitefield, quotes from the journal of Mr. William Seward, travelling companion in America of Mr. Whitefield. Mr. Seward, under date of April 9th, 1740, states that Mr. Whitefield desired him to return to England on several important affairs, especially relating to the Orphan House. "I am moreover," says he, "to collect subscriptions for a Negra school in Pennsylvania, where Mr. Whitefield proposes to take up land, in order to settle a town for the reception of those English friends whose hearts God shall incline to come and settle there."

And on the 22d of the same month, writing from Philadelphia, Mr. Seward remarks:

"Agreed with Mr. Allen for five thousand acres of land on the forks of Delaware, at £2,200 sterling, the conveyance to be made to Mr. Whitefield, and after that assigned to me, as security for my advancing the money. Mr. Whitefield proposes to give orders for building the Negro school on the purchased land, before he leaves the province."

Such is the result of our researches on this interesting and important subject. We have seen that Whitefield did not dispose of his Pennsylvania "Manor" until 1743, three years after the purchase; and that orders were to be given to build the same year it was purchased, namely, in 1740. This was before the separation of Wesley and Whitefield on doctrinal grounds, occasioned by Whitefield embracing Calvinistic theology, and when Mr. Whitefield was on friendly terms with the Moravians. The next year, 1741, the separation between Wesley and Whitefield took place. Whitefield subsequently became estranged from the Moravians. Had these things any influence in causing him to change or renounce his plans for the prosecution of his Pennsylvania enterprise? Who were those "English friends" to whom Mr. Seward alludes, that Mr. Whitfield expected "to come and settle on his lands?" What is the history of the affair for the three years from 1740 to 1743? And what finally defeated the project? Who will answer these questions?

Dr. Belcher, in his interesting "Biography" of Whitfield, makes no allusion to these circumstances. In 1858 when I first became aware of the facts related by Mr. Reichel, in his "History of Nazareth Hall," (having received by the hands of my respected friend, Dr. Sargent, a presentation copy of that work from the Rev. Edward H. Reichel, Principal of Nazareth Hall, and brother of the author), but before I had refreshed my memory by a reference to the extracts from the journal of Mr. Seward, I deemed them, together with the reference to Mr. Denham's work, of sufficient importance to communicate to Dr. Belcher. The Doctor's reply is as follows: "I thank you for your references to the 'History of Nazareth Hall,' and to 'Benham's Memoirs of Hutton,' the latter I purchased yesterday, and the former the bookseller promises me in a few days. The general facts I knew, but had to annul them in the volume, like many others, for lack of room. The volumes I have obtained for use in other things, and again I thank you for your mention of them." The sudden and lamented death of Dr. Belcher is of too recent occurrence to be forgotten. Whether or not he revised his work for the press before his decease I am not informed. That all mention of such important facts should be purposely omitted in a life of Whitfield written "with special reference to his labors in America," is very singular and much to be regretted.

It is to be hoped the chapters on Whitfield, in the next edition of Stevens' Inimitable history of Methodism, will be more full and complete, as there is no doubt they will be. The indefatigable author has expressed his regret at the paucity of data relating to Whitfield's movements in this country, and will doubtless avail himself of the above mentioned and other sources to enhance still further his deeply interesting narrative.

D. URBANUS.

—Baltimore Christian Advocate.

ASHLEY HEWETT AND JOHN LANE.

At the Conference of 1815, in Charleston, S. C., Mississippi and Louisiana constituted the missionary field of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Its distance from the settled portions of the United States, its mixed population, unhealthy swamps and low lands, the hostile character of the Cherokee and Creek Indians, all rendered the region among the most undesirable of the connection. Still Bishop M'Kendree solicited volunteers for this distant and neglected field. John Lane and Ashley Hewett answered the call, and were appointed. Lane was sent to what was then called the Natchez circuit, and Howett to the Tombigbee.

Early in January, 1816, the two missionaries met at Milledgville, and purchasing a pack mule, with other articles necessary for their journey, set out on their perilous trip through the terrible wilderness. Reaching Fort Hawkins on its border, they learned, from the large military force there, that all travelling, except in large companies, was stopped. But their work was serious and important, and they pushed on. When they arrived at Fort Mitchel, on the Chattahoochee River, they found two hundred more soldiers, who were so alarmed from fear of the savages, as to send to Fort Hawkins for reinforcements. But trusting in God, they pursued their onward way. They saw many savages, and heard of several murders. Hewett's heart began to fail, but Lane insisted upon persevering, or to perish in the attempt. At night, and in the rains, they pitched their little tent, and invoked the divine care. About two o'clock, before day, they were awakened by the shouting of the affrighted horses, and the Indians approached. Lane says: "being an American, and not trusting altogether in faith, but believing in works, I raised one of my pistols and fired in the direction I heard them. The Indians ran off, and in the morning we examined, but found no traces of blood, and trusted the poor Indians had escaped unhurt. After passing many places where the houses had been burnt up, and the families in them, we arrived safely at the white settlement on the Tombigbee."

This was Hewett's field of labor, and here the missionaries separated, Lane having still to travel two or three hundred miles, through almost a wilderness. He suffered a great deal from the cold and having to swim most of the creeks. Eleven years after this another preacher relates that he passed over the same route, and saw but one house in forty-five miles.

Ashley Hewett lived and labored for many years a faithful and acceptable member of the Mississippi Conference. He was a man of great afflictions, which he bore with exemplary fortitude and resignation. The death scene of the good man was most touching. While expiring with great christian composure in one room, a lovely daughter lay dying in another near by. She was a member of the church, but never professed a change of heart, and his only earthly anxiety was for her conversion. "Is she yet converted?" was his oft-repeated inquiry. She was an earnest seeker of salvation. At length the watching friends supposed she drew her last breath, and the pulse of life seemed to stand still. "Did she give any evidence of conversion before she expired?" was the important question of the departing parent. "No;" but the melancholy answer did not shake his all-conquering faith. "Then she is not dead," was his unwavering reply. A noise was soon heard from the chamber of the beloved child. The dead was alive in its truest sense, and she proclaimed to all her full assurance of precious faith in Christ, and soon expired with God's praises swelling upon her lips. Then was the dying father's room also filled with floods of light, joy, and comfort, and both triumphantly passed over Jordan and entered the promised land.

John Lane was an eminent man, and few have been more mourned, in the social and religious circles of Vicksburg, than this faithful minister of God when he was called away. He was most ardently loved in the Mississippi Conference. A cheerful hospitality, fidelity to Christ and his Church, were his distinguishing traits. His footprints will long remain on the earth. From the little beginning of these two Methodist missionaries have followed the Alabama, the Louisiana, the two Texas, and a part of the Memphis Conferences. Praise to their zeal! During the autumn of 1855 the yellow fever visited Vicksburg, he residing in its environs. With a well-known humanity, he faithfully visited the sick and dying, ministering to their wants, but at last fell a victim himself. Calmly and patiently did he await the coming of his Lord. His last farewell with the beloved companion of his bosom was most tender and affecting. She was carried on the arms of friends from her own sick room to his dying bedside; but their sorrow was not without hope of a blessed and never-dying reunion.

PROGRESS OF METHODISM.

The Christian Advocate and Journal says: During the last two years of national adversity and tumult, our increase of communicants has been more than 150,000. It has been during these trying, but successful years, that our minutes have presented the statistics of our Church property, with some accuracy, for the first time. They show the value of our churches and parsonages (in the Methodist Episcopal Church alone) at $21,249,808, an increase in two years of $3,341,624, or nearly seventeen per cent. Few facts could prove more demonstratively the vigour of our cause; for it must be borne in mind that this large expenditure for these two items of Church interests has been made in spite of a financial pressure which has temporarily crippled our entire field. In the usual prosperity of the country, the amount would have been vastly larger, at least fifty per cent. more. We have lately shown that the Methodist Episcopal churches, not parsonages, (North and South,) number at least 14,000, an average of more than 150 for each year, since the erection of the first in 1768; three a week. During the last two trying years, their increase in our northern denomination alone has been 970, an average of 9 1-3 per week; more than 1 1-2 for each working day of the two years. Our new parsonages have meantime numbered one for every two working days.

Though there are more moral or spiritual interests of religious bodies than these material facts, yet it may be justly said that few, if any, are more decisive as indications of real progress. As indications, we say; for they show the genuineness, the practical reality of spiritual progress, and their absence would be an effectual disproof of real moral advancement. As the material interests of a country, and its stock markets, more than anything else, indicate most certainly the rate or previous condition of its relations, so the liberality and practical activity of a religious community are among the best indications of its moral life.

We gave lately a statistical view of Methodism throughout the world, showing its almost universal vigor. Our tables omitted an important item—the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists—the most numerous body of Dissenters in Wales, and the only Calvinistic communion which, descending from the old Whitefield and Lady Huntington coadjutors of Wesley, still retains distinctively the title of "Methodists." Adding their numbers as reported by the British government in 1837, the aggregate of Methodists throughout the world is now more than 2,626,223. Adding but three non-communicant members of congregations for each communicant, we have more than ten millions and a half of people attending Methodist ministrations. More than 15,000 travelling preachers conduct these ministrations, assisted by at least 40,000 local-preachers, making a ministerial army of 55,000. Add to these facts our unequaled publishing houses, with their many periodicals; our great missionary organizations, comprising 3,000 laborers; our Sunday-school teachers, an army of 800,000; our educational institutions, with their more than 630 colleges, boarding academies, theological seminaries, and day schools—and what gigantic agencies for the promotion of the kingdom of Christ does Methodism wield throughout the world at this early period of its history!

TRIUMPH OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Three centuries ago, the English tongue was regarded, generally, by learned men in Europe, as a dialect, which could not hopefully aspire to great prominence in the empire of letters. Even in England, it was ordinarily treated with contempt. A few persons wrote it in a style which, in some respects, has never been surpassed. We find, however, that the Norman-French, which had been introduced by William the Conqueror, and which was wedded to the bold and dashing line of monarchs that succeeded him, was most esteemed in aristocratic circles. The Norman tongue took complete possession of the law proceedings. The most learned books were usually written in Latin; and even the Greek was understood by the great body of men that made any pretensions to a knowledge of literature. We find the splendid Tudor Queens, Mary and Elizabeth, using the classic tongues on the most familiar occasions. The latter replied orally to the addresses of the universities of Britain in the Greek language.

The savage Norman Kings labored in vain, however, to extirpate the Saxon tongue, hallowed by the glorious memories of Alfred the Great, and not less sacred on account of the disastrous battle of Hastings. It was ordained that the Norman language should be used in all law proceedings and records; but the combined influences of fashion, aristocracy, royalty, and positive enactment were unavailing, and after an experiment of three hundred years, the severe law was repealed. The Normans converted the richest lands of Britain into hunting grounds; they drove the Saxons from their Courts; they, in fact, reduced them to the condition of miserable serfs; but the bloody Richards and Henrys shed the public blood without accomplishing their designs; the masses treasured and used the dialect which formed for after ages the basis of

"That tongue
In which our Shakespeare wrote, in which our Milton sung."

Like diamonds hidden for centuries by a mountain weight, the rich gems of the Saxon lost nothing by their incarceration. When the mighty Norman incubus was removed, they shone forth bright, and pure, and beautiful, as in the days when Alfred fought the Danes.

The finest specimen of the modern Saxon is the translation of the Bible by order of King James, of England. Even the majesty of the Greek tongue almost bows before the sublime capacities of the English, as tested in some of the grandest rhetorical flights of the great Apostle to the Gentiles.

Though the German, unquestionably, is the richest of all the modern tongues, the empire of the world may be considered as divided between the rival claimants, French and English. Edward Everett, in one of his Mount Vernon papers, relates the following interesting anecdote:

"There was a curious association of Gibbon's literary career with the diffusion of the English language in the country. He had in early life lived a good deal on the continent, and under the impression that French was to be the universal tongue, wrote his first essay in that language. He sent a copy of it to David Hume, who wrote him, 1767, in acknowledgement of it, as follows: 'Why do you compose in French, and carry faggots into the wood, as Horace says with regard to those Romans who wrote in Greek? I grant that you have a like motive to those Romans, and adopt a language much more generally diffused than your native tongue. But have you not remarked the late of those two ancient languages in following ages? The Latin, though then less celebrated, and confined to more narrow limits, has in some measure outlived the Greek, and is now more generally understood by men of letters. Let the French therefore triumph in the present diffusion of the tongue. Our solid and increasing establishment in America, where we need less dread the inundation of barbarism, promises a superior stability and direction of the English language!"

PECULIARITIES OF THE EARLY PREACHERS.

When a Bishop or preacher traveled, he claimed no authority to exercise the duties of his functions unless he was invited by the churches where he attended public worship. The primitive churches had no idea of a bishop of Rome presuming to dictate to a congregation in Africa. Nothing, however, was more common than such friendly visits and sermons as were then in practice. The churches thought them edifying. In case the bishop was sick or absent, one of the deacons, or sometimes a shorthand writer, used to read a homily that had been preached, and perhaps published by some good minister, and sometimes a homily that had been preached by the bishop of the Church.

We have great obligations to primitive notaries, for they very early addressed themselves to take down the sermons of public preachers. Sometimes the hearers employed them, sometimes themselves. For this purpose they carried writing tablets, waxed, and styles, that is, pointed irons, or gravers, into the assembly, and stood round the preacher to record what he said.

The deacons placed themselves round the pulpit, and before sermon one of them cried, with a loud voice, Silence, Hearken, or something similar. This was repeated often when necessary; I suppose at proper pauses, where the preacher stopped. Their manners were different from ours; but really our manners want some of their custom. It might do some drowsy folks good to be alarmed every five or ten minutes with, Mind what you are about. Let us listen. Attend to the word of God.

The fathers differed much in pulpit action; the greater part used very moderate and sober gestures. Paul, of Samosata, used to stamp with his foot, and strike his thigh with his hand, and throw himself into violent agitations; but he was blamed for it by his cotemporaries. They thought his action theatrical and improper in a church; and yet in every church the people were allowed, and even exhorted, to applaud the preacher by shouting and clapping their hands at the close of a period, as at the theatre or in the forum. The first preachers delivered their sermons all extempore, and they studied while they preached the countenances of their auditors to see whether their doctrine was understood.

Sermons in those days were all in the vulgar tongue. The Greeks preached in Greek, the Latins in Latin, for the preachers meant to be understood. They did not preach by the clock, so to speak, but short or long, as they saw occasion. Augustine used to leave off when the people's hearts seemed properly affected with the subject. He judged of this sometimes by their shouts, sometimes by their tears. Their sermons were usually about an hour long; but many of them may be deliberately pronounced in half an hour, and several in less time.

"SAY JESUS."

As the late Professor Hope, of Princeton, was lying on his dying bed, and just before he breathed his last, after saying, "My work is done. The ping of the tabernacle are taken out," etc., he began to repeat the lines,

"A guilty, weak, and helpless worm,
On thy kind arm I fall,"

when his power of

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Price—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 25, 1860.

ACCOUNTS—NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

All parties interested in the Advocate—Editor, Preachers, and Subscribers—are interested in avoiding confusion in accounts.

Those well acquainted with the credit system in the newspaper business know full well that, under that system, confusion in accounts never can, never will, never can be avoided. Uncertain mails, unavoidable oversights in agents or clerks, forgetfulness in subscribers and others, and the wearying, vexatious details of this business over all others, render it impossible. We have tried, for years, and know.

To have the subscription begin and end with the year, and to pay, if not in advance, at least once a year, is the nearest approach to a remedy that we can devise,—and that is our plan.

Immediately after the Conferences, all the accounts will be made out to January, 1861, without reference to time of commencement, or time last paid to; and they will be sent to each subscriber who has not paid to January, 1861.

If all our subscribers and agents will patiently co-operate with us, this difficulty about accounts will be forever settled during the coming year. After that, when January, 1861, comes, $2 more will be due, and so on.

Well our brethren and friends, when they receive these accounts, immediately remit the money to the office, or pay to the preacher, taking a receipt? If any think the account incorrect, let him inform us, pleasantly, without quarreling. We never quarrel, though we have more cause than others.

The volume of the Advocate will hereafter begin and end with the year; and it is very desirable that subscriptions should conform to the same rule.

Tennessee, new subscribers, who do not begin with the year, will please send, not two dollars, but an amount sufficient to pay for the paper till the end of the year, at the rate of Four Cents a Week.

Then, every subscriber will know, without being informed, that at the beginning of the year is the time to remit the subscription money.

And let us have scores, hundreds, thousands of new subscribers with which to begin the New Volume, January 1st, 1860.—We intend, if Providence smile on us, to make a better paper next year than ever before. Arrangements are made, and being made, for greatly increasing its attractions—for some new writers, of the first order, will begin with the year. The paper is flatteringly approved now—we intend to merit higher approbation.

NEW DEVELOPMENT OF CHRISTIAN JOURNALISM.

To those who have reflected much upon the present and rapidly increasing power of the newspaper press in all civilized and liberally governed lands, and especially of that form of it most read by those who read especially for the news—the daily newspaper—it has been for some time thought that religious journalism would be compelled, in order to maintain its appropriate influence, to add the daily to its present weekly issues. The demand for a daily christian journal has long been felt; the practicability of its successful maintenance has been doubted. Of course, such a thing would be impossible except in great commercial centres.

We use the term "christian," instead of "religious," as best describing our ideal of the proposed newspaper; because, a newspaper in christian hands, conducted upon christian principles, and for christian ends, is what is needed; and not a daily religious newspaper in the sense generally understood—that is a daily paper filled only, or nearly, with religious reading and religious news. Such a paper would never succeed, and is not demanded. A christian newspaper should be very much like a christian life—full of, all that is proper to such a life—piety, business, news, recreation, study—and the various phases of character and experience common to christian life in all its relations and stages.

For success and power, it should be conducted upon the same business principles, and according to the same editorial sagacity, as the successful and powerful secular journals; only it should not, as they too often do, violate principle for the sake of success. It should cover the whole newspaper ground, and put itself into the market as any other newspaper; but it should have a christian stand-point, a christian spirit, and a due proportion of religious reading.

For some years, such a thing has been contemplated in England. The expected appearance of a new religious daily journal, started by a proprietary company on the "limited liability" plan, named the Dial, and intended to dispute the supremacy of the press with the London Times, is engaging attention in England. The choice of the staff of its establishment has been a matter of much deliberation. Both printer and editor have recently been determined on, the former, Mr. John Tallis of London, a man of great energy, the successful founder of the London Printing and Publishing Company, known by their agency in New York. The name of the editor is withheld for the present, but he is said to be a Scotchman, and a person of weight and influence with the religious public. Peter Bayne, the well known author, is mentioned as the man. Half a million dollars is said to be secured as the capital of the enterprise.

A similar paper is to be started in New York. Col. Cummings, of the Philadelphia Bulletin, and Mr. Spaulding, of the New York Courier and Enquirer, will be its chief editors, with a strong corps of assistants. Col. Cummings is well known as one of the best editors of Philadelphia, and no New York editorials have exceeded those of Mr. Spalding in ability, dignity, and moral tone. What their political antecedents are, we do not certainly know, but Black Republican we presume. We shall be glad to be informed. As the Protestant Episcopal Church is not represented in this movement, we see it intimated that the Churchman will be converted into a "daily," as an offset.

Col. Seaver, of the Churchman, is the editor, and, it is said, is a genial and able writer, and an accomplished gentleman. He will staunchly maintain his High Church principles, but will do so with genuine courtesy. The other paper will be started about the middle of next month, it is said. The christian community of New York are in eager expectation of it.

The London paper and the first-named New York paper, if we understand the plan, are intended to be in the interest of no one branch of the Christian Church. They propose to supply the christian community with a common organ which shall avoid the objectionable characteristics of the ordinary press, and give a due representation of religious affairs. Time alone will show whether these enterprises will succeed. That such enterprises will succeed ultimately, we have not a doubt. There is now a demand for "the news" in christian newspapers which, with the present size of their weekly sheets, it is hard to supply. The daily will not only give, to the class who desire it, the news every day, but will enable the weekly, without expense of composition, to take on to itself size enough for any amount of news.

THE WELSH PEDIGREE OF DR. COKE.

The London Watchman contains a statement from Gwilym Lleyn, showing that Dr. Coke was a Welshman on his father's side, at least down to the fourth generation. His grandfather was Henry Cooke, of Wrenchwith, Radnorshire, who was the father of Edward Cooke, Rector of Llanfyrnach, near Brecon. The above Edward Cooke was the father of Bartholomew Coke, M.D. He was the first of the family to spell the name Coke instead of Cooke, says the historian of Breconshire; and although spelled "Coke" he was called "Cooke" by his acquaintances; and so is the doctor still called by the Welsh people. Bartholomew Coke married Ann, daughter of Thomas Phillips, Esq., of Trosdre, (and not Frost, as it is in the biographies of the doctor.) They were the parents of our Dr. T. Coke. The Phillips family are now represented by the Phillips of Pont-y-Wall, near Talgarth, Breconshire. There is in possession of Mr. Lleyn a Welsh pamphlet on the American War, by W. Mason, with a Welsh recommendatory Preface by "Thos. Coke, South Petherton, Gwlad yr Haf, Chwefror 26, 1776." (Thomas Coke, South Petherton, Somersetshire, February 26, 1776,) where he was a curate before uniting himself with Mr. Wesley.

THE CENTENARY OF AMERICAN METHODISM:

SHOULD IT BE CELEBRATED IN 1860 OR IN 1866?

We have read the principal evidence and arguments on both sides with much interest, sincerely desiring to reach a satisfactory conclusion; and the result is, a conviction that the centennial anniversary of American Methodism should be celebrated in 1866, instead of 1860. It is true that Philip Embury and Robert Strawbridge did arrive in New York in 1760; that they were both local preachers of the Wesleyan Methodists in Ireland; that Embury preached a sermon from the deck of the ship in which they were to sail, in the presence of the emigrating families and their friends who remained; that Embury was the ministerial founder of the First Methodist Society in America, in John street, New York, in 1766: but there is no evidence whatever that he ever preached a single sermon after his arrival in America until that time. It is only conjectured that he must have done so. Conjecture must not be assumed as fact in history. And this conjecture is rendered worthless by the established fact that he had become cold in personal piety, to say nothing of preaching, during the interval between 1760 and 1766. The only thing that militates against this view is, that Strawbridge is said to have preached and even baptized children, during the time. But that which ought to settle the question, as we think, is the well-known fact, that Methodism was not established, in any thing like organic, living, self-perpetuating form, until 1766. That was the real beginning of American Methodism. Grant, even, that Embury and Strawbridge had preached regularly from their arrival in 1760; suppose they and their families had gone back to the old country at the beginning of the revolutionary troubles; American Methodist would still have been without a beginning.

The planting of the John-street Society was the first root-taking of Methodism in American soil; that was in 1766; therefore 1866 is the end of the first century of American Methodism. Let the next ensuing General Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, North and South, so decide, and make provision for a suitable, simultaneous, and harmonious celebration of the glorious centennial anniversary. Let the various other Methodist bodies of the United States take similar action.

"ANGELS UNAWARES."

"Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." This is said in reference to strangers generally. Christ came to save "sinners," and you are admonished to entertain "strangers." If a man is a "sinner," he has a right to Christ's mercy, without any other claim; and if a man is a "stranger," he has a right to your hospitality, without any other claim. But here comes an expected stranger. You never saw him before, but you have heard of him, and were looking for him, that is, if you looked for anything outside of your own affairs. Who is he? He is the new Methodist preacher—recently appointed by the Bishop to serve your circuit or station for the present year. He is not very old. He entered the ministry early. He has been in the work five or ten years. There is an inside history his face does not reveal. To you, he is "nothing but a traveling Methodist preacher." But look back yonder a few years. He was the darling of his mother, and the hope of his father. Wealth and distinction were hoped for, by them and him. But God called him to go "far hence," to "the people and the gentiles." Hopes, home-loves, and schoolboy heart-pledges, were given up, but like the mother yields her dying infant to God. All is yielded, to become "nothing but a traveling Methodist preacher." His heart-struggles and life-discipline, in the loneliness of his vocation, who may know? Leaving friends, and piety, at home, and conscious of ability to make both in a secular calling, he has often been without either, among his "Methodist brethren." Last Conference he attended with hope that greater usefulness and happiness awaited him. He knew not where he should go. The Bishop, praying God's direction, sent him to you. He is among you, a "stranger" among strangers. His loved ones are fewer than formerly. Many who bade him farewell when he left home, are gone to the future land. What a fruitful soil for the seeds of kindness in his heart! But what is that to you! You have soil that promises a more tangible yield. You have better investments in view! You are busy. You dont think there is much chance for him to do any thing. As to his being "supported," that is out of the question. Pity he was sent. Expected a better arrangement. Wish him well, however. Too busy to talk about it now. Good bye. Should be glad to see him, some time, or other. The "stranger" is "entertained"—by his own bitter thoughts and feelings.—The other side of the picture: "Is this our new preacher? Come in thou blessed of the Lord!" Hell! Yes! And heaven too!

NORTHERN RELIGIOUS LITERATURE.

In confirmation of the truth of the assertion made in an article on our first page last week, that Northern religious literature is more dangerous to the South than anything else, we notice that Senator Iverson, of Georgia, in a speech delivered in the U. S. Senate on the 9th instant, took the ground that the cause of the abolitionization of the North was to be found in the literature which is there put in the hands of children and youth. As a specimen, he read an Abolition tract which had been sent to him from Burlington, Iowa.

In addition to this, it is a fact that the Sunday-School Advocate of the Northern Methodist Church, and its entire Sunday-School literature, are conducted by Rev. Daniel Wise, D.D., one of the most bitter abolitionists in the Union. The same is true of their Quarterly. Their leading weekly journal, the Christian Advocate and Journal, with a circulation of near 40,000 is conducted by Rev. Abel Stevens, LL.D., the leader of the so-called conservative party of that Church against the ultra abolitionists; and yet he, in his columns, declares himself a "Republican"—a member of that party which is now trying to elect a man to the speakership of the National House of Representative, who has endorsed a book which advocates the course pursued by old John Brown and his crew of traitors and murderers. And yet, almost the entire press of the Northern Methodist Church, besides Mr. Stevens' paper, including those at Cincinnati, Chicago, Pittsburg, Boston, Auburn, are at this moment making war upon Dr. Stevens as too feeble in his abolitionism. Can the South any longer refuse to give a vigorous support to the Southern Publishing House?

THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE.

It appears from an Annual Report of the Regents of this Institute, that the total amount of the bequests, as received into the treasury, was $515,160; interest on the same to July 1st, 1846, devoted to the erection of the building, $242,129. In addition to these, $135,600 of unexpended income has been invested in state bonds, so that the present income of the institution is $38,326-14. The principal expenditures are—for salaries, about $9,000; for publications of all kinds, $9,000; for meteorological observations, $2,500; for lectures, $1,000; for the library, $3,500; for museum, $2,000. There are some incidental matters involving expenditures, and about $5,000 is set apart from the income to make a certain financial change for the sake of economy. The collections of various kinds which had accumulated at Washington, have now been concentrated at the institution, Congress agreeing to make an appropriation of $4,000 annually to keep them up.

THE POPE AND THE CONGRESS.

By the Arabia, which left Liverpool on the evening of Dec. 24, we learn that a pamphlet entitled The Pope and the Congress, signed by M. de Laguerraniere, had been published, and attracted great attention, both in France and England, as it was believed to express the sentiments of the Emperor Napoleon. The pamphlet is written in a spirit of conciliation and compromise, and although it does not propose to take away the temporal powers of the Pope, it advocates a curtailment of them, and urges that the Romagna should not be restored to Papal dominion.

The Paris Constitutionel, in an article signed by its principal editor, approves in general the contents of the pamphlet, declaring, however, its intention to combat some of the propositions made by the author.

The London Times concludes a leader on the subject by saying: "On the whole, we have read this pamphlet with considerable satisfaction. It was very probable that the Emperor of the French has, for some time, hesitated between a liberal and reactionary policy; but we read in these sentences the promise of a cordial understanding between the two countries in the coming deliberations."

The London Morning Post questions if the Pope will accept the new position assigned to him by the French Emperor; and asks, should he refuse, how far will his refusal be supported by other Catholic States?

The London Daily News says the opinion expressed in the pamphlet on the question of restoring the Romagna to the Pope will be approved by the British Government and people. France will not use force to compel a people to submit to a government which they will reject, and she will not permit Austria to interfere.

It is generally believed in Europe that the Emperor speaks through M. de Laguerroniere. The latter has long been in the service of the Emperor, and has before been the literary expounder of his views. The official papers of the government commend the pamphlet, while denying that Napoleon is the author. The dismissal, or withdrawal, of Count Walewski from the French Cabinet, as will be seen in the telegraphic dispatches on our third page, gives further confirmation of the popular view; as the Count had recently said that the temporal power of the Pope would not be curtailed while he retained his position. The positions of the pamphlet are these:

The Pope, as the head of the Catholic Church, must be an independent sovereign—otherwise he would be either French, Spanish, Austrian, or Italian, which would destroy his character as a universal, a Catholic Pontiff. But there are difficulties in the way. How can the Pope be at the same time Pontiff and King? History proves that this can not be the case in an extensive State, which is affected by the progress of politics and of liberal opinions, without such foreign intervention as invalidates the whole theory of national independence. To be a possibility, as an independent sovereign power, the temporal authority of the Pope must be restricted to narrow limits—those of the city of Rome, which history and the necessities of the world have destined for the metropolis of Catholicity. The Government of the Pope must be peculiar. It must be unconstrained, but patriarchal; irresponsible, but not arbitrary. But an unlimited and irresponsible government is impossible in a large State, composed of many cities and provinces, which feel the yearnings of nationality, and respond to the advance of liberal opinions and liberal institutions throughout the world. The alternatives are revolution or foreign intervention. The one destroys the Pontifical State, while the other annihilates Pontifical independence. If the institutions of the Pope are not governed by the principles which ought to restrain governments, and guarantee the rights of society, his acts should be only the more irreproachable. His temporal government should be a reflection of his universal character. In this it would stand alone, a spectacle to be admired, not a model to be imitated.

In order to maintain the splendor appertaining to the majesty of the Head of the Church, the Catholic powers will contribute liberally; and in this tribute will be found new proof of the universality and unity of his moral power. It is, therefore, necessary to maintain the temporal power of the Pope; to divest it as much as possible of the responsibilities incumbent on a government, by restricting his territory, and diminishing the number of his subjects; to give to those who remain deprived of a political existence, the compensation of a parental and economical administration.

As to the Romagna, its exclusion from the Popedom would strengthen rather than weaken the temporal power of the Pope. It would rid him of enemies whose perpetual resistance to his authority compels the assistance of foreign arms, and leave him enthroned at the Vatican, the undisputed chief of the Catholic world.

But if the Romagna is to be restored to the Pope, how is it to be restored? By moral influences? The French Emperor has tried them and failed. By force? Who is to use it—France or Austria? France repudiates the task. As a Catholic nation she would never consent to strike so serious a blow at the moral power of Catholicism. As a liberal nation she would not force a people to accept a government which their will rejects. She has never helped in the work of imposing distasteful governments on unwilling people. She has often aided to enfranchise—never to oppress. To her help the United States, Belgium and the Danubian Principalities owe their independence—their political existence. The Emperor will not be recreant to these generous traditions. In Italy, especially, France is bound to be faithful to her liberal principles and policy. She has not yet recognized the de facto governments of Central Italy; but she can not forget that they flashed into life when the Austrian banners retired across the Po. She has tried moral influences to restore the exiled Princes, but she remembers that they fled the day the French eagles advanced across the Ticino. And if France can not interfere, still less can she permit Austrian intervention.

The grand object of the campaign was to free Italy from foreign rule. The grand result of the campaign was to close Austrian influence beyond the Mincio, and exclude it from the rest of Italy.

A great war, four victories, the loss of fifty thousand lives, the expenditure of sixty million dollars, would be all in vain if Austria were permitted to re-establish her domination in Italy the moment the contest is ended.

In fact, the only intervention that can be regular efficacious and legitimate, is the intervention of the whole of Europe united in a Congress to decide all the questions that effect the modifications of territory, or the revision of treaties.

THE MURDER MANIA.

We hear much in these times about the law of compensation. We have actually been tempted to believe that the increase of certain classes of crime is the compensation the devil receives for his loss in the destruction of despotism, and the establishment of civil and religious liberty. Murder, for instance, is characteristic of this, the freest and most civilized country upon the face of the earth. And recently this characteristic has assumed the proportions and aspects of an epidemic or mania. Our local department last week was almost filled with murders, and they only the most prominent. As many more have been killed in this city, of the more degraded and unnoted. And the same thing is manifest all over the country. This state of things is really deplorable, alarming. The country is absolutely being disgraced. There seems to be no restraint, of principle or expediency, of regard for human life, or fear of punishment. When the germ of enmity is planted in the heart, murder is the fruit, now-a-days. "He that hateth his brother is a murderer," said the Apostle, and we have only to let human hatred have self-importance, and licentious opportunities of money, personal independence, and a free country, to see the truth of the Apostle's words demonstrated. Crime, in general, is evidently on the increase, as it is always when the country is prosperous. Laws do not check it, and, in any but the lower classes, never will in this country. This we have long believed. Social health, in this country, can only be attained by moral and spiritual means. Let those who are responsible in any way for the moral and spiritual training and welfare of the young, remember this.

AN IMPORTANT WORK.

Dayton, New York, will publish, about the first of February, the American Ecclesiastical Year Book, containing the Religious Statistics of the world during the past year, with many other statistic specialities; a brief religious history of the world during the past year; a list of works bearing on religious statistics or current ecclesiastical history. By Alexander J. Schem, Professor of Hebrew and Modern Languages in Dickinson College. One volume, 12mo., paper cover, price, fifty cents; cloth, seventy-five cents. There is at the present no periodical publication which presents from year to year the religious statistics of the world in a proper form for reference. In the religious newspapers they are too scattered and too incomplete. In the religious and general cyclopædias they soon become antiquated. Political statistics, the importance of which is becoming recognized more and more every year, have already a number of organs. This Year-Book will be the first organ for the religious statistics of the world. The statistical department of the work will present from year to year the denominational statistics of every country as a standing item, and, in addition, a collection of important statistics—specialities from the present and the past. We have had literary relations with Prof. Schem for several years, and we are free to say that we know of no man who has better qualifications for this important task. No available European and American almanac, affording data for it, has escaped him. We have examined his manuscript, and we predict that it will be a most thorough and reliable work.

LETTER FROM BISHOP ANDREW.

Dear Brother—I reached home safely, and found the loved ones there all in usual health, thanks be to God. We have had the most frozen, stormy time, for the last few weeks, that I remember to have encountered for many long years. Snow, sleet, frost and rain, have marked, in succession, the history of the whole time since my return home. The wheat is said to be entirely killed in this region, and every thing in our gardens, so that the prospect for "garden-sarse" is not promising. However, we have plenty to eat and wear, and as a general thing, health to enjoy all these mercies.

Our schools are getting on very finely; a large number of pupils in both schools; and the testimony of the teachers is that they are remarkably orderly and studious. The pastor remarked to me the other day that on the Sabbath afternoon about one hundred girls met in the class in the College, and some sixty or seventy young men met in class every week. Many of these young people are quite exemplary, and even in cases where they are not specially remarkable for piety, their conduct is orderly; and the very fact that they are thus publicly recognized every Sabbath as connected with the Church, must exert a good influence upon them. I like the suggestion of Bro. Baker in his communication in your last number, as to the propriety and importance of swelling the $7,000 accruing to the Centenary Institute, to some handsome sum for endowment; the proceeds to be appropriated to the payment of the board of travelling preacher's daughters. This is an important item in a preacher's school bill. The gift of tuition is good, but then this is a gratuity afforded by a large number of other schools besides those under our patronage. And, besides, to those who are most needy, it amounts to but little; while the indigent father is not able to pay the board of his daughter, the result is that they are deprived of proper educational advantages, or else they are sent to such schools as will afford education cheapest, whether under our care or not. And not only is the child alienated from us, but the father himself becomes (if not inimical) at least indifferent to the prosperity of our own institutions. He says, perhaps, "I see no use in laboring to build up these institutions; the poor, who most need such institutions, cannot avail themselves of their advantages." We should do well to bind this class of men more firmly to our operations. Once more: the girls of this class are the ones who promise most good to the church and country. Most of them will, probably, from necessity, go forth to act as teachers in the various parts of the country, and be thus active in diffusing a widely extended and wholesome influence. I trust the plan will succeed. I know the heart of a father, and remember full well what were my feelings years ago, when I looked on my daughters and thought that it was probable, after I had given my whole life to the church, I should leave them portionless and without the necessary education to enable them to earn for themselves a genteel support, at the same time that they were doing good to the world. And I remember, too, how grateful it was to my feelings to be invited to send them to the Female College in Macon, free of charge for tuition, and then, by the especial kindness of my honored friends, Geo. F. Pierce and Wm. H. Ellison, successive Presidents of that institution, they were boarded free of charge. And Edward H. Myers, afterwards, remembered the necessities of a Methodist preacher, and did me great kindness. And I hereby take the opportunity of thus publicly acknowledging my deep sense of obligation to that noble institution, which was the pioneer in our grand denominational movement in behalf of female education. She has blessed thousands; may her shadow never grow less.

And now, as this letter is a sort of omnium gotherum, a word about Appleton and his book. I don't care to have my name in his book, and his apology for not having Bascom and myself in before, is a miserably lame affair. Yet as the book is to be in coming years a book of reference, and as my name is somehow or other associated with many of the important ecclesiastical movements of the present age, possibly it is due to posterity that it appear in the pages of the Cyclopedia. So, if you think proper you can comply with the request of the publishers, and scribble something about me; well now, so much for that.

I see in your notice of the Quarterly a sentence endorsing some views about German Theology, and its importance to ministerial improvement. For large freedom of investigation, and a liberal toleration of opinions on matters non-essential, I go most heartily. But at this point the church must watch narrowly. A rigid orthodoxy is not the sin of the present age. The strong tendency is in the other direction. We are now in some danger of latitudinarianism. So many notions have sprung up of late, and most of them from the prolific soil of German Theology, that I think we shall do well to sift closely every thing coming from that quarter. I have long noticed that most of our preachers who become enamored of German notions very soon become in some sort transcendental, and exceedingly lofty and mystical in their speech. They soon discover that the Church has never received the true light till these learned and plodding Germans struck it out by their flint and steel. They pretty soon introduce into their speech and writing a whole army of new-fangled words and notions. The plain, sound, orthodox vernacular in which the Church as been accustomed to pray and preach for ages is not strong enough to bear the weight of their mighty German thoughts. They soon become greatly jaimical to the prevailing orthodoxy of creeds and speech, and denounce them as deadly foes to untrammeled thought and freedom of speech. Now I have noticed this class of men for a long time, and have seen an end of all their perfection; and I have so often seen this sort of speech issue in fatal heterodoxy that whenever I hear a preacher finding fault with the prevailing orthodoxy of creed and speech, I look out soon to hear that he has fallen into some fatal heterodoxy of doctrine. By the way let me say still further that I think the times require a more rigid adherence to orthodoxy of doctrine, rather than the reverse, and especially in receiving men into the ministry. I should not be surprised if there are men in our ministry who preach moderate Calvinism, semi-Pelagianism, a little of Universalism, or a little sprinkling of Unitarianism, or some other thing equally wild. Our preachers, many of them, do not undergo a sufficiently rigid probation, nor examination, before they are authorized to expound God's word. Finally, let me say on this point, that we have enough in English and American theological literature to employ all our time, and our most vigorous intellect, without acknowledging our entire dependence upon importations from fog-land for the necessary materials to form great thoughts, great books, or great men. Yet, many of the German writers may be read to advantage; if a man be already well established in the good old scriptural Wesleyan theology. And now I dare say you are ready to say it is time for the old man to quit; I think so too, and act accordingly.

James O. Andrew.

Summerfield, Ala., Jan. 12, 1860.

North Alabama Correspondence, (on next page) is welcome. The distinguished writer has the hospitalities of our columns.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON CITY.

On Christmas morning I accompanied some friends to St. Patrick's Church. We had a particular invitation to take our seats in the Oratorio, to hear the celebrated piece of music by Fumigel, one of the finest efforts of musical genius in the world. The overpowering strains of the choir in Church Madeleine in Paris, or that of the Vatican at Rome, did not produce such a soul-stirring effect as this beautiful tribute to the birth of our Saviour. The organ was sublimely grand, and touched with a masterly hand. The choir was composed of twenty singers, males and females. The trio was magnificent. The voice of the soprano was one of great compass—her trill was as soft and clear as an Eolian harp, which rose higher and higher, until it bore the soul away to Infinite lengths beyond the bounds,

Where stars revolve their little rounds.

It seemed as though a response was heard among the heavenly harpers, while the echo went up through the blue arch with rejoicings: "For unto us a child is born—unto us a Son is given, and his name shall be called wonderful! counsellor! the mighty God! the everlasting Father! the Prince of Peace!

The hidden harmonies of the soul were touched, and every latent power kindled up into a flame, from the deep thrilling emotion of religious triumph.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony
This universal frame began,
From harmony to harmony
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The Diapason closing full in man.

It was the music of the soul, and the melody of the spheres. The loved and the lost of our circle seemed to gather around my mental vision—and one who upon earth was gifted with the genius of music, touched her golden lyre to the sweetest sound.

While she seemed to say,
'Sister spirit come away.'

"O! grave where is thy victory! thy victory? O! death! where is thy sting?" My heart melted under a divine influence, and tears of gratitude filled my eyes at the recollection of Jesus, who said, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me shall never die!"

Glory to God in the highest for such a Saviour, for such a salvation through his name. The star of Bethlehem is here—his glorious beams shine as brightly as they did over the manger where he was born and the Magi were seen worshipping him.

Jesus was the theme in all the churches of the city, and they dwelt with delightful pathos upon his name.

The sweetest name on mortal tongue,
The sweetest carol ever sung,
'Jesus, Jesus, flows along!'

"And there was light." This, Longinus has said, was the most perfect instance of the sublime in language. But does not the name of Jesus, with the Holy Trinity, give an idea of the sublime still more perfect? It was great to create, says a poet, but still greater to redeem.

THE CAPITOL.

The new Legislative Hall with its surrounding galleries filled with spectators is very beautiful. The seats, lined with crimson velvet, which have substituted the old-fashioned chairs, with desks, have improved the appearance of the Hall greatly. They radiate from the Speaker's seat, encircling the room, gradually rising one above another, producing a fine effect. The bronzed ceiling when lighted from above, its gilded carvings and fret-work are thrown out in bold relief, displaying their artistic beauties in perfection. The Senate chamber, in the opposite wing, is highly finished; and its approach by those beautiful marble stairs and exquisitely polished railings of Tennessee marble, resembling porphyry, is unrivalled. The columns and capitals which adorn its arches, are not surpassed in any country. The beautiful bronzed stair-case, exclusively for the use of the Senators, which leads to interior rooms, is wrought with the skill of the artist, worthy of all praise. The whole building is warmed by steam, which renders the air as mild and pleasant as that of Spring. In the basement of each wing are cooking apparatus carried on by steam, and dumb waiters to convey the food to those rooms, fitted up in a style adapted to the tastes of the people, either plain or elegant, as they please. The members of both Houses can lunch in the Capitol, as well as strangers.

THE STATUARY.

The figures we saw in Crawford's studio at Rome, are now here, although not in the position they are designed to occupy when the Capitol is finished. The Genius of America stands in the park, with a carpet of snow as white as her brow. Her countenance is one of beauty, with an expression of energy and life. Her graceful form is enveloped in a mantle glowing with stars—in her right hand a wreath, under the left an eagle. Behind her is the rising sun with his glorious beams bursting upon this New World, where she presides in native grandeur. The colossal statue of Freedom, now standing in the old representative hall, is magnificent. Her form, with flowing drapery, is majesty and grace. Her brow is expansive, and her features are beaming with beauty and intelligence. She wears a helmet formed of the American eagle, whose head answers for a crest, and its talons for ear-drops. The right wing is a little spread which displays the beauty of its feathers as an ornament. In her right hand she holds a sheathed sword, in her left a shield and two wreaths. On her breast a broach surrounded by a wreath with the letter U in its centre. This figure is one of the noblest creations of genius, like a poem—to be read at a glance by a true American, forever.

There are no statues in the world like them—neither ancient nor modern. The colossal statue of Freedom is to be cast in bronze, and placed at the top of the dome when finished, which will command a prospect more magnificent than St. Paul's in London, or St. Peter's at Rome. The marble statue of America is to be placed in a recess of the eastern gable of the left wing of the Senate.

THE PRESIDENT'S LEVEE, Jan. 3d, 1860.

The New Year was commenced with a visit to the White House, and shaking hands with the venerable President, whose amiable countenance and whitened locks command the respect of all.

Thousands appeared clustering around the doors waiting their opening. The carriages of foreign Ambassadors were standing in the court having entered before the crowd. The moment the doors were opened a rush like a flowing stream bore the mass along, all classes huddled together. The music of a band struck up, which carried our thoughts back to the Pilgrims of "Plymouth Rock that had been to their feet as a door-step

"Into a world unknown,—the corner stone a nation."

And to that dear-bought independence, sealed by the blood of our ancestors, and tears began to gather as we moved on to the reception room, where we were formally introduced to the President and Miss Lane, his niece who presides at the presidential mansion with the true dignity and grace of an American lady of intelligence and refinement. The houses of all the Officers of State were open for reception on this day. We visited several of the dignitaries, but the weather was too excessively cold for enjoyment.

The President's Levee on Tuesday evening the 10th was much more brilliant and imposing. The rooms so well lighted with gas, that all appeared to better advantage. Some magnificent exotic plants, in full bloom, were placed as ornaments in different apartments. The splendid chandeliers suspended from the ceiling in the east room, shed their glow of light over the crimson drapery and gilded cornices which ornamented the hall filled with promenaders of beauty and fashion. The President surrounded by foreign Ambassadors, and dignitaries of State, and his amiable niece, did the honors of the mansion with the same cheerful and commanding dignity, peculiar to their characters.

The halls were said not to be so crowded as many on the like occasion, yet were agreeably full. The music fine, and every thing appeared peaceful and quiet.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE.

This interesting institution is certainly a rich legacy to our country, where every one is privileged to avail themselves of its varied resources of intelligence, with a free use of its library and philosophical apparatus.

We have been highly entertained, a few evenings past, with lectures by Mr. Carpenter, an Englishman, upon the conchology of our Western coast. Prof Henry introduced him to the audience, and he made his appearance with a California oyster shell in his hand, with all the simplicity and enthusiasm of a child who had found some rare toy. He was a true naturalist, perfectly absorbed, and master of his subject. He dwelt upon the habits and customs of the oyster in his native home of California, and Panama Bay, like one who had a perfect knowledge of his character in all its domestic and social relations. He had diagrams, and beautiful illustrations of all the different species of the shelly tribe which lived upon, and within the domain of, this princely oyster, and dependant upon him for their existence, that when he moved the grand cortege moved with him. He showed us seven distinct species of most curious formation, and said there were one hundred more under the protection of this patriarch. Some built their habitations upon the terraced roof, others upon its sides, and one kind by drilling holes through the pearly shell to share its food. He exhibited a beautiful shell perfectly riddled with holes. He unfolded the wonderful economy of divine providence in the instincts of this shelly tribe, some of them, in advance of years, unable any longer to provide for themselves, pushed their bodies through the drilled holes of the tinted shell, there to remain in the safely grounded palace, upon mosaic floors of princely splendor.

The next lecture was the Cuttlefish or Nautilus.

This beautiful animal, with a higher instinct, was illustrated and described with great particularity. He had been mentioned by Homer, and described by Aristotle, and the received opinion that this wonderful fish was a true navigator, with its arms for paddles, and its mantle for sails, although very poetical, is found to be false. That the Nautilus never moved any way but by walking on its head. A lady living on the shores of the Mediterranean, procured some of the fish, kept them in their watery element, studied their habits, and ascertained facts, hitherto unknown, of its character, gratifying to the naturalist. The sails, which were supposed to be raised for the wind, were found to be a filmy substance, stretched out to hold the egg of the fish, and it sailed upon the water bottom upwards.

Our friend, Prof. Loomis, just returned from a trip to Boston, says the cold there was intense, but notwithstanding, nearly twenty thousand people, men, women, and children, were seen on one pond of ice, in Roxbury, skating. Ladies, from sixty to sixteen, were dressed in elegant costumes of cloth and furs suited to the occasion. They were enjoying the sport, like the Russians, with flowing spirits, in the healthful exercise. The Americans are beginning to adopt a little of European customs of out-door exercise, and let their children breathe the fresh air, so essential to a good constitution and physical development. For, what is life with a sickly frame? And how many kind-hearted mothers rear their children like house-plants, in the confined atmosphere of heated rooms, and thus rob them of the rose-tinted cheek and finely rounded form of health and happiness. The Queen of England is a noble example for mothers in this respect.

Attended this morning the Union Prayer-meeting, in the Baptist Church, which is to continue every day throughout the week in the different churches. The services were deeply interesting and appropriate. The response given to the Missionaries of the East for the salvation of the Heathen world, was felt and poured forth in fervent prayers. The Rev. Mr. Butler, of the Lutheran Church, of this city, gave us an address in the eloquence of an Evangelist, and a prayer in the spirit of the Gospel, which seemed to penetrate the veil of outward things, and lay hold upon the throne of God. The Rev. Dr. Sunderland, of the Presbyterian church, directed our attention to individual responsibility, and consecration of all our powers and affections to the cause of Christ. The obligations of the christian world to God, for the plan of salvation through a Redeemer, demanded a full return of gratitude for the benefits conferred upon us. For we were not our own, but bought with the price of blood. It was pleasant and profitable to see all denominational prejudices melt away like a snow wreath before the blaze of gospel day, and unite in one object, the salvation of the world through Jesus.

"The spirit-world around this world of sense
Floats like an atmosphere, and every where Wafts through these earthly mists and vapors dense
A vital breath of more ethereal air."

Most grateful to the soul amidst the stormy elements of life's changing scene.

S. B. Thomas.

BISHOP HAMLINE.

Dr. Elliott, in a communication to the Pittsburg Advocate, says of ex-Bishop Hamline: "His health is not radically better or worse; yet he is tolerably comfortable, and moves around mostly every day. He is very cheerful, and always happy in his mind. He has built a class-room on the side of his house, which is well attended. Indeed, over three times the number of members attend there on Sabbath afternoons, which are seasons of great interest and profit. The visitors are members of other classes, and members of other Churches. Mrs. Hamline holds a ladies' prayer-meeting every Thursday afternoon in the class-room, with like attendance and equal interest. Many have been awakened, converted, and sanctified at these meetings. Mrs. Hamline's instructions are very appropriate and useful, and many souls are blessed through her instrumentality.

CONFERENCE MINUTES.

Just before going to press, we received from Rev. T. W. Dorman, D.D., Secretary of the Alabama Conference, a handsome copy of the Minutes of that Conference, through the mail.

The Minutes of the Louisiana Conference were also laid on our table just before going to press.

The Minutes of the Mississippi Conference would have been distributed before this but for the severe illness of the Secretary and his family. They will be out soon. Nobody is to blame.

We regret receiving those of Alabama and Louisiana too late for notice of contents this week. Next week we hope to give a full account of those of the three Conferences.

The Black Flag Hoisted.—We are sorry to see that the Christian Advocate and Journal, in accordance with its previously avowed sympathy with the "Black Republican" party, has, with the first number for 1860, the Presidential "impending crisis" year, doffed its old time-honored Methodist title-head, and run up one of ominous-looking deepest black.

Rev. Wm. Arnold, a great preacher and good man, 52 years a member of the Georgia Conference, is dead.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

JANUARY 28, 1860.

NORTH ALABAMA CORRESPONDENCE.

Death of Dr. A. R. Erwin—His Character—Strange Weather—Wesleyan University—Southern Quarterly Review—Dr. Summers—Dr. Keener—Louisiana Conference—Centenary College.

MR. EDITOR.—We have recently been startled by the melancholy intelligence of the Death of Dr. A. R. Erwin. Dr. Erwin was one of the most eloquent preachers in the Southern Church. With a fine imagination, a rich command of language, a profound knowledge of theology, and a deep experience in the religion of the Bible. He was no ordinary man, and his death will be sincerely regretted by all who knew him. At the time of his death he was President of the Huntsville Female College, which he was conducting with great success. He died as a Christian minister, "full of faith and full of the Holy Ghost."

We have had an unusually hard winter, and what is strange, the cold weather has come from the West. It has been exceedingly cold in Memphis which is one hundred and fifty miles West; while it was pleasant here. In a few days however, ice and snow were upon us. It has taken generally about four days for the "cold" to travel from the Mississippi River to North Alabama. So far as we know this phenomenon has never occurred before, and it is well worth the consideration of Meteorologists.

The Wesleyan University is enjoying an unusual degree of prosperity. Alabama has three Methodist colleges for young men. The joint endowment of these institutions amount to nearly five hundred thousand dollars. We commenced here, five years ago, without endowment, without buildings, and with a violent opposition from the Trustees of old La Grange. We have gone on and prospered. When I arrived at La Grange six years ago, we had not more than seventy students in the College and Grammar school. Now we have nearly that number in the Grammar school, and nearly the double of that number in College. Our endowments amount to fifty thousand; and our efficient agent we hope will increase it to one hundred thousand.

Our Professor of Modern Languages is a regular graduate of a German University, and is thoroughly prepared to give instruction in French, Spanish, Italian and German. His superior is not to be found North or South. Our other Professors are well known as highly qualified for their departments.

I have just received the last Quarterly, and I think it one of the best that has been issued. The first article is worth the price of the book; "Evangelism" is a noble contribution on an important subject. Your confrere takes the right view of the Philosophy of the Conditioned. I do not admire the article on the Conscience. So far as I know the conscience is almost universally regarded as a complex, and not as a simple and irresolvable faculty. Dr. Alexander says: "It is complex, including two things, a judgment and an emotion." So I think the writer in the Quarterly has made a man of straw, and I have no objections if he demolishes him.

Dr. Summers has given to the Quarterly a popular character, a variety, and withal has obtained for it writers of such talent and learning, that he deserves well of the whole Church. His learning, his industry, his sound judgment, his critical taste, and his deep piety, most admirably fit him for his high position. I consider him an honor to Southern literature, for he is as truly Southern as any native of the South.

I was glad to see that the Louisiana Conference is appreciating that noble man of God, Dr. Keener. Far-sighted, sagacious, humble, and devoted to the work, he is worthy of the confidence of the efficient and self-denying meny men that constitute the Louisiana Conference. I rejoice in the prosperity of Centenary College. It was the scene of much labor, and the source of the deepest solicitude, during the best years of my life. Its position is such as to enable it to exert the greatest moral power af any of our colleges. It ought to tell, and I trust it will tell with wonderful effect upon the interests of Protestant Christianity, not only in your own great State, but throughout the South-West.

R. H. RIVERS.

Florence Wesleyan University,
Florence, Ala., January 16, 1860.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

ADVERTISING IN THE ADVOCATE.

The business public are slowly learning that the Advocate is THE GREAT ADVERTISING PAPER OF THE SOUTH AND WEST. Advertisements in it are more valuable than in any half dozen other papers.

1.—It has the largest circulation west of Charleston, and South of Cincinnati; larger than any other two weeklies in New Orleans, and is increasing rapidly—will, in a few years, double its present circulation.

2.—Of medium size, and not crowded with advertisements, an advertisement is not lost in it, but can be easily found.

3.—In our "Editorial Notices," which we give to every advertisement, we specify the page and column on which an advertisement may be found. We seek to make every advertisement valuable to the advertiser and to the paper.

4.—The circulation is spread out over Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, principally; Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas, partially.

5.—It is the only weekly of large and widely-spread circulation in the great and growing metropolis of the South.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.—The following is an extract from an address before the Ohio Editorial Convention, by R. Brinkerhoff, Esq.:

"There is still another matter which should not be neglected by advertisers, editors and publishers. Editors are men with like passions as you, and are subject to the same influences.—They have also a power and position which may be wielded for or against you, as circumstances may direct. My observation teaches me that editors, as a class, are generous to a fault, and they never fail to reciprocate a proper liberality. In fact, ninety also times out of a hundred he repays a favor with compound interest.

"Every one knows that an editorial notice of a dozen lines is worth a column of ordinary advertising, and yet there is only here and there a merchant who has liberality enough to procure it. Then again there are some merchants who expect an editorial notice every few weeks as a gratuity, and grumble if they do not get it.

"An editor has just as much right to expect a donation of the most valuable article in his store, as the merchant has to expect an editorial notice, as it is the most valuable of all his advertising."

HON. JUDGE MASON, of Iowa, who made himself so popular with the inventors of the country, while he held the office of Commissioners of Patents, has, we learn, associated himself with Munn & Co., at the Scientific American office, New York.

HARPER FOR FEBRUARY.—In the fifth column of this page will be found the contents, in full, of Harper for February. We have received the number, through T. L. White, who has it for sale. Thackeray and Trollope, each, commences a new series in this number. Harper is worthy of general circulation.

FELICIANA FEMALE INSTITUTE.—This excellent institution, located at Jackson, La., the seat of Centenary College, under the direction of the able and accomplished Principal, has an advertisement in the sixth column of this page, to which we call attention.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.—On this page, 4th column, Mr. Walter Bennett, the Agent, 33 Camp-street, has an advertisement of these popular sewing machines. It is working a perfect revolution in domestic economy.

STATE FEMALE COLLEGE, near Memphis, Tenn., formerly conducted by the lamented President Starkes, and a fine and successful institution, has an advertisement on this page, sixth column.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE, says the Ladies' Visitor, New York, seems to be universally welcomed by housekeepers wherever it goes; it is precisely the ready reliable adhesive substance needed for repairing furniture and household ware.

BALEXI.—Rev. M. H. Thomason writes: We have had a bright and powerful conversion here—a very interesting young lady.

REV. H. J. HARRIS' address is Summit, Miss.

OUR OWN NOTICES.

BRETHREN AND FRIENDS IN NEW ORLEANS, the New Orleans Christian Advocate is published in your own city. You call that city the "Commercial Metropolis of the South." Ought not your paper, circulating as widely as your trade, to have a large circulation at home? Our brethren and friends abroad, who know and esteem those of you engaged in business, say, "I suppose you have a fine circulation and hearty support in New Orleans!" You see what is expected of you. Is it not a just expectation? The Advocate ought to have ten times its present circulation in New Orleans. Will not every present subscriber recommend others to take it? They will do so, if you ask them.

A CITY EXAMPLE. A brother who is a clerk in one of the largest dry goods establishments in the city, and superintendent of a Sunday-school, and who has no leisure at all, is constantly bringing us the names and money of new subscribers to the Advocate. "Go thou and do likewise."

OUR CITIES AND TOWN AND VILLAGES. Have you ever thought of the number of cities, towns and villages within the bounds of the circulation of the Advocate? They are counted by hundreds. How easy it would be for the pastor, the local preachers, and the members and friends, to greatly enlarge, if not double our list in each place! Try it, and let us know the result. Try it now, in the beginning of 1860.

IF YOU WANT PARSONAGES, circulate the Advocate. It is on that side.

DO YOU WISH A LARGE MISSIONARY COLLECTION? Get all the people to take the Advocate, and by the time you are ready for the collection, the people will be prepared.

HOW TO PROMOTE A REVIVAL? Nothing is better calculated to do it, than general circulation of the Advocate among the people. Besides its general religious reading, its revival intelligence is inspiring.

A LITERARY TASTE.—All your children should acquire it. It is a charm and a joy. The Advocate is a literary as well as religious paper. It is worth more than thousands of books now called popular literature.

CONFERENCE AGENTS. How much these could do for the Advocate! Yet how little they do! And yet how much they require the Advocate to do for them! Let us make a "reciprocity treaty."

LITERARY NOTICES.

PREACHERS AND PREACHING. By Rev. Nicholas Murray, D.D., author of "Kirwan's Letters to Bishop Hughes," "Men and Things in Europe," "Parish and other Pencillings," "The Happy Home," etc. New York: Harper and Brothers, Publishers, Franklin-square, 1859. T. L. White & Co., New Orleans.

"Kirwan's" reputation as an evangelical, earnest, spiritual, learned, and elegant writer, is established. The subject he has chosen in this work exceeds in practical importance all others. Probably no man in this country is better prepared to treat it than Dr. Murray. It is a book for the times.

THE SOUTHERN PATH-FINDER is an advertising paper, published weekly at No. 9 Bank Place, New Orleans, by W. F. McLean & Co., to be circulated gratuitously, in steamboats, railroads, and other vehicles of travel to this city. The first number is a very creditable sheet.

PERSONAL.

GOV. MOORE, OF LOUISIANA.—Hon. Thomas Overton Moore, the recently elected Governor of this State, was inaugurated last Monday. Like his predecessor, Hon. R. C. Wickliffe, he is popular, and has the confidence of the people. He is a grandson of one of Gen. Jackson's favorite officers, a successful planter, and experienced as a legislator.

CHRISTIAN ROSELIUS.—A strong movement is being made by the Bar, and many friends, to elevate this eminent lawyer and worthy gentleman to the vacancy on the Supreme Court Bench, made by the resignation of Judge Cole. Mr. Roselius received the honorary degree of L.L.D., from Centenary College of Louisiana several years ago, which was most worthily bestowed.

MAJOR VAN DORN, who won a brilliant military reputation by his bravery during the Mexican war, at Fort Brown, Monterey, Cerro Gordo, and the City of Mexico, and recently on the Texas frontier, is now on a visit to his native place and relatives, at Port Gibson, Miss.

GEN. ROBERT BUTLER.—On the fourth page of this paper, this veteran of 1814-15, and of the 8th of January battle of New Orleans, is stated to be one of the few survivors. Neale has since come that he is dead. He stood by Jackson when met by the Mayor and chief citizens of New Orleans. He negotiated the armistice, on the American side, after the battle.—Gen. Wm. O. Butler, of Carrollton, Kentucky, and Gen. B. W. Butler, of Iberville Parish, La., are now the only survivors of the family of fighting Butlers. Gen. Robert Butler died at Lake Jackson, Fla.

COL. W. S. CAMPBELL.—This eminent citizen of New Orleans was found dead in his bed a few mornings since. He was a native of North Carolina, of the Scotch Argyle race; removed to this State about twenty years ago, where, as a man, a legislator, and railroad officer, his career has been highly honorable.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

N. O., JACKSON, AND G. N. RAILROAD.—We regret to see that the states of Mississippi and Louisiana are not entirely harmonious in regard to this greatest of their public works, and in which they are equally interested. Most of the road is in Mississippi; Louisiana has paid over $3,000,000 of its cost; Mississippi about $700,000. The cause of trouble is, proposed "unfriendly legislation" in the Mississippi Legislature now in session. The City Council of New Orleans, and the Louisiana Legislature now in session, are earnest in remonstrance. Let Mississippi and Louisiana be twin sisters in this, as in everything else.

THE LAWRENCE CALAMITY.—In our last issue we had a telegraphic dispatch of the Pemberton Mill calamity, at Lawrence, Mass. It is more disastrous, we believe, than any land casualty ever recorded in the history of this country. The building fell when about 600 operatives were at work within it. In addition to this calamity, the wreck soon took fire, and many were burned to death who were not killed by the fall of the building.—Over 100 are killed and missing, and over 200 are wounded.—The papers are full of the heart-sickening particulars.

CORTINAS.—This notorious Mexican bandit, who, with a band of desperadoes, has pillaged the country in the vicinity of Brownsville, and murdered American citizens, and who was at last routed by the Americans, is preparing for another raid. It is believed that he is countenanced on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande.

A FIRE AT HOUSTON, TEXAS, has destroyed $140,000 of cotton, sugar, and other property.

POLITICAL.

SOUTHERN UNITY.—Louisiana tenders Virginia $25,000 as her part of the latter's expense in defending Southern soil. Such is an resolution before the Legislature.

SOUTHERN COMMISSIONERS.—The Legislatures of several of the Southern States are sending commissioners to Virginia to confer with authorities of Virginia as to the course to be adopted in the present crisis.

PROTECTION IN THE TERRITORIES.—The Southern Legislatures and State Conventions are passing strong resolutions in favor of Congressional protection to slavery in the Territories, and insist on its recognition in the Charleston Convention.

A BLACK REPUBLICAN PRESIDENT.—The Southern Legislatures and State Conventions are taking the ground emphatically that the Southern States will not submit to the election of a Black Republican President.

DOMESTIC.

No Prospect of an Organization.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The House to-day continued the irregular discussion of the slavery question, as from the beginning, but without any new developments, though there was considerable excitement toward the close.

No further ballots for Speaker were had.

As to the prospects for the future all agree that they are very gloomy. It is considered quite certain, at all events, that there is no chance for the plurality rule.

In the House of Representatives yesterday Mr. Schuyler Colfax, of Indiana, showed that the Democrats had signed a paper by which they pledged themselves to resist by every parliamentary stratagem the vote on the plurality rule.

Congressional Proceedings.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—The Senate was not in session to-day.

In the House the same routine of desultory discussion and speech-making, for the purpose of consuming time, was continued to-day.

The proceedings were of an unimportant character.

The Republicans are severe in their censure of those Democratic members who have pledged themselves to use every parliamentary means in their power to prevent the adoption of the plurality rule in the election of Speaker, and to pursue this course until the expiration of the present Congress if necessary.

Up to a late hour no attempt had been made to obtain another ballot for speaker.

The Harper's Ferry Investigation.

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—The Washington telegraphic correspondent of the New York Herald announces the arrival at Reid's, the provisional Secretary of State under Old Brown. He arrived yesterday from Texas in charge of an officer, and will be called before the Harper's Ferry Investigating Committee of the Senate to-day, to give his testimony.

Reid states, in conversation, that Old Brown wrote to Senator Wilson, of Mass., respecting the running away of slaves, and that Wilson's letter denounced the scheme as an act of madness.

Reid also asserts that the course pursued by Brown was entirely independent of all political organization, or politicians as such; but his testimony implicates several prominent New England and New York men, who were the supporters of Brown in all his schemes.

Washington City News.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—The balance now in the Treasury is less than $8,000,000, and this amount is intended to be reserved to meet the deficiency in the Post-office Department, and will be so applied as soon as the House of Representatives shall authorize its appropriation for that purpose.

Commodore Morgan, the contractor for carrying the mails between New Orleans and Vera Cruz, has declined to carry the mails any longer on the terms heretofore paid, viz: the amount of postage received.

The Post-office Department have therefore decided that the service shall hereafter be performed by sailing vessels.

The differences which have recently existed between Postmaster General Holt and other members of the Cabinet, arose from different interpretations of the law relating to the curtailment in the mail service. These conflicting views have, however, been reconciled.

Hon. Clark H. Cochrane.

UTICA, Jan. 21.—Dr. Gray, Superintendent of the State Lunatic Asylum, contradicts the reports recently circulated, that the illness of Senator Cochrane of New York, heretofore reported insane, had developed into insanity.

Dr. Gray says that Mr. Cochrane is not insane, but that his mind has been exhausted by professional labor in Congress.

Northern Manufacturers' Convention.

MERIDEN, Conn. Jan. 19.—The Convention held here yesterday, representing the Manufacturing interests of the State, resulted in the division of the Convention, owing to the fact that many of the members belonged to the Republican party, others to the Democratic. Each party formed a separate Convention. The two Conventions, however, passed conservative resolutions.

Hudson River Railroad Accident.

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—A shocking accident accompanied with loss of life, took place on the Hudson River Railroad yesterday afternoon, occasioned by the express train running into the accommodation train, killing and wounding a large number of the passengers. Mr. Fields of Brooklyn, was killed instantly; Bishop McCloskey, (Catholic), at Albany, is very seriously injured; Mrs. Thompson, wife of the publisher of Thompson's Bank Note Reporter, had both her legs broken.

The Difficulties in the Cabinet.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The Washington correspondent of the New York Times, says that Postmaster General Holt threatens to resign his seat in the Cabinet, unless the President removes Jesse Cook from the office of Postmaster at Chicago. The Secretary of War insists upon ordering Montgomery H. Meigs to Florida. This step is strongly opposed by the President, Jeff Davis and Senator Toombs. These two affairs are said to be the causes which have occasioned the dissentions in the Cabinet.

Legislative Courtesies.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 21.—The Legislature of Ohio having invited the Legislatures of Tennessee and Kentucky to visit them at Columbus, a committee has been appointed to receive them in this city, and to escort them to the capital of the State.

Arms Ordered to the South.

WASHINGTON, Jan 23.—The President has ordered the Superintendent of the Armory at Springfield, Mass., to send 15,000 muskets South. A portion of them are to be sent to Charleston, South Carolina, another portion to Augusta, Georgia, and a portion to Baton Rouge, Louisiana. The President has also ordered 9,000 rifles from the Watertown and Watervlie Arsenals, to be sent South, for use in case of necessity.

Congressional Proceedings.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—In the House, to-day, Mr. Barksdale advocated the Union of the anti-Lecompton members with the South American and Democrats against the Republicans, for the purpose of effecting an organization, laying aside all party interests in the more important and pressing interest of the country at large. The usual desultory discussion, however, took the place of more relevant matters, and no ballot for Speaker was taken.

Mexican Affidavit Washington.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—The administration refuses the recognition of Miramon's protest against the Juarez Government, because Miramon did not recognize Mr. McLean's protest against the Tarubay massacre. The reports from Vera Cruz to the effect that French and Spanish vessels of war were expected there to enforce the claims of their governments upon the federal government of Mexico, are looked upon in diplomatic circles as a part of the policy of the French minister at the capital, to encourage the reactionists to hold out against the liberal government of Juarez.

The Harper's Ferry Investigation.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—The examination of Reaff was continued to-day before the Senate Harper's Ferry Investigating committee. During his examination, Reaff testified that Senator Wilson, of Massachusetts, wrote a letter to Dr. Howe, of Boston, telling him that, if old Brown attempted to interfere, in any way, with slavery in the States, he (Dr. Howe) must withdraw all means furnished for services in Kansas. From the examination to-day, it is evident that Reaff is determined not to implicate any of the Republicans, but members of some other organization may be slightly complicated in the affair.

The San Juan Difficulty.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 23.—The overland mail, of the 20th ult., brings advices from Vancouvers Island, to the effect that the British Government has ordered all its vessels of war away from San Juan Island, until the difficulty had been settled between the two governments.

Free Negroes Leaving.

The free negroes are leaving Arkansas in pursuance of the late act of the Legislature requiring their withdrawal from the State. The Cincinnati Commercial learns that the upward bound boats are full of them.

FOREIGN.

The European Congress.

It was expected at London when the Anglo-Saxon left, that the European Congress would meet on the 12th of February, but no reliable information has transpired respecting the precise day of the meeting.

The Spaniards again Victorious.

A dispatch from Madrid to the 1st inst., says that on Friday evening the 30th ult., the Moorish Troops attacked the encampment of the Spanish army, but were repulsed with heavy loss, while the loss of the Spanish was inconsiderable. The Spanish army pursued their advantage and defeated the Moors along their whole line of operation, the Spanish army advancing as far as Gaspillegas.

The Moorish army were 10,000 strong, and lost, during the engagement, at least 1500 men, while the loss of the Spanish army was some 400 or 500.

Still another dispatch states that the Spanish squadrons had burned and blown up the Moorish forts at the mouth of the river Tetuan.

Some of the Moorish tribes of the Morocco kingdom were unwilling to continue the war, and had withdrawn to the mountains.

More Fighting in India.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—Later advices have been received in this city to-day, by the overland mail, from India. Another engagement had taken place between the British troops and the Sepoy rebels in the province of Oude, in which 2200 of the latter, with their commanding officer, were taken prisoners.

Damage to American Shipping.

PORTLAND, Jan. 19.—The Anglo-Saxon reports that the English coast has again been visited by a succession of very severe gales, which caused immense damage to American shipping bound in to Liverpool and other ports.

Change of French Minister.

PORTLAND, Jan. 19.—A dispatch received from Paris announce the retirement of Count Walewski as minister of foreign affairs, and the appointment of Monsieur Thouvenal in his stead.

General News.

The meeting of the Paris Congress and the changes in the French Cabinet were the chief topics of public interest when the Circassian sailed, and occupied much of the attention of the press.

It was still a matter of uncertainty whether the congress would assemble at present or not.

It was not publicly known whether Count Walewski, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, retired from the Cabinet voluntarily or was dismissed by the Emperor.

His retirement or dismissal, however, was attracting much attention in political circles in Europe, and was variously interpreted.

The English Journals generally construe it as indicating the Emperor Napoleon's intentions to espouse the cause of Italian independence.

It was reported at Paris, that Lord Cowley, the British Ambassador at Paris, was about to visit England for the purpose of attempting the settlement of the Italian question without the intervention of a Congress.

Marshal McMahon had succeeded Marshal Valliant as Commander-in-Chief of the French army of occupation in Italy.

The Sardinian Government has protested against the enlistment of German troops by the Pope, and the king threatens to send troops into the Legations unless it is discontinued.

The army of Prussia, which had been reduced to a peace footing, is to be augmented by the addition of 35,000 troops.

Advices from Constantinople confirm the report that Bucki Pacha had succeeded Kadrill Pacha as Grand Vizier to the Sublime Porte.

Pacific Speech of Louis Napoleon.

A report was in circulation that the projected European Congress would not be assembled, owing to the difficulty of reconciling the various and conflicting interests of those powers who were to take part in its proceedings upon a basis acceptable to all concerned. The report, however, is not fully credited, as it lacks confirmation.

On the occasion of the reception of the Diplomatic Corps on New Year's day, the Emperor Napoleon made a speech of a marked pacific tone, which has had the effect to reassure Europe to a certain extent, of the moderate and peaceful intention of the French Emperor.

An Absconding Debtor Sentenced.

Mr. Davie, who absconded from England some time since, leaving behind him liabilities to the amount of £130,000, has been arrested, and, after a long trial, has been sentenced to ten years penal servitude.

Protection of the Pope.

An address to Lord Palmerston, praying the British Government to use its influence in maintaining the integrity and independence of the Pope's temporal dominion, is being extensively circulated and signed by the Irish Catholics in England and Ireland.

The British Press on Napoleon.

The London Times, in an elaborate article upon the new phase of the Italian question, regards the dismissal of Count Walewski from the foreign office of France as a plain declaration that the Emperor Napoleon is committed to the cause of Italian liberty and independence against all despotic powers as well as against the hostility of the church to any reform in the governments of that country. The Times tells the Emperor Napoleon that he may count on English sympathy in his liberal views toward Italy, but not upon an offensive alliance against other powers. Other English journals regard the successor of Count Walewski as entertaining views and principles antagonistic to England and English interests.

Lord Cowley's Mission to England.

The Paris correspondent of the London Advertiser says it is rumored that Lord Cowley's mission to London is for the purpose of presenting the proposal of the Emperor Napoleon to the effect that France and England shall immediately declare that they will not interfere, and will not allow other powers to interfere in the affairs of Italy.

MARRIAGES.

"It is not good for man to be alone."

On the 6th of December last, at the house of W. W. Hughes, by the Rev. Dr. John C. Hicks, Mr. JAMES G. KEY, to Miss S. G. BENTLEY, all of Carroll county, Mississippi.

On the first of October, by the Rev. G. W. Carter, the Rev. BENJAMIN HOWE of Bainbridge Ga., to Miss MINERVA CRAWFORD, of Enon, Ala.

On the evening of the 12th inst., by the Rev. J. J. Clark, at the residence of Mr. Buck, Mr. L. A. STEVENSON, to Miss MARTHA J. SMITH, all of Cold Springs Miss.

On January 16th, by Rev. John H. Bowen, Mr. A. WOODS, to Miss J. SIMMONS, all of Jefferson county.

RECEIPTS, BY THE POST-OFFICE,

To January 17th, 1860.

A—C G Andrews, $2; D Allen, $2; B H Alexander, $2; A H C Anderson, $2.

B—J Boring, $2; J S Brunon, $5; L M Boyd, $2; J H Brewer, $2; J F Bellamy, $1 30; L B Bell, $7; W F M Belty, $2.

C—W H Carter, $5; H E Cockerham, $2; E Clarke, $1; J Carraway, $1; G Cobbs, $2; W M Curtis, $1.

D—J F Dickerson, $2; W H Dennis, $1; L Duss, $2; A H Davis, $1 50.

E—J Ebbert, $5; G F Ellis, $12 10.

F—J L Forsyth, $18; G C Fure, $2.

G—W Gibson, $2; T H S De Graffenried, $2; W Godfrey, $5; J V Glass, $1; A P Gillespie, $2.

H—H J Hunter, $2; W R J Hinshands, $5; W C Hearn, $5; W H Hines, $2; J A Hall, $2; J W Holston, $20; H B Hall, $2.

J—W P Jones, $2; T M Jones, $1.

K—T B Kingsbury, $1 80.

L—E T Lampkin, $5.

M—H Montgomery, $5; W Murrah, $20; C W Mills, $2; P H M'Crary, $2; W G M'Caughey, $5; D P Myers, $2 80; J. L. M'Lemlon, $3; A L. M'Use, $2 25; J H Mann, $2; J Matthews, $2; J. M'Cormick, $2; J W. S Moriette, $5; T L Mann, $2.

N—T Nordan, $5; A Nabors, $5; E H Norton, 2; W K Norton, $4.

O—N H Moseley, $2.

P—A T Plowman, $2; M H Pearson, $13; H M Pipes, $5 54; J J Pierce, $2.

R—W G Robertson, $7; J F Rives, $5; J Rice, $2.

S—E Z Stamps, $2; J W Solomon, $2; W M Shockley, $2; J F Sessions, 3; C Shumfield, $2 50; L H Sonnett, $2; A W Smith, $5.

T—G F Thompson, $2; S Tisdale, $10; A H Thomas, $2; J Thornton, $2 E G Taylor, $2; G R Talley, $5; W W Thomas, $10; H M Taylor, $5.

W—H H Williams, $2; L M Wilson, $5; F H Whithy, $2 P G Wood, $2 35; J P K Walker, $2; R S Woodward, $2; T B White, $2; W Witcher, $2; A West, $5; F H Witter, $5; R Williams, $2 35; H D Wade, $5; J S Winn, $2.

Y—E B Yancy, $5.

COMMERCIAL.

MONDAY EVENING, January 23, 1859.

We condense the following statement from the New Orleans Price Current of the 21th instant:—

There has been an active movement in Cotton throughout the past week in our market, with an upward tendency in prices, and the business in Tobacco has shown more animation, while sugar and molasses have been depressed and closed at declining rates. In Western Produce the transactions have been of only a moderate character.

COTTON.—With respect to prices, we have to remark that they have been generally very full, and we have further advanced our quotations about ⅛c. for the Middling and better qualities —the figures for the Lower grades being unchanged, though these descriptions have been in more request and steadier and firmer in the rates. Even running lots of Middling and clean Cottons generally, are still very scarce, and are mostly held even above the outside figures of our quotations.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	5 @ 7	Good Middling	11¾@11
Ordinary	8 @ 9	Middling Fair	12¼@12½
Good Ordinary	9 @ 9¾	Fair	—@—
Low Middling	10¼@10½	Good Fair	—@—
Middling	10 @10¼	Good and Fine	—@—

SUGAR.—The sales of the week amount to 5500 hhds. We quote for Inferior and Refining 4 to 5½; Common to Good Common 5¾ to 6¾; Fair to Fully Fair 6¾ to 7¾; Prime to Choice 8 to 8½; Centrifugal and Clarified 6¾ to 9¾ cents per pound. The above quotations apply to round lots, but small orders of 5 hhds and under, could not be filled without paying a further advance of ¼ to ⅜c per pound.

MOLASSES.—Total receipts of the week 15,000 barrels. The prices obtained during the week were: Interior to Fair, 33 to 38 cents per gallon; and Prime to Choice, 40 to 41½ cents; half barrels, 40½ to 44 cents per gallon.

FLOUR.—About 6,000 bbls have been sold during the past week, at from $5 85 to $6 00 for superfine, $6 25 to 6 50 for ordinary to good extra, and $6 75 to $7 00 per bbl. for choice extra brands.

GRAIN.—The receipts of Corn continue light. About 10,000 sacks have been sold at from $0 56 to 0 60 for ordinary, and $0 75 for good white. Oats have been in moderate request at 45c to 50c per bushel for good to prime St. Louis. Bran sells at $1 70 to $1 75 for ordinary to choice lots. Wheat sells at $1 15 per bushel for prime red.

PORK.—The principal sales reported through the week were at $17 50 to $18 00 per bbl. for Mess.

BEEF.—We quote Prime Mess at $14 00 per bbl. for extra brands.

BACON.—Shoulders 8½ to 9; Ribbed Sides 10 to 10; Clear Sides 11 to 11½; Sugar-cured Hams 15 to 16 cents per pound.

LARD.—We quote 10½ to 11c for prime to choice prime, in bs., and 12½ to 13c. for kegs.

BUTTER.—Western generally selling at 13 to 16 cents per pound, according to quality; and Cheese 11 to 12c.

BAGGING AND BALE ROPE.—We quote Kentucky Bagging at 13½ to 15 cents per yard; India Bagging, 11½ to 12c; Bale Rope, hand spun, 7½ to 7¾, and machine made, 8 to 8½ cents per pound.

GUNNY BAGS.—Limited parcels sell at 11 cents for light and 12 to 12½c. to heavy and extra heavy bags.

COFFEE.—We quote fair at 11 to 12, and prime at 12½c. per pound.

LIVE-STOCK.—Beef Cattle—Western, 8 to 9c. per lb. net; Texas—ordinary to fair $10 to 16, and choice $20 to 25 per head.

Hogs, selling at 8 to 9½c. per pound net.

Sheep—Selling at $2 50 to $6 00 per head.

Veal Cattle—Selling at $8 00 to $11 00 per head.

Milch Cows—Dull, at $30 to $35 per head.

NEW ORLEANS WHOLESALE PRICES-CURRENT.

BAGGING—Kentucky, ₩ yard	12 @.. 14
East India	12 @.. —
BALE ROPE—Kentucky, ₩ lb	06½@.. 08
BRAN, ₩ 100 ₩	1 20 @ 1 25
COFFEE—Rio, ₩ lb	11¾@.. 12¾
Havana, good prime green	—
Inferior to middling	—
Java	18 @.. 20
Laguayra	12½@.. 13¾
St. Domingo	12½@.. 13
CANDLES—Sperm, New Bedford, ₩ lb	40 @.. 42
Nantucket	—
Adamantine	20 @.. 22
Star	17½@.. 21
CORDAGE—Manilla, ₩ lb	9¾@.. 10
Tarred American	12 @.. 13
FLOUR—Ohio, etc. superfine, ₩ bbl	@ 5 75
Illinois and Missouri	@ 6 00
St. Louis City	@ 6 75
FISH—Cod, ₩ box	85 @.. 95
Mackrel, No 1, ₩ bbl	15 50 @17 00
2	14 00 @16 00
3	8 50 @10 50
GRAIN—Wheat, ₩ bushel	— @ 1 15
Corn, shelled	85 @ 90
in the ear, ₩ bbl	—
Beans	4 50 @ 5 00
SALT—Liverpool, fine, carge, ₩ sack	— @.. —
from store	1 10 @.. —
coarse, cargo	— @.. —
from store	1 05 @ 1 10
SUGAR—Louisiana, on plantation, ₩ lb	— @.. —
in the city	04 @.. 08½
Havana, yellow	07¾@.. 08½
white	09 @.. 10½

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES

WITH LATE AND GREAT IMPROVEMENTS.

ABUNDANT evidence has already been published of the general success of Singer's Sewing Machines in Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas, and their sale has increased astonishingly in the last few months. Their freedom from liability to get out of repair, and their perfect adaptation to all kinds of sewing, has made them not only the manufacturing Machine of this country, but

THE MOST RELIABLE

FAMILY MACHINE IN THE WORLD,

As, with the recent improvements, they sew with equal facility with from No 200 to 8 cord thread, of either cotton, flax or silk, on cloth or leather.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES

Are warranted three years, even in the hands of Negroes; and are also warranted to perform equal to any other Machine in the world on any kind of sewing, fine or coarse, or the MONEY REFUNDED.

Since testing of the clothing and shoes sold in New Orleans is made on Singer's Machines, and they are used in preference to all others, after a fair trial, in the largest and most fashionable dressmaking establishments in New Orleans.

They are used at all the large hat-s in New Orleans, and at the principal bearding houses; also, by a large portion of the tailors and shoemakers, and in hundreds of private families, and have given universal satisfaction.

WALTER BENNETT,
AGENT,
33..... ....CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS.....33

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.

SAVE THE PIECES!

ECONOMY! DISPATCH!

☞ "A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE."☜

As accidents will happen, even in well-regulated families, it is very desirable to have somewhere and convenient way for repairing Furniture, Toys, Crockery, &c.,

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE

meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. It is always ready, and up to the sticking point. There is no longer a necessity for limping chairs, splintered veneers, headless dolls, and broken wonders. It is just the article for house, shop, and other ornamental work, so popular with ladies of refinement and taste.

This admirable preparation is used cold, being chemically held in solution, and possessing all the valuable qualities of the best cabinet-makers' Glue. It may be used in the place of ordinary mucilage, being vastly more efficient.

"USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE."

N B.—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cents.

Wholesale Depot, 48 Cedar-street, New York.

Address HENRY C. SPALDING & Co.
Box No. 3,600, New York.

Put up for Dealers in Cases containing four, eight, and twelve dozen —a beautiful Lithographic Show-Card accompanying each package.

☞ A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times its cost annually to every household.☜

Sold by all prominent Stationers, Druggists, Hardware and Fancy Dealers, Grocers, and Fancy Stores

Country merchants should make a note of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE, when making up their list. It will stand any climate.

Thackeray.—Trollope.

HARPER'S

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

No. CXVII] CONTENTS. [FEBRUARY

EGOS AND THE MAGALLOWAY.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—Valley of the Androscoggin.—Come to see the Cicone.—Owner of a Mostly Farm.—Goodbye to Lancaster.—Danville Notch.—Riding up the Androscoggin.—Settlement on the Magalloway.—In Camp.—The Carry.—Lumberman's Camp.—Parmachenee Lake.—In Diamond's Dining.—Camp on Camel's Rump. In Three Dominions.—Dwellington.

ODE ON THE BIRTHDAY OF CHARLES WESLEY.

HOLIDAYS IN COSTA RICA. III. SAN-JOSE TO CARTAGO. By THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—Volcano of Turrialba.—The Diligence.—Valley of Cartago.—Church of our Lady of the Angels.—Plaza of Cartago.—Remains of Old Cartago.—Ascent of Irazu.—The Crater of Irazu.—Shooting Fish.—Hammock Bridge.—Primitive Plow.—Pounding Coffee.—Coffee Mill.—Hacienda of Navara.—The Quezal.—Sugar Mill.

A PICTURE.

COINS AND COINAGE.

With Fifty-Seven Illustrations of Classic, Oriental, and English Coins.

CAPTAIN GAYLORD'S WILL.

CARTHAGO ON CRUTCHES (Concluded). By "HENRY GREVILLE."

WASHINGTON. By JOHN SAVAGE.

RELICS OF GENERAL CHASSE.—A TALE OF ANTWERP. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

THE ARABS IN SPAIN.

LITTLE BROTHER. PART I

LOVEL THE WIDOWER. By W. M. THACKERAY.

CHAPTER I. The Bachelor of Bleak Street.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—A Family of Mulls.—I am referred to Cecilia.

MOTHER DE PEARL. By FITZ JAMES O'BRIEN.

MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS.

LITERARY NOTICES.

EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR.

OUR FOREIGN BUREAU.

EDITOR'S DRAWER.

MASTER CHARLEY IN THE SNOW.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—Experiments on the Cat and the Children's Column.

A BATTALION OF BOY-SOLDIERS.

The little boys who read the Advocate have all heard of Gen. Garibaldi, the noble Italian soldier, who is trying to do for Italy what Gen. Washington did for this country—that is, trying to make it a free country. He is fighting to deliver Italy from the Emperor of Austria and the Pope of Rome, just as Gen. Washington fought to deliver the United States from the King of England.

Well, boys, Garibaldi has a battalion of 400 boys! When engaged in the South American wars, and in the defense of Rome in 1849, this gallant leader had noticed that boys between the age of thirteen and fifteen years, had proved useful in the daring military operations he was called to accomplish. At the beginning of the late campaign, having found that the Lombard cities through which he marched his triumphant legions, had given their contingent of young soldiers, he at once made up his mind to have a battalion of boys organized. An intelligent young officer, whom he had known during the Roman campaign, in 1849, being then at Rome, [illegible] with the formation of the legion, which, at the beginning, did not number more than 150. Austrian persecution, and patriotism, soon increased the number of the adolescenti, as he calls them in Italian, so that the battalion has now completed its numerical strength. These little soldiers are dressed in a dark green tunic, with red cuffs, with a white edge, and dark green trowsers. To see them maneuvering on the parade ground, you would be astonished and amused to see how perfect and orderly their movements are. They go through all sorts of military evolutions with such steadiness and precision as could scarcely be surpassed by grown up soldiers after many months of training and drilling. Their commanding officer, Count John Arrivabene, is a young nobleman of three-and-twenty. He belongs to an illustrious Mantuan family, which, since 1821, has contributed a great many soldiers to the cause of national independence. Although this battalion of boys will do good service should it be called on to fight against the enemies of Italian independence, its chief importance is of a moral kind, and is such as will be easily understood by all sensible men in Europe. This gathering of the representatives of the rising generation around the flag of their country, should be taken as a warning to Europe that there can not be any compromise, any temporary solution of a question which has taken such hold not only of all classes, but all ages—that is the question of Italian independence.

Now, the Editor wishes to know if the boys who read the Advocate would fight for their country if it should be invaded by an enemy? He believes they would. A man should be willing both to fight, and to die, for his country, if need be. It is a pity there ever should be wars. We all should pray that "wars may cease unto the ends of the earth." But wicked men and wicked rulers, sometimes make it necessary to fight in defense of our country and our rights. A man who is a coward, and unwilling to fight if it be necessary, is unworthy to be a citizen of a free country and to enjoy its rights. The Editor hopes all his little boys will cultivate bravery—not rashness, nor pompousness, nor braggadocio—but real, simple, quiet bravery; the willingness, the ability to dare anything, even death itself, if God and duty require it.

A LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

MR. EDITOR: I used to think your paper was great when you wrote so much to us children; but of late it seems you have forgotten us. I hope you will give us some more pretty reading in the children's column. I recollect what a happy new year you wished us, also I recollect your inquiring about what old Santa Claus gave us. Well, I can tell you, we had a fine time this last Christmas; the old fellow gave me and my little brothers and sisters so much nice candy and raisins, and he gave papa ten nice apples and a letter requesting him to give his children some, and he told him in his letter to tell the children if we did not say our prayers more, and be better children, he never would come to see us again. Now, Mr. Editor, what do you think of that? I wish I knew who Santa Claus was, and where he lived. I think that puzzles me worse than guessing what C. C. stands for in your name. And if you will tell me I will write you word what I think your name is. I must close my letter by asking you to excuse bad writing and spelling. I know you will when I tell you I am eleven years old and never went to school in my life. My dear mamma has taught me all I know. Your little friend with respect, W. T. BUFORD.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Our little friend does not let us know whether he is a boy, or she is a girl. We presume he is a boy. We think he will not complain of our paper since the beginning of 1860. We shall probably find time to tell him something about Santa Claus one of these days. Shall we tell, old folks?

REMARKABLE PRESENCE OF MIND.—A few days ago, a lad about seven years old, while crossing one of the ponds in the north part of New Bedford, Mass., broke through the ice. He would certainly have been drowned, if it had not been for the presence of mind of a companion, a boy about five years old, who threw himself flat upon the ice, which was not strong enough to bear him standing, and in this manner succeeded in getting near enough to the boy in the water to grasp his hand and sustain him till some men came to their aid and extricated them from their danger.

The Family Circle.

CULTIVATION OF THE BEAUTIFUL IN LADIES.

TASTE IN DRESS.

We have no doubt that the lady readers of the Advocate are as refined and tasteful a circle as any country can claim. But, for the benefit of the exceptional cases, if there be any, and for the encouragement in "well-doing" of those who cultivate the beautiful in connection with person, dress, and deportment, we wish to say a few things.

A judicious writer has very truly said that there are certain moralists in the world who labor under the impression that it is no matter what people wear, or how they put on their apparel, fresh people cover themselves up—they do not dress. No one doubts that the mind is more important that the body—the jewel than the setting; and yet the virtue of the one, and the brilliancy of the other, are enhanced by the mode in which they are presented to the senses. Let a woman have every virtue under the sun, if she is slatternly, or even inappropriate in her dress, her merits will be more than half obscured. If, being young, she is untidy, or, being old, fantastic or slovenly, her mental qualifications stand a chance of being passed over with indifference.

True piety and true taste are never in antagonism. And both piety and taste indicate the most truly beautiful manner of dress for a lady as in accordance with truth and the will of God. We are not speaking of cost, or quality, or of any thing of the kind. A pure taste has room for exercise among the poor as well as among the rich. A cottage in the pine woods can be made beautiful by a love of the beautiful as well as the stately mansion.

If, "as some do vainly imagine," it is a sin to seek after the beautiful in dress, why is it that God has made any thing beautiful? Why are not the spring leaves black instead of green? Why is the earth adorned with flowers at the appropriate season? Why has he blessed the world with beautiful women? Why has he surrounded us with beauty, and filled our hearts with a love of the beautiful that is only "a little lower than the" love of God, and, indeed, strongly akin to it?

"Now abideth Faith, Hope, Charity, these three; but the greatest of these is Charity;" for it is the fruition of both the others. And now abideth the True, the Good, the Beautiful; but the greatest of these is the Beautiful; for it is the flower of the other two.

A lady who violates in her dress, from puritanism, or negligence, the instinct of the beautiful within her, sins as truly against her nature, and the will of God, as she who adjures love.

But, as the faculty of conscience has to be enlightened, developed, educated, by the word of God and prayer, so, likewise, has the native love of the beautiful. Merely following our own inclination, or that idol deity called "fashion," will never endow us with a pure, enlightened christian taste. We must grow in this "grace" and "knowledge." It should be a part of our study and culture, especially with ladies. It is right and joy-giving in itself, and it adds much to our usefulness, and our ability to make others happy. Husband, children, and friends are deeply interested in the cultivation of a love of the beautiful in women.

THE MANNERS OF HUSBANDS.

Little things make up life, and we wish to impress the husbands who read the Advocate with the truth that most of the blessedness of that heaven on earth—a happy home—is derived from the manners of the husband and wife toward each other. As much responsibility rests upon the wife as upon the husband, but we are not talking to wives now; we will do that some other time.

Some husbands never leave home in the morning, without kissing their wives, and bidding them "good-bye, dear," in a tone of unwearied love; and whether it be policy or fact, it has all the effect of fact, and those homes are generally pleasant ones, provided always that the wives are appreciative and welcome the discipline in a kindly spirit. We knew an old gentleman who lived with his wife over fifty years, and never left home without the kiss and the "good-bye, dear."

Some husbands shake hands with their wives and hurry off as fast as though the effort were something that they are anxious to forget, holding their heads down, and darting round the first corner.

Some husbands say only, "Well, wife, I am going," and starting at the word, "go," which comes to them from some back retreat.

Some husbands before leaving home, ask very tenderly, "what would you like for dinner, my dear?" knowing all the while that she will select something for his palate, and off he goes.

Some husbands will leave home without saying anything at all, but thinking of a good deal, as is evinced by their turning round, at the last point of observation, and waving an adieu at the pleasant face or faces at the window.

Some husbands never say a word, rising from the breakfast table with the lofty indifference of a lord, and going out with heartless disregard of those left behind. It is a fortunate thing for their wives that they can find sympathy elsewhere.

Some husbands never leave home without some unkind word or look, apparently thinking that such a course will keep things straight in his absence.

Then on returning—

Some husbands come home jolly and happy, unsoured by the world; some sulky and surly with its disappointment.

Some husbands bring home a newspaper or a book, and bury themselves for the evening in its contents.

Some husbands are called away every evening by business or social engagements; some doze in speechless stupidity on the sofa till bed time.

Some husbands are curious to learn of their wives what has transpired through the day; others are attracted by nothing short of a child's tumbling down stairs or the house taking fire.

What sort of manners have you, my friend?

THE VETERANS OF NEW ORLEANS.

The small band of survivors of the great events of 1814-'15 had their usual celebration on the eighth, and "fought their battles o'er again" with their characteristic gusto. It was painfully manifest that time had made terrible ravages in the ranks of these gallant veterans. Of the number present at the St. Louis or in the military parade, there was not a single commissioned officer. The death of General Plauche left but one surviving commissioned officer of the battalion, composed chiefly of natives of the city, which he so gallantly commanded in that campaign. The battalion numbered three hundred and eighty. The surviving officer is Colonel Maunsel White, now residing on his plantation in Plaquemines, who was born in Ireland, but has lived in Louisiana for the last half century. It is a notable fact that a native of a northern clime and a distant country should have outlived so many natives of the State. We knew of but one other commissioned officer who participated in this campaign, now living in this city. This is Colonel Peter K. Wagner. We have a double pleasure in referring to his survival—a patriotic one and a professional one. The longevity of Col. Wagner, is an example that journalism, in which he has been engaged in this city for fifty years, is not unfavorable to long life and physical vigor. Col. Wagner was a lieutenant of artillery in the defense of this city, and the greatest misfortune of his life was that his company was stationed at the fort at the mouth of the Bayou St. John during the battles below this city. His commander, we believe the late Nicholas Sinnott, came near abandoning his post upon hearing the report of the artillery at Jackson's line, in his eagerness to whip the Red Coats against whom he had a general grudge, growing out of certain transactions at Vinegar Hill, where, it was rumored, that stalwart Son of the Green Isle performed prodigies of unavailing valor and physical strength. It is said that the gallant old Irishman shed bitter tears at his hard destiny in being "stuck down in a bloody old mud-hole, while the murthering Red Coats were receiving their dose from the immortal Old Hickory."

A comparison of longevity between the American and British actors in the invasion of this State, is greatly in favor of the latter. There are quite a number of officers in the British army now in hale old age, in the discharge of important public duties, who held prominent posts in Packenham's army, while, of all the generals, of whom there were eight or ten in Jackson's army, not one survives. One of the four generals who landed in Louisiana with the British army, and one of the two who survived the battle of the eighth, are now living. One is discharging his duties as a member of the House of Peers, and the other died only a few years ago in the Island of Jamaica. The first named is Lord Keene, and the second Gen. Lambert, who died in 1848. The former was wounded on the eighth, but recovered, and after an eventful service in India, and in the West Indies, was elevated to the peerage, and now lives on his estate in Ireland. But besides these, there are now in active service, in England, some half a dozen officers of the grade of Generals and Lieutenant Generals, who figured at the battle of New Orleans. The first of these is Sir John Burgoyne, Lieutenant General, and Chief of the Engineering Department of Great Britain. This officer was Chief of Engineers in the attack upon this city, and directed the construction of the batteries which were so promptly silenced by Jackson's artillery on the 1st of January, 1815.

It was on this occasion, and by a twelve pound shot from this battery, that our venerable citizen Judah Touro, received a dreadful wound, of which he probably would have died, but for the devotion and care of his old friend H. D. Shepherd. That splendid row of buildings in Canal street, between Royal and Bourbon, inherited by Mr. Shepherd, under the will of Mr. Touro is a monument of the grateful appreciation, on the part of the good old Israelite, of this act of devoted friendship. Gen. John Burgoyne had charge of the engineering corps in the Crimean war, and was one of the most active general officers in that trying campaign. Then there is Sir Delancy Evans, now a Lieutenant General, who led one of the best divisions in the Crimean campaign, and is now an active and influential member of the House of Commons, who, in the invasion of this State, was at the head of the Quartermaster's Department, and was wounded twice during the campaign. Then there are Sir F. Stoven, who was badly wounded on the 3d of December, Sir E. T. Blakeney, who commanded the 7th (Packenham's own) on the 8th of January, Sir James McIlmgal, Aid of Packenham, in whose arms he fell wounded on the eighth, and, who, by a strange coincidence, has previously received the body of Ross when he received his mortal wound in the advance against the city of Baltimore. These are all now distinguished rebels in the British army.

In further illustration of the great longevity of British soldiers, we clip, from an English journal, the following statement of the surviving veterans who participated in the battle of Waterloo, which was fought a few months after the British army returned from Louisiana:

"It appears by a statement in an English paper, that there are now 192 surviving Waterloo veterans above the rank of captain: 1 Field Marshal, 12 Generals, 33 Lieutenant-Generals, 38 Major-Generals, 46 Colonels, 40 Lieutenant-Colonels, and 22 Majors. Time seems to have dealt gently with these gallant old soldiers."

The lives of these veterans have been those of constant service, much hardship and exposure, whilst the officers of Jackson's army have passed their years chiefly in the ease, comfort and quiet of civil pursuits. And yet, where are they? Not one of his Generals survives or has lived for the last eight or ten years. Coffee died in 1836, and Jackson wrote his epitaph. Adair preceded Coffee. Carroll has been dead ten or twelve years. Generals Thomas and Morgan died about the same time.

So, too, that brilliant staff, which afforded Jackson such valuable aid and counsel, composed of men in the flower of manhood, have been all "gathered unto their fathers." The profound and accomplished Livingston, the energetic Dunican, the brilliant and gallant Devezac, the shrewd, wise and dashing Grymes, have all, after acting distinguished parts in civil life, surrendered to that invincible conqueror, Death, and are now remembered as bright names

"That were not born to die."

A few, very few indeed, of the leading actors on the American side of that drama, now remain. But four of these now occur to us. They are Gen. Wm. O. Butler, now residing near Carrollton, Kentucky, who, on the eighth of January, commanded, as senior captain, one of the regular regiments in Jackson's lines; Gen. Robt Butler, now residing at Tallahassee, Florida, who was Jackson's Assistant Adjutant-General; Major Chotard, now living on his plantation, near Natchez, also of Jackson's staff, and Gen. A. P. Hoyne, late U. S. Senator from South Carolina, who was Deputy Quartermaster General in Jackson's army. These were all then young men. In fact, nearly all the officers in that campaign, on both sides, were what would be called now young men—quite young, to be entrusted with such high commands. Jackson, himself, was little over forty, and Coffee and Carroll were under that age; while among the British officers there was hardly a chief who had attained that age. Packenham, Keane and Lambert were young men, and the several regiments were led by young officers, whom the great mortality of the Peninsular campaign had rapidly advanced.

Disastrous and ill-managed as was this invasion of the British, it is a remarkable proof of the tenacity of John Bull in adhering to his agents and officers, that no officer ever suffered in reputation by the result thereof, except the Colonel of the 44th, who was cashiered for disobedience of orders in not bringing up the fascines and ladders. This officer, Col. Mullen, was made the scape goat of the whole army. No inquiry was made even into Gen. Keane's conduct in reference to two great blunders—which were ter more important in their consequences than the disobedience of Col. Mullen. They were, his halt below the city on the night of the 23d—his delay to advance on the next day, when his whole force had been landed, and before Jackson had thrown up his entrenchments—and his stupid advance on the 8th of January with his division, after the repulse of the attacking column, when the plan of the battle required him only to make a demonstration and threaten Jackson's right. These were fatal errors, and yet so far from prejudicing the reputation of Keane, no officer in the service was more rapidly promoted or received higher tokens of the confidence of the British Government.

Packenham and Gibbs, who fell in a rash and foolhardy assault, persisted in after the entire disarrangement of the whole plan of attack, were honored with monuments in St. Paul's, London, erected by the Government on the unanimous resolutions of Parliament, presented by Lord Castlereagh. Gen. Lambert was placed in command of one of the finest divisions at the battle of Waterloo—a division which lost more men than any other in Wellington's army; and Sir John Burgoyne, who first used hogsheads of sugar to strengthen a fortification, and suffered thereby a most disgraceful disaster, has been ever esteemed the ablest engineer in the British service. These facts show that either the British Government is very indulgent to the errors of its servants or desired to obliterate all recollection and record of that terrible disaster.—Delta.

THE LATE GENERAL JOHN B. PLAUCHE.

On the forty-fourth anniversary of one of the leading events of the memorable campaign in the defense of this city in 1814-'15—to wit, the battle of the batteries—when the superiority of American artillerists was so brilliantly demonstrated, one of the most distinguished actors in that great drama departed this life. We refer to him whose decease is mentioned in our obituary notice in another column—General John B. Plauche. It has never been our duty to announce the death of a purer man, a more sincere patriot, a more faithful citizen of New Orleans.

Born in this city when it was a Spanish colony, General Plauche had attained manhood before he was invested with the privilege which no one valued more highly, of a citizen of the United States. He illustrated this devotion by his prompt tender of his services as a soldier to Gen. Jackson, immediately on his arrival in this city, on the second day of December, 1814.—Two years before there had been organized in the city the first uniformed volunteer company raised in New Orleans since the cession of Louisiana. The corps was composed, almost exclusively of young Creoles, and was called Carabiniers d'Orleans, and its first Captain was Jean B. Plauche, then a prosperous young merchant, engaged in the commission business.

When it began to be rumored that the British contemplated an attack upon New Orleans, the Carabiniers were made the nucleus of a battalion, in the organization of which Captain Plauche was very active. Accordingly, four other companies were organized, under the respective names of Italians, or Fort Douglass, under Captain St. Gema; Francs, Capt. Bailly; Chasseurs, Captain Dubert; and Louisiana Blues, Capt. Maunsel White. We believe the latter is now the only surviving commissioned officer of this battalion. These several companies composed, when fully mustered, three hundred and eighty five men; and, when Jackson reached the city, constituted the only uniformed and organized force of citizen soldiers in New Orleans. On the 14th of December, Captain Plauche was elected Major of the battalion, and Lieut. Roche succeeded him in the captaincy of the Carabiniers.

Under the energetic command of Plauche, the battalion soon became a very efficient force. The men were handsomely uniformed in the style of the Young Guard of Napoleon, with blue, gold and red, and had all the bearing and effectiveness of regular soldiers. The officers and men were cavaliers of approved personal courage, high chivalry, and skill in the use of weapons. They were, too, of the best families of the city, and of the highest social rank. Such a force, composed chiefly of the sons of French settlers in the colony, could not, of course, be without that valuable appendage of all military organizations by this race—a fine band. Throughout all the trials and experiences of that eventful campaign, the battalion, which was always in the van in battle, never dispensed with its martial music; and the officers and men always bore the aspect of regular soldiers, with the neat uniforms and the self-possessed air and prompt movement of men "who have dashed their maiden swords."

At the first meeting of Jackson and Plauche, a cordial intimacy and friendship sprung up between these, which continued during their lives, and which is displayed on the part of the old Hero of the Hermitage in an affectionate allusion, in his last will, to his companion in arms.

When Jackson received news of the arrival of the British, under General Keane, at the Villere plantation, and conceived the brilliant plan which proved the great controlling event of the campaign, of an immediate attack upon the British camp, the battalion d'Orleans, under Plauche, was stationed at the Bayou Bridge. The order to march to the Fort St. Charles, on the site of which the United States Mint now stands, was received by Major Plauche in the afternoon. The battalion was immediately formed, and the Major leading it, at the command "quick step" the men broke into a trot, and finally into a run, and without a halt or pause, proceeded to the place of rendezvous, which they were among the first of Jackson's miscellaneous and scattered force to reach. Here they were supplied with new flints from one of the vessels of Jean Lafitte, then anchored in the river, were formed into column, and advanced at a rapid pace down the river toward the British camp.

In the memorable night battle of the 23d of December, the battalion was under the immediate supervision of Jackson, and performed its share in that gallant and sanguinary conflict. So in all the subsequent events of the campaign, the Battalion of Orleans was ever found by Jackson one of his most reliable and efficient corps, and its commander one of his most trusted counselors.

An incident with which the name of General Plauche is connected, has been made the text of one of the most invincible errors that has ever crept into history. It is a striking illustration of the difficulty of arresting a false statement which happens to suit the fancy of mankind. Nothing was ever more transparently absurd than the idea which is embodied in nearly all the histories, poems, and pictures relating to the battle of New Orleans, than the assertion that the mound behind which Jackson's army was entrenched was composed of cotton bales. The only basis of this story was the attempt of some young soldiers, in the rivalry which sprung up after they had occupied the line of Rodriguez canal, to increase the height and breadth of the parapet in front of them by throwing in a few cotton bales. Others, too, were used to form the embrasures for the guns. These bales had been thrown out of a hulk, which had come down to Jackson's camp with flour, pork and other supplies, and were lying on the levee. They were a portion of a lot which had been consigned to Major Plauche, and had been sold by him to Vincent Nolte. The speculative efforts of the latter financier no doubt contributed to give form and currency to this story. He set up a preposterous claim for this cotton after the war, and, to maintain it, set on foot the story of the great service it had rendered. We are pleased to see that in a recently published and highly spirited poetical description of the battle of the 8th of January, by Thomas Dunn English, this vulgar fiction is effectually disposed of:

No cotton bales before us,
Some tool that falsehood told;
Believe us was an earthwork,
Built from the swampy mould.

Major Plauche, by the orders of General Jackson, as soon as it was discovered that a few bales of cotton had been used in making the parapet, and that they greatly endangered the strength of the works, and exposed the ammunition to explosion by the flying particles of burning hot, had the bales taken out and thrown into the river.

During the battle of the 8th of January, the soldiers of the battalion of Major Plauche stood to their guns, and were eager to participate in the glorious repulse of the British, but owing to their position, near the centre of the American lines, they were not within striking distance of the two attacking columns of the British, which came up on the extreme right and left. This was a great privation to the gallant young soldiers, who were compelled thus to look on as spectators of the great achievements of their brethren in arms, who happened to occupy more fortunate positions. During the whole action, it was with great difficulty Major Plauche could prevent his men from stealing off to the right and left to have a crack at the redcoats. At the close of the campaign, in the general orders of General Jackson, the battalion, with its gallant Major Plauche, was highly commended. Indeed, throughout the whole defense of the city, Jackson had no more reliable force under his command than the Battalion d'Orleans, and no officer in whose prudence, devotion, and bravery he had greater confidence than Major Plauche.

After the war, Major Plauche resumed his duties as a merchant, and for many years conducted a large business, with great success, and with a reputation for sterling integrity and promptitude which was never surpassed. When he heard, on a certain occasion, that his old commander was in pecuniary distress, he tendered him a large sum of money, which Jackson gratefully accepted as a loan, and to which he was so warmly referred in his last will. Though much engaged in business and in the care of a large family, General Plauche always took a warm interest in public affairs. In the Democratic party he was looked upon as a patriarch, who was called upon to preside at popular meetings, and whose presence gave dignity to every occasion and movement. His public services were limited to a brief season as Lieutenant Governor, to which position he was elected when General Joseph Walker was chosen Governor.

After this service, the advanced age and feebleness of Gen. Plauche compelled him to retire, in a great measure, from public and active life. He was fortunate in having sons capable of relieving him of the cares and labors of business, and for some time before his death he rarely left his home. His demise will create a great void in this community. The "ancient population," the descendants of the honored founders of this city, will especially lament the departure of one who was an honor to his race, a chevalier without fear and without reproach, a merchant without stain, a patriot without ambition, and a citizen without selfishness or guile.—Delta.

Obituaries:

"I Let me die the death of the Righteous."

COL. SAMUEL W. EVANS, died at his residence in Oxford, Miss., Dec. 30, 1859, after an illness of ten days. He was a native of South Carolina; and removed to this state when a youth. He was of a noble line of ancestry, yet he was the artificer of his own fortune: leaving a circle of wealthy and influential relations, he came among strangers and made for himself a reputation of which his children and relatives may well be proud, and a name cherished in the heart of the poor; for he was the poor man's friend. He felt that God had entrusted much in his hands, and tried to be a wise steward. He was frank and candid. Humility was a prominent characteristic, and the acknowledgment of favors received by others seemed really to embarass him. To the erring he was gentle and forbearing. He was a tender and devoted husband, indulgent father, and a kind and sympathetic master; as attested by his well-ordered plantations, with his neatly white-washed cottages, the deep toned bell, sending its musical chime for miles around, calling the servants to meals, or to repose, and on Sabbath in their neatly-made attire, worshiping in their chapel, and especially on Christmas, the little chimney faces were smiling around on immense Christmas tree, hung with toys and other gifts for their gratification, and the mistress who arranged it, explained why we keep that festival.

One of his kind nurses writes, "His sickness developed a degree of child-like simplicity, gentleness, and kindness that was truly touching and impressive." That he was sustained by grace no one will doubt; in conversation with his friend, the Rev. Dr. C., he gave assurances of his acceptance with God. In all his pain no murmur escaped his lips. In our brother's death his family sustain an irreparable loss. Could agonizing prayer have availed our brother would not have died. Christ will show his power in his death, although not as he did in that of Lozarus. God's ways are to us mysterious.

He was buried on New Year's day, the funeral discourse was preached by Rev. Dr. Carter, from "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might," etc. He was interred with Masonic ceremonies, he had just finished a Masonic Lodge in the region of his plantations: he had also erected a church there, that the truths of the gospel might be more widely disseminated. Having been an orphan, he was particularly tender to that class, and never how his house been without one or more of those lonely ones, who have found there both parents and brothers. We hope that his stricken wife, (our sister,) may be able to bow submissively in this appaling bereavement, and by faith yet see that even this black cloud of sorrow has a silver lining. May God bless his dear children, and may they emulate the example of their honored father, that they may meet him in Heaven. May his beloved and only sister feel that although she has no brother, that Christ has promised to be a brother to those that worship him.

Our subject had been a member of the M. E. Church for many years, and gave a great deal for his ministers support.

J. F. J.

MISS CYNTHIA M., daughter of J. J. HEARD, Esq., of this place, while on a visit to and spending a few months with relatives and friends in Louisville, Ga., was selected by disease and death as their shining mark, 29th of Dec. last. It is hard to realize that she is dead! that one so interesting, so hopeful, and happy; a form so faultless, a face so radiant with artless innocence and virtue—a countenance beaming with intelligence, and every quality of heart, that renders the sex lovely, should so soon, and suddenly be veiled in the habiliments of the grave. Her indisposition was of several days continuance, but her meek uncomplaining nature concealed all cause of apprehension and alarm, until the fearful crisis had passed, and to make successful resistance was impossible. When she knew her time had come, she resigned her pure spirit to God, in all the confidence of a firm faith in the world's Redeemer, and with a fervent prayer, trembling upon her dying lips, sweetly fell asleep in Jesus.

She was born in Dallas County, Ala., January 27th, 1841. Most of her happy years were spent in her father's family in this place—her wise and well-directed home training, and culture, were blessed in an eminent degree, in the early development of her rare qualities of mind and heart.—At the age of thirteen, at God's altar in this place after a long and earnest struggle, she exchanged the grief and gloom, of penitence for the raptures of pardon, and the peace of God. She continued a firm consistent member of our Church till death. She graduated with distinction, and honor to herself, in this place, in the Summer of 1858, and was deservedly classed among the brightest and most gifted, of the hundreds, who have been sent forth to bless the race from the Heaven-favored Halls of old Centenary. The session following her graduation, she was induced to teach in the College; she was successful, and popular, and to the gratification of the trustees and her friends, proved fully equal to the task of taking charge of the most advanced classes, in the most difficult studies of their course.

But why indulge these painfully pleasing recollections? She is taken from us, and while humanity sheds the sympathizing tear, we bow in humble submission. Amid the fires of the last day, and the summons of the trump of judgment, we will meet her again, with our Lord in the air.

W. MURRAH.

SUMMERFIELD, ALA., Jan. 10, 1860.

 Southern Advocate please copy.

MRS. SARAH W. PIWELL was born July 2d, 1828, in Leon County, Florida. Her father, Judge Field, removed to Columbus, Miss., and she was reared chiefly in that place. She was an only daughter, and being born to affluence, was tenderly cared for, in every way which could at all enhance her personal and intellectual charms. Neither was her religious training neglected. When she became pious and attached herself to the church, I have not been informed; but certain it is that during her stay under the parental roof, she was pointed both by precept and example to the Lamb of God. On the 6th of January, 1848, she was married to Rev. Augustus H. Powell, also a resident of Columbus, Miss. Soon after this Bro. Powell became a member of the Alabama Conference. In 1853 he was appointed to St. Francis Street charge, Mobile, where, in September of that year, he fell a victim to the epidemic which prevailed so extensively in that city. After the death of her husband, Sister Powell returned to Columbus, where she remained until her death. Her health after her bereavement began to decline, often, especially during the last four or five years of her life, she was confined to her bed, for months. She was the victim of a complication of diseases, but it is thought that consumption was chiefly instrumental in her death. She expressed a willingness to depart, to those who were with her during the last days of her illness. She was often heard to express some dread at the thought of death, but when she began to realize that her end was near, God gave her the victory, and resignedly, peacefully, she passed away, having her hope anchored within the vail. She expressed a desire to be buried by the side of her husband, and in accordance with her wish, her remains were brought to this place, and interred in the enclosure where he sleeps. Thus has closed a brief but trumphant career. 'Twas not a smooth glassy sea over which our departed friend sailed, but thank heaven, her bark has now landed upon the eternal shore, where there is rest for the weary.

MOBILE, January 15th, 1860. E. BALDWIN.

MRS. C. SHAFFER, after a protracted illness, died, in Point Coupee Parish, La., Dec. 12th, 1859, in the 61st year of her age. She was a native of Charleston, S. C. For many years lived in Columbia, and for the last sixteen years in Louisiana.

In early life she became religious and joined the Presbyterian Church in Columbia, where, for many years, she enjoyed the privilege of having for her religious instructors such men as Drs. Leland, Thornwell, and Palmer. While in Louisiana circumstances prevented her from enjoying the privileges of the church as she formerly did, which she lived to regret. In her last illness she was resigned, and confidently trusted in Jesus' merits for life and full salvation; which to friends and bereaved ones is so desirable and full of comfort. May this notice serve to influence those relations, who may see it, so widely separated on earth, to centre their hopes and interests upon the same Saviour who is able to save to the uttermost all who come into Him.

J. PIPES.

HENRY JORDAN, in the seventy-seventh year of his life, by the falling of a tree, was suddenly thrown from his horse, which terminated his life in a few hours. A native of Virginia, he successively resided in Georgia, Alabama, and Louisiana. In the latter at his residence near Pleasant Hill, in Desoto Parish, 21th Dec., 1859, he died. Some thirty years ago, by repentance and faith in Christ, he was converted to God, which he never afterward doubted. His religious experience was always clear and satisfactory. Soon after his conversion he joined the M. E. Church, of which he remained a faithful and devoted member.

His religious life was one of rigid discipline. The observance of family prayer, was one of the characteristics of his religious life, which his servants were not only permitted but required to attend.

J. PIPES.

MRS. MARY A. FORD, died at the residence of Mr. Monroe McCutchen, in Desoto Parish, La., aged 47 years. She was the wife of Mr. John Ford, of Caddo Parish, La. She had been a member of the Methodist Church more than twenty years, and a consistent christian. She was a good wife, and an affectionate mother, and the community almost feel that they have sustained an irreparable loss, and the Church a mother in Israel. She left a husband and five children to mourn her loss, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope, for she sleeps in Jesus.

Mrs. Ford was taken sick on the night her daughter Mrs. McCutchen died, who preceded her only one week. She had given to this daughter the proper instruction. She too died in the faith of Jesus, and left a bright testimony that she had done all things well. P.

WILLIAM J. ARMSTRONG, son of REV. GEORGE C. and AMANDA S. ARMSTRONG, died at his father's residence in Jefferson Co., Miss., Dec. 31, 1859, aged fifteen years, 11 months and 19 days.

His illness was of short duration. He became speechless about twenty four hours before his death, which gave the first alarm. William was a good boy in the true sense of the term. He was a member of the Methodist Church, and was converted about two years before his death. He loved to attend church, and delighted in class meetings. He never once disobeyed his mother. No wonder she is sorely afflicted at the loss of her only son. Lost on earth, but gained in Heaven. How happy and consoling the thought, as we commune our new year on earth—William commences his in Heaven.

Jan. 1860. W. F. J.

MARY LOUISA ELIZABETH GILLESPIE, infant daughter of MARGARET W. and DAVID M. GILLESPIE, was gently removed to the fold of the "Good Shepherd," on the 8th of Sept., 1859, aged 7 months and 15 days.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

C. T. MURPHY, Durant, Mi. — W. SIKES, New Orleans La. — M. ONLY, Middleton, Mi.

MURPHY, SIKES & CO., COTTON FACTORS and General Commission Merchants, No. 12 Upper street, New Orleans. jy20 6m

W. A. BROADWELL. A. P. HAYNES.

BROADWELL & HAYNES, (Formerly BROADWELL & PAYNE) COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 10 UNION STREET, N. O.

HAVING RETIRED FROM BUSINESS, I TAKE PLEASURE IN commending to my former Partners, BROADWELL & HAYNES, the patronage and confidence of my friends, believing their experience, capacity and means, will merit its continuance, and enable them to give general satisfaction. [jy1] M. U. PAYNE.

W. H. STUART, New Orleans. — DR. B. A. JAMES, Madison Parish, La.

STUART & JAMES, No. 42 Union street New Orleans,

HAVE ASSOCIATED THEMSELVES TOGETHER for the purpose of conducting a COTTON FACTORAGE and GENERAL COMMISSION BUSINESS; are prepared to make the usual Advances to planters, in the way of supplies, etc., and respectfully solicit patronage

B. M. LOWE & CO., COTTON FACTORS AND General Commission Merchants, No. 97 GRAVIER STREET, New Orleans. ap20

MR HUGH LUCAS HAVING BECOME A PARTner in our house, from this date, we beg leave to call your attention to our increased facilities to fill all orders from our large and well selected Stock of GROCERIES, PRODUCE, WINES, LIQUORS, etc., etc. We remain, your obedient servants

COOPER & NEIBERT, New Orleans, Dec. 1st, 1858. 27 and 29 Common st.

W. COOPER. — J. G. NEIBERT. — H. LUCAS.

COOPER & NEIBERT, WHOLESALE GROCERS, Nos. 27 and 29 Commun street, New Orleans.

PILCHER, GOODRICH & CO., COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS and Commission Merchants, No. 45 Carondelet, corner Union street, New Orleans. jy11-1y

A. H. May & Co., COTTON FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION Merchants, No 94 Gravier street New Orleans. au21y

J. U. PAYNE. — J. F. HARRISON. — G. W. BUNTHORNE. — WM. H. DAMERON

Payne & Harrison, COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 61 Union street, New Orleans. dec7-1y

S. L. WALKER, New Orleans. — ROBT. C. SUTCHINSON, Caddo Parish, La.

Walker & Hutchinson, COTTON FACTORS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 37 Carondelet street, New Orleans. je28

J. BOYD & Co., Cotton Factors, Receiving & Forwarding Merchants, No 4 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS. Apr 17-1y

LEONARD FASH. — P. E. LAURANS.

LEONARD FASH & Co., COMMISSION MERCHANTS, And Dealers in Western Produce, 61 MAGAZINE STREET, NEW ORLEANS. Oct 24

LANE, SALTER & CO., (Successors to LANE, MAYFIELD & Co.) COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 79 St. Charles street, New Orleans. jy8-1y

JOHN F WYCHE & Co., COTTON FACTORS and COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No 119 Common street, New Orleans. my2-1y

PROFESSIONAL.

JAS. J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Livingston, Alabama. [au24] Will Practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties.

DR. E. D. BEACH, HAVING RESUMED THE practice of Medicine, offers his Professional services to the citizens of New Orleans.

N. B.—Special attention paid to diseases of the RECTUM, PILES, FISTULA IN ANO, ETC.—Fistula in ano permanently cured without the use of the knife, cutting, pain, or confinement whatever. Office No. 6, Baronne street near Canal. my27.

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY AT LAW, BATON Rouge. REFERENCES—Hendrickson & Barnes and Chinn & Bolton, New Orleans; W. S. Pike and A. Matta, Baton Rouge.

B. D. & A. W. ROBERTS, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Floyd, Carroll Parish, Louisiana. jy19

J. O. FUQUA. — J. O. KILBOURNE.

FUQUA & KILBOURNE, ATTORNEYS AT LAW, CLINTON, LOUISIANA.

PRACTICE in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana, East Baton Rouge and St. Helena, and in the Supreme Court at New Orleans. References—Baylis & Harrison, Byrne, Vance & Co., Bromwell & Payne, Pritchard & Flower, Edw Nalle & Co., Rev. H. N. McTyeire, New Orleans. mar 20 1y

PRINTERS' ROLLERS.—THE UNDERSIGNED IS PREPARED TO cast Printers' Rollers of the best quality, upon receiving from us either town city or country, at short notice. It is just as feasible for each press-man to cast his own rollers as it is for each man to make his own shirt. Work warranted to be of the best kind.

Address, T. BEAULIEU, Office of the Carrollton Advocate, 112 Camp st., New Orleans. oc19

DR. WRIGHT'S CELEBRATED REJUVENATING Elixir.—Prepared on the strictest Pharmaceutical principles, by one of the oldest chemists of the age.

FOR THE CURE of General Debility, Mental and Physical Depression, Indecision, Determination of Blood to the Head,

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 5. WHOLE NUMBER 468.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1860.

$2 50 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE OFFICE—115 CAMP ST.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate

NEW YORK LITERARY CORRESPONDENCE.

LITERARY GOSSIP, DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN.

New York, Jan. 19th, 1860.

The year 1859 saw the deaths of four of the great lights of literature—Prescott, Humboldt, Irving, and Macaulay. News of the decease of the great historian has just come to hand. He died, as most great men do, in the harness; but it is sad to read the announcement "by authority," in one of the London papers, that the two volumes of History which were supposed to be nearly ready for the press, are not in such condition as to make their publication possible. It is a loss to the reading world which no one now known will be able to repair. Macaulay was born in the year 1800, and was consequently but just 59 when he died. He was a bachelor, and lived in chambers in one of the great hives in which the legal fraternity do congregate in London. He must have been an immense worker, for all his work bears the mark of exceeding care and most laborious research. I have just been reading again his famous chapter "on the state of England in 1685," and it seems to me that this chapter alone contains the life-work of an average man. Seldom have the two characteristics of laboriousness and brilliancy been so well united as in him. The author of two of the most searching critiques in the language—those on Barere and Robert Montgomery—he wrote likewise some of the best poetry of its kind—the ballad—in the language. His speeches are marvels of keen cutting to the purpose, of splendid diction, and of fine illustrations; and his history has for the first time made history popular and interesting. By the way, I have been told by one who knew him that he was exceedingly proud of the favor with which he was received in this country, and thought the immense sales of the History volumes in America, and the numerous cheap editions printed here, the finest feather in his cap.

Mr. Dickens, who has developed, within a year or two, a singular faculty for getting his name in the papers in ways which reflect little credit on his temper or prudence, has just now come out with a declaration that the disgusting character of Harold Skimpole, in Bleak House, was not meant as a lampoon on his old friend Leigh Hunt. He speaks of the report as originating on this side of the Atlantic, which is not at all likely, for few, very few, here had any personal knowledge of Leigh Hunt; while the resemblance between the real man and the novelist's character is of that kind which could only be perceived by one intimate with Mr. Hunt, and—so Mr. Dickens acknowledges—could not fail to strike every one who knew him. Why Mr. D. "gave the report the go-by" while the friend he loved, and was said to have caricatured, was alive, and why he now comes out with an abortive attempt at justification, when the man whose pardon he should ask is just dead, are questions which remain to be answered. That the caricature was not only premeditated but successful, is evidenced by Mr. D.'s admission that he submitted the first numbers of Bleak House to two eminent literary friends of Leigh Hunt, and altered all the passages in which Harold Skimpole was, so to speak, trotted out. But the remaining numbers, Mr. Dickens? They were not submitted. Leigh Hunt was not, if all reports are true, a man so much better than Harold Skimpole that he need to have felt his "buoyancy" hurt by the picture. But then a man must not put his friends in his books, and then call them friends.

Mrs. Caroline H. Dale has just published a very sensible little book on that vexed question, Woman's Rights. It is really an Essay to show that woman can—because she does—labor successfully in many branches which are yet almost closed to her. There is a valuable collection of facts on which others may build theories, though theories are sure to fall a good deal short of practice; and I doubt if this question is not one which will be found gradually to rectify itself as true Christianity progresses in our midst, and this in ways which the present agitators do not seem to look for. Meantime women do almost everything, and when they do it well, are honored for it. It is only when they turn out poorer work than men that they have to stand aside—for the labor market knows no sex. Here is a case in point: a London paper states that a pension of £50 a year has been granted to Mrs. Janet Taylor, an authoress whose works are well known to, and are appreciated by, the mercantile marine. Mrs. Taylor is the authoress of an "Epitome of Navigation and Nautical Astronomy;" "Improved Lunar Tables;" "Planisphere of the Stars;" "Hand-book to the Local Marine Board Examinations;" "Guide to the use of Maury's Charts," &c. In fact, she is the Mrs. Somerville of the marine world. She also keeps a Nautical and Mathematical Academy at the East end of London, the upper school of which is devoted to the preparation of masters and mates in the navy and merchant service. This establishment is under the patronage of the Admiralty, Trinity House, East India Company, and the principal Ocean Steam Navigation Companies. We are not aware that there is any obvious reason why a lady should not be acquainted with any branch of mathematical science; but it may possibly afford surprise to some of our readers to hear of one who indoctrinates practical seamen not only with the principles of ordinary navigation and the most approved methods of determining the latitudes, but can also initiate them into the mysteries of spherical trigonometry, and its application to great circle sailing.

True women workers are not so rare. A Southern lady of our acquaintance stands at the head of the Entomologists of the United States; women write the best Magazine stories here; and a woman has written this last year, Adam Bede, a novel which for manliness of thought and style, (I mean manliness in the sense of true dignity and just perception), no one, not even Thackeray, excels, or even equals—a work which has passed through seven editions in England, and is in its fourth here. By the way, Adam Bede deserves the favor of the Methodists, for one of its finest characters is a woman preacher of the times just after Wesley, and its hero is also a "Methody." Miss Mary Evans, the author of this book, has had the courage to break through what had got to be a chronic difficulty with the eminent novelists of England. Neither Thackeray nor Dickens has ever been able to see the difference between religion and cant. Of Mr. Dickens, who is a man of essentially narrow mind and small prejudices, no better could be expected; but it is a pity that Thackeray, a writer who is also really a man, and who was able in his earlier days to draw the picture of one of Christs' true ministers going about among the London poor, and doing good wisely and well—it is a pity, I say, that he should mar one of the best books of the century, the "Newcomes," by such a wretched caricature as the Rev. Mr. Honeyman, and by such outrageous nonsense as the description of "pious" Mrs. Newcome and her guzzling friends on Clapham Common. It is a healthy sign when one who writes so well as the author of "Adam Bede" paints a true and consistent Christian character—one who has every weakness of weak woman or weaker man, but whose life is animated by high and holy and just views of duty and Divine love. So I say Adam Bede deserves well of Methodists.

The Harpers, who published that, have just sent out another excellent book: "Self-Help," by Smiles, who wrote the life of Stephenson. I do not say too much when I recommend every father of a family to get this book, and let his boys and girls read it—and then read it himself. It has gone through my family with general acclaim—the wife's opinion being that it is "more interesting than a novel, and gives one new courage to face life." I think the great lessons of life, perseverance, patience, hopefulness, humility, energy, have never been better taught than here. Mr. Smiles has collected a vast amount of information about the early lives of men who have attained eminence; he knows how to preach without preaching; and so mixes up his lessons and his illustrations that you are carried along in spite of yourself, and reap the reward of renewed courage and patience for the every-day battle of life. I wish every boy in the land might read "Self-Help."

The Harpers have also just ready for issuing, Walter Thornbury's "Life in Spain," a very brilliant book of travels concerning which a London literary paper has the following note, giving a curious glimpse at the "amenities" of Literature in London at the present day.

"Elsewhere in our columns the reader will learn that Mr. Walter Thornbury, for many years the art-critic of the Athenæum, has voluntarily resigned his post. Why he has done so, it may perhaps be not very difficult to imagine. Among other reasons, for instance, may be suggested the extremely cold and cutting reception which his capital and popular book on Spain received at the editorial hands. That volume, which contained those much-admired sketches of Spanish life and manners which first appeared in Household Words, is waived off with the following curt "damnatur:"—"Mr. Thornbury's book has also had the advantage of a previous public for its hot and hurried pictures of things in Spain." Now it should be known that Mr. Thornbury, in his journey to Spain, was accompanied by Mr. Hepworth Dixon, the editor of the Athenæum; the mode of travel being distinguished by the fact that the former journeyed second class, whilst the dignity of the latter could put up with nothing short of the first. During that journey both Mr. Thornbury and Mr. Dixon took notes. To what purpose the former made use of his material all the world knows; but it is not generally known that the latter wrote a series of "Letters to my Wife," with a design of publishing them on his return; and that, however they may have been appreciated by the person to whom they were originally addressed, the appearance of Mr. Thornbury's admirable papers in Household Words effectually prevented them from seeing the light through the assistance of a publisher. Putting "this and that" together, is it not possible that the aforesaid "Letters" may have something to do with the condemnation of Mr. Thornbury's charming pictures as "hot and hurried?"

A recently published and very stupid life of the Poet Campbell, by his associate, and fag, Cyrus Redding, shows that when the poet toasted Bonsparte "because he shot a bookseller," he committed a piece of mean ingratitude. In two cases, after making his bargain with publishers, those gentlemen voluntarily paid him double the money they had offered to pay. The report that Tennyson has received the astounding sum of $50 per line for a poem to appear in an English Magazine, shows that the system of the "illustrious Banner" is not without imitators in England. I see it stated that the largest sum ever paid to an American author was to John Howard Paine, the author of "Home, Sweet Home," for his poem entitled "Adams and Liberty." He received eleven dollars per line, or about a dollar and a half per word.

Messrs. Derby & Jackson, of this city, have in the press three books of special interest to you at the South: "Women of the South, Distinguished in Literature, edited by a Southern Lady;" "Wild Sports in the Southern States, by Charles E. Whitehead, truculator of Gerard the Lion Killer, illustrated;" and "Pioneers, Preachers, and People of the Mississippi, by Rev. W. H. Milburn, author of Ten years of Preacher Life, etc."

Mr. Milburn is busy lecturing these winter evenings, and draws large audiences wherever he goes. I saw him a few days ago, when he was in good spirits, and suffering a little from an accident which befell him in Boston some weeks since. Wandering about the streets in that delightfully unconcerned manner which he assumes when he knows the way and forgets his infirmity, he was suddenly run into by a sleigh. The pole struck him in the breast, a blow which forced him to stop speaking in public for some days—but fortunately did no permanent injury; and he is up and about again. In his new book, the "Pioneers, Preachers, and People of the Mississippi," he is on his own ground, and we may expect some fine sketches of the old back-woodsmen, who had—what some of their successors have not—character enough to sketch.

While on the subject of Southern books, I should not forget mention of "The Diary of a Samaritan," by a member of the Howard Association of New Orleans. It is a sad story, told in a feeling and unpretentious way by one who might say, "all of this I saw and part of this I was." I think it will find a welcome at your hands. It contains, besides affecting incidents of the great annual epidemic, some valuable hints for treatment of the sick, and the organization of hospitals, etc. It is published by the Harpers.

More next time.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate

LETTERS FROM KENTUCKY.—No. II.

To say that Methodism is on the ascending scale in the bounds of the Kentucky Conference, is far from being the language of vain boasting. The evidences in proof of this are too numerous and of such character as not to be doubted for a moment.

The Conference is composed mainly of young, efficient, working men, whose pulpit abilities will compare favorably with an equal number in any Conference North or South. These young men, however, are not left entirely to themselves. God, in his gracious providence, has continued among them several brethren of age and sound discretion, whose wise counsels and godly admonitions are of great value.

The support of the ministry among us is far better than in former years, and is constantly improving. During the Conference year of 1857--8, the receipts of the preachers show the nett amount of thirty four thousand three hundred and twenty-two dollars and thirty eight cents, paid toward their support, which was an increase over the previous year of something upwards of five thousand dollars, and the receipts for the year which closed in September last, show an improvement on that amount of nearly five thousand dollars. The collection for the worn-out preachers, widows, and orphans, for the last year, more than doubled that of the year previous. And we doubt whether any Conference in the whole connection, according to numbers, is as well supplied with parsonages. Many of these are good substantial houses, partly or wholly furnished with heavy furniture, affording comfortable homes for the preachers and their families.

An extra effort just now, which we trust and believe will not be spasmodic in its character, is being put forth by our preachers and people to promote the interests of the Sabbath-school cause. Pursuant to a resolution of our last Conference, a general Sabbath-school Convention, composed of preachers and laymen, met in the city of Lexington, on the fourth Wednesday in November, and continued in close and constant deliberation for two days, devising ways and means best calculated to promote this blessed work. Among other things the convention recommended that all the schools under our care be supplied with books and periodicals of our own publication, or at least, such as had been approved by our book editor. It was also recommended that conventions be held in each Presiding Elder's district, at such times and places as might be agreed on during the year.

Feeling sensible that next to the actual preaching of the gospel from the pulpit, the Sabbath-school is best calculated to give success to the cause of Christ, we are determined in future to heed more faithfully the precept of the Son of God where he says, "feed my lambs." The importance of making early religious impressions upon the minds and hearts of children cannot be overestimated. One of the most formidable enemies the imperial mistress of the world ever had to encounter, was in the person of a man who at eight years of age, with his hands on the horns of the altar of the Carthagenians, swore eternal enmity to the Romans. And some of the mightiest instruments now being wielded by Divine Providence against the empire of Satan, received their earliest bias, and most lasting impressions, in favor of God and religion, in the Sabbath-school.

We are doing something, too, in the way of a Book and Tract Depository. During the session of the Conference at Millersburg, last September a year ago, a Book and Tract Society was organized. Owing to the paucity of preachers, and the pressing demands of another enterprise, the Conference has not, as yet, seen fit to recommend the appointment of a special agent to superintend the interests of this concern. The business is carried on through our very affable and gentlemanly brother, J. J. Hunt of Lexington. Through this medium many of our standard publications have found their way into neighborhoods and families where they have heretofore been unknown. Theophilus Walton has had quite a run in this region.

And by the way it is about the best antidote to the insufferable, offensive, not to say contemptible, selfish egotism of "old Land Markism" we have met with for a great while. If the author only had a little more experience, by actual contact with the practical workings of that moogrel affair called Campbellism, he would be eminently qualified to administer a wholesome rebuke for its especial benefit.

The great and absorbing enterprise pressing us, at the present time, however, is the "Methodist College at Millersburg." For a number of years the Conference has been agitating the project of building up a first class college in its bounds. The brethren and friends at Millersburg being anxious to have it located in their midst, pledged Bourbon county for twenty thousand dollars, an amount sufficient it was thought to put up the building; and the place being in other respects an eligible location, the Conference, at its session in that place fall before last, accepted their offer, and appointed Rev. D. Welburn agent, than whom a more indefatigable beggar for benevolent objects could scarcely be found. During the year he swelled the endowment fund to nearly forty thousand dollars. At the Conference in Georgetown, Brother Welburn not wishing to serve longer as agent, the Rev. William C. Dandy was appointed. Since then, Brother D. has been moving things round at no ordinary rate. If any man was ever designed and fitted by providence to act as agent for a Methodist college, he is surely the man. It has been our privilege to be an eye-witness of the tact or dexterity with which he urges the claims of his agency. The man who can hear him talk an hour or two on this, his favorite theme, and not be induced to give something must be closely wedded to the "almighty dollar."

Two hundred thousand dollars is the amount we propose as the endowment fund. It is proposed to raise this amount by the sale of scholarships. The payment of five hundred dollars, in four annual instalments, without interest, secures a perpetual scholarship, which may be farmed out or sold, and is transmissible like any other real estate. This gives the owner the privilege of keeping one boy at the college free of tuition fees forever. It gives him also the benefit of the preparatory department.

The payment of one hundred dollars in the same way, secures the privilege of keeping one boy in the college proper fifty years. This cannot be farmed out or sold, and is not transmissible except in the family. There is also a fifty dollar scholarship, which gives one boy five years in the college proper.

Colleges erected and carried on according to this plan have been found to work admirably in the North. It is intended also to have a chair of Biblical Literature and Church History.

All things considered we deem the prospects of this interprise very encouraging indeed. The college edifice is now about complete, and stands on a gentle elevation near the centre of a beautiful campus of five acres, lying on the northern limits of the town of Millersburg, fronting the Lexington and Maysville turopike. The building is an imposing structure of Norman architecture, presenting a front as of two buildings united in a tower, which forms the main entrance. The length is ninety four feet by forty-four in width, three stories, giving eighteen rooms for the different purposes of recitation, laboratory, library, society rooms and chapel.

The building committee have been quite fortunate in securing prompt, reliable workmen for the different portions of the work, so that the building is so nearly completed that it is occupied by a high school of seventy eight boys, under the Superintendency of A. G. Murphrey, A. M. And although we cannot keep pace with Alabama in point of dollars and cents, still we intend, in time, to make the "Methodist College at Millersburg" second to no institution of learning on the continent. "Old Bourbon" is famed far and wide for pure whisky and fine mules; but, by the grace and help of God, we intend to make her literary fame much more extensive. Yes, by the assistance of a kind providence, we intend to make one college a well-spring from whence shall go forth streams of sanctified learning, not only to bless and elevate the youth of our own country, but that shall, in coming time, pour their limpid waters along the sterile places of heathen lands. NORTHERN KENTUCKY.

January 10, 1860.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

PARSONAGES.

In the Advocate of 11th inst., we had our attention directed to the subject of "homes for the evangelists," and when we remembered the Savior's expression, "I go to prepare a place for you," the idea was more forcibly expressed, and the clincher to the thought was made or reimpressed by the article above referred to.

The subject of Parsonages has never been properly presented to the people by all of our parsons. How strange it appears that Christians, that Methodist Christians, those who believe they form a part of the grand army of Christians, and to that particular regiment of said army yclept "Christianity in Earnest," or "Christianity on Horseback," should remain content with parsons without parsonages, is to us one of the wonderful things of this wonder-working age.

The query then comes to us in importunate tones, will you not give us parsonages—will you not give us parsonages?

And from whom, my brethren,—for, as a Methodist, I am now, through the columns of our favorite paper, addressing Methodists,—from whom does this query come?

In this our land of sunshine, flowers, poetry, music, and loveliness, big hearts and big purses, are men and women willing to aid in the noble cause of erecting parsonages for Methodist preachers all over the South; and yet their own ministers seem never to have properly introduced and with proper energy carried on the proposed plan.

The faint and feeble cry first came from the widows and orphans of our deceased ministers; for as they are the most needy class, from them the cry first come. Some may say, "nay, the voice was first heard in the wilderness, uttered by a toil-worn, dust-sprinkled itinerant." Whether the latter or former statement be the correct one, should not be the question at issue; but, "will you not give us parsonages?" In response, let us try to give a "heeding" ear. If the cry be a proper one, it should certainly be heeded.

"Homes for the poets," homes for the philosophers historians, statesmen, physicians, etc., are all right and proper. If the ministers who serve at the altar of God, deserve not homes for themselves and families, they should dwell in Heaven during the week, and by a cohort of angels be escorted to their respective pulpits and altar-places on the Sabbath.

My brethren, the present state of things in respect to parsonages should not exist. Let us as men be up and doing; if not, the Lord will use other instruments to do the work we should do. Let each quarterly conference take the matter in hand. Let each minister do his duty, his whole duty in this matter. Let him keep it before the people, and I know that Southerners will do their duty when properly awakened and persuaded.—May parsonages, school-houses, chapels, and churches—a nation's glory—dot our land all over.

ROENO.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HURRIED CONFERENCE SESSIONS.

One would think in attending the sessions of some of our Conferences, that the preachers had come there just to see how swiftly they could rush through the business before them. As to doing it carefully and well, that is quite another matter, and apparently one of little moment. The Secretary reads the documents placed in his hands as if he were reading for a wager, and it is of no sort of consequence whether the members understand what is read or not—many do not; that seems to be no part of the design—the object is to get through as rapidly as possible.

Sometimes when a report is presented containing suggestions or resolutions of grave import, and that should be deliberately weighed and discussed, it is adopted entire after a single reading—swallowed whole, simply to save time—many members voting for it without knowing what it contains, having been engaged in conversation with their neighbors, or else busy in getting up steam to rush the next train through, so soon as the track is clear of this one.

So it occasionally happens that after thus voting "it blind," some one by chance finds out that he has committed himself and the Conference to some measure that he really disapproves; then he makes the humiliating confession that he did not know what he was about; he moves a reconsideration, and often consumes more time in procuring a reversal of the decision than, perhaps, would have been occupied in a patient discussion of the point in the first place.

Now we humbly submit, that if the business of the Church, which calls our Annual Conference together, is worth doing at all, it is worth doing well; but if the main object in going be to see in how short a time it is possible to drive through and get away, better not go at all. If the chief design be to save time, why not stay at home, and save it all?

It is truly mortifying to one who has the best interests of Zion deeply and earnestly at heart, to observe how some of the grandest enterprises of the Church are crowded into a corner—narrowed down to the smallest possible compass—hastily crammed into a few moments of time, and then cut off unfinished, just because the preachers wish to get home. This indecent hurry at Conferences is actually crippling, every year, some of the most important undertakings of our branch of the Church of Christ.

PHILOSION.

ODE ON BIRTHDAY OF CHARLES WESLEY.

I.

O England, through thy lovely vales
And emerald hills how many now
In memory of the poet-priest
With rapt devotion bow!
Along the city's sounding street,
In cottage nooks, in lordly halls,
On village spire, and temple dome
A still, sweet influence falls—
For myriads whisper of the birth
That gave another bard to Earth.

II.

Nor only there: for from my own Land
Full many a blessing o'er the wave
Floats like an angel's wing to gild
His cradle and his grave.
Our Fanes have also felt his soul;
Our forest-temples grand and dim
Filled with ecstatic worshipers,
Have trembled to his hymn:
Still seem they bowed with praise and prayer—
The soul of Wesley lingers there!

III.

Well have the nations blessed the bards,
And gladdened by their misinterings,
Their foreheads bound with holier wreaths
Than ever shone on kings:
Lo! Scio's old blind Glory crowned;
And Dante diademed with fire
Imperial by the large-eyed Times,
And Byron's battle-lyre:
No royal flag a'er them unfurled,
Yet they are Emperors of the world!

IV.

If thus the Shapes that draw from Earth
The soul of song, are rulers made,
How should the Heaven-invoking Ones
By continents be arrayed?
Not from Olympian groves their wreath!
Go search Siloa's sacred bowers;
Or Zion's grander mountain walk
And gather statelier flowers—
These crown the souls that sing of Him
Who wandered there with cherubim.

V.

And such the crown that thou didst wear,
Sweet singer by old Albion's wave!
And Death himself could not destroy,
But placed it on thy grave.
How glorious its unfaded leaves
Shall on thy pure white forehead bloom,
When, with a hymn upon thy lips,
Thou'lt glitter from the tomb,
And, myriads joining in the lay,
Soar to the choir of Heaven away!

Harper's Magazine.

PRE-OBITUARY PIGEON-HOLES.—As soon as a man begins to be peculiar or distinguished enough to be a probable subject of obituary (wherever he may happen to die), the London Times gives him a special pigeon-hole, wherein is kept a record of all his deeds, sayings, incidents of his life, &c. Here is gathered the chronicle of his existence, produced with such wonderful promptness and particularity, on the very next morning after the death of any celebrated man. To some minds, suggests Willis, in the last Home Journal, this might perhaps be an annoyance; but, so eager are most men to have it probable that they will be heard of after death, that, we doubt not, the occupancy of a pigeon-hole might easily be made a matter of rent. The knowledge of the fact, adds N. P. W.—like the keeping in mind of the "recording angel"—may make famous men more careful of the pigeon-hole-iness of their lives?

A WOMAN 125 YEARS OLD.

On the 13th of last month there died, within a short distance of this city a negro woman, probably the oldest person in the state, and perhaps in the country. Her real name was Clara Wilson, but she has always been known here as Granny Wilson, or Granny Buck. Her exact age is not known, but it could not have been less than 125 years, and we incline to the opinion, such as was between 125 and 126. In person she was tall and muscular, quite as stoutly built as most men, of unusually strong and vigorous mind, with a great stock of practical common sense, and an undercurrent of quaint, poetical feeling. She retained nearly full possession of all her faculties up to within four or five years.

She had long need a staff in walking, yet to the last, when standing, was very little bent, and of somewhat commanding appearance. She was born and raised in South Carolina, and her earliest recollections were of Charleston, in that State, which she remembers as a smart village, instead of the great city it now is. She grew up on the plantation, not in the house—field work being her task as long as she was a slave.

An old historian says that in 1731, a few years anterior to her birth, Charleston was a place of 700 houses. It was chartered as a city in 1783. Granny Wilson related that a short time after she became the mother of her fourth child, the town was attacked by a party of French and Indians, and that quite a number of the inhabitants were killed or wounded, and a number of houses burned.

She was, during her life, the mother of twelve or thirteen children—by two husbands. All were born during her plantation life in Carolina; and nothing is known of any of them except the youngest—Buck, who now lives near here, and is called Uncle Buck. The story of his life is indissolubly connected with that of his mother's. He is generally acknowledged to be about 80 years of age, but was designated as "The Boy" by her till the day of her death. When he was a mere lad, perhaps six or eight years of age, the then owner of his mother and himself, with his family, consisting of his wife and several married children, with their wives and husbands, and quite a number of slaves or servants, migrated from Carolina, bound for the country now comprised in Western Tennessee. It appears that the party took the Tennessee river some distance above what is known as the "Cumberland Shoals." While descending, their boats grounded in passing over the shoals, and they were attacked by a party of the Indians at that time infesting the neighborhood. All the whites of the company were killed, and those of the blacks who did not share the same fate, were borne off by the Indians. Among those in the latter class were Granny Wilson and her Boy Buck. Their captivity was of such length, that the boy grew to the full stature of manhood. They were traded from tribe to tribe, and appear to have reached a point many hundred miles west of the Mississippi.

There was a French fort on the western side of the river, and on the eastern side, a few miles below an American station, which had been recently established. Buck had need of but little urging to attempt an escape from the Indians. With his mother, at night, he started. They struck the river a short distance below the French garrison; when the old woman bid herself near the bank, and Buck made a circuit round so as to reach the river above the fort. This he did unobserved. He took to the water, floated down close along by the shore, and succeeded in cutting loose, from almost under the eye of the sentinels patroling up and down, a canoe. He drew this 90 or 100 yards before he was discovered. Being fired at, he sprang into it and pulled for dear life, steering for the eastern bank at a point about a mile above the station of the American garrison. He was vigorously pursued, but succeeded in reaching the shore some distance ahead of his pursuers. Leaping out, he sank the canoe and hid himself. They searched some time for him, but not finding him, rowed back. When they were all off, he raised the canoe, and proceeded down to the American fort. To this he gained admission, and from it went for his mother, and was successful in bringing her over. They were now again with the whites. Shortly afterwards a treaty was formed with the Indians, in accordance with the provisions of which the old woman and her boy were sold. For a period of twenty-five or thirty years succeeding, her life appears to have been that of the generality of slave women in old age—her master's home being in or near Memphis.

Buck, "the boy," seems to have been employed considerably as a river hand. He was in service on a boat which was lying at New Orleans about the time of the famous battle at that city in the last war with Great Britain, and was sent by his master to serve on that eventful occasion, and yet bears marks of the wounds received in the conflict. Later, he was in demand at Memphis and other places as an interpreter—having acquired knowledge of many dialects during his life with the Indians. He also often had occasion to act as guide to parties exploring or hunting in the country west of the Mississippi. He gained his freedom about the year 1830 or 1831. Having built a cabin on the Arkansas side of the river, nearly opposite Memphis, the owner of his mother gave her to him, and he took her home. She was then something over ninety years of age, and he had also become what might be called an old man. Uncle Buck was, at this time, as he had been for some years, quite an important personage in and around Memphis. His personal presence was such as to command respect, and even awe from all the younger blacks, and his services as guide and interpreter, combined with his known spirit, gave him a standing with he whites not usually accorded to persons of his race.

Granny Wilson was almost universally known, and was an especial favorite among the river men. During the years of her residence with her "boy" on the Arkansas side of the river, it was her custom to be often taken across the river, that she might sit on the wharf and receive the notice and small charities of the steamboat captains and others. Uncle Buck's cabin was not far from a lake much resorted to for fishing purposes; and many were the people who called to pay their respects to the old woman, then reputed to be about a hundred years old. In 1839 this home was left, and Uncle Buck came to this city. In the latter part of 1840 or early in 1841 old Granny followed.

Since coming here, the old negress has lived with Uncle Buck and his family, and has received no small degree of consideration at the hands of a number of our citizens. She was baptized, and united with the African Church of this city, some fifteen or sixteen years ago. She has never known much sickness, and died at length of old age—going out to the unknown land as quietly and gently as the day fades into night.

—Alton (Ind.) Courier.

AN OVERRULING PROVIDENCE.

(Translated from the French.)

Father Beauregard* had just preached in one of the churches of the capital his beautiful sermon upon Providence, which, like all his sermons, had drawn together a considerable crowd of auditors. Upon returning home, he had just disrobed himself, in order to rest after his extreme fatigue, when a stranger was announced, desirous to see him. Taking time only to change his dress, he at once presented himself to the unknown visitor, whose manners and appearance denoted him to be an artisan.

"What do you wish, sir?" said the venerable preacher.

"To speak with you a moment," replied the stranger in a manner so agitated as at once to arrest the attention of Father Beauregard.

"Most willingly," said the preacher; "I am ready to listen. Sit down."

"I have just heard your sermon," said the artizan.

"Well, I am glad of it, for I have said some things which should not be lost upon either of us."

"Oh! sir, you have certainly spoken beautifully. Nobody could have done better. You have extolled the benefits of an overruling Providence. But, sir, I do not believe in Providence. There is no Providence for me. Wait a minute, and judge for yourself. I am a carpenter by trade. I have a wife and three children. We are honest working people who never wronged any one. Inquire about me in my neighborhood, and everybody will tell you that N. is an honest man, getting his living by the sweat of his brow; that he pays his debts; that he does not drink; that he does not play; and that he takes good care of his family."

"I can easily believe all this, my friend," interrupted Father Beauregard, much touched by the heartfelt words of his visitor, "but to what does all this lead, and what connection is there between these details and your unbelief in Providence?"

"You shall hear; you see before you a man resolved to throw himself into the river."

"Good heavens!" cried Father Beauregard, justly alarmed at this acknowledgment. "God preserve you from such a fatal step! You not only kill the body but you peril the salvation of your soul. What has given rise to such a dreadful thought?"

"Sir, I have just met with a heavy loss by the failure of a debtor. I have liabilities which become due on the 30th of this month, and I cannot meet them. It will be the first time my signature has been dishonored, and I cannot bear the idea of this disgrace. It is after having in vain solicited assistance from my friends, who would be glad to help me if they could, that I determined to drown myself."

"But, my friend, what will become of your wife, who loves you, or your children who need you, if you drown yourself?"

The poor man's tears answered to these interrogatories, but he replied, after a moment's pause, "When I am dead the world will take pity on them; I cannot live to see them dishonored, to see them bearing the burden of a shame."

"How was it, then, with such a frightful plan as this in contemplation, you came to hear me preach?"

"In consolation, you came to hear me preach?" ding so, only by chance, sir; I had no intention of noticed the crowd entering; I asked who was going to and heard you call me a celebrated priest. I remained very fine, but I thought; all you said was very good, vidence for me," still in the dark, I could see no Pro

"What, to hear confide in me, and yet sermon, to come and see me, to Providence?" all this you do not recognise a

For a moment the man "It is strange, sir, very ill silent and me to pay my debts." still I see no way for

During the interview the he deeply moved; he had heard the good priest was whose manners and language sufficiently happy man's story, cerity. With further investigation, I attested its sincerity, resolved at once tu act in his behalf.

"Listen, my friend," said he to him. to be an honest man, unfortunate through agency of others, and I wish to help you out of your troubles. How much money will cover your debts? not rich, still I can contribute something towards you up the sum."

"Oh, sir! you are too good! Less than three thousand francs will suffice me."

Father Beauregard rose, opened his secretary, and taking therefrom a hundred louis, returned to the poor artisan, and said;

"My friend, here are a hundred louis. I should not have been able to have done this myself, but a few days since the Princess Clotilde, after having heard me preach on charity, sent me a large sum of money, begging me to use it for the benefit of the unfortunate, and to distribute it to any whom I should judge worthy of assistance. It has already done much good, softened the ills of many; but my friend, your visit here, at this critical juncture of affairs, is, in my view, a stream of light upon the ways of God to man. Take this money, pay your debts, and believe in an overruling Providence."

Full of surprise and overwhelming gratitude, the poor carpenter fell on his knees at the feet of the good father, he could not speak a word, but raising his streaming eyes to heaven, in a language more powerful than words, expressed the joy of his deliverance.

* Beauregard was a French Jesuit preacher, who died in Germany in 1804.

FALLS OF GAINSOPPA.

The following description of the Gainsoppa Falls in India is from the correspondence of the London Times: An amphitheatre of woods, and a river, about 500 yards wide, rushing and boiling to a certain point, where it is lost in a perpetual mist and in an unceasing deafening roar, must first be imagined. Leaving the bungalow on the Madras side of the river, and descending to a position below the river level, you work your way up carefully and tediously over slippery rocks, until you reach a point, where a rock about twice the size of a man's body, juts out over a precipice. Resting flat upon this rock, and looking over it, you see directly below you two out of the four of the principal Falls; these two are called the "Great Fall" and the "Rocket." The one contains a large body of water, the main body of the river, perhaps 50 yards across, which falls massively and apparently sluggishly into the chasm below, and the other contains a smaller body of water, which shoots out to successive sprays over successive points of rocks, till it falls into the same chasm. This chasm is at least 900 feet in depth, six times the depth of the Niagara Falls, which are about 150 feet, and perhaps a quarter to half a mile in width. These are the first two falls to be visited. Then move a little below your first position, and you will observe first a torgid boiling body of water of greater volume than the Rocket Fall, rushing and steaming down into the same chasm, this is the third Fall, the "Roarer;" and then carrying your eye a little further down you will observe another fall, the loveliest, softest, and most grateful of all, being a broad expanse of shallow water falling like transparent silver lace over a smooth surface of polished rock into this chasm; this is "La Dame Blanche," and the White Lady of Avenel could not have been more graceful and ethereal. But do not confine yourself to any one place in order to viewing these falls, scramble everywhere you can, and get as many views as you can of them, and you will be unable to decide upon which is the most beautiful. And do you want to have a faint idea of the depth of the chasm into which these glorious waters fall? Take out your watch and drop as large a piece of rock as you can hold from your viewing place; it will be several seconds before you even lose sight of the piece of rock, and then even it will not have reached the water at the foot of the chasm, it will only have been lost to human sight; or watch the blue pigeons, wheeling and circling to and out of the Great Fall within the chasm, and looking like sparrows in size in the depths beneath you. But you have yet only seen one, and that not perhaps the loveliest, and at least not the most comprehensive view of the falls. You must proceed two miles up the river above the falls and cross over at a ferry, where the waters are still and smooth as glass, and sluggish as a Hollander, and proceed to the Mysore side of the falls, walking first to a point where you will see them all at a glance, and then descending as near as you can to the foot of these, to be drenched by the spray, deafened by the noise, and awestruck by the grandeur of the scene, and by the visible presence of the Creator of it, in the perpetual rainbow of many and brilliant hues which spans the foot of the chasm.

THE YOUNG SIR HENRY HAVELOCK.

A writer from England, who recently met this worthy son of a worthy sire, at a party given by the Lord Mayor of London, thus describes his personal appearance:—"Young Havelock is not more than twenty-two years old. He is slender, rather tall, quiet exceedingly in his aspect, with nothing whatever of bravado or personal vanity in his daring. There was not a glance that betrayed the lurking ambition that would say: 'I am the man who rode in upon a whole battery of guns, in India, through a storm of shot, and for that received the Victoria Cross.' His face is almost feminine, his features small, his neck slender, his hair and slight mustache black and glossy, and, besides, those small ears, combativeness is not seen. Yet there is one full of courage—quiet and impassible as appeared his father—who yet, when occasion demanded, would spring into the saddle at the summons of peril, and ride, without one moment's hesitation, with fearless, calm, unshrinking courage, into the very thickest of the conflict. It is the true type of old English courage, and to its force is added the fear of God. Pleasant was it to see him, with genuine modesty, joining in the praises of God, and kneeling down devoutly, and covering his face with his hands, as prayer was offered."

AN OLD PREDICTION OF DISUNION.

Senator Johnson, of Tennessee, in a late speech in the United States Senate, quotes from Thomas Jefferson's Journal the following entry under the head of December 13, 1803: "The Rev. Mr. Coffin, of New England, who is now here soliciting donations for a college in Greene county, Tennessee, tells me that when the first determined to engage in this enterprise, he wrote a paper recommendatory of the enterprise, which he meant to get signed by clergymen, and a similar one for persons in a civil character, at the head of which he wished Mr. Adams to put his name, he being the President of the United States, and the applicant going only for his name, and not for a donation. Mr. Adams, after reading the paper and considering, said he saw no possibility of continuing the union of the States; that their dissolution must necessarily take place, that he therefore saw no propriety in recommending to New England men to promote a literary institution in the South; that it was in fact giving strength to those who were to be their enemies; and, therefore, he would have nothing to do with it." The person referred to is the late Rev. Charles Coffin, D.D., President of Greenville College, Tennessee, a native of Massachusetts.

Never forget the kindnesses which others do for you, nor remind others of the kindness which you do for them.

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1860.

ACCOUNTS—NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

All parties interested in the Advocate—Editor, Preachers, and Subscribers—are interested in avoiding confusion in accounts.

Those well acquainted with the credit system in the newspaper business know full well that, under that system, confusion in accounts never can, never will, never can be avoided. Uncertain mails, unavoidable oversights in agents or clerks, forgetfulness in subscribers and others, and the wearying, vexatious details of this business over all others, render it impossible. We have tried, for years, and know.

We have the subscription begin and end with the year, and to pay, if not in advance, at least once a year, in the nearest approach to a remedy that we can devise,—and this is [illegible]

[illegible] after the Conference, all the accounts of [illegible] made out to January, 1861, without reference to the last [illegible] account, or time last paid to; and the 1861.

to each subscriber who has not paid to January [illegible] operate with

In all our subscribers and agents will put further settled dur- [illegible] this difficulty these accounts will be to January, 1861, [illegible] ing the coming year. After that, cents, $2 more will be due, and no [illegible] receive these ac- [illegible] WILL our brethren and friends, when to the office, or pay [illegible] counts, immediately remit the [illegible] any think the account [illegible] to the preacher, taking a receipt, without quarreling. Incorrect, let him inform us, we more cause than others. We never quarrel, though hereafter begin and end [illegible] volume of the Advocate desirable that subscriptions with the year; and the rule.

[illegible] to the table do not begin with the year, [illegible] never take two dollars, but an amount sufficient [illegible] will please send, 'till the end of the year, at the rate of [illegible] to pay for the paper.

Postal Clerks, for will know, without being informed, that [illegible] time, every copy of the year is the time to remit the sub- [illegible] scription price, to the table do not begin with the year.

[illegible] scores, hundreds, thousands of new subscribers And let each to begin the New Volume, January 1st, 1860.—[illegible], if Providence smile on us, to make a better [illegible] by next year than ever before. Arrangements are made, [illegible] being made, for greatly increasing its attractions.—[illegible] new writers, of the first order, will begin with the [illegible] year. The paper is deservingly approved now—we intend [illegible] to merit higher approbation.

PRACTICAL AMERICAN CHIVALRY.

Dueling—Terry and Broderick—Branch and Grow—The Christian Advocate and Journal.

The time has come in this country when the struggle for supremacy between a partial and a catholic civilization, involves all classes of questions; not merely those of political character and import, but also those growing out of religion, morals, society, and individual character and honor. The dividing line between that which is secular and political on the one hand, and that which is ethical and religious on the other, so far as this contest is concerned, is obliterated for ever. The public opinion of the time includes all these elements, and the public press, secular and religious, covers the whole ground of controversy. Whether this is as it should be, and whether the people, press and literature representing the sectional civilization sought to be made that of the United States, and of Anglo-Saxon Christendom in the nineteenth century, will ultimately prove a blessing or a curse, in thus unintentionally promoting this universality of thought and discussion, and especially in thus fixing a religious character to every issue of the time, it is not pertinent now to attempt to determine. We learn from the word of God that "the wrath of man is made to praise him," and it is a hopeful view of the case that sectional fanaticism, by appealing to ancient religious prejudices, and foregone religious conclusions, in the discussion of political, social, and commercial questions, and thus indirectly promoting the habit of referring to the word of God as the standard authority in their settlement, will ultimately, though unintentionally, promote a reverence for truth and the will of God.

The practice of resorting to the duello for the determination of personal disputes, and for the redress or avengement of personal wrongs for which society and government have provided no adequate redress, has been customary from the days of medieval chivalry until now, and, at this day, is in the Christian community at least, one of the oddest and most perplexing facts with which it has to deal. That it is utterly without the pale of sanction or toleration by the doctrine and spirit of that religion whose law between man and his fellow is the "love that worketh no ill to his neighbor," is not for a moment to be questioned. The sacredness and value of human life is inculcated and heightened by every thought and sentiment of the Christian religion, and he who wilfully takes it, unless unhappily rendered necessary by self-defence, is guilty, before God, of a high and solemn sin. Even in that case, it is a misfortune never sufficiently to be lamented.

Nevertheless, the practice is a fact—a fact as common as it is sorrowful, and apparently as invincible as are the evil tempers and malicious passions which constitute the bad soil out of which the baleful plant grows. Like war it is a fact and evil; both are to be deplored; but he who admits the occasional justice of the one, will find it convenient to be judicious in his condemnation of the other. Indeed, it is too old and too deeply rooted, to be treated in the flippant and impotently denunciatory manner so common in the pulpit and religious press; and as an instance of the latter, we regret to be compelled to cite the able and usually discriminating cotemporary named at the head of this article. To denounce every man who thinks himself bound to fight a duel, as a murderer, in the usual sense of murder, to be punished as such, and to ridicule as beneath contempt, as the Christian Advocate and Journal does, the erroneous education and public opinion which have caused him to acknowledge allegiance to this false sentiment of an ancient and bloody chivalry, is an inexcusable rashness and weakness—manifesting but superficial thought on the grave subject, and utter want of appreciation of the delicate position of our public men, and of the trials of both conscience and feeling to which they are subject. We are opposed to dueling, as we are opposed to war, which is simply dueling between nations or governments, instead of individuals. War is admitted by Christian men to be sometimes necessary; and yet we believe that the improved and intimate intercourse between nations now progressing under the benign influences of commerce, and Christian civilization generally, will, with the instrumentality of enlightened diplomacy and friendly mediation, do away with that necessity; just as we believe that those wrongs of feeling and wounds of honor, which no law that ever existed can adequately redress, will ultimately be partly obviated by the amenities of courteous Christian culture, and when not prevented, will be adjusted by kindly mediation of honorable friends. That there are wrongs for the redress of which an appeal to legal tribunals, as recommended by the Christian Advocate and Journal, would be utterly hopeless, even ridiculous, and sometimes disgraceful, cannot be denied by any one who has the least experience or sensibility. The resort to the duello is a miserably ungodly, inhuman, and unsatisfactory alternative, and even most men who are tempted to accept it, feel it to be so, and only yield to the temptation under the tyranny of a false public opinion, and the despair of obtaining redress otherwise. Their condemnation, therefore, while it should be definite and unqualified, should be appreciative and sympathetic, not flippantly and foolishly denunciatory; except in the case of professional duellists, who occupy a much lower social level than the professional prize-fighter. The attempt to identify all public men whose Christian principles are so weak as to allow them to be tempted into dueling, with professional duellists, which is the course of the Northern religious press, and of the Christian Advocate and Journal in particular, is a shameful piece of unmanliness. Their real sins are great enough, without the addition of fictitious ones.

The Christian Advocate and Journal speaks of the dueling code, as recognized by a portion of our public men, especially in Congress, as a sort of "gag law" to prevent freedom of speech and debate. We doubt if the journal is able to present a single instance in recent years illustrating such a view of the case. For political opponents to take advantage of the privileges of public debate to use language intentionally conveying personal insult and abuse, as in the case of both Broderick and Grow, and then refuse, as in the case of the latter, the redress which such language indicates a willingness to give, on the ground of Christian principle, is a pharisaical hypocrisy which will find due punishment of contempt in the instincts of all honorable and fair-minded men, whether acknowledging or repudiating the dueling "code." We learn that Christian men, or those publicly professing Christian principles, are either abridged in freedom of debate by fear of the duello, or condemned repudiating its obligations, provided their language and manners are regulated by that religion which they profess to regard. One thing is certain, and worthy of remark, that those of our Northern Congressmen who repudiate the duello professedly from Christian principle, but who have so conducted themselves as to provoke a challenge, are the most malicious in their manners and insulting in their words, as is manifest in the cases of Sumner and Grow; while those who acknowledge the duello are the most courteous in deportment, and punctilious of personal propriety. While professedly Christian men are more regardless of that religion which teaches us to "be courteous," and "not behave ourselves unseemly," than men who acknowledge the obligation of the "code," their lectures on the sin of dueling will deservedly go unregarded.

The inconsistency of the Northern religious press, and especially of the Christian Advocate and Journal, on this subject, is suspiciously indicative of an interest beyond its mere ethical and religious aspects. Broderick insults Terry, is challenged, accepts, and is killed. Then the cry is raised that the successful duellist is a murderer, and the whole blame of the duel laid upon him; whereas the fallen man, who is claimed as a martyr to freedom of speech, was most guilty of the two, having purposely given the insult, with the expectation of fighting. Burlingame is challenged by Brooks, and grants a quasi—an unreasonable acceptance, and the Northern religious press rejoice that one Southern duellist has met his match! Grow insults Branch, is challenged, backs out, appeals to religion, which he has violated by his wanton insult, and he is eulogized by the Christian Advocate and Journal as acting in a most "manly and Christian-like" manner; whereas he is evidently a bullying and abusive coward. Let dueling be condemned; let our public men, who behave themselves, and are challenged, be supported in declining the duello; let professional duellists be scouted everywhere; but let those who put themselves in the dueling pale, by lungunge and manners intended to provoke a challenge, be forced to take the consequences, either on the field, or in the ignominy of hypocrisy and cowardice.

Nothing on earth will prevent the evil in this country but such a prevalence, not of puritanic phariseism, but of Christian refinement and charity, as shall change the rude and malicious manners of the time—in public and private, in speech and in the press. May God hasten it.

"FREEDOM TO WORSHIP GOD."

The science of Government is yet in its infancy. "Freedom to worship God," poetically ascribed to the witch-hanging and Quaker-persecuting Puritans who landed on Plymouth rock, as the boon sought in leaving the home of their nativity, is on the tongue of every fourth-of-July orator from the Aroostook to the Rio Grande. It is universally regarded as one of the great elements of that liberty for which our revolutionary fathers "fought, bled and died." And, indeed, it is certainly one of the greatest of all political blessings. But, as to a fixed and reliable definition of religious freedom, whether it is absolute or limited, and if limited, what the limits are, there is certainly much difference of opinion, if not doubt and darkness. In some of the States, a man who is not a Christian in his faith, though believing in God—a deist for instance—is not allowed the ordinary privileges of citizenship in courts of justice. The same is true, in some States, of citizens who profess the Christian faith, but do not hold to all the doctrines commonly received by Christians—universalists for instance. In some States, some years ago, Catholics were disfranchised in the same way. And in several of the States, at this day, ministers of the gospel are by law rendered ineligible to office. In one State, heathen temples and idulatrous worship are tolerated and protected by law; and in others, the Christian Sabbath is forced upon Jews who do not believe it is, and upon others who choose to disregard it; and the Bible, the Lord's prayer, and Protestant Old Hundred, are forced upon Roman Catholics in the public Schools. Recently, a gentleman in Ohio, when dying, left a legacy to the Catholic Church, to say mass and offer prayers for the benefit of souls in purgatory. The heirs contested the will on the ground that this bequest was illegal. The Court decided in favor of the heirs, stating that this designation was too indefinite, and that the Roman Catholic Church herself could not prove for a certainty that there were souls in purgatory who can be benefited by masses and prayers; thus legally deciding a tenet of religious faith. And before many years the question will have to be settled whether Utah, with its festering polygamy, can be admitted into this Union of "freedom to worship God."

We do not assume, at present, to enlighten the United States, and the rest of mankind, as to the true solution of the questions involved in the above cases, (though the solution of some of them is obvious enough). We merely state them, for popular reflection. We subjoin the following remarks from the Delta, as showing still farther the "beautiful confusion" of the public mind on this subject. That paper says:

> The truth is, the contest between Church and State is constantly liable to occur. Silent and invisible it may be, but its results are none the less obvious. The logic of a Scottish Calvinist may lead, in its last reduction, to Church supremacy, or at least to rebellion against political supremacy, as well as the dogmas of the ultramontane Roman Catholic of France or Italy. If the ideal of politics and the ideal of religion were realized, there could be no conflict between religious and secular laws or obligations. Nor in that case would any reason exist for the separate existence of the two systems. For when the two systems come in deadly conflict, both cannot be right, and one should give way. On the other hand, if they agree at all points, they are really a unit in purpose and effect, and there is no necessity to keep them separate in form and name. Such seems to be the line of argument of the ultramontanists of all religious sects and creeds, who dream of the coming day when there shall be one God, one faith, one Church, one government, one people. But, alas! the millennium is not yet come; and if it should come, what what need would there be for either political or ecclesiastical laws and penalties? Society would resume both politics and religion to itself; conscience and love would be the only earthly supremacy; and none should stand between man and his Redeemer and Creator.

The Congresses of Europe.—During the past two centuries there have been no less than 17 Congresses to settle the affairs of Europe. The earliest one of importance was that at Minister and Osnabruck in 1644. The subsequent ones were those of the Pyrenees, in 1659, of Nimegnen, in 1695, of Ryswick, in 1697, of Utrecht, in 1712, of Aix la Chapelle, in 1748, of Teschem, in 1779, of Rastadt, in 1797, of Erfurt, in 1809, of Chatillon, in 1844 (which resulted in Napoleon's banishment to Elba), the great one of Vienna, in 1815 (which reconstructed Europe on the ruins of his empire), of Aix la Chapelle, in 1818, Carlsbad, in 1819, of Troppau, in 1820, Laybach, in 1821, and Verona, in 1822 (all to adjust new questions arising under the decrees of that of Vienna), and finally, that of Paris, in 1856, to settle the hostilities in Russia, Turkey, and the Danubian Principalities.

RANDOM SKETCHES BY ONE ON A FURLOUGH.

Sea Sickness—Havana—The Harbor—Old time Appearance—Barred Windows—Troops—Narrow Streets and Side-walks—Street Scenes—The Volante—A Havana Sabbath Irregular Fellowster—The Market—The Climate.

Mr. Editor: Were you ever thoroughly sea-sick? And did you ever, at such a time, lie in your berth to listen to a gong calling to meals, the very thought of which sent strange sensations over you; or to a stream of gibberish in outlandish dialects, from parties who cared not a fig what price cotton bore, or who was to be the next President? Well, then, you need no attempts at delineation, especially as I could not do justice to the subject. Many of your readers, no doubt, have visited Havana, but most of them have not; and I do not recollect to have seen anything in your columns descriptive of that city or the island. The harbor, I must think, is one of the finest in the world, though I have not seen them all. It is entered through a narrow channel of not more than three hundred yards, which gradually widens until at the lower end, three miles from the entrance, it must be two miles wide. It is completely land-locked, being surrounded by elevated land on every side; so that the largest navy in the world might ride there in safety, amid the severest storm. The entrance is thoroughly guarded: on the east, frowns the famous Moro Castle, said to be second in strength only to Gibraltar; on the west also are strong fortifications. On the western side of the harbor lies the city. It is very unlike any other on this continent, though those who have noticed the French and Spanish portions of New Orleans can form an idea of it. Every thing about it looks old-timed and old-fashioned. The buildings, streets, conveyances, &c., are all in the style of the Old World a century and a half ago. I did not see a building, public or private, that had caught an American idea. The material universally used in building is a light-colored, porous sand-stone; it is quite soft, and easily cut to the required shape. Roofs are all covered with the same material—the semi-tubular tile. I did not notice a slate in the city. The use of other materials, and the adoption of later styles of building, might be regarded as a dangerous approximation of heresy, for aught I knew. Doors and windows are generally furnished with strong iron bars and grates, that in case of popular outbreak, the inmates might be able to stand something of a siege. This argues no great confidence in the public tranquility. No country where Romanism is the religion, is governed by moral forces merely; the bayonet and "the Holy Catholic Church" go together! I asked a genteel young Spaniard how many troops there were in and about the city. "About 8,000," was his reply. How many in the Island? "About 25,000, twice as many as the whole United States have," said he good-naturedly. I wanted to say, we have use for troops to fight our enemies only, and but few of them at that; while you require them to govern yourselves; but as he seemed free from ill-feeling, I thought I would not touch what might be a tender spot.

The streets of the city are shamefully narrow. I did not notice one, even in the business portions, that was twenty feet wide; most of them not more than fifteen or seventeen. The side-walks are a little over two feet in width, so that it requires nice calculation and balancing for two men to pass each other without one taking the pavement; and as for ladies, the thing is quite out of the question. Nothing is more common than to see the street blocked up for half a square, and then what a scene of gesticulation and shouting! And, by the way, the lower classes of Spanish go through more gesticulations and grimaces, in talking, than any people I ever saw. Is this because the language lacks flexibility and copiousness, or is it the result of habit?

In passing the streets the stranger's attention is arrested by the volante, about the only vehicle used for public accommodation. It is a one-horse conveyance, consisting of a single pair of wheels and axle, with a pair of shafts attached, all made about three times the size and strength of our buggy; upon the shafts, about three feet in front of the axle, is placed a buggy-like top; to the extreme end of the shafts the horse is attached, thus removing him as far as possible from the wheels and the load to be borne, beside throwing the burden of it upon his back. In addition to this, the negro who guides is mounted upon the animal's back. Now imagine hundreds of those moving to and fro, turning the corners of those narrow streets, and you have an idea of locomotion in Havana. Family volantes are distinguished from public ones by being more stylish, and by the driver wearing livery. This consists generally of a laced jacket and a pair of curiously laced boot-legs, coming up in front some six inches above the knee, and terminating below in rather a tasteful shoe. Those in better circumstances mount the driver on a second horse, while he leads the one in the volante; and the still more wealthy or pretentious are adopting American carriages. But a truce to this.

I spent a Sabbath in the city. I knew it to be so, by my reckoning, not by anything in the movements of the people; for shops of every description were open, all kinds of traffic going on, and all trades prosecuted. I saw no church open, though I passed several, yet I suppose they were, at some hours of the day. I learned that the theatre was open, and I heard an Englishman say, that he had "spent all the forenoon in fighting cocks." Catholicism is triumphant here, and thanks God that its "right there is none to dispute;" the morals and piety of the populace are the result of its culture. What a pity that such a gem as this "Queen of the Antilles," should be in such hands, contribute so little to the advancement of the age and world—so little to the real benefit of mankind. Mr. Editor, I am in favor of the acquisition of Cuba; by purchase and peaceably if we can, if not——well, I am in favor of having it. The Amerites were allowed to possess the land of Canaan only until "their iniquities" were "come to the full," then the validity of the national title ceased and the real owner changed occupants. Has this feature of the Divine administration disappeared? This will be regarded as "filibustering," I suppose; well be it so.

Market hours in Havana present a scene not to be emagined or easily described; it must be seen and heard! The number and character of the articles on sale—the nature and extent of a majority of the purchases, would astonish American eaters; "one eateth herbs," said Solomon; many do this in Havana. I did not see a decent piece of meat of any description in the shambles; and yet, in proper hands, what would not this Island furnish! Vegetables seemed to be plenty, and some kinds that are not enjoyed at this season, in "the States," such as green Corn, Cucumbers, etc. The weather was delightful while I remained in the city, though I was informed that some times it is quite cool. To those seeking a more genial climate than that afforded by the Southern States, a visit to the South side of the Island is important. I confess I left this sunny spot with a feeling of regret; having a desire to visit the interior. But I must away. J. H.

The American Chapel at Paris.—The New York Times says:—We understand that the Rev. Dr. McClintock, of this city, has been invited to take charge of the American Chapel in Paris, and that he has indicated his acceptance of the invitation. As our readers are aware, Rev. Mr. Seeley, recently the officiating clergymen there, returned to this country several weeks since. The chapel is under the supervision of the Christian Union, and it is intended for the service and accommodation of American residents. Dr. McClintock can scarcely fail to be a popular and efficient man for that important and responsible position. He occupies a high rank as a scholar and preacher in the Methodist Church.

M. de FAVEL'S MISSION TO ITALY.

In harmony with the account in last week's Advocate of the favorable disposition of Louis Napoleon toward Italian independence, as indicated by the celebrated pamphlet of M. de Laguerroniere, a correspondent of the Independent says that the mission given to M. de Favel and the manner in which he fulfills it, seem further to indicate such a disposition. Semi-official newspapers of Paris says that M. de Favel's mission is a hoax, that no such man is to be found on the list of diplomatic functionaries, and so forth; but information from the surest sources, give assurance that M. de Favel has been intrusted by the Emperor personally with the task of visiting the statesmen and leaders of Piedmont and the free provinces, to warn them that they have little to hope from the Congress, and must therefore prepare to take care of themselves. Let them therefore take a bold and decided stand, and compel Europe to respect the accomplished facts, or to engage in a conflict which would soon divide her in two parts and bring about the universal war which the meeting of a Congress is expected to avert. Such is the word carried through Italy by M. de Favel. Those to whom he speaks know well that he is a personal though independent friend of Napoleon. He is a Swiss, a wealthy man, he was a member of the Swiss Government when Switzerland, mainly through his influence, came near waging war with France to protect Louis Napoleon, then a fugitive from prison, against the demands of Louis Phillippe. He enjoys the full confidence of the Emperor, and is at the same time an enthusiastic friend of Italy and of Italian independence, and he never would have accepted a mission whose effects might be to discourage the hopes of the Italian patriots. His presence in Italy as the confidential agent of the Emperor, is the most encouraging sign of the political situation of that country.

PACIFIC METHODISM.

The Pacific Methodist has closed its third volume, and the editor exclaims, Laus Deo! He says that recent events indicate the speedy demonstration of the truth of his "prophecy" that no ecclesiastical organization that persists in the agitation of political questions, can maintain more than a very feeble existence on the Pacific coast. It is gratifying to perceive, he adds, that some who have been notorious as political preachers, from a conviction of their former error, or at the dictate of that "rascally virtue, prudence," are now more disposed to confine themselves to their proper sphere as ministers of the Gospel. Aforetime their sectional denunciations and political harangues were bold and outspoken; now they are presented rather by insinuation than by direct statement and fierce invective.

He further says: "The scriptural and conservative position of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, with regard to the distracting extraneous issue which has divided Methodists in this country, is commending itself more and more to the approval of enlightened and religious men throughout the land. In the communion of our Church there reigns universal concord. We have no strife, there is no prospect of division or secession. The Methodistic sentiment of the Pacific coast is overwhelmingly in our favor—and so it is wherever the issue is fairly made and fairly met."

Rev. O Fisher and company, after a long and perilous voyage over mountains and through snows and rains, had arrived in Oregon.

Mrs. Samantha Cochran has subscribed $500 for the Pacific Methodist College.

SKETCH OF DR. T. H. STOCKTON.

In his personal appearance Dr. Stockton is a vitalized ghost. For the last thirty years he has been the subject of a slow pulmonary affection, at first supposed to be of a tubercular form, but which has gradually assumed a more asthmatic nature. He is slender, tall, and perfectly erect, and as he passes along the street with his long, white hair, slightly inclined to curl at the end, his pale face, with nothing in it to indicate life, except his large, intellectual eye, and his head always thrown in the direction of thoughtful observation, be looks in all respects the gravest specimen of a hard-working, living man imaginable. In the pulpit his person is rendered still more singular and impressive by his style of preaching, which is almost as unearthly as his vocalization is sepulchral.

Almost the first emotion awakened in the mind of a stranger by Dr. Stockton, is sympathy for his extreme physical infirmity. So feeble is he, indeed, at times, that in commencing his church services he is obliged to be seated. He will commence his discourse in a low tone of voice, with much effort, and painful interruptions of coughing, and so continue for several minutes, until suddenly his soul seems to burst out in a blaze of ardor, obtaining a complete mastery over his corporeal scaffolding, and he becomes strong, animated and electrical. His voice no longer remains weak and husky, but is under the orator's control. No auditorium is then too large for his voluminous voice to fill; nor is the scope of its modulations less remarkable. His eagle eye dwells upon some word which he wishes to fix the supreme attention of his hearers.

EDUCATION IN ICELAND.

Iceland, which has a population of about seventy thousand, is under the government of Denmark. The language spoken in Iceland is the old Scandinavian, closely akin to the Saxon, with no admixture of Greek or Latin roots. It has, singularly enough, a literature three hundred years old. There are four presses on the island, and four newspapers. About sixty volumes are published in a year, but most of them are published in Copenhagen. There are colleges and academies of medicine there, and common schools. But most of the education is domestic in its character. The fathers teach the children so effectually that a young Iceland boy or girl of eight years old cannot be found who cannot read and write. A servant girl was known to the writer of the article to read to the society who could dictate one of Scott's novels from memory. Wandering minstrels, like those of the old time in Scotland and Germany were still to be found traversing the country, and dropping in on families happy to receive them, who gladly give them a night's supper and lodging in exchange for their lay. The Icelandic church is Lutheran. There are one hundred and ninety-nine churches on the island, with two hundred and eighty clergymen. For a little time, the Mormons disturbed the regular church-going members, but their influence soon waned. The clergy waxed more strong in vigilance, and brought the feeble-minded back to the faith of their fathers."

A NOBLE RESPONSE.

Just as we go to press, too late for remarks, our old friend and brother, Judge Groce, sends us the following. Who will follow? Let us give the Pacific Methodist a press, straight out! Judge Groce did not intend his name to appear, but the cause demands it.

Talladega, Alabama, Jan. 23, 1860.

Brother Gillespie—In the New Orleans Advocate of the 11th inst., there is an earnest call from L. Catchy, San Francisco, California, for help for the Pacific Methodist. I am convinced that the members of the Methodist Church in Alabama have paid out a large amount in the last five years, to assist in building up our Colleges and Schools. But I don't think we feel it much to our injury. I believe you can find ten, among whom you have labored in earlier days, to give $250 to help our California Brother to buy that Press. Inclosed is my Check for $25 to start on.

J. E. Groce.

Another Ecclesiastical Black Flag.—The New York Independent, the paper of Beecher and Cheever, has declared its intention to support the Republican candidate for the Presidency, provided he is sound in his opposition to slavery! The Christian Advocate and Journal has company.

LITERARY NOTICES.

The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, for the year 1860. Boston: Crosby, Nichols and Co. For sale in New Orleans by Thomas L. White, 105 Canal-street.

This, besides what is usually understood by an Almanac, has all the governments, laws, the statistics, prominent persons, and events, of the United States, of the individual States, of the other American States, of Europe, and of the world, in convenient form for reference. It is an epitomized world of knowledge. It has an American and a foreign obituary. This, we have no doubt, is the best Almanac in the United States.

An Appeal to the People in behalf of their Rights as authorized Interpreters of the Bible. By Catherine E. Beecher, Author of "Common Sense applied to Religion," "Domestic Economy," "Letters to the People on Health and Happiness." New York: Harper and Brothers, Publishers, Franklin Square, 1860. For sale in New Orleans by Thomas L. White, 105 Canal-street.

This must be a bold book. We have not read it through as yet, but we must do so, and give an opinion. It is dedicated to the Editors of the secular Press, as called of God to defend liberty of conscience, freedom of speech, and the right of private interpretation of the Bible, unrestrained by ecclesiastical power. It is evidently a sensation book. The Beechers are in that line. Calvinism, or the Augustinian system, finds no mercy. At the same time, however, we think, from what we have read, that most of the fundamental elements of evangelical orthodoxy are repudiated. All ecclesiastical authority is resisted. The religious press is represented as hopelessly in bonds, and the secular press is called upon to come to the rescue.

Self-Help: with Illustrations of character and conduct. By Samuel Smiles, author of the Life of George Stephenson, New York; Harper and Brothers, Publishers, Franklin-square, 1860. For sale in New Orleans by Thomas L. White, 105 Canal-street.

The title of this book indicates its character. It is intended to direct and encourage self-reliance, self-discipline, self-control, self-culture, and all that is involved in a self-made man. It will cause the dormant seeds of energy and character to germinate in many a young person's mind, by warming both soil and seed. There is a valuable fund of information in the illustrations, drawn from actual characters, aside from the main lesson of the book.

Christian Believing and Living. Sermons by F. D Huntington, D.D., Preacher to the University, and Plummer Professor of Christian Morals in Harvard College. Boston: Crosby, Nichols, and Company, 117 Washington street, 1860. For sale in New Orleans by T. L. White, 105 Canal street.

This is a book of beautiful sermons, in beautiful style. The author has a high reputation both as a preacher and writer. It is remarkable as being an evangelical and orthodox work from a Unitarian preacher. While some of the orthodox preachers are tempted to lean toward Unitarianism, some Unitarians are preaching orthodoxy. This is a book which will be read not only by Christians, but by all cultivated people, with pleasure and profit.

The Third Volume of Harper's Weekly. A Journal of Civilization. The year 1859. For sale in New Orleans by T. L. White, 105 Canal street.

Harper's Weekly is a delightful and valuable paper, and this is a most elegantly bound volume. Every body ought to have these bound volumes. The history of the time is in them. Our children never get done turning its leaves, reading over and over its sketches, and feasting their eyes with its pictures.

The Western Home Press.—This the title of a new literary weekly, published in Cincinnati, the first and second numbers of which we have received. It is of large size, and the typography and press work are very handsome, indeed. In the way of stories, miscellany and news, it is well filled. There is a paucity in the other departments essential to a thorough literary paper.

The Foreign Slave Trade.—Can it be Revived without violating the most sacred principles of Honor, Humanity and Religion? By Rev. J. Leighton Wilson, D.D. From the Presbyterian Review, July, 1859.

This has been sent us by Rev. R. A. DeLancey' from the Bible House, 163 Camp-street, New Orleans. The writer is earnest in his argument, and fervent in his deprecation, on the negative side of the above question.

HISTORY OF MISSISSIPPI PROTESTANTISM.

Rev. John G. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, whose sketches of the Introduction of Protestantism into Mississippi, published last year, were received with such favor, has determined, we are glad to inform our readers, to continue them. We now have on hand several of the new numbers. But, as there is a general desire to have the numbers complete from the beginning, by many who either did not preserve them, or who did not take the paper, we shall publish the whole of them, commencing a week or two hence. We give this notice, that all who wish to read this interesting history may subscribe in time.

The novel of waverly, or Sixty Years Ago, when it first burst upon the literary world, did not show greater social and political contrasts in the two periods of the designated era than the United States census of 1860 will present in comparison with the first enumeration of 1790. Our population has increased from three to thirty millions; cities, Territories and States have arisen; steam has been brought practically into use, railroads have girt the land, and magnetic telegraph encircles it in a net work of subtle intelligence. The United States is now the fourth of the civilized nations of the earth in point of population, and has outgrown its mother, Great Britain. Russia, France and Austria, which have respectively seventy, thirty-six and thirty-five millions of people, are our only numerical superiors, while all of them are tributaries to our mechanical skill and owe a large portion of their present greatness to the American adaptation of steam and electro-magnetism to the purposes of civilization. The persons are yet living who have in their generations seen our population increase tenfold.

New York Literary Correspondence.—We have been fortunate enough to secure, what we have long desired, a first-rate New York literary correspondent. Our readers will find the first instalment of the good things promised on our first page. The letters will speak for themselves. We imagine but few men in the United States are better qualified to write literary letters than our correspondent. His letters will appear every other week.

Huntsville Female College.—It will be seen, says the Huntsville Advocate, that the Rev. J. G. Wilson assumes the chief control of this flourishing Institution, aided by the present Faculty. Mr. W. is a minister of the Methodist Church, of estimable character, scholastic attainments, and much experience as a Teacher of youth. Under his auspices the College, we trust, will increase in popularity, patronage and usefulness.

Bishop Soule.—This Venerable servant of the Church is in comfortable health. During the early part of the winter he suffered much from chills and frequent attacks of asthma. Recently he has greatly improved.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON CITY.

The Sarcophagus of Alexander Severus, designed for General Jackson,

Is still kept in the basement story of the Patent Office. It is a real antique, standing there as a monument of past ages, enclosed in a glass case where all were permitted to see this relic of Roman glory, so honorably rejected by Gen. Jackson, as his own repository. His historical association threw around it a lively interest to attract the attention of all lovers of antiquity independent of its object. The bas reliefs upon the marble Sarcophagus, have been injured by time, but still are visible—bearing a strong resemblance to those we have seen standing in the Vatican at Rome. I send you the copies of the two letters. They may be new to some of your readers. That noble one of Gen. Jackson's rejecting the high honor thus conferred in the presentation, is worthy of all praise, and characteristic of his patriotic and independent American spirit. A name not to be blended with an Emperor of proud Emperial Rome.

This Sarcophagus was the Repository of the Remains of the Roman Emperor, Alexander Severus, procured at Beyroot, in Syria, by Commodore Jesse D. Elliott, who brought it to the United States in the year 1839, on board the Frigate Constitution, and presented it to the National Institute, as a resting-place for the remains of General Jackson. This Commodore at the same time presented the accompanying Marble Slab, a portion of the temple erected by Miltiades on the plains of Marathon, after his famous victory over the Persians, in the year 490 B. C., where it was procured by the Commodore in person.

Commodore Elliot's Letter of Presentation.

Navy Yard, Philadelphia, April 8, 1845.

Gentlemen: The interest which the National Institute has been pleased to take in the eventual bestowment of the remains of the Honorable Andrew Jackson, in the Sarcophagus which I brought from abroad and deposited in your Institute, makes it my business now to communicate to you a copy of his letter of the 27th ultimo, lately received on that subject, with sentiments so congenial to his strict republicanism, and in accordance, indeed, with the republican feelings common to ourselves, he takes the ground of repugnance to connecting his name and fame in any way with imperial associations. We cannot but honor the sentiments which have ruled his judgment in the case, for they are such as must add to the lustre of his character. We subscribe to them ourselves; and while we yield to their force, we may still be permitted to continue our regard to the enduring marble, as to an ancient and classic relic, a curiosity in itself, and, particularly in this country as the first of its kind seen in our western hemisphere. From it we would deduce the moral, that while we would disclaim the pride, pomp, and circumstances of imperial pageantry, as uniting our institutions and professions, we would sedulously cherish the simple republican principles of rejoicing our fame and honors in the hearts and affections of our countrymen. I have now, in conclusion, to say that as the Sarcophagus was originally presented with the suggestion of using it as above mentioned, I now commit it wholly to the Institute as their own and sole property, exempt from any condition. I am, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

Jesse Duncan Elliot.

To the President and Directors of the National Institute at Washington.

General Jackson's Reply to the offer made him of the Sarcophagus for his burial place.

Hermitage, March 27th, 1845.

Dear Sir: Your letter of the 18th instant, together with the copy of the proceedings of the National Institute, furnished me by their corresponding secretary, on the presentation by you of the Sarcophagus for their acceptance, on condition it shall be preserved, and in honor of my memory, have been received and are now before me. Although laboring under great debility and affliction from a severe attack from which I may not recover, I raise my pen and endeavor to reply. The steadiness of my nerves may perhaps lead you to conclude my prostration of strength is not so great as here expressed. Strange as it may appear, my nerves are as steady as they were forty years gone by, whilst from debility and affliction I am gasping for breath. I have read the whole proceedings of the presentation by you of the Sarcophagus, and the resolutions passed by the Board of Directors, so honorable to my name, with sensations and feelings more easily to be conjectured than by me expressed. The whole proceedings call for my most grateful thanks, which are hereby tendered to you, and through you to the President of the National Institute. But with the warmest sensations that can inspire a grateful heart, I must decline accepting the honor intended to be bestowed. I cannot consent that my mortal body shall be laid in a repository prepared for an Emperor or a King, my republican feelings and principles forbid it—the simplicity of our system of government forbids it. Every monument erected to perpetuate the memory of our heroes and statesmen ought to bear evidence of the economy and simplicity of our republican institutions and the plainness of our republican citizens, who are the sovereigns of our glorious Union, and whose virtue is to perpetuate it. True virtue cannot exist where pomp and parade are the governing passions. It can only dwell with the people, the great laboring and producing classes, that form the bone and sinew of our confederacy. For these reasons I cannot accept the honor you and the President and Directors of the National Institute intended to bestow. I cannot permit my remains to be the first in these United States to be deposited in a Sarcophagus made for an Emperor or King. I again repeat, please accept for yourself, and convey to the President and Directors of the National Institute, my profound respects for the honor you and they intended to bestow.

I have prepared an humble depository for my mortal body beside that wherein lies my beloved wife, where, without any pomp or parade, I have requested, when my God calls me to sleep with my fathers, to be laid, for both of us there to remain until the last trumpet sounds to call the dead to judgment, when we, I hope, shall rise together, clothed with that heavenly body promised to all who believe in our glorious Redeemer, who died for us, that we might live, and by whose atonement I hope for a blessed immortality. I am, with great respect, your friend and fellow citizen, Andrew Jackson.

To Hon. J. D. Elliot, United States Navy.

Lorenzo Dow's Grave.

It may be interesting to some of your readers to know of the repository of that remarkable, eccentric man Lorenzo Dow.

In the Western Cemetery of the City, embowered among the shades of dark evergreen, a large, flat grey stone slab is seen bearing this inscription,

LORENZO DOW,
who was born in Coventry,
Connecticut,
Oct. 16th, 1777, died Feb. 2d,
1835. A. E. '56.
"A christian is the highest style of man.
He is "A slave to no sect, takes no priv-le-ro-d;
But looks through nature,
up to nature's God."

We visited his tomb in a morning when a snowy sleet had spread its white mantle over the earth, and covered his monument with its emblem of purity. A friend kindly removed its icy mantle that we might read the above inscription. The scenery around us was magnificent! The tall cedars bowed their graceful heads as if in the deepest sorrow, with their crystal tears frozen in pearly drops hanging pendent from their leafy boughs. The pines seemed stricken, and stood motionless upon earth, with every leaflet eased in crystal, bent beneath its weight. Paralyzed by its transparent covering, it stood as a monument of beauty, like coral in the ocean's bed.

It was a glorious sight? Not a leafless twig, but what was adorned with a star-gemmed crown. Every shrub was encircled with a diadem of beauty, to reflect the rays of light sparkling from its crown. Beneath our feet was a tracery work of ice, more delicate than the finest mosaic, or the chiselling of the most accomplished artist in the purest of marble.

"From every leafless limb,
The feathery snow made up of crystal stars,
Beat down like rich white plumes with its own weight
Or beauty, or else in jewel drops and Brilliant pearls hung from the laden trees there
Sparkling, with every ray of light, like Costly diadems on the robe of Kings."

We thought of the jeweled crown of Lorenzo Dow, now

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

FEBRUARY 1, 1860.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

ADVERTISING IN THE ADVOCATE.

The business public are slowly learning that the Advocate is THE GREAT ADVERTISING PAPER OF THE SOUTH AND WEST. Advertisements in it are more valuable than in any half dozen other papers.

1.—It has the largest circulation west of Charleston, and South of Cincinnati; larger than any other two weeklies in New Orleans, and is increasing rapidly—will, in a few years, double its present circulation.

2.—Of medium size, and not crowded with advertisements, an advertisement is not lost in it, but can be easily found.

3.—In our "Editorial Notices," which we give to every advertisement, we specify the page and column on which an advertisement may be found. We seek to make every advertisement valuable to the advertiser and to the paper.

G. SPENCER MAYO Esq, of Harrisonburg, La., a graduate of Centenary College of Louisiana, has his law card in the fifth column of this page, to which we wish to call the attention of our readers.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.—On this page, in the sixth column will be found the advertisement. It is said to be invaluable for mending, at home, and without the expense of a workman, all sorts of broken things.

TOOTH-ACHE AND SORE EYES.—It is said that the Clova Anodyne Tooth-Ache Drops will cure the former, and that the Roman Eye Balsam will cure the latter. You might try them. See the advertisement, third page, sixth column.

BUNYAN TABLEAUX.—This interesting exhibition, to be witnessed every night at the Odd Fellows' Hall, will prove highly pleasant and profitable to our friends from the country, while visiting the city.

BIBLE PANORAMA.—Instead of going to the theatres, or to the opera, go to Masonic Hall, and see the Bible Panorama, on exhibition every night.

SEWING MACHINES.—E. L. Nimmo has an advertisement in sixth column of this page. Read it. Give him a call.

SCHOOLS wishing a lady teacher will find an advertisement in sixth column of this page.

DOLBEAR'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE has an advertisement in sixth column of this page, to which we call attention.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU is advertised in sixth column of this page. Read it.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

E. J. Hamill, Treasurer, in account with the Alabama Conference Missionary Society, 1859.

DR.

FROM STATIONS.
Mobile—City of Mobile, including the several charges,
Paid Germee mission on the work,	$ 117 50
" " " by sundry persons	385 95
Paid Dr. E. W. Schoe	207 15
For Indian missions,	10 00
For general missions,	2626 86	$3347 46
Miss Mary M'Cosceil subscribed at the Mobile anniversary $10, which is credited to the New Lexington ct.
Columbus—By E. Baldwin.
Sabbath-school mission society, for support of Columbus colored mission	743 15
From colored congregation for the same	125 00
For foreign missions,	1258 00	2126 15
Of which $ 768 15 was retained for the above mission.
Montgomery—By A. H. Mitchel.
Paid Dr. E. W. Schoe,	255 10
Paid into treasury	749 30	1005 00
$10 of the above from Mrs. P. Gilmer for China mission.
Summerfield—By Wm. Murrah.
From congregation,	676 76
Of which J. T. Montgomery and wife gave $100, to be applied to China mission, in charge of Bro. Allae, Georgia conference.
From Sabbath-school for col. missions,	205 00
Of which $55 was paid to local missions.
Sabbath-school infant class No. 1	14 00
" " " " 2	20 00
To make P. A. Pitts, Esq., a life memb.
From colored congregation,	11 60	927 25
Of the above, from white congregation, $3 for China miss. by Bro. Milsoe, $20 by Mrs. M. S. Murrah to make her first-born son a life member of parent society; and $20 by Rev. D C B Conerly and wife to make their son, J C Conerly, a L. M.
Auburn—By W. E. M. Llefield.
From Sabbath-school to aid Mrs. Lamhuth in China mission,	42 70
From congregation,	565 20	607 90
Making Mary A., Cornelia Z., and Wesley N. Williams, and Mrs. A. Hardie, Miss Mary Halliday, Mrs. S. G. Llufield, Mrs. Catherine Chalfield, J. B. and Mrs. J. B. Ogeltree, Mrs. Lucy Hill, Mrs. A. M. Kimbrough, Mrs. Miltee Yancey, Mrs W. P. Davis, and James Carlton, life members.
Tuskegee—By John Matthews		507 55
Macon—By J. A. Heard, for Cent. Am. miss		525 25
Greenville—By Wm. A. M'Carty.
Paid Greenville mission,	475 40
Paid into the treasury,	25 00	500 40
Tuscaloosa—By J. B. Cottrell.
Paid Prairie Creek colored mission	230 00
Paid select mission,	20 00
Paid into the treasury,	240 00	490 00
Marion—By T. W. Dormae.
From Sabbath-school missionary society,	172 50
From congregation	202 50	375 00
Eufaula—By Wm. M. Motley		350 95
$9 35 of this from the blacks.
Pensacola mission station, paid on the work to Wm. K. Norton		205 35
Greensboro', by Wm. Shapard		291 00
Livingston, by T. C. Wier		226 00
$15 of this from the blacks.
Union Springs, by Wm. H. Ellison.
Paid to Chunnenuggee mission	155 00
Paid into the treasury	54 00	209 00
Union Town, by Josiah Baecroft		200 00
Eutaw and Clinton, by W. C. Harris,		170 00
Newbern and Oak Grove, by H. A. M. Henderson		170 00
Pickensville and Carrolton, by T. S. Abernathy, jun.,		151 05
Selma, by G. W. Brown,		143 65
Making Mrs. Mary Jane Lee, Mrs. L. J. Hooker, and Miss M. G. Goodwin, life members.
Parkland and Watson's Chapel, by Daniel Duncan		140 00
Wetumpka, by R. M. Saunders		131 50
$18 of it from the blacks.
Trielly and Roligee colored mission, by E. Phillips.
Paid on the work,	70 00
Paid into the treasury	57 75	127 75
Marianna, by Robert S. Woodward		120 00
Autaugaville, by T. F. Green		112 50
Clayton and Louisville, by L. P. Golson		110 00
Enterprize, by A. M'Bryde,		102 00
Prattville, by J. D. Fisher,		100 00
Dayton, by G. F. Ellis,		82 45
Demopolis, by J. W. Harmon		80 00
Cahawba, by J. L. Cotton,		78 75
Gainesville and Warsaw, by H. S. Williams,		62 00
Talladege, by T. P. Crymes		55 00
Columbiana, by F. T. J. Brandon,		50 75
Navy Yard, by Wm. P. Miller		50 00
Lowndesboro and Hayneville, by T. M. Lynch		50 00
Camden, by T. W. Lane		50 00
Jacksonville, by Neal Gillis		48 50
$5 50 of it for home mission.
Woodville and Columbia, by J. M. Campbell		32 00
Montevallo, by F. T. J. Brandon		20 00
Hamburg, by E. V. LeVert,		19 00
Troy and Orion, by A. S. Dickenson		15 00
Milton, by D. R. Thompson		11 00
Total from Stations		14325 16

FROM CIRCUITS.
Spring Hill, by L. M. Wilson,
Paid Ash Creek mission,	10 00
Raised on and paid in Arcola mission.	600 00
Paid into the treasury	791 00	1401 00
Taskegee, by F. G. Ferguson.
Raised on and paid to Chilobee mission,	300 00
Paid into the treasury	705 00	1005 00
Enon, by William H. Neal.
Paid Chunnenuggee colored mission,	135 00
Paid into treasury (Mrs. Carolina J. Cochrane a life member)	828 50	963 50
The above three circuits are worthy of the highest praise.
Orrville, by Wm. P. Harrison.
Raised on and paid to South Cane Brake mission, served by J.C. Huckabee, but credited to this circuit.		601 35
Cooksville and colored mission, by C Strider
Paid on the work	559 75
Paid into the treasury	17 75	577 50
Chunnenuggee, by T. L. Dendler.
Paid Chunnenuggee colored mission	119 00
Paid into treasury	449 80	568 80
Belmont, by S. H. Cox.
Besides $20 paid in at the Mobile anniversary—Miss Hettie Pharies and Fanny Hettie and Maria Louisa Markham, life members		537 65
Dekalb, by Wm. A. Montgomery		655 00
Making Rev. L. Massingale, Wm. Calloway, B. Holmes, Mrs. M. Spence, Mrs. Elizabeth Ramsay, Mrs. H. K. Honston, Mrs. K. Finley, Mrs. B. Butchee, Mrs. K. Guthrie, Mrs. Frances Cole, Richard Cole, and James R. G. Mellard, life members
Macon, by Wm. C. Hearn, for Cl. Am. miss.		532 50
Revs. A. R. Howell and wife, Wm. C. Hearn and wife, Major J. Koger, Walter M. Koger, Rev. J. A. Peebles, Ruth Elder, and M A Dixon, life members.
Prarie Hill, by Jas. A. Peebles		624 60
Butler, by T. J. Rutledge		385 00
Columbus, by J. N. Glover.
Paid Yorkville mission	22 00
For China missloe	120 00
For Home mission	50 00
By Rev. W. B. Owees, $20: for Ind. miss	5 00
Paid into treasury	188 75	405 75
Rembert's Hills, by J. W. Shores		380 00
$40 of which for China mission.
Pickens, by A. J. Coleman		325 15
New Prospect, by R. K. Hargrove,		304 15
Mrs. Harriet Brown, Jas. A. Brown, S. Cowin, Kate Hargrove and Emily, a serv't of B Travis, life members
Oak Bowery, by T. H. Whitby		303 00
Villula, by S. F. Pilley.
Paid on Villula colored mission	71 45
Paid to Glenville mission	30 00
Paid to Crowell colored mission	80 00
For Foreign mission	38 25
For Domestic mission	56 70
From the blacks	5 55	281 95
Caledonia, by James M. Gann.
Paid to Yorkville colored missloe	40 00
Paid into the treasury	240 00	280 00
James M. Gann, David Rush, and W. Vaughan, life members.
Gaston, by G. Hawkins		272 00
Clarke, by J. T. Heard, makes the following life members: Misses Mary A. Heard, Carrie G. Heard, Nanelo C. Heard, Martha L. Heard, Lizzie Heard		212 00
Monroeville, by J. H. Ewing.
Paid to Claiborne colored missloe	185 00
Paid into treasury	20 00	205 00
Mount Zion, by W. H Riley, an excellent col'n		185 00
Socapatoy, by L. R. Bell		180 00
St. Stephens, by J. F. R. Brandon		169 00
$10 of it for Japan and Central Amer. mission. Mrs. Catherine Rush, Mrs. Glovina Rush, Oscar Summers Rush, Garrett C. Rush, Miss Stella A. Rush, life members.—Balance for China mission.
Moscow, by U. L. Thompson		162 00
A commendable improvement. Mrs. Margaret Price a life member.
Lafayette, by John P. Dickinson		160 15
Russell, by R. R. Dickinson		156 00
Scooba, by J. B. Stone		150 10
Greene, by S. M. Adams		147 30
Meshulaville, by J. M. Hood		144 15
Sumterville, by H. D. Clayle		123 00
Montgomery, by L. F. Dowdell		125 00
Jones' Valley, by Francis Walker		121 00
$4 of which to China mission.
Black's Bend, by Anson West		120 80
David Nettles a life member.
Athens, by Wm. Vaughan		115 75
New Lexington, by J. H. Freeman.
Paid Presiding Elder,	10 00
Subscribed at Mobile Anniversary	10 00
Paid into treasury	90 00	110 00
Unloe, by J. F. Dickleson.		108 00
$15 of it for Home missions.
Scottsville, by G. J. Mason		106 80
Blountsville, by N. M. Self		104 00
Bladen, by W. W. Thomas		102 50
Suggsville, by D. M. Hudson		100 20
Autaega, by G. R. Talley		100 00
Lower Peach Tree, by R. Y. Rew		100 00
Argus, by J. W. Solomon		95 75
Jasper, by J. C. Brogan		95 00
Talladega, by J. N. Dupree		95 00
J. E. Groce, jr., and Miss Mattie Camp, life members.
Dadeville, by J. C. Strickille.
Paid Dadeville mission		93 75
Murphee's Valley, by J. J. Pickett		93 —
Laederdale, by J. E. Newman		90 —
Ashville, by R. Nicholson		82 —
Mrs. S. C. Nicholson and Miss Ann F. Gaddy, life members.
Fayetteville and Marble Valley mission, by M. C. Turrentine		80 —
Mrs. Mary M. Wilson and Miss Julie Bell Hizer, life members.
Abbeville, by H. J. Sampler		77 —
White Plains, by J. M. Towles		75 —
C. D. Lassiter, Rev. J. M. Towles and Mrs. E. G. Towles, life members.
Cedar Creek, by T. Moody		74 75
Holly Wood and Fish River, by J. P. Jones,		73 —
Centreville, by N. B Cooper		72 —
Brush Creek, by D H Smith per Dr Dorman		05 —
Choctaw Corner, by Wm. H. Carter		65 —
Crawford, by J. A. Clement		03 —
Perryville, by W. H. M'Daniel		58 45
Harpersville, by J. H. Powers		56 —
Tallassee, by J. W. Glenn,		53 25
Gadsden, by C. L. Dobbs		53 —
Rev. J. P. Balls a life member.
Greenwood, by D. T. Mellard,		52 00
Jacksonville, by H. M. Seales		51 00
Pascagoula, by Wm. A. Sampey,		50 —
Campbellton, by Wm. H. Adams		50 —
Grove Hill, by M. M. Graham		50 —
Centre, by James A. Neely		45 —
Mt. Pleasant, by J. W. Holston		45 —
Clayton, by I. I. Tatum		40 —
Pleasant Hill, by J. A. Spence		32 —
Sylvan Grove, by W. R. Dennis		31 70
Geneva, by R. D. Carver		27 70
Lebanon, by E. Nicholson		25 —
Greenville, by J. W. Higldower		23 —
Hillabee, by Wm. R. Towles		21 —
Sepulga, by H. J. Hunter		20 —
Roanoke, by J. W. Talley		19 20
Lauderdale Springs, by George Rancroft		12 15
Ocean Springs, by J. T. Heard,		11 —
Tallapoosa, by W. D. Matthews		10 —
Haw Ridge, by J. J. Lathram		10 —
Elba, by W. C. Robinson		8 20
Cedar Bluff, by Urlah Williams,		5 15
Total from Circuits		15,647 30

FROM MISSIONS.	Pd. on work.	Pd. Tr'y
Big Swamp colored mission, by A. Skinner,	$731 55	$10 00
South Cane Brake mission, by J. C. Huckabee, reported 691 35 which is credited to Orrville circuit.
Unlontown colored mission, by J. W. McCann,	600 00
Arcola colored mission, reported by Spring Hill circuit,
Vilula colored mission, reported by J. W. Jordan,	606 00
Montgomery " " " by C. N. McLeod,	500 00
Dayton " " " T S Abernathy, sr.	480 00
German Creek " " " J J Hutchinson,	450 00
Prairie Bluff " " " James Beverly,	420 00
Catoma " " " J W Brown,	330 00
Cahaba " " " C Garrett,	310 00
Little Zion colonia by A McBryde and J H Baldwin,	308 00
Pleasant Hill " " " J L Sampey,	267 50
Plum Creek " " " E Calloway,	250 00	14 00
Ash Creek " " " P R McCrary,	246 50
Prairie Creek " " " H Urquhart,	240 00
Prairie Hill " " " J W F Toland,	235 00
Escambia mission, by Wm P Miller,	225 00
Eutaw colored mission, by J M Patton,	200 00
Greensboro " " by J J Hutchinson,	200 00
Uchee " " by M E Butt,	185 75
Newton mission by W P H Conerly	170 55
Peroto colored mission by G W Barker,	151 65
Harbour " " by J L Oliver,	136 90
$6 of it from blacks.
Coosa mission, by E Hearn,	135 00
Shelby coal mine mission, by J T Talley,	121 80
Pikeville mission, by S Richmond,	102 60
Glennville colored mission, by F H Wardlaw,	100 00
Arbacoochie mission, by C S D Lasseter,	95 00
Cross Plains mission, by T Spann	93 60
Plymouth colored mission, by E Williams,	90 00
Yellow River mission, by W P Miller,	88 00
Winston mission, by Peter J Walker,	81 00
Warrior " by W I Powers,	80 00
Walton " by Wm P Miller,	60 70	3 35
Otho " by L Patterson,	50 00
Manvilla " by Saml Briggs,	21 85	20 70
St. Andrew's Bay, by C F Brittain,		35 00
Barryton colored mission, by Josiah Barker,	28 25
Yorkville " " by W R Owing, from blacks,	15 85
Dadeville " " by B F Blow,	15 35
Cahaba River mission, by John Foust,	10 00
	$8330 45	$80 05
		$8330 45
Total from Missions,		$8419 50

FROM OTHER SOURCES.
Balance in Treasury from last year	$374 00
Note extended by managers of missionary society	64 00
From W B Gilmer for Central American missloe,	20 00
Returned by T Y Ramsey,	5 00
" by O R Blue,	100 00
" by E Hearn	100 00
" by J J Hutchinson,	50 00
" by Josiah Barker,	100 00
" by J T Heard	100 00
From Cotton Valley, Tuskegee circuit, for last year	11 50
Donation of C N McLeod for Central American mission, to make J R McLeod L. M.,	20 00
From Wm M Shockley, wife and son to make Mrs. L J Shockley L. M.,	25 00
Wm K Norton's annual donation,	20 00
Donation of Wm R Neal	10 00
" of Lewis F Dowdell	25 00
" of J H Miller to make Edwin Fryer Miller L. M.	20 00
" of T O Slimmer's L. M. Juvenile M. S.,	10 00
" of Dr Ellison to make Regina C Ellison L. M.,	10 00
" of Dr J M Jennings, L. M. Juvenile M. S.,	10 00
" of W H Dennis,	5 00
Cash	4 00
Missionary box of Master Thos De Loach	2 15
Avails of a breast-pin from Livingston,	2 65
Anniversary collection of Conference missionary society,	158 32
Total from other sources	$1247 62
" from Stations, Circuit and Missions,	$38391 96
Making a grand total of	$39639 58

CR.

By amount remitted to J C Keener, Assistant Treasurer, per Mr Oliver and J Hamilton	$18342 50
Premium on the same,	64 63
Remitted to H Litton, Treasurer, by R Abbey,	83 00
" " " by Express, June 25th,	110 00
Paid Bishop Paine's drafts in favor of Presiding Elders,	2100 00
Paid Bishop Kavanaugh's drafts in favor of Presiding Elders,	3918 75
Paid in notes to the Presiding Elders, to be credited on Bishop Kavanaugh's second drafts,	60 50
Paid Dr E W Schon in Mobile and Montgomery,	462 15
Paid Dr T W Dorman for printing minutes	150 00
By note in Treasury on R H Powell,	25 00
" " " extended by order of managers	64 00
Amount paid by New Lexington Ct. to Presiding Elder	10 00
Freight on missionary certificates,	2 00
Amount paid missionaries on the work	13848 10
Bill on broken bank,	2 00
Balance in the Treasury,	96 95
	$39639 58

DOMESTIC.

Proceedings of Congress.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The House to-day continued the rambling discussion of Mr. Clark's resolution and the position of parties and individuals on the slavery question, but without making any developments of interest.

No ballot for Speaker was attempted.

In the Senate nothing of importance transpired.

United States Patent Office.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Mr. Bishop, the newly appointed Commissioner of Patents, has resigned, and Mr. Leghan, of Connecticut, has been named as his successor.

The committee on patents, in the Senate, has in course of preparation, a bill which will make radical and most important changes in the laws governing the issue, duration and validity of patents.

Southern Pacific Railroad.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Powerful influences are being brought to bear upon Congress, and it is believed with some prospect of success, to make provisions for the construction of a railroad from El Paso to some point on the Pacific. This, with the connections on this side now in progress, would make the communication perfect with all parts of the Union, and the enterprise is looked upon by members of all parties with considerable favor.

New Bank in Mobile.

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 24.—A bill passed the House of Representatives last Saturday, by a large majority, providing for the charter of a bank in Mobile. A proviso is attached to the bill requiring the stockholders to take as amount of stock in the Great Central Railroad, running from Montgomery to Decatur, in Alabama. The bill will probably pass the Senate.

Later from Mexico.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—The steamer Baltic brings advices from the west coast of Mexico, via Aspinwall, to the effect that Miramon had obtained an important and complete victory over the Liberal troops at Colima, having captured the place and sent from thence an expedition against Mazatlan, which he confidently expected to recapture.

Later from Nicaragua.

The steamer Baltic also brought later advices from Nicaragua. The report is fully confirmed that the Belly Canal Project had been repudiated by the government of Nicaragua, owing to the failure of Mr. Belly to pay what is already due the Government.

Legislative Banquet.

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 24.—The members of the Tennessee and Kentucky Legislatures arrived in this city to-day. An invitation had been tendered to them by the Mayor and Common Council of Louisville to accept the hospitality of the city. The invitation was accepted, and they are this evening partaking of a splendid banquet at Masonic Hall. They proceed to Cincinnati to-morrow, where the hospitalities of the city await them previous to their departure for Columbus to visit the Ohio Legislature.

Admission of Kansas.

Messrs. Pomeroy and Aray are at present in this city, and are busily engaged in co-operating with Mr. Parrot for the purpose of effecting as soon as possible, a speedy admission of Kansas, as a State in the Union, under the Wyandotte Constitution.

Peruvian Affairs.

The vessels Lizzie Thompson and Georgiana, seized by the order of the Government at Peru, are still held by the Government, and that it refuses to give them up. The principal reason the Government had for refusing to make the restoration is because they were illegally engaged in the guano trade. The Peruvians suppose that Mr. Clay, the American minister at Peru, is personally interested in the claim. Mr. Zegarra, the Peruvian Minister, is lying dangerously ill in this city.

Later from California.

The Baltic brings $1,750,000 in treasure and a large number of passengers. The Legislature of California met on the 3d, and Philip Moore was elected Speaker of the House of Representatives. On the 5th inst. the Legislature was to meet in joint session for the purpose of electing a United States Senator to fill the term of Senator Broderick. The chances were in favor of Senator Weller being elected.

Pike's Peak Express Company.

LEAVENWORTH CITY, Jan. 23.—The Leavenworth and Pike's Peak Express Company have decided to run a pony express between Leavenworth City and Sacramento, the time to be made in ten days. The Utah mail service has been altered. The mails are to be carried regularly once a week.

Important from Washington—Conference of Black Republicans—Sherman Proposes to Withdraw.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The correspondent of the New York Tribune telegraphs to that paper that Sherman has called a conference of the Black Republican members of the House, to meet at noon to-day, for the purpose of selecting a new candidate for Speaker. Sherman proposes to withdraw if another candidate can be selected with a better prospect of being elected. The Tribune's correspondent thinks that Pennington will be nominated in the place of Sherman; and that Smith will be dropped by the Democrats, and that the American members will be allowed to select a candidate from the Democratic party upon whom all will unite. The correspondent of the New York Times says that the chances are now decidedly in favor of Corwin's being nominated, and it so, that he will be elected on Monday next.

The Black Republican Conference.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The Black Republican Conference on Saturday, is represented to have been a very stormy meeting. The disagreement was upon the choice of a candidate in place of Mr. Sherman; and the final agreement upon Mr. Pennington was a very informal one. It was thought the Republicans would generally unite upon him. There was a great deal of canvassing, yesterday, among the Republicans, as also among conservative members of Congress, but nothing definite has been arrived at by either party as to their future course.

No Speaker yet.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—In the Senate to-day, nothing important transpired. The House met to-day under considerable excitement, owing to the fact becoming generally known that the Black Republicans had determined to concentrate their votes on Mr. Pennington, of New Jersey. The Democrats and South Americans, after an active canvass, determined to sustain Mr. Smith, of North Carolina, as their candidate for Speaker. Under the belief that a Speaker would be elected to-day, the galleries of the House were densely crowded with spectators at an early hour, and many ladies and their attendants took places upon the floor of the House, depriving members of their seats. A motion having been made to exclude the ladies and other unprivileged persons entirely from the floor of the House, a discussion arose, which occupied the greater portion of the day. The floor was finally cleared of spectators and the House proceeded to the Fortieth ballot, which resulted in the largest vote of the session, although the Republican candidate, Mr. Pennington, came no nearer being elected than Sherman during his contest for the Speakership, their vote still falling three short of an election. The fortieth ballot resulted as follows: The whole number of votes cast was 234. Necessary to a choice, 118. Pennington, of New Jersey, received 115; Smith, of North Carolina, 113; scattering, 6. The announcement of the ballot created great excitement in the galleries as well as on the floor. Smith gained one upon his previous vote, and the vote for Pennington was larger than that of any previous ballot. After order had been restored two more ballots were taken without effecting an election, the vote being nearly the same as that of the fortieth ballot. There being no prospect of an election, the House adjourned.

Annexation to Kansas.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The New York Tribune's Washington correspondent states on what it considers good authority, that a plan has been agreed upon among the Democratic members of the Senate to extend the western limits of Kansas to the summit of the Rocky Mountains, and to extend the northern line to the Platte River, the object of which is to make the State Democratic. This measure is to be introduced by an amendment to the House bill for the admission of Kansas as a State. If the House refuses to concur in the amendment, the Senate will vote to exclude Kansas from the Union until the next session of Congress.

Courier Express.

NEW YORK, Jan. 29.—A courier express is about to be established between the two termini of the San Francisco telegraph line by Messrs. Russell & Majors. They will contract to make the run between the two points in ten days.

Assisting Slaves to Escape.

CHARLESTON, Jan. 30.—Francis Michael, a porter of the steamship Marion, has been convicted of giving aid to a slave in attempting to escape by that steamer to New York, and sentenced to be hung.

The Speakership.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—It is now generally conceded that Mr. William Pennington, Republican, of New Jersey, will be elected to the Speakership to-morrow, by the votes in his favor, of George Briggs, of New York, Republican, and Jetur R. Riggs, anti-Lecompton Democrat.

The Paraguay Treaty.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—Don Jose Gergen arrived in this city to-day. He comes for the purpose of exchanging ratifications of the treaty recently concluded between the United States and Paraguay, known as the Bowlin treaty. He also wishes to arbitrate upon the question of indemnity to the United States and Paraguay Navigation Company.

FOREIGN.

Apprehended War in Italy.

The retirement of Count Walewskie from the French Cabinet, the probable failure of the Europe Congress and the unsettled and threatening state of affairs in Italy were the topics that chiefly occupied public attention in England as well as on the Continent. The appointment of Marshal MacMahon to the command of the French army of occupation in Italy (50,000 men) was regarded in diplomatic circles as a sign of warlike complications, and considerable apprehensions was felt lest the determined policy of the Pope, supported by Austria, in insisting upon the restoration of the Romagna, should lead to a renewal of hostilities in Italy.

The Spanish Morocco War.

Advices received at Madrid from Morocco state that a portion of the Spanish army had advanced some distance towards Tetuan without meeting any resistance from the Moors. Gen. Zabala had entirely recovered from his recent severe illness, and had resumed his command in the Spanish army.

On the 5th instant, 3000 cavalry and an equal number of infantry of the Moorish army, attacked the Spanish at Valley Negro, but after a short and spirited battle the Spaniards defeated them with but small loss. The Moorish troops retreated in disorder. Latest accounts the whole Spanish army was encamped at some distance north of Negro Valley, having crossed the mountain passes without meeting any opposition. The Spanish army in Africa is to be considerably augmented.

Alarm of the Pope.

The retirement of Count Walewski from the French Cabinet in the present state of political affairs in the Continent, and the generally received opinion that the pamphlet entitled "The Pope and the Congress" foreshadows the policy which is to be pursued by the French Emperor, has caused his holiness the Pope much alarm, and he had assembled the Sacred College to consult upon the policy to be pursued at the present crisis. The Pope, in his address to the Sacred College, declared that he "would suffer exile and martyrdom rather than fail in the sacred mission entrusted to him by God."

Austrian Troops in Italy.

The French government has declared its intention to support Sardinia in protesting against the enlistment of Austrian troops into the Papal army or of any other foreign troops. The French government also protests against the introduction of Austrian troops into Ancona.

Probable Resumption of Hostilities.

The Genoa correspondent of the London Times represents that the possibility of the renewal of hostilities in Italy is a topic of daily discussion. It is generally believed at Genoa and Turin that the Papal troops will soon enter the Legations, and that they will be largely reinforced by Austrian troops.

In the event of such a movement on the part of the Pope and Austria, the Sardinian Government has determined to send an equal force to the assistance of the Romae Insurgents, and of the Provisional Government of Central Italy. The King of Naples was actively engaged in largely increasing the Neapolitan army, with a view, as was believed, of aiding the Pope in the forcible restoration of the Romagna.

Position of Austria.

Advices from Vienna announce that the Austrian government had sent instructions to its Minister, Prince Metternich, at Paris, to communicate to the French Cabinet the determination of Austria not to be represented at the European Congress, or to enter into any negotiations whatever except on the basis of the Villafranca agreement or that of the treaty of Zurich.

Trouble in Venetia.

Advices from Venice state that the theatres in that city had all been closed, in consequence of some political demonstrations which had been made by the audiences, showing their discontent with the unnatural government under which they were obliged to live.

The question of the policy and propriety of the sale of the Venetian kingdom by Austria, is being openly discussed by the people of Austria.

The French Press.

The Gazette de France has received a first warning from the government for publishing an article upon the Italian question, which was offensive to the Emperor.

The Paris Congress a Failure.

A telegram from Paris to the London Times states that from present indications the assembling of a European Congress was more doubtful than ever, and was growing more so daily. It was considered probable that the Italian question would be settled without the intervention of a Congress.

Annexation to Sardinia and France.

Advices from Turin give a translation from L'Opinione Nationale of that city, which expresses the opinion that if the Italian people decide in favor of the annexation of the northern and central portion of the peninsula to Piedmont, England would gladly acquiesce, and France would reagerly accept the combination, provided that Savoy and Nice be restored to France. L'Opinione Nationale thinks that the cabinet of Turin would not present any obstacles in the way of such an arrangement, and that neither Austria, Russia, or Prussia have the power, or right, to interfere in the matter. It also states, upon what appears to be good authority, that such a combination is being seriously entertained by the Cabinets of London and Paris.

The President's Message.

The London Daily News in an article reviewing President Buchanan's message to Congress, says that the English government and people have no reason to complain of the manner in which the President deals with the general relations at present subsisting between England and the United States.

The Dukes Abandoned.

Advices from Berlin give the translation of an article from the Prussian Ministerial organ, the New Prussian Gazette, in which it agrees up all hopes of the restoration of the Grand Dukes to their possessions in Italy, considering it impossible in the present state of public opinion in Italy and the position assumed by the Governments of France and England.

The Gazette considers that the annexation of the Duchies to Sardinia, under such circumstances, is the best thing that can be done.

Lord Cowley's Mission.

Lord Cowley, the British Embassador at the Court of Napoleon, had returned from his mission, to London, and represents that the retirement of Count Walewski from the French Cabinet has materially facilitated the relations between the English and French Cabinets.

Count Lulimanda has been appointed Charge d'Affairs ad interim, at Constantinople.

Important Telegraph Election.

SACKVILLE, Jan. 28.—The stockholders of the Nova Scotia Telegraph Company held a convention yesterday for the purpose of electing a Board of Directors and other officers for the ensuing year. The stockholders fully indicated the course pursued by the American Telegraph Company and the New York Associated Press, in insisting upon the rule universally adopted by telegraphic companies of "First come, first served."

The new Board of Directors and officers will sustain the above rule in the transmission of all despatches over their line so soon as the Company is free from the obligations entered into on behalf of the Company by the old board.

Exciting Italian News.

Advices state that the Pope had addressed another appeal for protection to the Catholic powers except Sardinia. Grave cburges were rife against Austria, to the effect that she was engaged in a disguised intervention in Italian affairs and direct contravention of the Villafranca and Zurich treaties. Le Nords, the Russian organ, stigmatizes the conduct of Austria as dishonorable, and as seriously endangering the continuance of peace. Active preparations are being made in France for the completion of the Suez canal, notwithstanding the protest of Turkish Government. A new pamphlet against the temporal power of the Pope has made it appearance in the Legations and in Tuscany. In some of the Papal provinces, serious revolutionary manifestations had been made; but no general outbreak had followed.

MARRIAGES.

"It is not good for man to be alone."

At Bolivar, Hollivar county, Miss., at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. Wm. H. Hines, Mr. ROWT. M. CURTIS to Miss VAN HANNALAH, Jan. 18, 1860.

On January 19, in East Baton Rouge parish, by Rev. J Nicholson, Mr. J. S. HENDRY to Miss Minerva M. Harris, all of East Baton Rouge parish.

On the 22d inst., in Yazoo City, by Rev. H. W. Lambuth, Mr. THOMAS M. LIGHTCAP, to Miss MINERVA E. NEALY, both of Yazoo county.

On the 1st inst. at the residence of R. H. Powell, by the Rev. Francis M. Featherstone, Rev. JACHA P. Bainon, of the Mississippi Conference, to Miss ANNA Ivan, all of Yazoo county, Miss.

At the residence of Gen. J. E. Hunt, the bride's father, in Toledo, Ohio, on Thursday the 12th day of January, by the Rev. Henry B. Walbridge, G. SPENCER MAYO, Esq., of Catahoula parish, to Miss VIRGINIA HUNT.

RECEIPTS, BY THE POST-OFFICE,

From January 17th to 30th, 1860.

A—W F Alexander, $5; M S Andrews, $4; A Adams, $2; J S Arbuthnot, $5; T S Abernathy, jr., $2; T S Abernathy, sr., $2; A C Allen, $4.

B—L W Buford, $2; A Bothuno, $2; S S Beldieg, $2; T W Brown, $5; J R Bowen, $2; T N Bryan, $5; L H Bell, $2.

C—J Chalmer, $2; W T Capers, $2 30; W M Curtis, $10; P Connell, $2.

D—C L Dobbs, $8.

E—L Ercanbrack, $5.

F—E A Flowers, $5; W F Fuqua, $2; Geo Frant & Co., $5; M Ford, $2.

G—S M Ullmer, $2 23.

H—J F Harrington, $5; T A Hopkins, $20; H H Howard, $2 (

FEBRUARY 1, 1860.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Poetry.

[illegible]

Tis the dusk of the night, and the city
Lies silent and dark as the tomb;
While the murmuring waters of Babel
Rise up through the mist and the gloom.

All is still, but a sound to be heard,
Not a light overhead or below;
Save the measure who pace to and fro.

[illegible]

We cannot see the school masters,
And they grasp their rods in the entrance
In the midst of the darkness about.

[illegible]

"To which we are soon to lead forth,
As he eyes the sharp point of his lance.

[illegible] on while ye may,
[illegible] you will not
[illegible]
The beauties that yield you their charms.

"For o'er them," as he walks, a wild sound
Like the [illegible] on the air of the night,
[illegible]
Will [illegible] the [illegible] of doom.
The [illegible] gazed with affright
And for [illegible] [illegible]
[illegible] to the Lord, and his vengeance
[illegible] the sinners of Babel;
[illegible] to dash to the horrid,
[illegible] the Huguenot [illegible].

Children's Column.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

SUNSHINE AND SHADOW.

[illegible] myself? Ah, little one, [illegible] and story would close your bright eyes, and [illegible] [illegible] that would never do—[illegible] ago, one of those children [illegible] Mary, and Martha, does it [illegible] and two little sisters.—[illegible] them had [illegible] as [illegible] my eyes, my pet, and hair as [illegible] hair, just like your own. I [illegible] [illegible] a story, her eyes up- [illegible] that [illegible] Above her that story of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 6. WHOLE NUMBER 480.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1860.

$2 00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE OFFICE—113 CAMP ST.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

WHO IS TO BLAME?

An article has gone the rounds of the Southern Advocates, originating in the New Orleans Advocate, inquiring whether a travelling preacher had ever located, unless providentially forced to do so, who did not meet with misfortune?. I shall not pretend to say there are such cases. I believe it is true that those ministers who devote the prime of their life to the ministry, and then locate, are generally unsuccessful in their temporal matters. They certainly suffer—do they sin? Such is the intimation of the article I allude to. Let us investigate this matter.

A young man, called of God to preach, possessing proper qualifications, and the necessary outfit, at twenty-one years of age devotes himself to the ministry. He marries at the end of his sixth year in the ministry, and by the close of his fifteenth year he has four or five children. When first married he saw that, by the system of the church, each appointment must be supplied with a parsonage. He thanked God for this. But when he began to talk to his people about procuring him a parsonage, he was told that it was a useless expense; that Bro. A, who preceded him, would not live in a parsonage, and often ridiculed such an idea; that Bro. H, who was settled on a farm in an adjoining county, and who would not move his family, would likely succeed him; that Bros. C and D were likewise settled in striking distance, and that they would probably not need a parsonage again for half a dozen years, if they had one. So he must absolutely do without one. He finds it is vain to talk about parsonages for his family, while a large portion of the preachers oppose (by not occupying) them from interest, and others from folly. When it is announced upon the last circuit he goes to, that the preacher has a wife and five children, the stewards throw up their hands aghast, and the church groans, as though Zion did indeed travail, at such enormous expenses. He is modestly told by many a good brother and sister that when a preacher's family becomes as large as his, he should locate; and as a perfect forecloser to every argement in favor of parsonages, that if they had one, then they would always have a preacher with a big family.—But he was sent from a circuit three hundred miles distant, which he had been on but one year, and to which he would gladly have been received again, in order that a good brother who had accommodated himself with a snug farm fifty miles from it, and who was worn out on every circuit nearer, might have work convenient. At the last Conference he attends, a conversation of the appointing council to this effect reaches his ears—how I will not explain. His last presiding elder remarks, "I have no work for this brother; he has a large family; Bros. B and C, and D and E, are settled in my district, and after furnishing them, I have no appointment that can possibly support his family." Another replies: "Well really, really, I do not see how he is to be taken care of; he is getting to be very much in our way."

Has our preacher a soul with one particle of honor in it? Has he any respect for himself or his family? Would he have others respect them? And shall he be blamed for now asking at the hands of his Conference a location? or, shall the Church be blamed for placing him in a situation where he must either do so or lose his self-respect? I, for one, say that the Church is to blame. Not that the Church has failed to devise a plan which, if carried out, would lead to a different result; but that that plan is not carried out. And most guilty of all are those local itinerants whose position hinders the Church from supplying parsonages; who, while they are stabbing the real itinerancy to the very death, are fattening upon its reins, and shouting, "our glorious itinerancy!" who, in fact, enjoy all the advantages in a temporal point of view that can result from location, and yet enjoy the position and the salary that belong to the itinerant.

The Church is to blame; but our former itinerant, who is compelled to locate in search of a home for his family, is the sufferer. He is, in fact, the real martyr of the itinerant system. Fifteen years of the morning of his life have been devoted to the Church—years in which his wants were few, and his labors far surpassed his income. The knowledge, experience, and character he has acquired, would enable him to be more useful still, could he continue his course, but avail him naught in any other business. Had these fifteen years been devoted to his own temporal matters, he would now be in the successful prosecution of some honorable calling. But he is compelled to leave the only work at which he is capable of earning a living. He sacrifices that caste which, in our Church, appertains to the itinerant; releases his claim upon the Conference funds in case of need, takes a position of comparative obscurity, without means and with a large family on his hands, starts life anew. Of course he does not expect much success; his highest hope is to live. Not one in a hundred men, under such circumstances, will support his family. Toil, and trial, and poverty, are inevitably before him. And in the midst of his sufferings, instead of the arms and influence of his Church being thrown around him to sustain him, in memory of his services, the voice of its censure comes down upon him like a desolating blast. The wealthy local itinerant, the accommodating presiding elder, and the economical steward, who have driven him to his misfortunes, fold up their arms, roll up their eyes in holy horror, and cry, "Ah, he located!" And the thousand, with as much thought, as much emotion, and as much correctness as a mountain-side, echo back, "he located!" I am no apologist for unnecessary location; but I think this man "more sinned against than sinning." I am compelled to look upon it as very inconsistent in the Church not to furnish married preachers with homes for their families, and yet denounce them for locating.

ANNOTATOR.

Hooston, Miss., Jun. 25th, 1860.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

TUSKEGEE FEMALE COLLEGE.

Being in reduced circumstances, and having daughters to educate, I had often wished that I had the means of sending them to this institution. In November last my attention was called to an article in your paper, headed, "Special Arrangement." Addressing the Rev. Mr. Price, we were enabled to place one daughter in this seat of learning, to be made an educated and intelligent woman.

The College is a fine building. For comfort and convenience, in the plan, it could not be excelled. It is five stories, and has a handsome tower. There are three different flights of stairs, so that in case of fire, all the inmates could get out without difficulty. The Chapel is a large, beautiful room, with large windows from the lofty ceiling to the floor, and must be pleasant in summer. In winter it is warm, being well carpeted, and having large stoves; also nice desks and comfortable seats. The boarders in the college have study hours at night, the Rev. Mr. Rush sitting with them during the two hours they study. The room is well lighted by lights placed in handsome chandeliers. The recitation rooms are carpeted, and all have fire-places and nice seats.

The Art Department is very interesting; and, to one fond of painting, it must be a great pleasure to visit it and look upon the many beautiful paintings there presented to view. Many of them are sketches from the imagination of their executors, and all painted by the pupils. The music rooms (which I did not visit) are ten in number, three of them being used for giving lessons in, and the remainder for practising in. The bedrooms are all large, and of two sizes. The larger ones are occupied by four young ladies, while only two girls are in the smaller. They are all well furnished, every one having a fire-place in it. I took tea and breakfast with the pupils, and the fare was as nice as one could wish. Mr. Rush and lady going in first, the young ladies came in quietly and genteelly, without noise or confusion, and seated themselves at once. Mr. Rush having asked a blessing, the girls talked and seemed as happy as a family of sisters. When all had finished Mr. Rush read the Bible, then all knelt while he offered up an appropriate prayer. Afterwards each young lady placed her chair at the table again when all filed out as quietly as possible. The dining-room is in the basement, and has a number of large windows and two fire-places, thus making them comfortable as well as pleasant during meal time. Rev. Mr. Rush and lady have charge of the boarding department, and it could not be in better hands. Brother Rush is a well educated, Christian gentleman—two of the noblest traits of man. Mrs. Rush is worthy of being the daughter of our good Bishop Andrew. I have not words at command by which to express my admiration of that great and good man, the Rev. A. A. Lipscomb. The refined and intelligent women he has educated should commend this institution most highly to all true-hearted Southerners. Mr. Price being absent, I can only say, from all I heard of him, he is well capable of filling the honorable position he has as President. Mr. Price is one of Alabama's seven noble sons. Southern mothers and Methodist mothers why send your daughters off to be educated when you have such a school at home? Sustain your own Tuskegee Female College, that it may send forth from its walls many more refined and intelligent Christians. Would that I might do this subject justice, that you might appreciate the Tuskegee Female College.

A. C. T.

Jackson, Ala., Jan. 1860.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

ADVERTISING FOR OTHER PAPERS.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of 18th instant, noticing the merits of that sterling paper, the Nashville Advocate, you say truly that our people and preachers do not accord to par papers the support to which their merits entitle them.

But are the papers themselves faultless? Some think that by publishing the prospectuses of Northern periodicals, our papers are building them up at their own expense. On the 11th instant, in your columns, appeared a prospectus of Harper's Weekly, in which it is claimed to be the "best and cheapest family newspaper in the world."

Now, since the prospectus appeared in your paper, I have read articles in three secular papers, charging that Harper's Weekly is both unsound, politically, and too objectionable otherwise, to be introduced into a family.—The writer is not a reader of the paper, and cannot say whether these charges are true or not; but they show that to support it is of questionable propriety.

The publication of the prospectus in your paper will benefit Harper's Weekly as much as your very complimentary articles will benefit the Nashville and the Southern Advocates.

This is written in an fault-finding spirit. I have read the Advocate since its commencement. In the general conduct of the paper there is much to please, and nothing to displease. That to which I direct attention, but of which I do not complain, is common to almost all our Southern papers—secular and religious.

ADVOCATE OF THE "ADVOCATES."

REPLY.—Publishing advertisements of other papers in our columns is purely a business transaction, the same as advertisements of any other kind. We are paid for it, and paid well, and thus build ourselves up. We could have equally as long an advertisement of our paper published in Harper's Weekly, by paying for it. But we should not publish an advertisement for a paper, however well paid, if we believed it "unsound politically," in the sense of being an abolition paper. But we claim to be as sound, and to be as good a judge of unsoundness, as the writers referred to. Harper's Weekly is not thus "unsound," and is as "unobjectionable otherwise" as any secular paper in the land.

THE MINISTER AND CHURCH MEMBER.

No matter how comparatively obscure may be your sphere of action in Christendom, if you place yourself, and remain without self-will in the Divine hand, there may be some wondrously momentous result through your instrumentality. You may forget the instrument in the thought of the Almighty hand which stirred Banyan's brain in a prison unto the evolution of saving thoughts, through continents and generations. The quiet, obscure, and comparatively uneducated man as he wrote in prison could not have dreamed of the greatness of his mission. Many a wonderful and time-lasting result in the scientific and political, as well as the religious world, has accrued from the patient tension of some calm brain, which was unaspiring if not unconscious in regard to after millions of praise-shouting beneficiaries; and, dear reader, if in the sight of God you are truly humble, whether your humanly-graded station be lowly or lofty, by a quiescent waiting upon the Divine will, and a diligent acting it out, you may do some great thing for God and souls. Your littleness disproves not the greatness of Divine power, nor your adaptation to the Divine choice for an instrument. He hath chosen weak things. It may seem to you that past intellectual and moral heroism in Zion leaves no room for great things. Before the discovery of the Western continent it did not seem that there was room for it. So in regard to all great discoveries and inventions, as of printing, gravitation, steam, and telegraph power. So in regard to a Butler's Analogy, a Baxter's Saint's Rest, as well as a Banyan's Pilgrim's Progress. So in regard to the moral movement of a Luther, a Calvin, a Knox, or a Wesley. In the nature of the case no invention, discovery, or new conception can previously and a priori seem to have room adjusted to it in the world. It is unknown till it arrives; and mankind has not come to a standstill. The current century has not proved the field to be exhausted. Most of the world, in population, is just opening to the Gospel; and some new, peculiar blaze, for a masterly marshaling of hearts, heads, tongues, hands, feet, and dollars, to meet the world's great exigency, may break forth, notwithstanding the present worthy and faithfully pressed routine. The discoverer, the prince—entire servant under Christ, greater than the "Prince of Waterloo," and one instrumentally to make greater changes for earth than did he and Blucher for Europe—this prince in Zion, little, and to remain little in his own eyes, may now, an old church counselor, be in a revery over the last missionary report; or he may be some stripling on his knees in a log-cabin chamber; or a moneyless college graduate reaching for his scanty cloak, and for a pen to write "yes" to a missionary secretary; or the hard thinker, who has been weeks gathering in his brain the moral elements of the world for one great timely induction; or he may be a money-making, shrewd, and comprehensive business man, who is so patiently studying to discipline himself to liberality as to be qualifying himself for leader in a peemplary revolution for missions. These broken lines may reach the eye of the future instrument, and, among greater means, help to strengthen him in patient investigation of what the world just now needs. No preacher or Church member can tell but God may make him the medium of at least the germ of the grand conception, provided he act once, in everything and forever, submits to the Divine hand. He need not disqualify himself for something large by negligence of obscure duties; but let his prayerful glance be steadily world-wide, and if in some agony of prayer he finds his heart swell and his brain heave with a great thought, let him publish it to the world.—Christian Advocate and Journal.

STATE CARRIAGE FOR THE VICEROY OF EGYPT.

A Springfield (Mass.) manufacturing company have just completed, at a cost of rising $11,000, a royal carriage for the Egyptian Viceroy's traveling excursions. The Republican gives the following description of it:

"The whole length of this state carriage is sixty-seven feet, or about one-third longer than the longest railway car in use in this country. The body is sixty feet long, and rests on two double trucks, each one of which is two distinct trucks connected together, thus presenting sixteen wheels, upon which the whole weight is equally divided. These trucks were made from original patterns designed expressly for this car, and are carved with ornamental oriental designs; the panels are mostly of iron, strongly trussed; and besides the advantage necessarily secured against jars and jolts by the use of double trucks, the springs are so arranged that every motion occasioned by irregularities in the track must pass through three separate set of Springs before reaching the car, and thus, if not entirely wasted, fall upon the occupant as softly as feathers falling to the earth.

"The carriage is divided into three compartments, each twenty feet long and ten-wide. At the ends are two saloons of like character, and between these an open pavilion. This pavilion is the leading feature of the car. It is surmounted by a raised roof, like the central part of a house, supported by silver-plated columns with highly ornamental brackets. A heavy wire fence, or railing, about three feet high, runs along the outer-side, and steps that may be let down to leave the car, and when not wanted for use, thrown into an ornamental appendage to the side of the car. The two saloons are provided with large doors leading out upon the platform, which are of the usual style, though of extra size and surrounded by wire railing, with a silver-plated hand rail, and also into the central pavillion. The windows are very large, of single panes of plate glass, 24 by 30 inches, and elegantly ornamented, and slide up and down by weights. Each window is provided with blinds and silk curtains. At the end of each saloon are two large mirrors of the size of the windows. The floor of each of these saloons is to be covered with a rich Turkish velvet carpet, made expressly for the carriage; a large centre table will stand in the middle; and four large stuffed arm-chairs—one of extra size, nearly three feet square, for the Viceroy will complete the furniture. Silver water pitchers and goblets are provided for the tables. The pavilion will have like furniture, upholstered, however, in severer style, with water-proof materials, as they will be exposed to the weather.

"But, the most conspicuous feature of the carriage is its decorations, outside and inside. This is all from original designs, in a rich Arabesque style. All varieties of woods and paints, gold leaf, papier-mache, and carvings have been brought in to perform the cunning work of the artist, and produce effects altogether marvelous. Every color, and every shade of color, are mixed and mingled until the eye is dazzled and oppressed, almost, with the vision presented. Carving in wood and inlaid papier-mache or pasteboard, from one-fourth to three-eighth of an inch thick, with artistic mouldings, make up the exterior of the sides, which are painted in high colors from beautiful designs in the uniform Arabesque style. This style prevails everywhere upon the carriage, being a part of the original order, and in various conspicuous places, appear in high relief the national Turkish emblem of the moon and stars. The lower side of the saloon, under the windows, are made up of carved and inlaid work, with rosewood, bird's eye ample, black walnut and tiger-wood, so designed as to form a very rich ornament, perhaps the most so of any decorations. The upper sides and the inside roofs are finished with intricate mouldings and papier-mache ornaments, richly painted and gilded. The thresholds of the door are in polished brass, carved in the universal Arabesque style, and alternate stripes of dark and light-colored woods, which, as it is exposed to the weather when in use, is much more fitting than carpeting, while almost equally elegant. Over each saloon is an extra roof, raised above the main roof sufficiently to permit a circulation of air, and thus qualify the oppressive heat of the climate. There is hardly any known variety of foreign or domestic woods, save hemlock, that does not enter more or less in the construction of this car. Save the cushions and chairs, there is no upholstery in any of its departments.

NORTH AMERICAN QUARTERLY ON METHODISM.

So rapid has been the growth of Methodism in America, that, like the volcanic mountains of Mexico, which recent eruptions have thrown up from the plain, it still amazes us by the figure it makes in our geography. An aged clergyman of another denomination, Rev. Mr. Waldo, late Chaplain to Congress, remarked at the dedication of a Methodist Episcopal Church in Poughkeepsie, a few weeks ago, that he remembered the time when there was no Methodist Church in the land. Now we see a sect numbering eight millions of adherents, divided into six distinct denominations, comprising nearly two millions of adult communicants, with ten thousand regular itinerant ministers, besides fifteen thousand lay preachers, who support themselves by secular business and preach as they any find or make occasion.

Born in a college, Methodism has from the beginning favored the cause of popular education. Discouraged at the outset of its career in America by the burning of two colleges successively in Maryland, it made no further attempt of importance in this direction until 1824; since which time it has founded two hundred academies and seminaries of high grade, including a dozen or more female collegiate institutes, two theological schools, and more than thirty colleges, in which more than two thousand young men are pursuing substantially the same course of study and discipline for degrees as is required in Harvard and Yale. In all these institutions special attention is given to the religious culture of the pupils; and indeed more than half of the professors and teachers are ordained ministers of the Gospel.

What a solution have we here of the efficacy of the voluntary principle in supporting religion! When the Constitution of the United States was formed, and no provision was made for the inculcation of religion in a country becoming rapidly, yet sparsely, overspread by a population, native and immigrant, in circumstances unfriendly to the maintenance of divine worship, many wise men in this nation and in Europe predicted the downfall of the republic. It is an axiom in politics that no free government can long be maintained without a basis of intelligence and morality in the masses of the people; and yet this experiment of democracy on the largest scale was to be made without any recognition of religion in the Constitution, except in guaranty of its "free exercise!" These fears are still entertained by European writers. "In one important respect," says Mr. Allison in his history of modern Europe, "America differs entirely from any state in Christendom, or indeed any state that ever before existed in the world. It acknowledges no state religion, and no public funds whatever are provided for the clergy or religious instructors of any denomination." "If nothing else," he concludes, "existed to subject America to the common lot of humanity, the seeds of its mortal distemper are to be found in the want of any provision for the gratuitous religious instruction of the poor; the very circumstance which, with the admirers of their institutions, is the most ceaseless subject of eology."

The publication of Dr. Baird's religion in America, in several European languages, is likely soon to dispel these evil omens, and to let future historians know that such has been the efficacy of the voluntary principle, in every denomination, that State after State has followed the example of the general government, and abolished the last vestige of a religious establishment. The Methodist Episcopal Church, a discarded offshoot of the English Church, which started into being but a little before the independence of the United States, has kept pace with the growth of the republic, sending forth its itinerants with every wave of emigration that rolls toward the Rocky Mountains, and spreading its network of districts, circuits and stations over the whole land. It has made itself systematically a national establishment on the popular principle; and at this moment has greater resources for the religious instruction of the poor—slaves, Indians, and indigent white natives—than could be found in the entire English Church, were it transported with its revenues to this country. As much might be said of more than one other of the leading sects, whose surplus energy has swept beyond the boundaries of this country to the isles of the Pacific and the continents of the East.

A NEW POEM FORTHCOMING.—The Court Circular announces another Byron in the poetical world. It says: "It is reported that a noble lord, the eldest son of a popular peer, has written an exquisite original poem, of such surpassing beauty as to perfectly enchant all who have read it. It is at present in manuscript; but, we understand, it will soon be submitted to the ordeal of the public, through the medium of Mr. Murray, the well-known publisher. 'Oresgs' is the name of the noble lord's poem."

LONGFELLOW ON WASHINGTON IRVING.

At the meeting of the Massachusetts Historical Society, held on the 15th ult., to commemorate the death of Washington Irving, Professor Henry W. Longfellow offered a series of resolutions, prefacing them with the following eloquent remarks:—

Every reader has his first book. I mean to say one book among all others, which in early youth first fascinates his imagination, and at once excites and satisfies the desires of his mind. To me this first book was the Sketch Book" of Washington Irving. I was a school-boy when it was published, and read each succeeding number with ever-increasing wonder and delight; spell-bound by its pleasant humor, its melancholy tenderness, its atmosphere of reverie; nay, even by its gray-brown covers, the shaded letters of the titles, and the fair, clear type, which seemed an outward symbol of the style.

How many delightful books the same author has given us, written before and since; volumes of History and of Fiction, most of which illustrate his native land, and some of which illuminate it, and make the Hudson, I will not say as classic, but as romantic as the Rhine! Yet, still the charm of the "Sketch-Book" remains unbroken; the old fascination still lingers about it; and whenever I open its pages, I open also that mysterious door which leads back into the haunted chambers of my youth!

"Many years afterward, I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Irving in Spain, and found the author, whom I had loved, repeated in the man. The same playful humor; the same touches of sentiment; the same poetic atmosphere; and what I admired still more, the entire absence of all literary jealousy, of all that mean avarice of fame, which counts what is given to another as so much taken from one's self,—

"And rustling bears in every breeze,
The laurels of Miltiades."

At this time Mr. Irving was at Madrid, engaged upon his "Life of Columbus," and if the work itself did not bear ample testimony to his zealous and conscientious labor, I could do so from personal observation. He seemed to be always at work. "Sit down," he would say, "I will talk with you in a moment; but I must first finish this sentence."

One summer morning, passing his house at the early hour of six, I saw his study window already wide open. On my mentioning it to him afterwards, he said: "Yes, I am always at my work at the hour of six." Since then I have often remembered that sunny morning and that open window; so suggestive of his sunny temperament and his open heart, and equally so of his patient and persistent toil; and have recalled those striking words of Dante:

"Seggendo in piuma,
In fama non si vien, ne sotto coltre,
Senza la qual, chi sua vita consuma,
Cotal vestigio in terra, di se lascia
Qual fummo in aere ed in acqua la schiuma."

"Seated upon down,
Or in his bed, man cometh not to fame,
Without en which, whoso his life consumes,
Such vestige of himself on earth shall leave
As smoke in air and in the water foam."

HOW TO PREACH EXTEMPORANEOUSLY.

Mr. Gresly, an English divine, gives the following advice to a young clergyman in regard to preaching extemporaneously. It may assist some of our preachers in acquiring ease in this important art. The importance of it, in this country, is becoming more and more apparent, as the necessity of reaching the masses and moving their hearts is more deeply felt:

First make a sermon. Do not steal it, or borrow it, or buy it, but make it; then write it out legibly, leaving every other page a blank; then write on the blank pages a short abstract or abreviation, setting it down opposite the original. Having prepared your sermon in this manner, you must, when you enter the pulpit, double down the sermon itself, and preach from the abstract, filling up the blanks from your recollection; which, as the sermon was composed by yourself, you will probably not find much difficulty in doing. Should your memory fail, you must have recourse in the next place to your invention; should both prove treacherous, you must, as a last resource, turn to your manuscript which was doubled down; and as it is written opposite the abstract, you will be able to find it immediately. But the knowledge that you have the sermon to refer to in case of accidents, will, it is hoped, give you confidence enough to proceed without it. When you have done this several times, and find that there is no difficulty about it, you may then venture to try your wings without so much support, and preach from the abstract only, without the sermon to refer to; and, having become by this time tolerably fluent and confident, you will be able to supply from your own resources whatever has escaped your memory. Gradually your abstract may become shorter and shorter, until at last a few notes of some of the principal arguments will be sufficient to recall to your mind the subject of your discourse; and then you will have become what will be generally considered an accomplished extemporary preacher. A very fluent speaker assured me that he had learned to preach extempore by the foregoing plan. Recollect, I do not say you will be able to preach at all better in this way, than if you wrote your sermons down, and preached them in the ordinary manner. However, there is no harm in having the power; you may use it or not, as you like.

Indifferent, however, as you may be to extemporary preaching in your ordinary pulpit ministration, I do strongly advise you to get the faculty of lecturing or expounding Scripture extemporaneously, for you will find it very useful on many occasions, in the schoolroom and the cottage, if not in the pulpit. And, after all, I do not know whether you may not in this way learn to preach extempore more easily and satisfactorily than by any of the other methods which I have suggested.

NO PERSONAL APPLICATION INTENDED.

The papers relate—how truly we are not able to say—that a member of Dr. Cheever's Church, a lady in good standing in the membership, was a slaveholder, but unwilling, as may be supposed, to sever her religious associations, she continued to attend upon the ministrations of her pastor, notwithstanding his violent denunciations of the class to which she belonged. At length, however, the unsparing censures cast upon slaveholders were more than she could well bear, and she "took steps to leave, and did, notwithstanding the assurances of Dr. Cheever that he did not include her personally in his assaults on the sin of slaveholding." In other words, it was only wrong for others to hold slaves, while it was quite right for a member of his own church and congregation.

This statement reminds us of another, which was made to us a few years ago, to the effect that a lady who had married a Southern gentleman, a large slaveholder, was left a widow, and the owner of a considerable number of slaves. She was wealthy, and, better still, intelligent and accomplished. On one of her frequent visits to the North, she made the acquaintance of a noted clergyman, somewhat violent in his anti-slavery views, and known far and wide as an Abolition preacher. Being single—widower or bachelor, we do not know which—he was naturally and deeply impressed with the accomplishments of the Southern widow, and made her an offer of his hand in marriage. Without at first giving a flat refusal, she parried his advances, and, among other things, suggested that her slave property might be an objection to one so strongly opposed, as he was known to be, to the institution. Our reverend suitor, however, was not thus to be baulked, and very nearly in the spirit of Dr. Cheever in the case of his slaveholding church member, assured her most blandly, that, while he was opposed to slavery, he had not the slightest objection to overlooking it in such a case, and that he would not make a personal application of his principles; but would be most happy to place his heart and hand at her disposal.

The reader may think the lady cruel to decline so tempting a proposition, but when we last heard of her she was still unmarried, the owner of a goodly number of slaves, and as fair and charming as when she courteously declined the hand of the Rev. Dr.——, of New York. Like Dr. Cheever with his slaveholding church member, the clerical suitor was above making a personal application of his opinions when there was a lady in the case.—New York Journal of Commerce.

HOW TO GET RID OF CONTRIBUTION.—Tight Fist who sat next us in church not long since, showed us his plan to get rid of a contribution. When the box came round he commenced fumbling with desperate energy in his cassimeres—the deacon waited and Tight Fist fumbled and dug into the depths of his trowsers as if after his very boots. At length the box got tired of delay and passed to the next. Tight Fist leisurely folded his fingers, twirled his thumbs, and leaned over and asked us if we got the idea. Got it perfectly.

"UMBLE."

We believe that every pronouncing dictionary of the English language gives umble as the proper and only pronunciation of humble. And our belief is, form any generations all moderately educated people who speak the English language have so pronounced the word. But within a few recent years the custom of sounding the h has prevailed, and we now often hear it among people who are well educated. In the pulpit the error is not unusual, and even in the Episcopal service, where the proper pronunciation is provided for by the article an, "an humble, lowly, penitent and obedient heart"—the h is made disagreeably prominent. The fact being thus familiar, one naturally looks for the reason; and although it seems strange that so large an effect should flow from so trifling a cause, we believe the entire blame rests on Dickens, the novelist.

Dickens, it would seem, at some period in his educational training, ascertained that the "'am and hegga" and various kindred expressions of the English illiterati were cockneyisms; and reasoning with himself, he came to the bold conclusion that humble, like ham, hear, hatchet, etc., belonged to the list of words that required the h to be sounded. When, therefore, in undertook Uriah Heep he naturally made him develop his cockneyism by the incessant mispronunciation of his favorite virtue. So far so good; far, so far, Dickens merely exposed his own ignorance. But whatever may have been the effect of his blunder among his own countrymen, a large number of his American readers apparently took it for granted that so great a man as Dickens could not be wrong in so simple a matter, and that, therefore, Uriah, and not Dickens was the ignoramus in the premises. With this impression on their minds, they quietly made all possible haste out of Uriah's company, and perhaps took occasion to lug in the word "humble" oftener than was necessary, to show, affirmatively, that they were "posted" in the usages of good society. We advise them to reconsider their action, and, so far forth, to reinstate Uriah in their "distinguished consideration."—New York Evening Post.

KEY TO THE GATE OF PARADISE.

In "Woodward's Shunnimites," the following incident is related, which is like a key-hole glimpse into eternal glory:

A friend once told me that, amongst other symptoms of high nervous excitement, he had been painfully harrassed by want of sleep. To such a degree had this proceeded, that if, in the course of the day, any occasion led him to his bedchamber, the sight of his bed made him shudder at the idea of the restless and wretched hours he had to pass upon it. In this case it was recommended to him to endeavor, when he lay down at night, to fix his thoughts on something at the same time vast and simple, such as the wide expanse of ocean, or the cloudless vault of heaven, that the little hurried and disturbing images that flitted before his mind might be charmed away or hushed to rest, by the calming influence of one absorbing thought. Though not at all a religious man at the time, this advice suggested to his mind if an object at once vast and simple, was to be selected, none could serve the purpose so well as that of God. He resolved, then, to think of Him. The result exceeded his most sanguine hopes; in thinking of God he fell asleep. Night after night he resorted to the same expedient. The process became delightful; so much so, that he used to long for the usual hour of retiring, that he might fall asleep, as he termed it, in God. What began as a mere physical operation, grew, by imperceptible degrees, into a gracious influence. The same God who was his repose at night, was in all his thoughts by day. At the same time person spoke to me, God, as revealed in the gospel of his Son, was "all his salvation, and his desire."

WASHINGTON'S RELIGION.

In the month of November, 1829, I was in Fredericksburg, Va., in the family of the Rev. Mr. Wilson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in that place. He occupied the house which the mother of Washington lived and died in. Mr. Wilson informed me that a nephew of Washington, Capt. Lewis, who had been his clerk, and had charge of his books and papers, and was daily in his library until his decease, related to him the following occurrence: It was the custom of Washington to retire to his library every evening precisely at 9 o'clock, and although he had visitors, he invariably left at that hour and did not return. He remained alone in his library until 10 o'clock, and passed into his bed-chamber by an inner door. Capt. Lewis had long wondered how he spent that hour, knowing that he wrote nothing, and that the books and papers were as himself left them the preceding day. During a violent storm of wind and rain, and when there were no visitors, he crept in his stocking feet to the door, and through the key-hole he beheld him on his knees with a large book open before him, which he had no doubt was a Bible, a large one being constantly in the room.

NATH. HEWIT.

Bridgeport, Jan. 10th, 1859.

The writer of the above is the venerable Dr. Hewit, of Bridgeport, Conn. Whatever opinions men may have of the propriety of peering into the privacy of retirement, the evidence is very direct and conclusive that Washington was a man of prayer.—N. Y. Observer.

AUDUBON'S BIRDS OF NORTH AMERICA.

This work—the greatest in its design and execution ever attempted—of that unrivaled ornithologist, Audubon, is now in course of publication by his son, Mr. J. W. Audubon, from the original copper plates. These plates were gotten up in Paris, under the immediate supervision of Audubon himself, the most accomplished artists of that city being engaged in their preparation. The original cost of these plates, we understand, was nearly one hundred thousand dollars. The edition now being issued will contain all the plates and text of the original work, embracing one thousand figures of birds, all of the size of nature, represented in action amid the scenes or on the plants most common to their habits. The work will come out in numbers, each number to contain ten plates. There will be 435 plates, bound in three volumes, and seven volumes of the description of the birds. The first volume of the plates, and the seven descriptive volumes will be delivered in the early part of next year—the second and third volumes to follow annually. We have examined the plates of the first number, and never have we seen anything of the kind that could compare with them. Mr. J. J. Audubon, the publisher, is now in the city, and we would advise our readers to embrace this opportunity of subscribing to this most splendid work.—Bulletin.

ART AND ARTISTS IN NEW YORK.

There were probably never before so large a number of artists in New York as at the present time, and there is great difficulty in finding an unoccupied room suitable for a studio. That nest of artists in Tenth-street, called the Studio, which was regarded as a very wild speculation when it was built, has not a vacant apartment in it; and the liberal proprietor of it, who built it for the accommodation of artists, without any anticipations of profit, is now receiving ten per cent. on the capital invested.

The artists of the Studio building are to give extensive receptions, in which no works will be exhibited but those produced by the cloistered occupants of the building itself. The exhibition-room is rather small for the company generally invited, but as on these occasions the artists illuminate their rooms and receive their friends in their own special apartments, there is room enough for the crowd, and peculiar interest is imparted to the occasion by the opportunity to see the works that the artists have on their easels.

THE RICH CASE.—The now celebrated $100,000 breach of promise case, entitled "Carstang vs. Shaw," is on trial again at St. Louis. It will be remembered that on the former trial the jury returned a verdict for the full amount claimed—$100,000—and it is this, together with the high standing and wealth of the defendant, that renders the case so interesting. The verdict is the largest ever given in the world in a similar suit. On the present trial, an enormous amount of new testimony, principally depositions taken abroad, will be introduced. It comprises the evidence of over fifty witnesses residing in Brooklyn, N. Y., Charleston, S. C., Cincinnati, Baltimore, and elsewhere, and in bulk would fill an ordinary champagne basket. The counsel on both sides have been industrious since the last trial, and some very interesting developments may be expected—though, undoubtedly, the court will exclude portions of the testimony. Both parties—Miss Effie Carstang, complainant, and Henry Shaw, defendant (and appellant)—visited Charlestou lately for the purpose of aiding and instructing in the examination by commission. Both took lodgings at the Mills House.—Charleston Courier.

BISHOP ASBURY'S BENEVOLENT POVERTY.—Our early Methodist preachers were poor in this world's goods. At the Western Conference of 1800, some of its members were in want, not being able to purchase decent clothes. Bishop Asbury says: "So I parted with my watch, my coat and my shirt." What moral sublimity is there in this passage of a Christian Bishop's life?—We doubt not that if he had the $50,000 annually given to the Lord Bishop of London, the whole would have freely gone for the work of God in that distant and wild wilderness. In 1800 one of Asbury's friends solicited a loan of $20 of $50. The Bishop says: "He might as well have asked me for Fern." "I showed him all the money I had in the world, about $12, and gave him $5." One of the Georgia preachers had been ill and the Bishop finding him just able to travel, gave to the convalescent his own sulkey and rode his horse. Asbury says: "After a heavy siege through the woods, from one plantation to another, on Bro. Blanton's stiff-jointed horse, that I would only ride to save souls, or the health of a brother!"

PETER PENCE.—The increase in the number of barefooted monks and friars who may be seen in the religious quarter of Paris—that all around St. Sulpice and the Rue de Vaugirard—has caused the greatest curiosity. They may be seen at all hours of the day walking along in the quiet and almost deserted streets of that quarter, bareheaded and barefooted—their blue heels and chilblainy toes creating the greatest commiseration among the ladies and children as they tread bravely the frozen snow covered pavement. They have assembled here in great numbers to further the gigantic work which has been commenced at Ghent—the "Work of St. Peter's Penny." By St. Peter's Penny the most stupendous works have been undertaken and completed, and the "work" of to-day is that of liberating the Pope from all anxiety concerning the increase of expenditure necessary to meet his present emergency. The monks and friars of the two great begging orders, the Franciscans and Capuchins, have been convoked and ordered to distribute themselves all over Europe in search of alms to assist in this mighty work.—London Star.

INTERESTING DISCOVERY.—A curious literary discovery was lately made in an old house, formerly a portion of a religious edifice, in Oxfordshire, England. While pulling it down, the workmen came upon a secret closet, or oratory, hidden in the thickness of the wall, and covered by the panelling of the adjacent room. It proved to be a place of deposit of a small library of the earliest Protestant theology of the time of the Reformation, concealed, no doubt, when the possession of such works was almost sufficient to doom the owner to fire and faggot. Some of John Knox's writings are specially mentioned, and a "Complete Copy of the First English or Coverdale's Translation of the Bible." If the latter work answers the description, the discovery will be very valuable, as no perfect copy of this Bible has yet been found to exist, and one, the title and first leaf wanting, but supplied in fac simile, sold for £365, or $1,800, in 1854.

AN OLD CLOCK.—The artist, Church, during his late expedition to the North for the purpose of sketching icebergs, discovered in the possession of a Dutch family in Nova Scotia, an old German clock, which was made by Huyghens, about the year 1640. It has, since his return, been repaired and put in running order, by a watch-maker in Hartford, and, though it has not run for half a century, it is now keeping good time, and may last another two centuries. It has been handed down in the same family, from father to son, for generations. It is considerable of a curiosity, for the fact that it is one of the first clocks made with a pendulum. The action of the pendulum on the wheel is not direct, by means of a pallet, as in our modern clocks, but operates by a vertical vibrating bar with "snags" on it, catching into the teeth at each oscillation. The clock strikes the hour and half hour, and is wound up by means of an endless chain. The frame is of black ancient oak, and is open, exposing the works, which are of brass, nicely finished.—N. Y. Paper.

EDUCATION IN RUSSIA.—The reigning Czar is doing wonders in the way of improving the masses of Russia. Not only near the large cities has he established public schools, but even among the far-off mountain regions. Thus a letter from St. Petersburg states that the Emperor of Russia has ordered the establishment of six schools in six different places in the Caucasus, and has decided that the Russian language, writing and arithmetic, geography, history and drawing shall be taught in them. He has also ordered that in each school there shall be four hundred and twenty pupils—two hundred and forty-five of them to be maintained at the expense of the State, and one hundred and fifty of those two hundred and forty-five to be natives, the remainder children of Russian functionaries. His name will be transmitted to future ages as Alexander, the Reformer.

THE CITY OF JEDDO.—An American officer on the steamship Powhattan, writing to the Boston Courier, from Jeddo, Japan, under date of the 8th of October, 1859, gives an interesting account of that remarkable city, which, according to his statement, exceeds in size and population any city now in existence, or that has existed. It stretches some twenty miles along the beach of the bay or gulf of Jeddo, and extends inward some twelve and a half miles. The population is estimated by Mr. Harris, our Minister there, at three millions. The correspondent thinks that it is under-estimated, and that in fact it is nearly twice as populous.—Washington Journal.

THE LITURGY OF THE ENGLISH CHURCH.—The foreign papers state that Lord Ebury is likely to be

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1860.

ONLY $1 75 TO 1861.

The large increase of new subscribers has exhausted our back numbers from the beginning of the year. Let all new subscribers, until further notice, send $1 75, as that will pay from the next number until the end of the year. We shall increase the edition to the number of 500. Let these all be called for. Many interesting writers commence with that number—Rev. John G. Jones' History of Protestantism in Mississippi—the letters of our New York literary correspondent—letters from Kentucky—letters from Texas—several distinguished contributors whose names we are not allowed to give—Bishop Pierce's letters, soon—editorials on leading topics of the day. Also Dr. Hamilton's Southern American letters.

PULPIT EARNESTNESS.

After hearing all sorts of opinions from all classes of men—lay, clerical, and secular, European and American, a candid, conscientious mind cannot escape the conclusion, that Mr. Spurgeon is truly a wonderful preacher. Time enough has transpired since the commencement of his ministry to test his powers thoroughly, and to apply to his preaching all legitimate canons of pulpit criticism; he has not been found wanting, though weighed in all balances; his power is as great to-day as at the beginning—even growing, as does the size and strength of a young oak. No place has been found sufficiently capacious to contain his astounding audiences, and, in consequence, a magnificent tabernacle is to be built, the corner-stone of which was recently laid. Audiences are the indubitable evidences of eloquence, especially when uniformly maintained from year to year. Whatever may be a preacher's faults, however objectionable he may be in some respects, permanently large audiences are positive proofs of genius and power, let critics and cavillers say what they will.

The secret of his eloquence has puzzled many; but it need not. He is in earnest. There all his power lies. Were it not for his sublime and thrilling earnestness, he would sink into a common preacher. And his earnestness grows out of his piety, coupled with the courage of the "perfect love that casteth out fear."

Earnestness is inspiration and power. Methodism, as Chalmers justly and aptly styled it, is "Christianity in earnest." Hence its inspiration and power. Earnestness is the secret of Spurgeon's inspiration and power. Not remarkable for learning, logic, imagination, pathos, or elocution, yet ten thousand people go to hear him preach on Sunday. He is in earnest. His earnestness supplies the place of genius, to which it is near akin. Earnest in purpose, his character and energies are undivided, concentrated, intensified, progressively powerful and productive. Earnest in thought, his convictions are as deep as the susceptibilities of his nature will permit; his thoughts are defined and vivid—naked seeds, without husk, ready, when sown in his own mind, or that of his hearers, to unite immediately with the elements which produce germination. Earnest in feeling, there is not an idle, apathetic affection or impulse in his whole nature; all are aroused, quickened, inspired. Consequently, his manner, his tones of voice, his deportment, are all earnest. Very naturally, those who attend his ministry become in earnest, just as one will become pensive when walking out in the solemn night and looking up at its silent glory,—or when entering into the dim aisles of a broad, unbroken, umbrageous forest. Earnestness is Christ-like, and "great multitudes followed" Christ.

WOMANHOOD AND WORK.

Among the changes that have taken place in society within the present century, not one is so significant as the wonderful activity of women in various departments of intellectual and industrial life. Viewed in any light it is a sign of deep meaning, a proof that a slumbering force has been aroused, a prophecy of new modifications in the social system of the world. For the first time in the history of humanity, women are now a co-ordinate element with men in the formative work of civilization. They are contributing to the thought and enterprise of the age, shaping much of its sentiment, participating in the direction of its principles, and otherwise impressing their peculiar attributes on the genius and movements of the times. So silently, so gradually, has this great revolution been wrought, that we have scarcely been sensible of its progress, and yet, looking at the present aggregate of results, we are astonished at what has been effected. The hand of God is in this remarkable phenomenon. It is not the dead product of a dead chance. It is not the necessity of a physical development, not the work of a social machinery, that grinds out the forms of life as a mill grinds corn, but the fruit of a Divine spirit operating on the interests of the human race, and guiding its affairs towards a high and hallowed destiny.

A leading authority says: "the women of New England, and particularly those of Massachusetts, earn millions of dollars annually, in various branches of industry which have been introduced in modern times." But this fact is not peculiar to New England, for throughout the whole country, female activity is one of the marked features of the age. Especially in intellectual pursuits, in art and literature, women are taking a prominent rank. The Arts of Design are particularly engaging their attention, and in this beautiful and useful department of industry, they are rendering most valuable services to the taste and comfort of society. We are not, however, so much concerned with the specific forms of their talent and energy as with the fact itself, that their active ability is now tributary to the progress of civilization. In all proper fields of labor they are now co-workers with men; the barbarism that once made them drudges, has long since passed away, but unfortunately it was succeeded by a sentimentalism that fostered a spirit of indolence, and set them up for a sort of admiration, which injured both sexes. This romantic feeling, too, has gone, and, in our day, women are appreciated as capable of culture, of sympathy with the lofty objects of existence, as fellow-agents with men in fulfilling God's purposes in the moral and social advancement of the race. In brief, women are at work.

Yes, they are at work; thanks to Providence for this bright era in the history of humanity. There are two aspects to this fact, both of which are impressive.

Women need work; they need it just as much as men. They need it because they have souls, redeemed souls, that require work to fit them for their destiny. Without work they are dead souls. Without work they cannot form character, develop their talents, execute life's great ministry. By all means let it be the right kind of work, neither cruel and crushing, nor soft and sentimental, but good, substantial, soul-feeding work. The law of work is not founded in our circumstances, but in our spirits, and, therefore, women are under its authority. Its claims cannot be escaped.—Whether rich or poor, the same moral reason for work applies to all alike, and hence, women can never be women in any exalted sense, if they violate this primary necessity of their nature. On the other hand, society needs the work of women, not only in offices of benevolence and charity, but in other relations, such as involve the services of cultivated and energetic intellect, they are greatly wanted. The fields of education, art, literature, are open to them, and a specific activity that belongs to them, as women, is here providentially demanded. Man's work in these departments is not woman's work. The distinctive qualities of their sex find room here just as much as around the fireside, and in the nursery; and, therefore, we urge that our systems of intellectual and moral activity will be as defective, unless women are incorporated into them, as home and society are defective, whenever they are ignored. Men can no more do women's work than women can do men's work. The oak and the vine—shall the sturdy branches of the one quarrel with the rich purple clusters of the other? The sun and the moon—shall they fight in their orbits? The two—man and woman—must walk side by side, not only in matrimony, but in every good and worthy enterprise that has its spirit and its sanctions in the permanent welfare of the human family, and in the glory of God.

PREACHING IN OUR COLLEGES.

The religious idea of Education necessarily involves the faithful, earnest and appropriate preaching of God's word to the students of a college. We have emphasized the term—appropriate. And we lay a special stress upon it, because the Gospel ought to be preached to college students as their solemn and supreme interest as college students. The doctrines and duties of the Gospel, bearing on their character and condition, adapted to their period of life and its particular circumstances, ought to be forcibly urged on their consciences and hearts. A general style of preaching, such as suits a promiscuous Sabbath congregation, is not the style for this work. It should be addressed to students as such, showing them the claims of God on their young intellects, impressing them with the constant necessity of Christ's grace to enable them to value rightly, and to use effectively the means of culture within their grasp, pointing out their peculiar sins and personal dangers, and holding up the divine standard of life as the standard to which they should conform their daily conduct both for present and future success. There is a manifest difference between preaching the Gospel as it is adapted to every body, and preaching it as adapted to a specific class as connected with a specific position. College sermons should be college sermons; that is, they should have a distinct character in respect to the end in view. The hearts of the students should be reached by acting on those sensibilities that are exercised in their mode of life, and they should be shown how the Gospel is a Gospel to them just where they are, in what they are, and in what they have to do.

Much of our Lord's preaching had this strongly-marked personality. When he talked to Zaccheus, it was about Zaccheus, and when he spoke to Martha, it was to Martha's own soul. So, too, Paul and Peter often preached. General occasions were used for general instruction. But the private address, the personal appeal, the close fellowship of heart with heart, were never forgotten. Each method has its place. Each is divine and therefore essential. But one, if we may use a homely figure, is the shot-gun, that scatters its charge among the flock of birds; the other is the more deadly rifle, which, in the hands of a good marksman, never misses its aim.

No college, of course, can be called a Religious Institution, if it neglect Sabbath preaching to its pupils. This is too plain to need an argument. But something more than formal service under college sanction and as a part of college routine is needed. A preacher ought to teach religion in its divine spirit and practice, just as he would teach his class any branch of general study, viz.: as a living, personal, practical interest—as the highest and holiest of all interests. His anxious care should be to show his students and to make them feel, that the end of discipline, government, and all college life, is the glory of God in their salvation, nor should he fail to impress them that the process of education is one of those providential arrangements, which the Holy Ghost is peculiarly ready to bless and sanctify. Without doubt such preaching requires great skill and wisdom. A man must have a profound insight into human nature, must have deep sympathies, must know the grace of God in all the offices of culture and experience, before he can perform this duty successfully. But a college President ought to labor and pray for power here above everything else. His pulpit ought to be his noblest and grandest sphere. That pulpit ought to be the highest pulpit in the land, and Sabbath after Sabbath, it should send down its streams of intellectual and spiritual life to flow forth, through all the week, into every hall and recitation. Brethren must pardon us if we intensify this trust as the most sacred in their hands. Intensify it? Nay, we cannot intensify it. Our colleges are God's Temples. We do not exaggerate when we say, that our college Presidents have something like a spiritual Apostleship towards the dawning age of religious culture. Every one of them has a pastoral charge of most deep and touching significance, and hence, we believe, that just in proportion as their Sabbath work is well and truly done, just in that proportion, may we expect our colleges to prove a blessing to the Church and to the world.

OUR METHODIST WOMANHOOD.

In another column we have called attention to the fact that a great change is now progressing in the structure and activity of society. We propose in this article, to show that the M. E. Church has a vital interest in this new form of Modern Civilization.

Our Church has been foremost in this country in urging and sustaining the work of Female Education. Foremost, we mean, as a Church, and in comparison with other Protestant churches. Apart from the fact that we were the first to establish a Female College, (the Wesleyan Female College of Georgia,) we have organized more of these institutions and contributed more influence to form a public opinion on the subject than any other denomination. But there is a practical point here of eminent significance, which is—the duty of the Church to its educated women. This is quite a new topic among us, and yet it is one of deep concern.

We have a vast deal of cultivated womanly talent among us. That fact is beyond question. Our colleges have sent them forth into society, and, now, scattered throughout the land, they gladden many homes, and by means of their intelligence and piety, bless many churches. So far, so good, but a little farther would be much better. The thing for consideration is, the means to be adopted to turn this new element—educated womanly intellect—to the best advantage for the welfare of the Church and the progress of society. Without doubt much of this cultivated talent is now lost, not indeed to itself or to private life, but to those more public relations in which it may more properly and profitably act. There are fields, great and growing fields, within the Church, where it ought to be exercised—work to be done that women can do—good to be effected that such women can effect—honors to be won that they may win and wear with a brighter lustre to their gentle and retired nature. But women are rarely demonstrative They wait to be sought, to be called into active service and hence they seldom accomplish much until the path is opened by other hands for them to walk in.

Our women are much needed as teachers and writers. First as teachers; and here we urge, that if a right public opinion existed in the Church, many of our young and educated women would devote themselves to teaching. Suppose that such women feel an impulse to engage in this work as a sphere of usefulness; it too generally dies in their own hearts for the want of an atmosphere in which it can be fed and nourished. Neither preachers nor laymen, as a common rule, are fully alive to the importance of this work, or indeed are at all ready to second the feeling. Imagine the opposite state of things; imagine the Church awake to the beauty, the sacredness, the high utility of this great vocation. What then? Every woman moved to this duty would be supported and strengthened by the prevailing opinion around her. Other consciences would make her more conscientious. Other hearts would vitalize her heart. If, moreover, she were torpid or indifferent to this department of usefulness, the very presence of such thoughts and conviction about her would arouse her mind.

All this is surely plain enough. Womanly activity is largely lost to the Church, simply for the reason that there is no Church appreciation of its value and excellence. There is in deep-toned, no urgent call sounded through its heart. If they are not standing idle in the market-places, they are idle at home—idle at least as respects God's vineyard—and the women of the Church may well say: "No man hath hired us." Sure are we, from conversations with gifted and earnest women, that they would work for the Church, if the way were opened. Now, this way can be opened. Our churches can agitate this subject. Our ministers can discuss it. We can originate a powerful public opinion in its favor, and the instant this is done, a new and mighty impulse will be breathed into the Christian activity of Methodist womanhood. And why wait another hour? We need private schools, preparatory to our colleges, all over the land. Our wealthy families are calling, on every hand, for private teachers. The province of the Church is to supply this need. It is safer in her hands than anywhere else; and not only is it safer as to the interests involved, but it would have a most beneficial effect on her own spirit and intelligence, if she were thoroughly aroused to this duty.

Our present position on the subject of education is not half up to the mark. If we undertake to educate our women, let us also follow them out into life, watch over their talents, and see that they have a field for their energy. If we kindle their light, let us try to keep it from being put under a bushel or in a chimney-corner. Whatever Christian intelligence, whatever Christian education, we as a Church possess, that is a portion of our divinely-granted power, a vital element in our responsibility, a solemn trust for a rigid and stern reckoning. What a dead spot in our hearts is this insensibility to the talent in our Church!

A GOOD READER IN EVERY FAMILY.

There should be one, at least. It would be well if all who can read, loved to read, and if all who loved to read could read aloud—read aloud well—read for the edification and entertainment of others, as well as themselves. Reading alone, though so common, is a miserable literary bachelordom—something like eating alone—sleeping alone—living alone—talking to oneself. Family reading should be as "institution," like family prayer—like the family table—like the family fireside. A good reader in a family is like a good preacher in a Church—the sunshine of the circle. Economize and systematize your time—have a daily hour or two for family re-union—get the wife and husband, and children and servants, all together, and then let same one exercise the office of family-prophet, by reading Bible chapters, the songs of Zion, the classic poets and prose-writers of the language—the Advocate; read the Advocate to the family every week.

We very well recollect the first newspaper we ever saw—it was called the Southern Recorder, published at Milledgeville, Ga., first by Seaton and Orme, then by Grantland and Orme, then by Grieve and Orme. This is our best recollection. We shall never forget the stories, sketches, and other things, read by our father, at the close of the day's labor, to the delighted children. Stories of the adventures of John Paul Jones, and others similar. Many a laugh and many a cry, over these readings, inspired and beautified the rude monotony of frontier life, and developed a taste for books and literary pursuits.

Dr. Holland, the genial and tasteful editor of the Springfield Republican, whose letters of "Timothy Titcomb" have delighted and benefited thousands, says that there is no treat so great as to hear good reading of any kind. Not one gentleman in a hundred can read so as to please the ear, and send the words with gentle force to the heart and the understanding. An indistinct utterance, whines, drones, nasal twangs, guttural notes, hesitations, and other vices of elocution are almost universal. Why it is so, no one can say, unless it be that either the pulpit, or the nursery, or the school-room, gives the style in these days. Dr. H. is hard on the pulpit, but it is a fact that many ministers are miserable pulpit-readers. Many a lady can sing Italian songs with considerable execution, but cannot read English passably. Yet reading is far the most valuable accomplishment of the two. In most drawing-rooms, if an article is to be read it is discovered that nobody can read; one has weak lungs, another gets hoarse, another has an abominable sing-song, evidently a tradition of the way in which Watts' hymns were sung, when he was too young to understand them; another rumbles like a broad-wheel wagon; another has a way of reading which seems to proclaim that what is read is of no consequence, and had better not be attended to.

SOUTHERN INTELLECTUAL SIN.

Southron as we are, by blood, birth, culture, and tastes, we are not blind to the inaptitudes and faults of the favored sons and daughters of our sunny summer-land. The greatest blessings are those most grossly abused. Eden was the scene of the greatest transgression. Educated Southern planters, with their wives and sons and daughters, with leisure, taste, and facilities unequalled on earth for the cultivation of literature and for literary pursuits, are the most negligent and indolent class, in this regard, of all others. Of all those who contribute anything in the way of tasteful and interesting sketches, or thoughtful and beautiful essays to the columns of the Advocate, we do not believe we can mention a single son or daughter of wealth and its consequent social and educational advantages.

Doubtless the enemies of the South will do—what we will not do toward the North—snatch up this statement as a precious morsel of intelligence, gratifying to their malignity. Be it so; we cannot help it. "Tell the truth and shame the devil." The South has faults as well as the North; let them be told, that she may repent and do her duty, instead of waxing fat and kicking against all responsibility. We have not developed the literary resources of the South, as the North has hers, and it is our own fault. We have no right to be jealous of the superiority of the North in this respect. Let her, in a legitimate and just way, do all she can for herself in the development of American literature. The South can do as well, aye better, for she has superior advantages.

Let her, then, arouse herself to adequate earnestness and labor. Cotton, money, school-culture, and political resolutions and speeches, will never compensate for the absence of a home-born literature and literary culture. The reading of a people, and, in this day, their newspaper and periodical reading, have more to do with the shape and color of their character and destiny than anything else. While the popular reading of the South—its popular books and literary papers—are the products of brains of another zone, she can never "call her soul her own;" its texture will be foreign—determined by its foreign food.

If the well-stored brains and ready pens that abound in the South were to enrich the columns of our papers and magazines, by the development of our abundant native materiel for thought, sentiment, and incident, we should equal those of any part of the world. We should have essays, and poems, and stories, and sketches, equal to those in the Ledger, Harper's Weekly, or Household Words. The South is wealthy in the materials of a popular newspaper literature.

RAILROAD FROM NEW ORLEANS TO NEW YORK.

On the last day of January, 1860, New Orleans and New York were united by railroad, by the laying of the last rail on the Mississippi Central road. On the first day of February, for the first time, the train passed over the entire route from New Orleans to Grand Junction, 25 miles north of Holly Springs, there connecting with the Memphis and Charleston road, the road to Richmond and Washington, thence to New York, and also by the Mobile and Ohio road to Cairo, and then by the Illinois Central to Chicago and Dubuque, and also to St. Louis. Thus from the shores of the Gulf of Mexico, extending by continuous rail to the West, East, and North, to the lakes and the shores of Canada, may be traced this iron net-work of man's genius, enterprise and industry. The effect will be, not only to draw an immense direct trade to New Orleans, which before the completion of this great work was being carried elsewhere, but, in a social and political point of view, the Northerner will become better informed, it is hoped, in regard to our institutions, and the South and the North, if anything can do it, will be more firmly knit together.

The time now for the first train to leave New Orleans for New York is 8 o'clock, A. M., and the time of arrival in New York is 8 o'clock, A. M., on the fourth day. The time now for the first train to leave New York for New Orleans is 12 o'clock, M., and the time of arrival in New Orleans is 12 o'clock, M., on the fourth day. The time schedule will be inaugurated. Already the effects of the opening of this road are making themselves felt along the borders of Louisiana and Mississippi. The cotton planter and producer are brought in direct contact with the merchant, instead of doing business through third parties; the lands are increasing in value, and improvements, in the small towns and at stations along the road, are manifesting themselves on every side. The celebration of the completion of this road was attended by a large delegation of citizens from Louisiana and Mississippi, numbering about two thousand; and the ceremony was performed by President Goodman and the directors of the road, of closing the gap, at Wyanoka, sixty-six miles from Canton, by laying the last rail. The excursion trains from both ends of the route were decorated with flags and crowded to overflowing. The greatest rejoicing and enthusiasm prevailed. Owing to the inclemency of the weather, the people were finally compelled to seek shelter, but they were compensated in the shape of a bounteous and splendid repast which was prepared for the occasion.

NEGRO PREACHERS.

Negro preachers were formerly very common in the South, and many of them were very useful. We have listened with delight and profit to many a sermon from preachers as able as ever came from Africa. Indeed, there are many of them yet, preaching more or less every sabbath. Properly chosen, examined and trained, they were capable of doing much good—a vast amount of evangelical labor which can never be done as well by white men. One of the most faithful and judicious friends and fellow-laborers we ever had was a colored preacher, in Alabama. When we took charge of the Texas Advocate we found him a subscriber, and shortly afterwards published his obituary. He died triumphant in the faith of the Gospel. Had there been no anti-slavery party, no free states, so-called, no fanaticism, no abolition excitement, this state of things, with thousands of other advantages to the blacks, would have increased and improved. But now it is on the decline. But few colored men are now allowed to preach. It cannot be otherwise, under the circumstances.

But what can be said by abolitionists in excuse for the following? A negro preacher has been fined $50 in Detroit, Michigan, and in default of bail, is to be imprisoned 90 days, the penalty awarded by law for negro preaching in that State. The Free Press says the authorities are determined to prosecute every violation of this law.

The Supreme Court of Ohio has just decided a case brought up from Hocking county, in which the question of the right of children of negroes to be admitted into the common schools of the State was decided. The decision of the court was, that the children of negroes have not such rights. In Illinois, the law itself decides the question, to the effect that the children of negroes shall not be admitted in the schools with white children.

THE SUNDAY DELTA.

We have no acquaintance with either the publishers or editors of this paper. We know not the persons interested in its financial success, nor the minds which utter themselves through its editorial columns. But we regard it a duty, as we feel it a pleasure, to bear our testimony to its literary merit and unexceptionable character. We are in the habit of inspecting the best and most popular literary journals of the United States, upon their weekly visits to our table; but there is not one which we read with more real satisfaction than the Sunday Delta. While it is utterly free from the claptrap, tinsel, and sentimentalism too common in professedly literary papers, it has the genuine relish of refined taste and real genius. Its editorials are among the best we have ever read. They embrace all classes of topics—literary, philosophical, political, moral, social—treating all with a keen insight, a wise discrimination, and an enlarged candor. The selections and correspondence are admirable. The paper is truly an honor to the South, and eminently worthy of her favor. Whatever may be our opinions of the propriety of the day of its publication, we are happy to know that the work is not done on the Sabbath. We make no invidious distinctions between the dailies of New Orleans; we speak of the Sunday Delta as a literary paper.

THE NEW ENGLISH PAPER.

We referred last week to a grand newspaper project about consummated in London, by which a thorough daily, devoted alike to religious and secular subjects, is to be brought, if possible, into competition with the London Times. An English correspondent of the Pittsburg Advocate gives some more accurate facts about it than we were able to state. He says: "At length the newspaper Dial enterprise is bearing something like fruit; it is to be issued with the new year—not, however, daily, but weekly. As the result of two years' hard work on the part of its originators, 7,500 shareholders have been enrolled, which, at £10 per share, gives a working capital of £75,000, or $375,000. Peter Bayne, Esq., M.A., has been unanimously elected editor-in-chief, and some of the first writers of the day have been secured as contributors. Mr. Bayne is well known by his 'Christian Life' and 'Literary Essays.' Since the lamented death of Hugh Miller he has edited the Witness, bi-weekly, the talented organ of the Free Church of Scotland, which has attained a larger circulation in Mr. Bayne's hands than in those of Hugh Miller himself." It was to begin with the new year.

PUBLISHING HOUSE FOR THE BLIND.

We had the pleasure, a few days since, of a call from our friend, Mr. Richardson, of this State, who is agent for the above-named institution. It is to be located at Louisville, Ky., and supported by the different South-western States. Mr. Richardson, though but recently appointed agent for this State, has already succeeded in raising over $10,000. He desires to raise $25,000, and he will do it, we doubt not. The enterprise is certainly worthy of the support of every christian and humane man. It needs no argument. It is its own recommendation. We have only to know that the movement is on the right basis, and of that we have the best assurances. We commend Mr. Richardson and his cause to a philanthropic public.

STATISTICS OF METHODISM ACCORDING TO COUNTRIES.

We have been endeavoring, says the Christian Advocate and Journal, to obtain the latest and most accurate statistics of Methodism throughout the world, and have given estimates, with a call for corrections. Since our last table was published, the latest Minutes and almanacs of several Methodist bodies in Europe have been received by our correspondent, Prof. Schem, of Carlisle, by which he will be able, with the aid of our late table, to give in his forthcoming "Year Book" (lately announced by us) the most comprehensive and accurate statistics of Methodism ever yet published. Taking all the new information thus obtained; we are now able to present, under a better classification, what we think may be accepted as a complete statistical view of Methodism. Still, we shall keep the subject open for further suggestions, if any good ones can be made.

I.—AMERICA.
1. United States:
Meth. Epis. Church, (North,) exclusive of Foreign, German and Liberia Conf.	954,918
Methodist Episcopal Church, South	700,000
American Wesleyan Methodist	21,000
Methodist Protestant Church	70,000
African Methodist Episcopal Church	20,000
African Meth. Epis. Zion Church	6,203
Evangelical Association	40,000
United Brethren in Christ	82,013
Minor Divisions	10,000
2. British Possessions:
Canada Wesleyan Conference	51,689
New Connection Methodists, Canada	4,527
Eastern British American Conference	16,935
Methodist Episcopal Church, Canada	13,352
Missions of the Wes. Meth. in Antigua	11,574
St. Vincent's and Demerara	14,064
Jamaica	18,056
Bahama	3,566
3. Hayti:
Missions of the Wesleyan Methodists	210
4. South America:
Missions of the Meth. Epis. Church (North)	48
II.—EUROPE.
1. Great Britain:
Wesleyan Methodists	404,744
Primitive Meth. (includ. the For. Miss.)	123,863
New Connection Methodists	21,869
United Free Church Methodists	46,234
Wesleyan Reformers	12,000
Bible Christians (including For. Miss.)	21,666
Church Methodists in Ireland	9,158
Calvinistic Methodists	58,577
2. France:
French Conference of Wesleyan Methodists	1,551
3. Spain:
Missions of the Wesleyan Methodists	63
4. Germany:
German Conf. of Meth. Epis. Church	1,079
Mission of the Wesleyan Methodists	200
5. Sweden, Norway, and Denmark:
Missions of the Meth. Epis. Church (North)	216
5. Bulgaria:
Missions of the Meth. Epis. Church	—
III.—ASIA.
7. China:
Missions of the Meth. Epis. Church (North)	15
" " " South	—
Wesleyan Methodists	16
8. India:
Missions of the Meth. Epis. Church (North)	29
" " Wesleyan Methodists	530
9. Ceylon:
Missions of the Wesleyan Methodists	539
IV.—AFRICA.
1. Liberia Conf. of M. E. Church (North)	1,558
2. Missions of the Wesleyan Methodists	16,168
V.—AUSTRALASIA.
1. Australasian Conf. of Wes. Meth.	33,128
2. Sandwich Islands: Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North)	30

Summary of Methodist Statistics.

	MEMBERS.	PR'S.
I. EUROPE.
Wesleyan Methodists, British Conference (Great Britain, Ireland, and Foreign Missions)	404,744	1,801
French Conference	1,521	31
Australasian Conference	33,128	174
Primitive Methodists	123,863	610
New Connection Methodists (England and Ireland)	21,869	122
United Free Church Methodists (Great Britain and Ireland)	*46,234
Wesleyan Reformers (who remain independent)	12,000	*400
Bible Christian Methodists	21,666	169
Church Methodists in Ireland	9,158	78
Welsh Calvinistic Methodists	58,577	207
Total members	732,760	3,593
Traveling preachers	3,592
Total communicants	736,352
II.—AMERICA.
Meth. Epis. Church (North) including For. Ger. and Lib. Conf.	956,555	6,502
" " " Missions in India, China, South America, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Bulgaria, and Sandwich Islands	342	19
" " " South	700,000	2,577
Canada Wesleyan Conference	51,689	356
New Connection Methodists, Canada	4,527	64
Eastern Brit. Amer. Conf.	16,935	111
Meth. Epis. Church, Canada	13,352	157
American Wesleyan Methodists	21,000	340
Meth. Prot. Church	70,018	916
African Meth. Epis. Church	20,000	300
African Meth. Epis. Zion Church	6,203	155
Evangelical Association (Alb'ht Methodists)	10,000	434
United Brethren in Christ (German Methodists)	82,013	1,278
Total members	1,982,634	13,209
Add travelling preachers	13,209
Total communic'ts in America	1,995,843
" " Europe	736,352
Total	2,732,196
Minor bodies whose statistics cannot be exactly ascertained, 10,000 members and 200 preachers	10,200
Grand Total	2,742,896

* The number of members is taken from the (London) Wesleyan Methodist Almanac for 1860, which does not state the number of preachers. The Southern Methodist Almanac for 1860, and the Protestant Dissenter's Almanac for 1859, give to the United Free Church Methodists only 10,068 members, and 161 ministers. If the former statement is correct, the number of preachers for United Free Church Methodists and Wesleyan Reformers together, cannot fall below 400. But as the Wesleyan Methodist Almanac does not mention the Wesleyan Reformers at all, perhaps 46,234 is the aggregate membership of the two organizations.

Gold and Silver.—The total amount of gold and silver yielded by all the mines in the world from the birth of Christ down to the year 1856, has been estimated at sixteen thousand two hundred and nine millions, two hundred thousand dollars.

Minutes of the Louisiana Conference have been mailed to all our Louisiana subscribers and preachers.

SENDING OUT ACCOUNTS.

We have delayed this, because our subscribers, of their motion, are paying up to January, 1861, at a rate that makes it unnecessary to send them accounts as yet. We believe that every subscriber we have is going to pay up, now. At least we shall wait awhile, and if any remain unpaid, we shall send the accounts. Let us have a general settling up, and then every subscriber will always know, at any time of the year, what he owes—$2 at the beginning of the year—$2.50 at the beginning of July—$3 at the end of the year.

GIVE US ROOM.

We very much surprised a friend not long since by the remark that it was much easier to edit a daily paper than a weekly. Strange as this may seem to the uninitiated, it is nevertheless true. The principal reason is, in a daily there is room for all the news, and in a weekly there is not. In the latter, part of the news must necessarily be left out, and the labor and thought of selecting from the mass that has accumulated in a week's time that which is most important, is no slight matter. And, in addition, the editor is constantly vexed by the conviction that much which he has been compelled to omit would be of great interest and benefit to his readers. He is constantly annoyed by the sense of incompleteness and imperfection in his journal, considered as a newspaper. If he attempts to give all the news, by condensing it into sufficiently brief form, the labor of such condensation is immense.

It is really sufficient to occupy one active, sagacious, and industrious man all the time. He has to condense, by re-writing, in fewer words, all the news of the papers which came to his table daily—often reading half a column to get an item of half a dozen lines. The mere physical labor, the strain on the eyes and body, aside from the mental toil, is very burdensome. In a daily paper, there is room enough in each day's issue for the news of that day without much labor of selection or condensation. Now what is the remedy for all this? The answer is, give us such a circulation and such support as will enable us to enlarge our paper. Double the lists in every place. Then we shall be able to give all the news.

John Edmond Jones.—A writer in the Memphis Advocate, giving reminiscences of the annals of one of the circuits in the Memphis Conference, says: "John Edmond Jones was licensed to preach this year, and recommended to be received into the traveling connection. He became a preacher of some note, went to Alabama, and died there." John E. Jones was not an ordinary man. We knew him well. He was for some years a member of the Alabama Conference, and afterwards located and practiced law, though still preaching as a local preacher. He was elected State's Attorney of the Mobile District, and afterwards Judge of the City Court. He was a man of noble and generous instincts, frank, bold, and self-forgetful to a fault. Had he never located, he would, according to all human judgment, have been alive, and an eminently useful minister, to-day. Peace to his memory. He was our friend. He suffered much, but died in peace. He preached as long as he lived.

Libraries in the Country.—From M. S. Rhee's Manual of the Public Libraries, Institutions and Societies in the United States, we learn that the whole number of libraries is 40,890, containing 12,720,686 volumes. Of the public libraries, there are 1,297, containing 4,280,867 volumes. Of these, New York has 750,421 volumes, and Massachusetts 632,800. Pennsylvania ranks next, with 467,717 volumes. A comparison of the number of volumes in public libraries in the larger cities, shows New York has 346,185, Philadelphia 271,081, Boston, 258,079. The Astor library, also the largest library in the country, contains eighty thousand volumes, six hundred more than the next in size, that of Harvard University.

Threatened War in Europe.—The following is said to be a correct report of the threatening words of the King of Sardinia, on New Year's Day: In reply to the hope of the Neapolitan Ambassador, that all would be arranged peacefully, the King said: "How arranged in peace?—not at all—the cannon will settle that!" And to the Spanish Ambassador he said:

"Tell your Queen she ought to unite with me, and not believe all those pastis of the priests."

"Homes of the Evangelists."—A worthy minister, who has an invalid wife, writes: "The people are very kind to us here. We are in the Parsonage. My poor wife says, 'Thank God for a home!' And I say, amen." And so say we. Has your evangelist a home? If not, build one forthwith.

The Black Republicans have succeeded in electing Mr. Pennington, of New Jersey, Speaker of the House of Representatives, by one majority. They had not strength enough of their own, by three votes, to accomplish it. Riggs, Anti-Lecompton Democrat, and Henry Winter Davis, American, did the Judas-work.

South Alabama Institute.—This is the name of an institution located at Lawrenceville, Henry county, Alabama. Rev. W. A. Tigner, A.M., W. A. Tigner, A.B., and Mrs. J. W. Guilford, constitute the board of instruction. It is in a fine country, one needing such an institution, and it has been well reported to us.

A Baltimore Sunday School Advocate, for the two Baltimore Conferences, in consequence of the abolitionism of the Sunday School Advocate, edited by Dr. Wise, is called for by a writer in the Baltimore Advocate. Baltimore, in 1844, was unwise, but now she is until Wise. And Wise is not "wise," for he "winneth (not) souls."

British Neglect of Great Men.—No public statues are to be found in London of Shakspeare, Milton, Byron, Newton, Bacon, Locke, Herschel, Watt, and the best of men whose genius, inventions, enterprise and discoveries have immortalized the land which produced them.

By official announcement, the people of the United States, either individually or by associations, are respectfully requested to take up collections throughout the Union, on the 22d of February next, in aid of the Washington National Monument.

The Presbyterian Expositor, which has for some few years been published monthly, under the editorial care of Dr. N. L. Rice, has been changed to a weekly, bearing the same name. It will still be edited by Dr. Rice, and published at Chicago.

Among the on dits of the day is one to the effect that Madame Bodisco, widow of the late Russian Ambassador, will shortly wed Captain Scott of the British navy.

Visitors.—We have had the pleasure, during the week past, of the visits of several brethren from other conferences. Among them, Rev. Allen Turner of Georgia conference, and Rev. Wm. Moore of Ouachita conference.

Rev. H. A. Nelson, D.D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in St. Louis, on Thanksgiving Day, preached a straight-out abolition sermon, atte[illegible]

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

FEBRUARY 8, 1860.

LITERARY NOTICES.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF FAITH. By Rev. Jas. E. Cobb, formerly Editor of the Memphis Christian Advocate.

The value of FAITH cannot be exaggerated. It is to be measured only by the value of Divine Revelation, Peace with God, Spiritual Communion, and the Hope of the Resurrection; for it is the means—the only means—by which the human soul, otherwise shrouded in spiritual midnight, can be introduced into the enjoyment of these unspeakably precious blessings. Without a faith founded upon a conviction of the divinity of the Bible, and nourished by "the operation of God," we wander in the darkness of infidelity, or remain chilled by a lifeless rationalism, or sink in the dead formalism of a dogmatic ecclesiasticism, or plunge in the despair of an inhuman and merciless fatalism.—Faith is Christianity in experience and practice. The fortunes of faith and Christianity are inseparably united. If faith dies Christianity, though its truth remain unaffected, is practically dead. Whatever is hurtful to faith is hurtful to Christianity.—Hence, the principal opposition to Christianity is levelled against faith—its stronghold in the world—in the hearts of men. Hence also, to build up faith is to build up Christianity. The friends of Christianity can do her no better service than to cultivate, encourage, and develope the faith of the world, and to war successfully against unbelief, in all its forms, and all its accessories. Upon this view of the value of faith, the book under consideration proceeds to treat of it, dividing the treatise into three parts—the Nature, the Traits, and the Relations of faith.

Christianity is living—human systems of truth are formal—manufactured; the latter admit of endless variations—the former is unchangeable, like a tree, a river, the earth, the stars, the soul, the Lord. It is, in short, a divine manifestation. To interpret it, therefore, according to the intuitions of unillumined human reason, or the analogies of human experience, or the facts of human history, is, practically, to deny it and its author. Not that it is in violation of these, or that they are not valuable in its interpretation; but that human reason is to always remember that it is investigating a divine system, with it all its necessary grandeur and, in many things, inevitable mysteries; and not to approach it as upon the level of a human system.

This work is a valuable one, and deserves well of all Christians and friends of Christianity. We doubt if there is a better book of the kind among us.

APPLETON' NEW AMERICAN CYCLOPEDIA. We noticed this work, regularly and fully, up to volume 5. Then it became apparent that the work was imperfect, if not partial.—The South was not fully represented. This was not suspicion or jealousy; it was a fact. Hence, we ceased to notice, though we did not denounce it; because we were assured that it was an inadvertency—not intentional—and would be corrected. Therefore we waited, willing to do justice. We are now assured, from the highest authority in this case, that justice will be done. We believe it will be done, though it has not been done as yet; there has not been time enough for it.

We have now on our table vols. 6, 7, 8. The last volume reaches from Fag, in the letter F, to Hay, in the letter H. Correcting the imperfections above alluded to, as promised, there is no work of the time more valuable. High authority recommends it as better, for the general scholar, than the Encyclopedia Britanica. The Britanica is more extended in its departments of science, mathematics, and general philosophy, but Appleton's is sufficient for the purposes of a Cyclopedia, takes in a wider range of topics, and being more recent, brings science, history, discovery, biography, arts, technology, &c., up to the present date. The object of a Cyclopedia is not to say everything on all topics, so as to supersede text-books and treatises on separate branches of science, history and philosophy, but only to give a comprehensive view of the separate parts of the entire range of human knowledge. It is a Universal Dictionary of knowledge, not an exhaustive treatise, and this idea is admirably carried out in Appleton's new work. With competent scholarship to prepare and supervise its articles, it is specially commended to the general scholar and reader, for its American character, its modern and most recent information, the satisfactory fulness of its treatment of subjects, its wide range of topics, and its large edition of the more popular information relating to biography, modern history, geography, general politics, and the arts. The cost of Appleton's is less than the Britanics, in 21 volumes. There is an edition of the Britanica now in press. The alphabetical order of topics is more perfectly carried out in Appleton's, which is also far more convenient for the student.

THE HOME CIRCLE. L. D. Huston, Editor. Nashville, Tenn.: Southern Methodist Publishing House. February, 1860. Vol. VI, No. 2. Price $2 a year.

This is an excellent number. The illustrated title of Father Abbauffol. The contents of this number, it seems to us, are attractive than usual. Nearly every paper has that peculiar attractiveness, and literary relish, which are characteristic of all readable and popular magazines. The editor is certainly succeeding in drawing around him a fine corps of the right sort of magazine writers. A friend, who had ceased to take the Home Circle, because of irregular mails, was in the office when one copy came, and after looking over it, said: "Here, send for it again; I believe I will hold on to it."

DIFFICULT QUESTIONS CONSIDERED; or, A Viadication of "Conditional Salvation." In answer to a series of questions. To which is added an essay on "Christian Baptism," with exclusive reference to "Restricted Communion." By Rev. Levi Stansell. Nashville, Tenn. Printed for the author. 1860.

This work is the substance of two pamphlets, on different subjects, now published together in one book. One was intended to answer the difficult questions growing out of Calvinism; the other was designed to show the inconsistency of the close communion principles of the Baptists.

THE ECLECTIC MAGAZINE.—Mr. H. W. Bidwell, proprietor and editor, New York, has obliged us with the February number of this magazine. The selections are exceedingly interesting as well as diversified; and the two beautiful mezzotint steel plate engravings, by Sartain, of the "Duke of Wellington," and the "Queen of England," after the original paintings by Claudet and Winterhalter, are alone valuable adjuncts to the reader's portfolio.

MISREPRESENTATION. A Novel. By Anna H. Drury, author of "Friends and Fortune," "Easthary," etc. New York: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, Franklin square. 1860. For sale in New Orleans by Thos. L. White, 105 Canal street.

This is No. 211 of Harper's Library of Select Novels, and was advertised in this paper a week or two since.

THE LADIES REPOSITORY.—D. W. Clark D. D., Editor. Cincinnati: Swormstedt & Poe. February, 1860.

This number is fully equal to any we have seen of this popular monthly of the Northern Methodist Church; and, we believe there is no abolitionism in it.

THE COUNER-STONE is the title of a semi-monthly paper, soon to be made a weekly, published in this city, devoted to Judaism, and edited by Rev. Solomon Jacoba—a number of which has been laid on our table.

THE STATE RIGHTS LOUISIANIAN is the title of a new weekly Democratic (Douglas) paper published in this city, edited by J. Bayon, a number of which we have received.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

ADVERTISING IN THE ADVOCATE.

The business public are slowly learning that the Advocate is THE GREAT ADVERTISING PAPER OF THE SOUTH AND WEST. Advertisements in it are more valuable than in any half dozen other papers.

1.—It has the largest circulation west of Charleston, and South of Cincinnati; larger than any other two weeklies in New Orleans, and be increasing rapidly—will, in a few years, double its present circulation.

2.—Of medium size, and not crowded with advertisements, an advertisement is not lost in it, but can be easily found.

3.—In our "Editorial Notices," which we give to every advertisement, we specify the page and column on which an advertisement may be found. We seek to make every advertisement valuable to the advertiser and to the people.

4.—The circulation is spread out over Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, principally; Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas, partially.

5.—It is the only weekly of large and widely-spread circulation in the great and growing metropolis of the South.

INNOCENT AND BENEFICIAL AMUSEMENTS.—While the city is full of christian people from the country, who, we trust, have principle and piety enough to keep them away from the theatre, the circus, and the opera, we advise them to go and see the Bible Panorama, and the Bunyan Tableaux. They are worth seeing, and involve no violation of conscience and duty. They are beautiful and valuable—really instructive and edifying. Be sure to go. They will be here for some weeks.

J. WRIGHT & CO.—This well-known and popular medical firm, of this city has on advertisement on this page which occupies the whole of the 6th column. They advertise largely and pay literally, and, as a matter of course, are prosperous. They have everything in the medicine line.

DR. MORTIMER.—On this page, fifth column, will be found the advertisement of this celebrated physician for rheumatism, dyspepsie, palpitation, liver-complaint. We sincerely believe Dr. M. is a valuable physician in these regards.

E. C. CATES & CO.—This establishment on Camp street, whose advertisement is in the fifth column of this page, has boots and shoes of every description. They are worthy of favor. Give them a call. We have tried them.

WINANS & HEATH.—This law firm has a card on the fourth page, third column. Mr. Winans is a son of the lamented Dr. Winans.

EAGLE MACHINE WORKS.—An advertisement of this establishment, Richmond, Va., will be found on this page, fifth column, to which we call attention.

PHOENIX HOTEL, Columbus, Miss, is advertised in fifth column of this page.

OUR OWN NOTICES.

TAKE TWO.—We frequently hear it said, or have it written to us, "I wish to take your paper, but I am already taking the —— Advocate, and I should regret to give up an old friend." Of course you should not. But why, in this rich and prosperous country, cannot afford to take two good papers? That practice is a quarter century behind the times. Sustain your own paper by all means; but every body needs a good paper from New Orleans, whatever else they may have. Send for the New Orleans Advocate.

ADVERTISING.—By advertising, this paper was largely supported in the days of its weakness. By advertising it is to be made strong enough to enlarge. Many of our friends do us injustice here. We sometimes receive a long advertisement of a Church interest, expected to be inserted gratis, when, for the same space, we are getting from other people $250 a year. This is a fact. Our advertising columns are worth to us from $600 to $1000 a year.

Patronizing Conference interests, like quarterly meeting notices, hereafter will be advertised, three insertions at one time, and noticed editorially, gratis, provided the advertisements are not more than three squares. Otherwise, the regular rates will be charged, in advance at that. Those now owing, must pay up before advertising at all.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.—They are coming in at the rate of nearly a hundred a week. Cannot each preacher send one each week. Let the laity—ladies and gentlemen—join in the work.

BRETHREN AND FRIENDS IN NEW ORLEANS, the New Orleans Christian Advocate is published in your own city. You call that city the "Commercial Metropolis of the South." Ought not your paper, circulating as widely as your trade, to have a large circulation at home? Our brethren and friends abroad, who know and esteem those of you engaged in business, say, "I suppose you have a fine circulation and hearty support in New Orleans!" You see what is expected of you. Is it not a just expectation? The Advocate ought to have ten times its present circulation in New Orleans. Will not every present subscriber recommend others to take it? They will do so, if you ask them.

A CITY EXAMPLE. A brother who is a clerk in one of the largest dry goods establishments in the city, and superintendent of a Sunday-school, and who has no leisure at all, is constantly bringing us the names and money of new subscribers to the Advocate. "Go thou and do likewise."

OUR CITIES AND TOWN AND VILLAGES. Have you ever thought of the number of cities, towns, and villages within the bounds of the circulation of the Advocate? They are counted by hundreds. How easy it would be for the pastor, the local preachers, and the members and friends, to greatly enlarge, if not double our list in each place! Try it, and let us know the result. Try it now, in the beginning of 1860.

IF YOU WANT PARSONAGES, circulate the Advocate. It is on that side.

DO YOU WISH A LARGE MISSIONARY COLLECTION? Get all the people to take the Advocate, and by the time you are ready for the collection, the people will be prepared.

HOW TO PROMOTE A REVIVAL?. Nothing is better calculated to do it than general circulation of the Advocate among the people, besides its general religious reading, its revival intelligence is inspiring.

A LITERARY TASTE.—All your children should acquire it. It is a charm and a joy. The Advocate is a literary as well as religious paper. It is worth more than thousands of books now called popular literature.

CONFERENCE AGENTS. How much these could do for the Advocate! Yet how little they do! And yet how much they require the Advocate to do for them! Let us make a "reciprocity treaty."

THE POPE IN AMERICA.

The Pope, as all the world knows, is in a bad way. Ireland is overflowing with sympathy. And now demonstrations of similar character have begun in the United States. A grand demonstration came off in St. Louis the other day. And last Sabbath, in this city, at the close of the Provincial Council, a grand demonstration, a procession through the streets, ornamented by military companies, and enlivened by brass bands, under the auspices of the Archbishop of New Orleans, and his suffragan bishops of Mobile, Galveston, Natchez, Natchitoches, and Little Rock, came off. An address of sympathy was sent to the Pope, and the people received, through the Archbishop, the Papal Benediction. It was rather a new thing to American people. Resolutions in opposition to Italian independence have a strange sound in American ears. Let us hope that our Catholic fellow-citizens are as good Americans as their superior allegiance to the Pope's temporal sovereignty will let them be. We copy the following just remarks from the Sunday Delta.

Archbishop Hughes and his suffragan Bishops of New York have put forth a very strongly worded manifesto on the subject of the Pope's temporal authority and territorial possessions in Italy. They protest, with great warmth and emphasis, against what they conceive to be the Napoleonic programme in Italy, as far as it looks to reducing the territory of the Papal Government and diminishing the number of its subjects. A similar expression of sentiment was given a week ago in this city, at the closing of the Provincial Council, in the name of the laity of the Catholic Church. We do not think that such demonstrations are likely to result to the advantage either of the Pope as a temporal sovereign or of the Church of which he is the spiritual head; nor do we conceive that they meet with the sympathy of the great majority of Catholics in the United States. Archbishop Hughes may, with his characteristic intemperance of language, denounce all the friends of the reconstruction and national independence of Italy, as "malicious enemies of religion;" but liberal and sensible people of no matter what religious faith, we imagine, will deem it proper to leave the political questions of Italy to be decided by the Italians.

The Archbishop assumes, in words to such effect, that it is essential to the Pope's spiritual supremacy that he should be absolutely independent and irresponsible as a temporal sovereign. The argument proves too much, and it proves too little. It is high church, ultramontane doctrine run mad. Between theory and fact, between history and religious dogma, it leaves itself no footing whatever. No king can possess absolute independence without possessing absolute political power; and no political power can logically be absolute without dominating absolutely over the entire sphere within which it effects or is effected by human actions. The Archbishop's argument would seem to involve, then, the universal dominion of the head of the Church as a King not less than as Pontiff; an impossible fiction that overturns his whole ultramontane theory. For such dominion never did exist in fact; and being, according to the Archbishop's theory, an essential condition of the Papacy, it must follow that the Papacy never did exist in fact. Consequently he has left himself no historical or traditional foundation upon which to erect his stupendous high church superstructure.

Archbishop Hughes admits the dependence of the Pope on foreign power for the protection of his temporal kingdom against his own Catholic subjects, when he intimates that if France deserts him and consents to give up the Papal territory outside of Rome to the control of the people who occupy it, the Catholics of all countries will not rest until he is restored to his rights and possessions. Men who reach positions of great eminence, either spiritual or secular, need not trouble themselves about logic and facts. The Archbishop does not. Otherwise, we might think it strange, in this connection, that it is the Catholics of Italy who are, at this moment, endeavoring to dispossess the Pope of the temporal kingdom, which Archbishop Hughes is persuaded the Catholics everywhere will insist on restoring to him. But since the Archbishop concedes that the Pope's temporal dominion renders him dependent upon foreign intervention for political security, it is pretty clear that the surrender of that dominion would be the readiest means of acquiring Papal independence. At present, as the pamphlet of M. de la Guerronière, entitled The Pope and the Congress, has shown to be a political and historical fact, the constant alternatives before the Pope are domestic revolution or foreign intervention. Short of attaining universal political dominion, there seems no other mode left of getting rid of these alternatives but getting rid of the occasion which provokes them. But the Archbishop does not see the matter in this light, and we suppose never will.

GULF CONNECTIONS.

We alluded yesterday to the extent and influence of the system of internal improvements in Texas. The following will give the reader some idea of the net work of rail that is in progress in that State: Galveston will in a few weeks be connected direct by railroad with Houston, and Houston is the terminus of the central line to Hempstead, connecting with Brenham; at Brenham commences the air line to Austin, for which, at the present session of the Legislature, a charter has been obtained. Houston is the terminus of the Brazos Tap Road, which is nearly completed to the Brazos river, and projected to the Colorado, it is also the terminus of the road running to the New Orleans and Opelousas railroad, of which twenty-five miles are in progress of construction. The Buffalo Bayou, Brazos and Colorado Road is completed to within ten miles of Columbia, which place it will reach in about two months. Thus, without any action on the part of the citizens of San Antonio, they are within half of a railroad and offered the facilities for reaching Galveston in thirty hours, and New Orleans via Berwick's Bay, in sixty hours, allowing ten hours for connection. Apart from these is another important road, leading from Indianola to San Antonio, which is now in process of construction. Their iron has all been bought. The connections between this place and Indianola are four times a week, which gives importance to this work. Another road, from Sabine Pass directly south, through a rich timber and grazing country, is commenced, which is to extend into Arkansas, intersecting the Southern Pacific Railroad. All these are but a part of the great work of this section, which will ultimately form one complete system.—Pic.

BAPTIST CHURCHES OF NEW ORLEANS.

This denomination of Christians have grown to considerable influence, and, for liberality in the support of religious worship, and the benevolent operations of the day, hold a prominent position.

The establishment of the first Baptist Church in New Orleans was made without attracting any public notice, so feeble was the little circle who associated themselves together under its banner. The charter for the society was signed in 1812 by only nine persons, and the entire membership, male and female, did not reach thirty-five.

The church was organized under the pastoral care of Rev. Russel Holman, now of Alabama, and known throughout the South for fervent zeal, elevated talent, and truly evangelical character. Its meetings for religious worship were then held in a rented upper story room in John street near Tchoupitoulas. If we do not mistake, this room was over a tailor's store. Here the church was held together, and gradually increased under the labors of its zealous pastor for nearly two years.

Having heard of the ability of the Rev. Isaac Peyton Hinton, then of St. Louis, but who had previously built up a church in Chicago, the church and congregation, in 1815, saw fit to give him a call to take the place of Mr. Holman, believing that his popular eloquence, his learning, and his enlarged experience, peculiarly fitted him for such a field as New Orleans.

Mr. Hinton was a man of work. Bold and energetic, yet persuasive and logical, he attracted public attention from the moment he made his debut as a pulpit orator in this city. Through his instrumentality, the Church and congregation took steps after he became a resident of the city, to obtain a permanent place of worship, and the Church at the corner of Carondelet and St. Joseph, were purchased and a chapel built. Here the church met, and grew in strength, until their pastor fell a victim to the yellow fever of 1819. He was not less lamented by his congregation, than by all who had learned to notice his high character as a man, and his usefulness to society.

Mr. Hinton was succeeded by Rev. Chas. A. Raymond, now in South Carolina, who was followed by the pastorate by Rev. Leonard W. Fletcher, lately deceased.

The will of Cornelius Paulding gave to this church the expectation of realizing from donations sufficient to finish the payment for the lots that had been purchased, and to make a commencement, at least, of a church edifice. Delays, however, and final disappointments involved in foreclosure of the mortgage on the property, and it was sold at Sheriff's sale. The chapel still stands, and the lots are now the depot of an extensive slate yard. The church for nearly two years remained without a house of worship or a pastor.

The opening of the will of Mr. Paulding, who died in 1853, showed that the First Baptist Church had been entirely overlooked. That the deceased made a liberal donation for the purchase of property, and the erection on it of a large church edifice, which, when completed, was to be handed over by his executors to the Second Baptist Church, which was yet to be organized.

The property of the deceased specially set apart by will for this object, was the old municipal hall of the Second Municipality, which was to be sold, and the proceeds to be expended for the second church. The property was assessed at $35,000, but being put up for sale in midsummer, was actually sacrificed, bringing at the auction only about $21,000, while, before the titles were made to the purchaser, it was by him, we believe, resold for its original assessment.

The executors of Mr. Paulding purchased the lot upon which the Coliseum Baptist Church now stands, and made preparation for commencing the building.

In the meantime, the first church was held together as a mission, a room over the Carrollton Railroad Depot rented for religious services, and the Rev. W. C. Duncan was invited to preach to the congregation.

In 1852, the Second Baptist Church was organized, and succeeded to the management of the bequest of Mr. Paulding. Uniting the means of the first and Second Churches, and receiving, at different periods, contributions from the liberal minded men of this city, the society was at length able to complete the present elegant structure which is so conspicuous a feature of the upper part of Camp street.

Success in this undertaking is due to a considerable degree to the untiring labor, the zealous devotion and the general popularity of Mr. Duncan. He possessed many admirable and unusual qualities essential to success. Warm and impassioned, yet gentle and persuasive, he held his hearers by the charm of his style and the zeal of the Christian. His earnestness begot earnestness in others. His confidence encouraged the doubting. His winning manners, his learning and his liberality made friends of those who did not fellowship his creed.

This gentleman, while a pastor of the Second Church, was created a Doctor of Divinity by the faculty of Columbia College, New York city, though they were Episcopalians—a merited and singular tribute not only to his scholarship but the absence of anything illiberal in his religious action. Under his pastorate he baptized 32 persons, and at the time he resigned his post (some two months since) he left about 200 members of the church, and one of the largest congregations in the city. The First church has about 40 scattered members, but no church edifice nor position.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE IN ENGLAND

Mexican and Cuban Questions.

The English papers contain voluminous comments on the President's message, for the most part of a favorable character. The London Times touches as follows upon the Mexican and Cuban questions:

"We turn to the situation of Mexico. American citizens, says the President, have been injured, and there is no redress. While the authority of the Constitutional Government is recognized at Vera Cruz, and the more important part of the Republic, its power does not extend to the city of Mexico and the State in the vicinity of the capital. To obtain redress the best plan would be to send an army to act in concert with the Constitutional Government; but if that cannot be done, the army must act without any such concert. Mr. Buchanan then recommends Congress to pass a law authorizing the President to employ a sufficient military force to enter Mexico and obtain indemnity for the past and security for the future. Volunteers may be raised among those who sympathize with the sufferings of their fellow citizens in Mexico. Such an access to the forces of the constitutional government would enable it soon to reach the city of Mexico, and extend its power over the whole republic." The meaning of all this is clear enough. Before long another Mexican war will sever new provinces from the unhappy Spanish Republic, and give them to the Anglo-Saxon race. In one sense this is a gain of humanity. Beautiful and fertile regions now desert, will pass under the hands of the cultivator, mines will be worked, harbors will be filled with shipping, and a new life will animate that vast region. It is not likely, however, that the Americans will seek to annex the whole Republic. The Mexicans are not the stuff to make citizens of, and another generation of discord and decay must elapse before their time comes to be improved off the face of the earth. Although we have not the slightest wish to interfere with the Americans, it is but right that an unequal force should be at hand to protect British interests in those quarters.

To the purchase of Cuba the President shortly alludes. Whether Cuba will pass into the hands of the Americans in our time we cannot say; but if one event more than another is likely to hasten the change of possession, it is such a crusade as that in which Spain is now indulging. To keep 50,000 men mouth after mouth in an enemy's country costs money, as we know to our own cost; and, if Spain is now prosperous enough, yet the time may come when the dollars of President Buchanan will be a sore temptation to the O'Donnell Ministry. To our thinking, the glory of beating a few African barbarians, and even the profit of occupying a fortress or two on the coast, will be dearly purchased with the revenues of the richest and most patient of colonies.

Slavery.

Nothing has been more remarkable of late than the tone of American politicians in speaking of the colored race and the institution of slavery. The "Dred Scott decision," itself the sign of a great reaction against the claims of the negro, has been followed to its logical conclusion in a manner which may well make the philanthropist despair. Planes of Americans have answered the New England agitators, by asserting in the plainest and most uncompromising manner the political reprobation, to use a Calvinistic term, of the African race. They seem to take a pleasure in the most offensive and cynical enunciation of their new dogma. A few days ago a correspondence was published, in which a free negro woman was denied the rite of the American Legation, on the ground that she was not—that it was impossible she could be—a citizen; and now we find President Buchanan congratulating the Union on the settlement by the Supreme Court of the United States of the question of slavery in the Territories, and speaking of the holding property in slaves as a vested right of the American citizen, which "neither Congress, nor a Territorial Legislature, nor any human power," has authority to annul or impair. "Now," he says, "emigrants from the North and the South, the East, and the West, will meet in the Territories on a common platform, having brought with them that species of property best adapted, in their own opinion, to promote their welfare." These principles "are manifestly just in themselves, and well calculated to promote peace and harmony among the states."

DOMESTIC.

Election of Clerk and Sergeant-at-Arms.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3.—The House of Representatives to-day elected John W. Forney, editor of The Press, published at Philadelphia, as Clerk, and Mr. Hoffman, of Maryland, of the American party, as Sergeant-at-Arms. Mr. Forney, it is understood, disavows all political co-operation with the Republican party. The postal deficiency bill was introduced, and will probably pass early next week. The bill provides for the payment of six per-cent interest upon contracts due from date.

United States Treasury.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3.—The Treasury is prepared to pay out the sum of $6,000,06d, so soon as the House calls for that sum in appropriations for Government expenses already due.

The Honmas Claim.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3.—In the Senate committee on the subject to-day, the representations of the settlers at Louisiana on the Honmas land claim, in which Senators Slidell and Benjamin—but especially the former—are charged with fraudulent action, came up for consideration. Senator Slidell was allowed time to send to Louisiana for certain documents to vindicate himself from the charges made against him.

Proceedings of Congress.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—In the Senate to-day, resolutions were submitted instructing the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to inquire into the expediency of establishing a semi-weekly mail between St. Joseph, Mo., and Placerville, California Telegraph Line. Also to inquire into the expediency of establishing a semi-weekly mail between El Paso and New Orleans in connection with the present overland mail route from St. Louis.

Mr. McLane and the Mexican Treaty.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—Mr. McLane is anxiously looked for here daily.—(He left for Washington yesterday.—Eds. Pic.)

The President is stated to be very desirous of the McLane-Ocampo treaty being ratified at an early day, by the United States; but that cannot be effected until certain explanations are made, which only Mr. McLane can furnish.

Post Office Appropriations Passed.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—The House of Representatives to-day passed the Post Office appropriation bill, for deficits and otherwise.

Cincinnati Markets.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 6.—The money market is decidedly easier. Western Mess pork is quoted at $17 50 to $18 per bbl. Flour is quoted at $5 75 to $5 81 per bbl. The market closed firm. Sugar closed at 7¼ to 8c. per lb. Molasses is quoted at 44 to 45c. per gallon. Coffees closed at 12 to 13c. per lb. The market is steady. Oats are quoted at 48 to 50c. per bushel.

New York Markets.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—The sales of cotton to-day amounted to 1200 bales. The tone of the market is unchanged. Middling Orleans is quoted at 11¼. Flour is quoted at $4 95 to $5. The sales consisted of 4000 bbls.

Mexican Treaty in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—The new treaty with the Constitutional Government of Mexico, negotiated by Mr. McLane, with the accompanying correspondence, has been ordered to be printed. The Committee on Foreign Relations, to which it was referred, will report it back to the Senate on Tuesday, with the recommendation that it be ratified. It will then come up at once for discussion in the Senate, on its merits. There is a great diversity of opinion in reference to it, and the discussion will be full and interesting. In connection with it the whole subject of our relations with Mexico will come up, and especially the President's recommendations in reference to immediate intervention, the protection of the Tehuantepec transit route, establishment of military posts on the Northern frontier, etc.

New Pacific Railroad Bill.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—The friends of a railroad from the Mississippi Valley to the Pacific are now engaged in perfecting a new bill by which all the conflicting interests will be harmonized.

Western Telegraph Line Completed to St. Joseph.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 6.—The Western Telegraph line has been completed as far as St. Joseph, in this State. The line is now open for business to that point.

Maryland on Federal Relations.

ANNAPOLIS, Feb. 4.—The resolutions of the South Carolina Legislature, transmitted by the Governor of that State, on the subject of Federal relations came up for consideration to-day, and an interesting and exciting debate took place. The speeches were generally characterized by strong Union sentiments, and aversion to the secession doctrines of the resolutions. The resolutions were again made the special order of the day for Wednesday next.

Seven days Later from California.

M. S. Latham elected United States Senator—Wreck of the Steamer Northerner—Thirty-three Lives lost.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 6.—The overland California mail arrived at Maiby Station, with advices from San Francisco to the 13th ult., seven days later than our previous advices.

After a spirited contest for the election of United States Senator, the Legislature elected Milton S. Latham, who was to have left for Washington by the steamer of the 5th inst., via Panama.

The Indians were committing various depredations in Mendocino county. Major Fitzgerald, of the United States army, died at Los Angeles, on the 20th of December. Very rich diggings had been discovered on the Klamath River.

The steamer Northerner, bound from San Francisco to Portland, Oregon, was wrecked on the 6th of January, near Cape Mendocino. Eleven passengers and twenty-two of the crew were lost.

FOREIGN.

Further from Europe.

PORTLAND, Feb. 4.—The Emperor Napoleon's project of free trade has been eulogized by the London journals. It is stated that the French Government are about to proceed against the Society of St. Vincent de Paul. The officials have been warned that they must not be members of that association. Advices received from Brussels announce that the Government of Belgium is sending an expeditionary force to China. The new Belgian loan amounts to forty-five million francs. The King of Sardinia has accepted the resignation of the Ministry. Cavour is forming a new cabinet. The Spanish Government has settled the British claims of ten millions and a half of francs. The Spanish army is still approaching Tetuon. The Spanish troops are commanding all the heights of the valley of Tetuan. The Moorish troops are encamped on the hills behind Magador, and are ready for action. Demonstrations at a riotous character have been evinced at Parma. A mob had been gathered and were demanding bread. Durinhall's recall force had been required to quell the disturbance. Letters received from Vienna state that Austria had abandoned the idea of renewing war with Italy. Fears are entertained in Europe that a war will break out between Sardinia and Naples. Prussia is about enrolling 40,000 more recruits. The scheme for the offensive organization of Central Italy has been matured.

Advance in Cotton Confirmed.

LIVERPOOL, Jan. 21.—The sales of Cotton during the week ending yesterday amounted to the unprecedented quantity of 103,500 bales. Of this amount speculators took 14,500 and exports 19,500. All qualities of Cotton have advanced ¼ during the week. The market opened, in the early part of the week, with a declining tendency, but under the effect of the favorable advices from Manchester, the improvement in the prices of goods and yarns together with the advices received from the United States by the steamer from New York, the market became buoyant and very active, and all qualities of Cotton experienced a slight advance.

The sales on Friday were 10,00 bales, quotations being barely maintained. Some authorities say the market closed steady at Thursday's quotations.

The following were the quotations by the Brokers' circular: Fair Orleans, 7¾d; Middling Orleans, 6¾d; Fair Mobile, 7¾d; Middling Mobile, 6¾d; Fair Uplands, 7d; Middling Upland, 6¾d.

The stock of cotton at Liverpool amounts to 600,000 bales, of which 452,00d are of American production.

Havre Cotton Market.

HAVRE, Jan. 20.—The sales of cotton during the week amounts to 5000 bales. The market closed dull. All quotations have declined from one to two francs. Orleans tres ordalnaire closed at 105f. Orleans bas 100. Tue stock of cotton at Havre amounts to 65,000 bales.

General Intelligence.

The free-trade programme of the Emperor Napoleon had been received very favorably in the Departments of France. The commercial treaty recently negotiated between France and England, it was expected, would be signed in a few days. Advices from Rome report that the Pope has demanded the recall of the French troops from Rome.

Rumors that the European Congress would meet about the 15th of January are not authentic. It is denied that Lord Cowley had any mission to London, or was the bearer of any proposition from Louis Napoleon. French accounts reiterate that he did negotiate the question of non-intervention. At the latest accounts the Spanish army was within one league of Tetuan. It is fully believed at Vienna that the Austrian Government intends to interfere openly and actively in the affairs of Central Italy. It is rumored that the British Government will disband the volunteer militia early next spring.

A dispatch from Turin to the London Times states that Cardinal Antonelli, the Pope's Foreign Minister, has resigned his position. This report had not been confirmed, but if true, it was considered as favorable to the meeting of the Paris Congress, and it was again rumored that the Congress would meet on the 15th instant. It is also reported that a treaty of enumerce has been concluded between France and England.

Branch Bank of Tennessee Robbed.

NASHVILLE, Feb. 6.—The Branch Bank of Tennessee, situated at Clarkesville, in this State, was robbed on Thursday night last, of nearly $18,000, principally in gold. No clue has been discovered of the robbers. A reward of $3500 is offered for the arrest of those concerned in the robbery.

Abolition of Duties on Cotton.

It is stated from Paris that the new free trade report, for some time under special consideration by the Emperor, is now nearly completed. It recommends the total abolition of duties on cotton. The report is very strong in its argument in favor of the principle of free trade, and will be laid before the European Congress immediately upon its assemblage.

Letter from the Pope to Napoleon.

A letter from Rome, published by the Paris Siecle, of the 7th, contains the following: A fortnight ago the Pope wrote an autograph letter to the Emperor Napoleon, the substance of which may be thus summed up: That the confusion which now prevails in Europe and in Italy is owing to hardness of heart and irreligion; that the evils of the Italian war menaces the Roman church; that the Emperor should prepare to defend the interests of Catholicism, because the Catholic world puts its trust "in him who has already done so much to maintain the cause of order in Europe, and given so many proofs of his piety." Pius IX then declares that the representative of the church will defend its interests so long as he lives, though he is disposed to grant his people all immunities compatible with the duties of religion and the dignity of the priesthood; he concludes with giving the Emperor his apostolic benediction. A cabinet courier has since arrived at the Vatican, bringing the Emperor's autograph answer, which has not been regarded as very satisfactory. It is added that the Emperor replies "like a sincere Catholic, but makes no engagement as a Prince."

COMMERCIAL.

MONDAY EVENING, February 6th, 1860

We condense the following statement from the New Orleans Price Current of the 4th instant:—

The past week has been a period of but moderate activity in our leading staples generally, and it will be seen that Cotton, under the pressure of heavy receipts and delayed European advices, has remained comparatively dull, with unsettled and depressed prices. Sugar and Molasses have been in fair request, at rather more full prices, and some few lots of Tobacco have been taken, at about previous rates, while transactions to a full extent have taken place in several articles of Western Produce.

COTTON.—With respect to prices, we have to remark that at an early hour yesterday there were rumors reporting a further bad decline, but these, however, proved to be without foundation, though they tended still further to unsettle and depress the market, which was generally very dull, though some buyers took about 8,50d bales, at prices so irregular as to preclude accurate quotations, though we further reduce our figures for the Middling and lower grades, which been declined ¼ to ½ cent per pound within the week, while the better qualities have not varied much from their position. The week's sales sum up 45,000 bales, taken for Great Britain, France, the Continent of Europe, Spain and our Northern ports.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	6 @ 7	Good Middling.....	11¾@12
Ordinary.....	7¾@ 8¼	Middling Fair.....	12¼@12¾
Good Ordinary.....	8¾@ 9¼	Fair.....	—@—
Low Middling.....	9¾@10¼	Good Fair.....	—@—
Middling	10¾@11	Good and Fine.....	—@—

SUGAR.—The sales of the week amount to 5500 hhds. We quote for Inferior and Refining 3¼ to 5; Common to Good Common 5¼ to 6¼; Fair to Fully Fair 6¾ to 7¼; Prime to Choice 8 to 8¾; Centrifugal and Clarified 6¼ to 9¾ cents per pound. The above quotations apply to round lots, but small orders of 5-hhds and under, could not be filled without paying a further advance of ¼ to ½c per pound.

MOLASSES.—Total receipts of the week 15,000 barrels. The prices obtained during the week were: Inferior to Fair, 33 to 38 cents per gallon; and Prime to Choice, 40 to 41¼ cents; half barrels, 40½ to 44 cents per gallon.

FLOUR.—About 6,000 bbls have been sold during the past week, at from $5 85 to $6 00 for superfine, $6 25 to 6 50 for ordinary to good extra, and $6 75 to $7 00 per bbl. for choice extra brands.

GRAIN.—The receipts of Corn continue light. About 10,000 sacks have been sold at from $0 56 to 0 6d for ordinary, and $0 75 for good white. Oats have been in moderate request at 55c to 60c per bushel for good to prime St. Louis. Bran sells at $1 70 to $1 75 for ordinary to choice lots. Wheat sells at $1 15 per bushel for prime red.

PORK.—The principal sales reported through the week were at $17 50 to $18 00 per bbl. for Mess.

BEEF.—We quote Prime Mess at $14 00 per bbl. for extra brands.

BACON.—Shoulders 8½ to 9; Ribbed Sides 10 to 10; Clear Sides 11 to 11½; Sugar-cured Hams 15 to 16 cents per pound.

LARD.—We quote 10½ to 11c for prime to choice prime, in tcs., and 12½ to 13c. for kegs.

BUTTER.—Western generally selling at 13 to 16 cents per pound, according to quality; and Cheese 11 to 12c.

BAGGING AND BALE ROPE.—We quote Kentucky Bagging at 13½ to 15 cents per yard; India Bagging, 11½ to 12c; Hale Rope, hand spun, 7¼ to 7¾, and machine made, 8 to 8¼ cents per pound.

GUNNY BAGS.—Limited parcels sell at 11 cents for light and 12 to 12½c. to heavy and extra heavy bags.

COFFEE.—We quote fair at 11 to 12, and prime at 12½c. per pound.

LIVE STOCK.—Beef Cattle—Western, 8 to 9c. per lb. net; Texas—ordinary to fair $10 to 16, and choice $20 to 25 per head.

Hogs, selling at 8 to 9½c. per pound net.

Sheep—Selling at $2 50 to $6 00 per head.

Veal Cattle—Selling at $8 00 to $11 00 per head.

Milch Cows—Dull, at $30 to $35 per head.

RECEIPTS, BY THE POST-OFFICE,

From January 31st to February 7, 1860.

A—J R Allen, $2; S M Adams, $8.
B—W C Brown, $1; H F Bonney, $5; W Beachamp, $3; J U A Bridges, $1. 75.
C—J J C

Children's Column.

THE EDITOR TO THE CHILDREN.

Our little readers had a beautiful story from Aunt Fanele last week. Next week we hope to begin a series of "Bible Pictures," written by the Editor. We trust our little readers will be highly pleased with them. They are not pictures of the usual sort. They are word-pictures, or pictures made out of words. They will give pleasant stories and sketches of the most important events and scenes in Bible history. We have not room for one of them this week. Other reading has crowded it out. Be patient, and look out for the first "Bible Picture" next week. Get your attention ready, and your eyes ready, and your memory ready; for you must remember these "Bible Pictures" as long as you live—even on your dying bed.

The Family Circle.

REV. WILLIAM M. PUNSHON.

The Reverend William Morley Punshon is one of the most accomplished and eloquent ministers of the Wesleyan Methodist denomination at the present time. He is thirty-five years of age, and has been an ordained preacher of the gospel fourteen years—having been born on the 29th of May, 1824, and successfully passed his examination for the Wesleyan ministry in the year 1845. He is a native of Doncaster, and is related, on the mother's side, to the Morleys of that town, and since of Hull, Sir Isaac Morley being his uncle. The only child of his parents, he early displayed that wonderful memory for which he is now so remarkably distinguished, and propensity to store it with facts which rarely interest mere boys. At the Doncaster Grammar school, where he was educated, he is said not to have discovered any surprising proficiency; but when still a child he was able to name nearly all the members of the House of Commons, with the places for which they sat, and the color of their politics. In early life he associated himself with the Wesleyan Methodists, to which religious body his family belonged, but public affairs continued to be his ruling passion; and the most surprising thing is, that his oratory, instead of adorning the Methodist chapel, should not have been electrifying the chapel of St. Stephen. When his grandfather and uncles removed to their establishment in Hull, he was placed in their counting-houses as junior clerk. He may have had talents for business, but his inclination ran to another direction. During the three years that he was supposed to be making out invoices and posting ledgers, he was absorbed in newspapers; and the only account he cared to keep was of the way in which the representatives of the people voted in Parliament. In the debates nobody was better versed up. The temptation of a daily newspaper was irresistible; and while the other clerks were deep in figures, he was culling figures of speech from the orators of the Reformed Parliament—watching the opening genius of Gladstone and Macaulay, noting the maturer excellencies of Peel and Palmerston, and marking the finest flights of Shiell and O'Connell for his own. The predilections of a young politician are seldom of much importance; but it so happened that young Punshon's devotion to newspaper studies threw him into the society of three young men who were earnest disciples of the then newly-born Conservative opinions of Sir Robert Peel and his adherents, and who held weekly meetings to strengthen each other in their political faith. Once a month each one had to read a paper to the rest on a given subject; and though not more numerous than the celebrated knights of the shirts in Tooley Street, they called themselves "The Mocticultural Society." Two of the three survive, one being a Wesleyan minister, and the other a clergyman of the established Church. In these weekly discussions and monthly lectures, Mr. Punshon first distinguished himself by possessed of those faculties which have made him eminent. Nor did he and his associates confine themselves to politics, for there is in existence a small volume of poetry, which they published conjointly, and to which Mr. Punshon contributed a piece entitled "The Orphan," of considerable promise. About the same time he received, under the ministry of the Rev. Samuel Romilly Hall, those impressions which resulted in his religious conversion. He then became a Sunday-school teacher, and subsequently a local preacher. He began to preach when he was eighteen years of age, and exhibited much ability in the pulpit. His first attempt was made at Hatfield, near Hull, and it was so successful as to cause the sermon to live in the memory of at least some who heard it, for they talked about it years afterwards when Mr. Punshon visited the place. Under such circumstances there could be little doubt that his vocation was not in the counting-house. But still he was kept in the commercial circle, far from his relatives in Hull he was sent to an uncle at Sunderland, to follow up the pursuit on which he had entered. But the books in which he delighted were neither ledger nor day-books. His refined fancy and polished taste made him an ardent admirer of the sublime and beautiful in literature, and at the same time his religious views led him to employ his talents more than ever in the preaching of the gospel; and as certain rivers are lost in marshes, we lose sight of his commercial career somewhere among the capitals and ironworks of the North.

During these events he had been bereaved of both parents; and his grandfather, at length convinced that secular business was not his vocation, made liberal arrangements for his being trained for the ministry in the Wesleyan Theological Institution, after a preliminary course of instruction at the house of his uncle, the Rev. Benjamin Clough at Deptford. There, however, he did not long remain; it being found, probably, either that his genius was ill-suited to the restraints of an academical course, or that by self-culture and the help of his ministerial relative he had attained a proficiency which, with talents such as his, superseded a more formal training. In the spring of 1845, a secession of the parishioners from the Episcopal Church at Marden, Kent, formed the nucleus of a Wesleyan Church in that town, and Mr. Punshon was invited to accept the pastoral charge of the seceders. He complied with the request, and under his ministry their numbers so greatly increased that a commodious chapel was erected, and always well filled. It was only a short while, however, that he remained in this place, for in the autumn of the same year the Conference, ceder whose jurisdiction the Marden Church seems to have come, sent him to Whitehaven, where he resided two years and attracted large congregations. From thence, in 1847, he was removed to the city of Carlisle, and two years afterwards to Newcastle-on-Tyne. In both these great centres of population Mr. Punshon at once acquired a worthy name, and became a mighty power for good, as well as at Sunderland, Gateshead, Shields, and the other towns of the district, where he never had to preach or lecture to empty, or only partially occupied, pews and benches. While stationed at Newcastle, being then in his twenty-fifth year—he married a daughter of Mr. Vickers, of Gateshead, a very estimable and highly accomplished lady, whose premature death in 1848 threw the darkest of shadows across Mr. Punshon's path, just when he had been appointed to a Metropolitan circuit, where enlarged usefulness and honors awaited the gifted and ardent ambassador of Christ; when most unwelcome, the King of Terrors came and took the angel of the pastor's home away to her sister spirits in glory.

From Newcastle Mr. Punshon was removed in 1851 to Sheffield, and thence to Leeds in 1855. It was while he was at Sheffield that the fame of the preacher became noised abroad; and his services were soon in very frequent request for special sermons, and also for lectures. It was, we believe, in the character of a lecturer that he appeared for the first time in London, some six or seven years ago. We well recollect the circumstances of his standing upon the platform of Exeter hall to discourse to the members of the Young Men's Christian Association on the Prophet of Horeb. It was not, strictly speaking, a lecture; but an oration of extreme brilliancy, suited in a high degree to captivate the minds and find its way to the affections of a youthful audience; and we never remember to have heard such raptures applause as that with which the thousands there assembled greeted each glowing period. The whole of the oration was delivered memoriter and with extraordinary fluency; and such was the literal fidelity with which the speaker had followed the manuscript, which was either in his pocket or at home, that, when it shortly afterwards appeared in print, it would have been difficult for the most retentive memory of the closest listener to have pointed out a sentence that the lecturer had not uttered. By this single performance Mr. Punshon established a Metropolitan reputation outside his own denominations, which was increased some two or three years afterwards by his second lecture in Exeter hall, before the same association, on the Immortal Dreamer, John Bunyan; and, more recently still, by that most masterly oration on the Huguenots, which tens of thousands in almost all parts of England have listened to with unbounded delight. With one or two exceptions, perhaps, there is no living minister in this country possessed of so much popular power as Mr. Punshon. It is something wonderful and grand to witness the spell of his genius upon miscellaneous audiences of from three to five thousand people in St. James's hall, Exeter hall, or the provincial theatre, who have paid from a shilling to half-a-crown each admission. Most people will probably prefer Mr. Punshon in his character of a lecturer rather than that of a preacher. In the pulpit he is unquestionably a master, and only second to a very few preachers of the age; but the platform furnishes a better sphere for the display of his varied abilities. In neither capacity does he give the people that which has cost him nothing, for so accurate and elaborate is almost every sentence, and so appropriate and polished every illustrative simile, that it may be confidently said he writes out and commits to memory every sermon or lecture that he delivers. Whatever he undertakes he does well. Whether it is in the preaching of an ordinary sermon in a Methodist chapel, or in the delivery of an ostensibly popular discourse in some great public building, or as taking part in the meeting of some religious or benevolent association, or as a lecturer, occupying the rostrum before thousands of delighted hearers, he is always earnest, always energetic, always effective. He succeeds, not by the tricks of art, not by an assumed singularity, not by pandering to vulgar taste; but by sterling qualities of heart and head, and by the honest enunciation of the truth he has to tell.

In a two hours' discourse upon such a theme as that of the history of France throughout the whole period of the Huguenot persecutions, ordinary and even very superior lecturers would have considered a manuscript indispensible. But not so Mr. Punshon. A few notes on small cards held in the hand were all the prompting he required when we heard him to go through his magnificent address. He told that old story of persecution with an inspiring eloquence that made men hold their breath while they listened, or burst forth into a tempest of applause. Vigorous, inventive, and impassioned, he adapted himself to the versatile tastes of his auditory, not by any apparent effort, but by simplicity and strength—by speaking right out the thoughts that were in him. He roused every passion, touched every emotion, and awakened every sympathy in the hearts of his hearers. Whatever may have been the subject Mr. Punshon has undertaken to elucidate, he has made it plain to those who have listened to his eloquent disquisition; and by a singularly graphic process he has pictured to the life the battle-plain of Ivry, or the quaint Bedford; Catherine de Medicis in her astrological tower, or John Bunyan dreaming in Woodford jail. In these scenes so vividly that the picture is painted on your retina—you see it in "your mind's eye." Then, like a painter, he throws a marvelous light upon every scripture incident upon you feel the breath of evening as it sweeps over the plains of Bethlehem and kisses the sleeping flowers; you hear the celestial music that perfumes the watchful shepherds with its harmonious strain; you see the lowly city, "least amongst the thousands of Judah," and the stable of a mean hostelry where a young child is born. As the preacher advances in his discourse, his rapidity proceeds like a mountain torrent dashing over precipices, and astonishing and delighting the beholder by its rainbow splendor. Abundance of rich illustrations lie ready to his hand. But he is not unduly lavish through conscious wealth. His figures are not overdone either in character or in number. Though the resources of common life, of history, of poetry, and of classic story are at his free disposal, there is nonornament for ornament's sake; and he once more attains the perfection of his art, by making plain and forcible yet elegant words, do the grand work which pretenders vainly strive after by means of a tumid magniloquence. The applause which perpetually interrupts him, is more frequently won by his pungent aphorism than by his highly-wrought climaxes. In one speech or sermon, there cannot be more than a few of these; but the single sentences that sparkle with beauty and explore with force, are numerous and almost constant. Great as Mr. Punshon's powers and stores of memory may be, and are, a watchful eye has been much desired if he does not, at least, in his sermons, think as he proceeds, and even pick up expressions in the midst of sentences. If so, he is an orator indeed; for to advance in unpremeditated periods of strictly artistic construction, and on the spur of the occasion, to fill in the rhythmical sentences with words which neither the nice ear nor the exacting judgment would wish changed for others of apter sense or fitter metre, is at once the sure mark and crowning exploit of declamatory genius. It is at the same time evident, however, that he possesses the faculties of appropriation, and this is the result no doubt of early habit of committing things to memory.

The first glance at Mr. Punshon does not prepare you for a phenomenon. His appearance is unpretending, not to say unpromising. Of middle height, broad figure, and sunny aspect, he seems a pleasant companion rather than a masterly orator. The features of the fleshy, beardless face are very well defined, but neither bold nor striking. The eyes are sparkling, but not full; the nose pointed, but not prominent; and the mouth and chin small and compact, but no way strongly marked. The forehead is but moderately high and wide, and somewhat retreating; and the head is round, and, in comparison with the face, not large, the light curly hair at the top being already scant. The voice of this good-natured-looking gentleman is not particularly musical; but it is of more than an average compass, and you have not listened long before you discover that he is under good management, and adequate to great efforts. In dress and manner, the speaker is perfectly unobtrusive. Indeed, were he not all right above, he might be thought to take a stand too little firm and steady to discharge the lightnings and thunders of oratory with commanding success. The ease and familiarity with which he begins attended him to the verge of his most solemn and impressive passage; and his words are accompanied by a gesture so quiet, simple, and unassuming, though dramatic, that the hearer is hardly sensible of its existence, the approaching climax reveals how much the rising inflexions of a triumphant delivery may be assisted by the rapid and decisive curve in which an uplifted arm and extended finger cut the air. Altogether, he strikes one as the very embodiment of cultivated genius; and his utterances cannot fail to carry conviction to the mind, that he is a man of a catholic spirit, having broad views and sympathies, and thoroughly in earnest. He is said to be full of good temper, and consequently without a drop of bitterness, even towards opponents. Not only is his turn for facetiousness and satire kept under strict rein; but, whenever indulged, it is wholly free from acrimony. We remember no instance, moreover, in which he attempted to acquire the ascendancy over his audience by mere terror and denunciation. He speaks like one utterly unconscious of unusual power; and at a public meeting, after delivering himself of some noble sentiment in language the most choice and striking, which elicits tempests of applause, he sits down as simply as a little child, and is presently enjoying the good things of following speakers more heartily and unrestrainedly than perhaps any other person in the room. Such then is Mr. Punshon; and may we not say of him as he has done of Gaspard de Coligny, Admiral of France, the military hero of Reformation—whose only fault seems to have been excessive virtues—Behold a man!

PET NAMES.

"Call me pet names, they are dear to my heart," says a gay young bride to her loving husband. And they are more or less dear to every woman's heart, though we may differ a little as to what they are, and their signification also. There are pet names which may be had without thinking, and which should be far dearer, and tenfold more significant, than any or all others.

"My Daughter!" Memory travels back to the days and scenes of childhood. The old home, with its familiar haunts and ten thousand fond associations, is a guest in our thought-chamber. The beleg whosen gentla tones sed warm, fervent kiss first lulled our baby cares to rest; and hn who was a guard from evil, and a guide to "whatever is honest, lovely, and of good report," both seem to be present with us, charming us back to the "long ago," by the utterance of the familiar name, "our daughter!" What a host of filial duties, loves and regards rise before us, as we listen again to catch the endearing tones that have now so little power to move as then!

"My Sister!" dear "pet name," as lisped by that prattling brother, whose love, true and unselfish, shall live and bless all along life's journey, and echoed and re-echoed by a band of merry-hearted sisters, whose confidence, sympathy and affection grew dearer with each advancing year. "My sister!" holy words, and should be spoken only in reverence and love. Priestess at the home-altar! how does her life strike roots of duty and love deep into the household of hearts! Precious names, with which romance and fancy have little to do.

Years pass—life has taken deeper, if not gravnr shades; the measure of our mission in the hono of our girlhood is filled, and a new title—a new life awaits us.

"My Bride!" A manly form is near us—a manly heart, all free from flattery or deceit, beats fondly, truly, nobly, and beats for us alone; while thn strong arm it moves, and upon which we are to lean, as hnd to hand we go to meet the lights and shadows of life, already encircles us, and for a moment, in which thn past and future seem mingling, we are at once sadder and gladder than we ever knew nor even before.

"My Bride!" The silence is broken—the heart is tuned to new melodies, and the life before us grows bright with peace and hope and joy.

"My Wife!" The same strong arm is around us—the same loved voice is calling us; and never, oh! never, was a pet mads dearer! It awakens the tenderest notes of thn heart, deepens thn soul's purest and holiest aspirings, opens thn gate to the great harvest-field of our noblest duties, and we can but feel we have entered life's "holy of holies."

"My Wife!" Its nttsrnce is an assurance that the heart and home of our husband are ours, to fill with joy and blessing, or misery and reproach. To us has been given the key to his happiness or his woes, and as we take possession of his confidence, let it be with such smiling gratitude and playful selfconsecration to his peace and well-being, as shall crown our efforts with the most happy success. Then will hin arm grow stronger, his soul braver—each day adding some new joy, until our lives become fully each other's, and his utterance of "my wife" shall awaken the most pleasing and holy memories, as well as the purest and highest hopes.

"Mother!" Thy hands are clasped in ours, while we press a soft velvet cheek. Sparkling eyes look love and thanks, while the lips are yet untaught in words. A treasurn has been given us; we feel the heavy responsibility it involves, and we look dowe thn future, hope, wondnr, and pray—feel in our new relationship a living beauty and unbodied holiness.

THE SMITH FAMILY.

"Gentlnmen," said a candidate for Congress, "my eamn is Smith, and I am proud to say I am not ashamnd of it. It may be that no person in this crowd nwns that vnry nncommon name. If however there be one such, let himshold up his head, torn out his toes, take courage, and thank his stars that there are a few more of the same sort.

'Smith, gentlnmen, is an illustrious nume,
And stands ever high in thn annals of fame;
Let White, Brown, and Jones increase as they will,
Believe me, that Smith will outonmber them still.'

Gentlemnn, I am proud of being an original Smith; not a Smythe, but a regular natural S-m-i-t-h. Putting a Y in thn middin, or an E at thn end, won't do, gentlemen. Who ever heard of a great man by thn name of Smyth or Smythe? Echo answers who, and nverybody says nobody. But as for Smiths plain S-m-i-t-h, why the pillars of famn are covered with that honored and revnred name. Whn are the most racy, witty, and popular authors of this century? Horace and Albert Smith. Who the most original, pithy, and humorous preachar? Rev. Sidney Smith. To go further back—who was the bravest and boldest soldier in Sumter's army in the Revolution? A Smith. Who pulvnrized with Powhntan, gallivanted with Pocahoetas, and became the ancestor of the first families in Virginia? A Smith again. And whn, I ask—and I ask thn question more seriously and soberly—who, I say, is that man, and what is his namn, who has fought the most battles, made thn most speeches, preached thn most sermons, held thn most offices, sung the most soegs, written thn most poems, courted the most woman, and married thn most widows? History says, and I say, and everybody says, John Smith."

FUN AT HOME.

Don't be afraid of a little fun at homn, good people! Don't shut ep your houses lest the sun should fade your carpets; and your hearts, lest a hearty laugh should shake down some of the musty old cobwebs there! If you want to rnia your sons, let them think that all mirth and social enjoyment must be left on the threshold without, when they come home at night. Whee once a homn is regarded as only a place to eat, drink, and sleep in, the work is begun that ends in gambling-houses and reckless degradation. Young people must have fun and relaxation somewhere; if they do not find it at their own hearthstones, it will be found at nther and less profitable places. Therefore, let the fire burn brightly at night, and makn the house-nest delightful with all those little arts that parents so perfectly understand. Don't repress the buoyant spirits of your children; half an hour of merriment round the lamp and firelight of homn, plots out the remembrance of many a care and annoyance during the day, and the best safeguard they can take with them into the world is the unseen influence of a bright little domestic sanctum.—Life Illustrated.

CURE FOR NEURALGIA.—Half a drachm of sal ammoniac in an ounce of camphor water, to be taken, a tea-spoon full at a dose, and the dose repeated several times, at intervals of five minutes, if the pain be unt relieved at once. Half a dozen different persons havn since then tried the receipe on the recommendation of the "Alta," and in every case an immediate cure was effected. In one case, the sufferer, a lady, had been subjected to very acute pains for more than a week, and hnr physician was unable to alleviate hnr suffering whee a tea-spoonful of the solution of sal ammoniac in camphor water relieved her within a couple of minutes. Whether the receipe will cure all attacks of neuralgia, is a question which wn cannot answer; that it will cure many we are well assured.

SUCCESS IN LIFE.—A man's best help is in himself—his own heart, his own soul, his nwn resolute purpose. Thn battle can not be fought by proxy. A man's mind may be aroused by another—his desire to improvn and advance himself be excited by another, but hn must mould his own stuff, quarry his own nature, make his own character. What if a man fail in one effort? let him try again. Let him try hard—try often—and the cae not fail ultimately to succeed. No man can tell what hn can do till he tries, and tries with resolution.

WIFE.—This good old Saxon word (wif) is after all the dearest and most sacred word in thn whole vocabulary of love.—Around it clusters all that is most beautiful, most chaste, and permanent in the tender passion. Into whatever forbidden paths the heart of man may wander, still it must return, at last, to thn hallowed namn of wife for consolation and rest. Any other relation between the sexes, however alluring to thn imagination, invariably ends in wretchadness, in shame, and degradation.—

CURE FOR COANS.—Place the feet for half an hour, two or three nights successively, in a pretty strong solution of common soda. The alkali dissolves the indurated cuticle, and the corn falls out spontaneously, leaving a small excavation which soon fills up. This is an almost certain remady.

JOYFUL MEETINGS.—There must be muey joyful meetiegs in tha better land; but whnn a son, saved by the truth his mother taught him, enters into rest and meets his mother there, the joy—oh! nan would think that ministering angels must reverently stand back from it, as nee too deep for them to interneddle with.—Leaves from Heaven for Life on Earth.

WHAT THE SEX THINK OF THEMSELVES.—I would not be a man for then I must marry a women.—Lady Mary Wortley Montague.

WHAT WE THINK OF THE SEX.—I would not be a woman for then I could not love her.—Michel Montaine.

The Spirit of the Lord will not suffer his choicest jewel, grace, to be always buried under the straw and stubble of parts and gifts.

THE PRESENT STYLE OF LADIES' DRESSES.—The low decided style.

Obituaries:

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

MR. ALFRED GALLOWAY departed this life at Madisonville, Miss., Jan. 13, 1860, of pneumonia, in the sixty-sixth year of his nge. He was born in Brunswick county, North Carolina, Sept. 25, 1794, but for more than twenty years has been a resident of Madison county, Mississippi. He made a profession of religion in early life, under the ministry of Bishop Andrew, and, united with the Methodist Church, of which he was a consistent member; and for the last twenty years has been a class leader and steward.

During an illness some months previous to his death, he remarked that he had had unshaken confidence in Christ for twenty-five years; and would like to sing God's praise to all the earth. I visited, and administered to him the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. I also saw him in his last sickness. I found him trusting in the Saviour, and rejoicing in the bright prospect of a blessed immortality. With great calmness of spirit and rapture of soul, he listened to the singing of his favorite hyme,

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly."

And thus in peaceful triumph he passed nway.

In the death of Bro. Galloway, the Church has lost a substantial friend, and the community a useful member. For years he labored to sustain the feeble society, at the place where he held his membership; and lived to see a gracious revival of religion, many added to the Church, and all his children, not only occupying honorable positions in the world, but recipients of coffying grace. When his attention was called to this fact, he replied, "yes, that is one of the substantial comforts." His youngest son has taken his place in the Church as an official member. He was devoted to the Church, loved her doctrines, her polity, and her rules. An intelligent layman, he not only sought to understand the doctrines of this Church, but to defend them. This Church will miss him, and the large number of persons who attended his funeral, attest the estimation in which he was held. The writer addressed them from 1 Cor., xv-57: "But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Sharon, Jan. 25, 1860. J. M. P.

☞ Southern Christian Advocate please copy.

DAVID D. SMITH, died 29th December last, at his residence in Madison county, Miss., of typhoid pneumonia, after an illness of a few days. He was born in North Carolina, but came to Mississippi a few years ago, with a widowed mother and other members of the family, younger than himself, he superintending and managing for his mother, and attending to her comfort as a noble son. He became a member of the M. E. Church, South, at Pearl River Church, and was an exemplary young man. Upon his sick bed he said, "I am young in religion and fear that I have been too much influenced by others." I asked him if he could trust God in his afflictions, "yes, oh yes." He then requested me to call in all the friends and have prayer, which was done, and he appeared melted into tenderness. When parting, said he, "I will meet you in Heaven." He was visited by a Baptist minister, who read the word of God, and prayed with him, and he responded Amen. He called his mother and asked her to kiss him, and said he, "send word to my brothers and sisters in Virginia, to meet me in Heaven; Oh! that I could see them!" and then giving his dying charge to relatives present, he closed his eyes forever upon all earthly objects.

Madison County, Miss., Jan. 25, 1860. JNO. R. LAMBETH.

☞ Richmond Advocate please copy.

MRS. FRANCIS F. BLOCKER, died in Marengo county, Ala. She was born July 8, 1845, was born of the Spirit in 1857, and joined the Methodist Church. She was religiously inclined from childhood; and remekable for obedience and devotion to her parents. After her conversion, her consecration to God seemed to be entire. Though the only child, and heiress to a large estate, nothing savored of vanity in her conduct. To her mother she said, (concerning a babe only a few days old) "take my child, mother, and endeavor to raise it as you have raised me—to live and fear God." Her mother asked her if she thought she would die. She answered, "no; I am going to live with my Saviour." She selected these words to be used as the text for her funeral. "And they all wept and bewailed her; but he said unto them, weep not; for the child is not dead but sleepeth!"

And in the same room where the writer, eleven months before, had married her to Mr. Blocker, he preached her funeral sermon to many weeping friends who had so recently witnessed her nuptials. To her husband she said, "good bye; I'm going home."

GEO. F. ELLIS.

Jan. 26, 1860.

SUSAN B. BLACKBURN, was born March 27, 1797, in Stokes county, N. C. Was married to Hampton Bostick in 1813, and settled in Lincoln county, Tenn. Removed to Madison county, Ala., embraced religion and joined the Methodist Church, in which she remained until her death. Moved to Dallas county, Ala., in 1820, and in 1822 her husband died. In the Summer of 1823, she was married to Dr. A. J. Blackburn. Removed to Tennessee in 1834, and in 1836 moved to Mississippi, Columbia, Marion county, where they left and lived with their son, Col. G. F. Blackburn, at Pordville, Marion county, Miss. Her health continued to grow worse until the 12th Dec. 1859, when she departed this life (seated in a chair, a position she had occupied for eight weeks.) She at all times, during a long and painful illness, expressed a perfect willingness to die, and firm confidence that she would be at rest in heaven. While engaged in family worship, she tried to shout, aloud the praise of him who soon took her to that rest that remaineth to the people of God.

N. B. YOUNG.

☞ The Nashville Southern, and Texas Christian Advocates please copy.

REV. J. E. DUBOSE, was born in Tennessee, and departed this life at the house of Mrs. Jenkins, in Pike county, Ala., in his thirty-seventh year. He embraced religion under the ministry of the Rev. John Brooks, and joined the M. E. Church in his nineteenth year. He served as class-leader for several years, and was licensed to preach at a Quarterly meeting held in Antiuga county Ala., where the Rev. F. G. Ferguson presided. He died on the twenty-fourth day of December, 1859, in the triumph of a gospel faith. Bro. Dubose was poor, a faithful minister, and a very pious, holy man. He has left a wife, six children, and a large number of friends.

C. S. HUET.

ANDREW PECEVAL, eldest son of A. J. and E. H. Hunter, died in Morehouse parish, La., Jan. 3. 1860, aged seven years and eight months.

Little "Percy" was a sprightly and good boy. Just before he died, he said, "I hope I shall live to be a good and useful man; but my Sunday School teacher told me the Lord loved little children; if I die I will go to Heaven."

JULIA A., wife of John L. Applewhite, and daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth Lawreuce, died of consumption, in Bossier parish, La., Oct. 26, 1859, in her twenty-fourth year, leaving three children. Sister A. joined the M. E. Church at the age of twelve; half of her life was spent in the service of God. She was uniformly meek, patient, gentle, and the dying hour found hnr "ready." "Be ye also ready."

P. M. GOODWYN.

MRS. NANCY GILMORE, died on the 3d of October, 1859, near Crawfordville, Miss. Sister Gilmore had been for many years a worthy member of tha M. E. Church. She was an experimeutal and practical Christian, and died as she lived, in the faith of the gospel of the Son of God.

J. A. PEEBLES.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

W. A. BROADWELL. A. P. HAYNES.

BROADWELL & HAYNES,
(Formerly BROADWALL & PAYNE)
COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
No. 40 UNION STREET, N. O.

HAVING RETIRED FROM BUSINESS, I TAKE PLEASURE IN soliciting for my former Partners, BROADWELL & HAYNES, the patronage and confidence of my friends, believing their experience, capacity and means, will merit its continuance, and enable them to give general satisfaction. [jo1] M. U. PAYNE.

W. R. STUART. DR. R. F. JAMES,
New Orleans. Madison Parish, La.

STUART & JAMES,
No. 42 Union street, New Orleans.

HAVE ASSOCIATED THEMSELVES TOGETHER for the purpose of conducting a COTTON FACTORAGE and GENERAL COMMISSION BUSINESS; are prepared to make the usual Advances to planters, in the way of supplies, etc., and respectfully solicit patronage

B. M. LOWE & CO., COTTON FACTORS AND General Commission Merchants,
ap6 No. 97 GRAVIER STREET, New Orleans.

PILCHR, GOODRICH & CO.,
COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS and Commission Merchants, No. 47 Carondelet, corner Union street, New Orleans. jy11-1y

A. H. May & Co.,
COTTON FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION Merchants, No 94 Gravier street New Orleans. au21y

J. U. PAYNE. J. P. HARRISON.
D. W. HOPPINGTON. WM. B. DAMERON

Payne & Harrison.
COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 51 Union street, New Orleans. dec7-1y

R. L. WALKER, New Orleans. ROBT. C. RUTHERFORD Caddo Parish, La.

Walker & Hutchinson,
COTTON FACTORS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 37 Carondelet street, New Orleans. je28

J. BOYD & Co.,
Cotton Factors, Receiving & Forwarding Merchants,
No 4 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.
apr 17-1y

LEONARD FASH. P. S. LAURANS.

LEONARD FASH & Co.,
COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
And Dealers in Western Produce,
61 MAGAZINE STREET,
Oct 24. NEW ORLEANS.

LANE, SALTER & CO.,
[Successors to LANE, MAYFIELD & Co.]
COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 79 St. Charles street, New Orleans. jy5-1y

JOHN F WYCHE & Co.,
COTTON FACTORS and COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No 119 Common street, New Orleans. my2-1y

SOUTHERN FIRE-PROOF ROOFING.
(Patented 23d March, 1857, by Robert Olenuon.)
OFFICE, 51 ST. CHARLES STREET, N.O.

We offer for Sale the Rights for Counties, Parishes, States and Territories, on liberal terms and time.

WE will receive orders and contracts for Roofing Cotton Gins, Sugar Houses, Warehouses, Mills Depots, Country and City Dwellings, Steamboats, Cars, etc., etc., and for covering Posts in Salt or Fresh Water. We fully guarantee all work done by us, and respectfully solicit Planters and Builders to give us a call, as we can supply them the material, with plain directions for use, at 40 per cent less than any other Fire Proof Roofing.

SOUTHERN FIRE-PROOF ROOFING CO.,
☞ Send for a Circular.

TO SCHOOLS, &c., &c.—A Lady, of several years' experience in Teaching, desires a Situation. She instructs in the usual English branches; Music, French, &c., &c.
Satisfactory References given. Direct to "Teacher," Helena, Arkansas; naming Salary, &c., &c. 3t

EDUCATIONAL.

DOLBEAR'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
OF THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS,

Founded in 1832—Chartered by the Legislature of Louisiana, with Agricultural and Mechanical Departments—
Capital Stock, $250,000.

In the new and spacious Iron edifice, known as
STORY BUILDING,
South-east corner of Camp and Common Streets,
ENTRANCE ON BOTH STREETS, OPEN DAY AND EVENING.

FACULTY:
RUFUS DOLBEAR, President.
MATHEMATICAL DEPARTMENT.
GEO. E. BRACKETT, Professor.
BOOK-KEEPING DEPARTMENT.
RUFUS DOLBEAR, Lecturer.
J. W. BLACKMAN, Professor.
ENGLISH DEPARTMENT.
Hon. J. N. CARRIGAN, A.M., late Sup't Education, La.; Prof. and Lecturer on Commercial Law, etc and M. B. MCCARTHEY, Professor.
FRENCH DEPARTMENT.
MARC. ROUX, Professor.
DEPARTMENT FOR PENMANSHIP.
RUFUS DOLBEAR, Lecturer.
J. B. GRIFFITH, Professor.
SPANISH DEPARTMENT.
MANUEL MARINO, Professor.
HERMAN DEPARTMENT.
GEO. GESSNER, Professor.
LATIN AND GREEK DEPARTMENT.
M. MARINO and G. GESSNER, Professors.
ITALIN DEPARTMENT.
RHETORIC, LOGIC, AND ELOCUTION.

This is the only chartered Commercial College in the South West, and the oldest in the United States, and has stood for
FOR MORE THAN A QUARTER OF A CENTURY
On its own merits alone,

Persons from 12 to 90 years of age, can attend to any branch they may wish.

Board can be had with the Professor, or other good families speaking English, French, Spanish or German, from $5 to $6 per week.

Catalogues with terms, opinions of the press and leading men of the nation, sent to all who desire them.

N.B.—To prevent mistakes or impositions, Students intended for this College should bring this advertisement as special directions, as there are every winter temporary-rooms open for a few months, all of course making wonderful pretenses and promises, and pouring flaming placards to enlighten the people of New Orleans and of the South! When three or more form Clubs and enter at the same time, ten per cent will be deducted from tuition.

☞ Citizens and strangers are invited to visit.

feb1 1y RUFUS DOLBEAR, President.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
Corner of Camp and Common Streets,
ENTRANCE NO. 80 COMMON STREET.
[Established in 1856.]

OPEN DAY AND EVENING THE ENTIRE YEAR.

A full course of instruction in this institution embraces Double Entry Book-keeping, Commercial Calculation, Commercial Law, and Penmenship. Gentlemen can enter for the full course, or any branch they desire, and at any time, as there is no class system, no copying from books, and no memorizing of arbitrary rules.

FACULTY;
GEO. SOULE M.A., Principal and Professor of the Theory and Practice of Double Entry Book-keeping, Lecturer on the Science of Accounts, Exchange, Commercial Correspondence, etc., etc.
W. J. KENNON, Practical Accountant, Associate Professor in Book-keeping Department.
J. M. DIRAHAMMER, Esq., Lecturer on Commercial Law.
H. C. SPENCER, Professor of Plain, Ornamental, and Epistolary Penmanship.
GEO. SOULE, Teacher and Lecturer on Commercial Calculations.
J. B. ANGERSON, Esq., Special Lecturer on Exchange, Business Customs, Commercial Ethics, etc, etc.
LEON LAUGRIN, Professor of Languages.

This is the only Commercial School in the city where Double Entry Book-keeping is taught practically, and as practiced in the New Orleans business houses.

Each of our young gentlemen has his respective desk, and proceeds in the opening, conducting, and closing of books, under all the variety of circumstances that can possibly occur in the various departments of business

Merchants, Book keepers, and young gentlemen wishing instruction are respectfully requested to call and examine our practical forms and peculiar manner of teaching.

For catalogues containing full information, and Balance-sheet Circulars, the most magnificent work of the kind ever executed in the United States, address, GEO. SOULE, New Orleans.

KENNER ACADEMY:
A Boarding and Day School, for Boys and Young Men.
VICTOR SCHELIHA, PRINCIPAL.

THIS Institution is located in the town of Kenner, Jefferson Parish, La., ten miles from New Orleans by railroad, and sixteen miles by river. The location is extremely delightful and pleasant The health of the place is unsurpassed during the whole year.

The course of study is thorough, embracing the English, French, Spanish, German, Latin, and Greek languages. Students can be prepared for any class in college, or for business pursuits.

The Academy Year is divided into Two Sessions of Five Months each, commencing on the First of October and March, respectively. Scholars will be received at any time during the year; none for less time than one session.

For further particulars see circulars, or address Principal.

FELICIANA FEMALE INSTITUTE,
JACKSON, LA.

THE exercises of the second term of the scholastic year will commence on the first of March. Pupils entered at any time, and charged from the time of entrance.

Extensive grounds and houses have been added to the premises.

A good library, a new and complete apparatus, a full and competent corps of teachers, comfortable and newly-furnished apartments, afford the best facilities for a thorough education.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES:
WM. H. WATKINS, D.D., President.
J. N. EVANS, Secretary.
Prof. W. H. N. MAGRUDER, WM. LIPSCOMB,
JOHN W. BURRUSS, Esq., Col. S. M. SHARAN,
F. V. D. HAGAMAN, Esq., Rev. A. G. MILLER
Rev. JOHN C. MILLER, JOHN MCKOWEN, Esq
Hon. JOHN MCVEA.
6m THOS W. BROWN, Principal.

STATE FEMALE COLLEGE,
Near Memphis, Tenn.

THE Fourth Semi-Annual Session will commence on the 9th February, and close on the last Wednesday in June, 1860. The faculty and terms remain unchanged. Every facility is here enjoyed for acquiring a thorough education.

The Boarding department is in complete order, and admirably conducted.

This institution, although not recently established, has met with the most encouraging success.

There will be a few vacancies in the College Boarding House at the close of the present session (feb 8th). Board can also be obtained in families of the first respectability, and within a convenient distance of the College.

For circulars or particular information, apply to D. Laughlin, Vice President. S. WATSON, President.

PROFESSIONAL.

JAS. J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Livingston, Alabama.
[au24] ☞ Will Practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties.

DR. E. D BEACH, HAVING RESUMED THE practice of Medicine, offers his Professional services to the citizens of New Orleans.

N. B.—Special attention paid to diseases of the RECTUM, PILES, FISTULA IN ANO, ETC.—Fistula in ano permanently cured without the use of the knife, cautery, pain, or confinement whatever. Office No. 6, Baronne street near Canal. ap27.

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY AT LAW, BATON Rouge.
REFERENCES

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 7. WHOLE NUMBER 470.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1860.

$2 00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE. OFFICE—119 CAMP ST.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

BRIEF CRITIQUES ON ARTICLES IN OUR QUARTERLY.—NO. 1.

I have never read any work of the late Archibald Alexander. His "Theory of Conscience" is reviewed in the last number of our Quarterly; and from that article it is easy to gather his views on this subject, and also to see how they have been misunderstood by the reviewer. The doctrine affirmed by Dr. Alexander, and denied by his critic, is this: Conscience is an original, simple, universality of the mind. The reviewer agreed with Dr. A. in his analysis of an exercise of the conscience into two parts: 1. An intellectual judgment, to instance that such an act is or is not right. 2. An emotion, viz. of obligation to perform it or not. But the reviewer is at a loss to understand how the Dr. can reconcile this analysis with the assertion that the moral faculty is simple and original, and hence accuses him of contradicting himself and proving the contrary of the doctrine he sought to establish. He is beset by two difficulties: How can that be a simple faculty which performs a complex operation, judging what is right and feeling its obligation? And what need is there of any special moral faculty, as we have the head to know and the heart to feel? Conscience can never be mistaken for a cause itself, but is the product of the mind and emotions, which are simple and irresolvable faculties of our constitution," p. 36. "The mind and emotions pronounce in concert one moral judgment, and you have no need to conjure up a separate faculty—e. g., a conscience faculty—to do the same thing," p. 37.

The reviewer is answered, and Dr. Alexander vindicated in one short statement: The conscience is not separate from and co-ordinate with the intellect and sensibilities, but is the mind as cognizant of moral truth, and the heart as affected by it. It is intellectual as far as it judges that one act is right and another wrong; it belongs to the emotive part of our nature so far as it feels that the right ought to be done and wrong ought to be shunned. It is an original faculty, because it is an essential principle of the mind from birth; universal, because every man recognizes the distinction between right and wrong, approves the one and condemns the other; simple, because this moral idea can not be resolved into other ideas, neither can this moral feeling be resolved into other feelings. When I pronounce an act right and binding, I do not mean that it is useful, or agreeable, or customary; there are no simpler terms by which I can explain my meaning, because the notion of right is simple and indivisible, and therefore indefinable. It is an ultimate idea, distinct from all others, uncompounded. So the sense of moral obligation, that this ought to be done and the other to be left undone, that I am guilty if I act not thus, is a peculiar feeling which cannot be resolved into simpler elements. We concede, therefore, to the critic that the head and heart suffice to account for moral judgments; but the question is, what faculties and sensibilities constitute the head and heart?

Is this moral sense universal? Dr. A. affirms. The reviewer seems afraid to take either the affirmative or negative. I suppose that he means to assail the affirmative in this sentence: "Ah, those heathens, it must be confessed, have a very worthless universal original moral faculty, or make a horribly bad use of it!" But what sort of an argument is that? Certain very ignorant, narrow-minded barbarians have few and perverse ideas of truth; but this does not prove the absence of an intellectual nature by which they do know some things to be true and others to be false, and which may be enlivened and enlightened by the proper means. You cannot find men anywhere who are utterly devoid of the idea that some things ought to be done, or who have not one right notion. To instance, did ever man believe ingratitude to be better than or as commendable as gratitude? It does not follow that because every man has a conscience, or faculty by which he conceives the idea of right, that his moral judgments are correct; just as every one knows that there is such a reality as truth, though no man knows all things that are true. He has a capacity to know, but he must be taught; he has sensibility but it must be trained. Surely the capacity to understand the moral quality of actions and the susceptibility to moral emotions are not worthless."

But the most objectionable feature of this review is its theory of the ground of moral obligation. In opposition to the doctrine that we ought to do right because it is right—that we intuitively know and instinctively feel the authority of the right and our obligation to obey it as the law over us and over all moral creatures; he advances this theory: "Wrong done produces pain; duty done yields pleasure; and, therefore, we ought to do the one and refrain from doing the other; and will do our utmost to prevent a divorce between these causes and effects," p. 37. To this "therefore" I emphatically object. It is Epicurean, but not Christian philosophy and morals. I eat a good dinner because it "yields pleasure," and I have a decayed tooth drawn because it "produced pain;" but I do not love God and practice honesty merely for my gratification. I do not refrain from vice and crime thro' mere dislike to pain. I may even eat to the glory of God, but only by eating from another motive besides the pleasure derived from the satisfaction of appetite. Surely it is a queer notion of duty that it consists in pleasing myself, and of sin that it is a violation of the obligation to spare myself all the pain which I may avoid!

J. C. G.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

METHODISM IN LOUISIANA.

[Concluded.]

PASTORAL VISITATION.—When a minister substitutes for the discharge of this holy duty, the study of law, medicine, literature, or pulpit eloquence, the results, especially in large cities, are deplorable. Civil or official distinction may follow the man, but we have observed a decline of spirituality, and a corresponding increase of the worldly element in his church and congregation. Members of mature piety appear to be stereotyped, while those not established in fellowship with God, are diluted by conformity to the tastes and habits of unrenewed persons around them.

Social and pastoral visitation are perfectly distinct. The merely social minister is an unfaithful pastor. He stands in need of a deeper and daily baptism of the constraining love of Christ to elevate and sustain him; otherwise, his social disposition being unsanctified, will weaken his ministerial influence, and destroy confidence in the earnestness of his pulpit addresses. The pages of our Discipline on pastoral visiting are a constant and delightful stimulant to those who really feel they have nothing to do but win souls; to others they are a condemning letter.

A third mode of spreading scriptural holiness confided to the Methodist ministry is, the diffusion of our CHURCH LITERATURE. With unfeigned gratitude to God we state that the weekly journals, books and periodicals of the Southern Church are altogether evangelical. The weeklies are ably and safely conducted, and supply a large amount of literary and general information. As religious papers they are unequalled in the harmony of their doctrines, the mildness of their spirit and diction, the wisdom of their practical views of society, and the impulse given to education, morality, and revealed righteousness. When reviled, they revile not again, but, like the joyful sunbeam, float over the low clouds of scurrility and falsehood, on their heavenly mission of light and peace. To us they appear to fall from the hands of the angel having the everlasting gospel, on his flight to every nation, kindred, tongue and people, and feel ourselves honored by recommending such messengers of truth and love in the domestic circles we visit. Of the Quarterly Review in its present form, Bishop Soule has recently said, "the honor of the Methodist body will rise and fall with it. The sound judgment, exquisite taste, extraordinary industry, and gracious unction that distinguishes the editor, appear in its lucid arrangement, comprehensive and popular matter." As the same high intellect conducts the preparation of all our church books, it should, for this and subjoined reasons, be esteemed a high privelege to engage in their distribution.

Fiction, that stimulates the imagination and passions, teems from the press. The ruinous effects of it on the young of both sexes are daily apparent. Affectation of manhood, dislike to patient industry, disregard of experienced counsels, wild and unprincipled speculation, prodigality, ill-considered and unhappy marriages, divorces, false notions of honor, murder and suicide, threaten from this cause the stability of society. Fiction is the bane of reason and the nurse of insanity; it vitiates the taste and disqualifies the mind for close application or analysis in mathematical, mental and physical science. It induces superficial attention to the realities of life, and is the foe of all true greatness of character. The magnitude of the evil should animate to the application of the antidote. We have the remedy in our hands—truth in every form and style, historic, scientific and divine, from the tract of four pages to the octavos of the traveller and commentator. Truth alone conveys immortality. Let us arise, hasten to save our youth, age, and nation, and scatter it broad-cast over the land.

It nerves the soul for this holy toil to remember that against the insidious and soul-destroying doctrines of Rome this is an irresistible power. From the day in which Luther rent her by the word, from her loftiest turret to her deepest foundation, she trembles to her fall. Her bold substitution of man for God, her consummate idolatry, and opposition to the education of the masses, declare the date of her civilization is past. Earth heaves to reject her government, fearful elements are gathering around it, her glory vanishes in the consuming brightness of truth, her goodly show withers before the spring time of righteousness smiling around, and the fragments of her colossal form are ready to separate in irretrievable confusion. Take ye away her battlements, is the command of God: present the truth, and her defences fall; circulate quietly, zealously, indefatigably, our heaven-born literature; let it be planted along the margin of our streams; penetrate the retired dwellings in our woods and islands; glide into the city lanes, the homes of the humble poor; and be borne by our shipping over every sea to every land.

Brethren! let us gird on the whole armor of God, and work while it is called to-day, for the night cometh when no man can work.

J. H. BOYD.

REMINISCENCES OF COKESBURY (S. C.) MANUAL-LABOR SCHOOL.

BY A STUDENT OF 1837.

DR. OLIN AND JAMES E. GLENN.

The reader of Dr. Olin's Life finds that he struck into that Southern life which developed him, at Cokesbury. A young man, broken in health, without money or friends, he picked up a newspaper in Augusta, Georgia, and, "guided by an advertisement," went to a little village in Abbeville District, (I do not remember the name it bore then,) to apply for a place in the school. As he approached, a man in his shirt sleeves was hewing logs. He was one of the trustees—Rev. James E. Glenn. Olin was a skeptic, but soon became religious, and then was licensed to preach. I have been shown the old church where that brilliant ministerial career began, and even the oak tree under which, it was said, the awakened sinner wrestled for pardon.

The school grew into a manual-labor institution, and was taken under the patronage of the South Carolina Conference. In honor of Coke and Asbury, it was called Cokesbury. January, 1837, witnessed a great coming in of boys, large and small, at Cokesbury. From the upper and lower districts they came, and a few from over the Georgia line. The manual-labor experiment was new, and popular.

TRIP TO COKESBURY.

Among the rest, a father from the low country brought up two sons, of twelve and thirteen and a half years old, and small for their age. In the gig, he had one at his side, the hair-trunk strapped on behind; the other rode roan Hector, at an easy pace keeping up with his match, Whitefoot, in the shafts. Every stage of that trip, almost every mile of it, do I remember. Rocks, wonderful things to a boy from the sand regions; some as big as your fist; others as big as your head.

"Father, what are these? Are these the things that make the mountains we see on the maps?"

"That is what I am taking you to Cokesbury for, my son—to learn all about it, and the like of it."

Higher up the country, the woods grew. A chestnut tree! The very tree the delicious, mellow nuts grew on! Well, the Eldorado must be near.

At Chesterfield Court-House, the tavern-keeper showed us a room which the great M'Duffie occupied when reading law—called M'Duffie's room. His name was then, and long after, a household word in South Carolina. How many lectures on the advantage of education, the profit of knowledge, the importance of improving early opportunities, did that small room, and the history of him who had once been an obscure student in it, afford for us two along the way! In all shapes and by every art the lessons was plied, to rouse ambition; to kindle hope, to inspire courage. "See, my sons, see what education can do for a poor young man. Nothing can keep him back. Think what M'Duffie was then, and is now. Improve your minds well, and, though you may have nothing else, an education is more than a fortune. Wealth may be lost; that stays by you," etc.

Clay, and more clay, and hardly any white sand! Strange country. No long-leaf pine trees. How do the folks kindle fires in these parts? What hills!

A father must not betray any weakness. O no! But—

"My sons, you know your mother will be anxious about you; therefore you must write home very often. You mother will feel uneasy if she does not get a letter from you every week. So take it turn about, and write."

Of course he left no particular interest in the weekly bulletins!

"Now you must behave well. Remember to be polite to everybody. If, however, rude boys try to run over you and abuse you, don't whine or back out. Fight, even if you get whipped. Stand up to your rights: use no bad words, though. You two little fellows are by yourselves—no kin, no acquaintances, and far from home. Stick close together; make up for one another."

A sad, lone feeling came over two little fellows as they stood under the hickory tree upon which the bell was swung in those days. Father had turned homeward, and Hector's tail was just disappearing in a turn of the road, as he trotted loose after the gig. A stern but loving parent, doubtless he breathed to heaven, as he left us, that patriarchial prayer: "The Angel that redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads." And the lads were blessed—how, I shall tell. One only is now left. The other is not; and he, the father, has passed over too. We stood gazing wistfully the way the gig went, too full to talk. But there is relief—the bell rang to duty.

A FINE BODY OF YOUNG MEN.

Cokesbury had, at the opening of that session, the finest body of young men I ever saw. Let me see how many of them I now can mention as preachers: Zimmerman, Barnes, Whitby, Collier, Mood, M'Curty, Denton, Bass, Kilgore, and Comer. One of the Grahams has since become a preacher. At the last South Carolina Conference, the Report of the Education Committee stated that forty-seven of its active members received their early education at that institution. Jacob Nipper was a quasi pupil. He also taught the smaller classes. Great in prayer. Some of his prayers sound in my heart to this day. Long ago (I read it in the papers) he went up from a circuit or swamp mission to heaven. Mood (sweet spirit) was the only aristocrat in labor-hours. Knowing something of gunsmithery, he had his little board shop, with forge, anvil, and vice; and there he would hammer and file, in the shade, his three hours, while the rest of us were in the hot sun. How I used to envy his lot!

A PRAYER-MEETING SCENE.

Of Denton I can relate a striking coincidence in the beginning and close of his Christian life. But this brings me to the revival, which was the turning-point with many of us for time and eternity. The old wooden-legged and wonderful man, James Donnelly, was preacher in charge. Bowman was his colleague. Besides these, Wightman, Spain, Talley, occasionally preached in the chapel for us. Some time in February, the pious students, observing and taking advantage of serious impressions in the school, called a prayer-meeting. It was held on Sunday night, after preaching, in one of the largest rooms. How opportune is a good prayer-meeting! It is like shaking the tree when the fruit is ready to fall; or like drawing to shore the full net. It presents to the sinner just what he needs—an opportunity to pass from conviction to action. Such a well-timed prayer-meeting was this. It had got well under way before I was aware of it. In a room above, I was writing one of those letters that had been bespoken for my mother. A noise, as of praise and crying. Following the sound, I entered a half-open door. What a scene! One of the youngest boys had just professed conversion. All round the room others were kneeling. Zimmerman was in his glory, and so the rest. The steward, Gabriel Hodges, (blessings on him if he still lives!) came in among the slain of the Lord, like a good Samaritan, pouring in oil and wine. He could work the boys equally well in a prayer-meeting or a cottonpatch. John Tucker, though no preacher, was the greatest of all in my eyes. Gloomy in spirit sometimes, and with a deep, mellow voice, he cried out as de profundis. In the groves, at dead of night, I have often heard him, where he had retired for secret prayer. Complaint and desire getting the better of his reserve, his solemn voice would rise and float far away on the still air. He made me think of wrestling Jacob. He had a peculiar way of clenching his teeth in recitation, and in conjugating and declining moved his lips only. Large in mind and body, he seemed to be contending secretly with foes of equal proportion. Rooming as I did with Nipper, his friend, I often overheard him in long talks telling of the doubts he was tempted to. Ambitious and capable, and of a truly noble soul, that instinctively spurned meanness and aspired to greatness, Tucker, by his temperament, was such an one as this:

"I have a sin of fear, that when I've spun
My last thread, I shall perish on the shore."

Last year I read in the papers that J. Tucker, a Senator in the Georgia Legislature, and a Judge; with prospects of higher promotion, committed suicide, leaving an affecting note stating that he was miserable. Was it my early friend or not?

Tucker was in the thickest of that prayer-meeting. And M'Carty wept with those who wept, and rejoiced with them that rejoiced. As I entered the door, the scene daguerreotyped itself on my mind for ever—the persons, the positions, the employments.

"JESUS! JESUS! JESUS!"

But who is this penitent, the first on my left, agonizing as if all his bones were broken? I was slow in believing my eyes. He among all our young men, there was one most wicked, I had, in my own mind, set him down as William Denton. His scorn of piety was withering. He was among the few that could play a fiddle—an instrument of devilish associations, according to my previous teaching. That very Sabbath afternoon I had heard him ridiculing the scruples of some who would not study ordinary lessons on the holy day; and he professed to have memorized his Greek grammar with peculiar facility, while a class-meeting was going on near him: "the better day, the better deed," and so on. The penitent so broken-hearted was none other than Denton. The pains of hell got hold upon him. He was poured out like water. His posture was indescribable, for he neither kneeled, nor sat, nor lay down, but writhed. And, as I stood, behold a miracle of grace! His frame relaxed, his face beamed, he rose straight up, and, looking as into heaven, exclaimed, "Jesus! Jesus! Jesus!" The tone of voice was suppressed, yet strangely euphatic—choked with emotion. I alone heard it. From that out, his change was apparent to all. Soon he was a class-leader; then a preacher. He graduated at Randolph-Macon College, in 1841, and, full of promise and polished for usefulness, returned to South Carolina. I arrived at the college a few days after he had left it, greatly to my sorrow, for I wanted to see his face again. Mysterious providence! Soon the news came that he was dead. I recollect my feelings eighteen years ago, on reading his last three words. The obituary describing his sickness, and resignation, and hope in death, added that his last words were, "Jesus! Jesus! Jesus!" This coincidence, perhaps, was known only to myself. So truly is Jesus the first and the last, the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end of our salvation!

THE STRANGER ENTERTAINED.

I passed on round the room, not irreverently, but wondering, like an older and wiser sinner once did, how these things could be. Grown persons I had seen in the altar at old Hannaker's camp-ground, but never little boys, like myself. Sinners in tears of penitential grief, and new-converts in their first joy I had seen there too, but their antecedents were unknown to me; and the contrast between "out of Christ" and "in Christ" had never been so sharply presented. Religion I had taken for granted as a matter of course—all of us must be converted some day. But that pernicious vague idea of "old enough to be converted" was in my way, as it has been in the way of thousands. Who was to be blamed? Not my dear parents: they only believed and talked as other people and the preachers talked and believed about childhood and the Church. As yet, I was not old enough to be converted! No one in particular was to be blamed for this error; only the idea of the age and of the church had so far got behind, almost out of sight of, the idea Christ. Six or seven years before, one Sunday afternoon, my mother, slowly recovering from sickness, was lying upon her bed, and reading to me out of the biography of a religious lady. My heart was strangely impressed. I felt myself a sinner, and yet on the score of no particularly remembered sins. Tears came, and were wiped away with the curtains behind which I hid my head. I was moved to pray—for what, I could not distinctly say. Near the garden palings was a secret place; so it came to my mind. I started there to pray. The Spirit that moved me to prayer would doubtless have helped me to pray. Arrived at the spot, a man-servant was stumbling close by, and spoke to me. Some talk sprang up: my mind was diverted, and half ashamed of its purpose; and I went with him to feed the stock. The convictions so clear, so pungent, so melting, and leading instinctively in the right direction, passed away. Nor were these my first (genuine, as I now am convinced) feelings of the kind; but they were the most marked, and, excepting occasional compunctions for actual offences, they were the last until the night I found myself unnoticed, going about in the Cokesbury prayer-meeting. There was J. K.; and that one, mourning apart in such a plaintive tone, was J. L.—a meek and quiet fellow, who never did anybody any harm. They were all about.

I had gone nearly round the room, (it was a large one—so it is impressed on my memory,) interested but not involved; or, as the philosophers would say, I was in a wholly objective state; not at all subjective. Well enough for those engaged; but the thought had not occurred about my part or lot in the matter. B. F. C. stood by the wall, in his natural manner, pleasant and smiling. Between us there was a close but unequal intimacy. He was about grown, and brought his Church letter with him on coming to Cokesbury. His father and mine lived in adjoining districts, and were particular friends. Presuming on this, and hearing of the good character of the young man, my father, on leaving, had introduced us to him, and asked B. F. C. to look after us. This he did, and so gentle was he, that I took a loving refuge under his stronger arm. Seeing him in the prayer-meeting made it a reality. Not more gratified was Eneas, in the land of shades, on coming up with Palinurus. Drawing me to his side, and calling me by name—

"Don't you want to be a Christian? You ought to pray too."

I hadn't a word to say. He placed a chair before me, and I kneeled down. Once on my knees, I began to think, and then to pray. Thank God! I have been praying ever since, and hope to continue till prayer is lost in praise. I have a mind to tell here how I was converted, as that is the most important passage in every one's life; but mine is not a very angular experience, and might not interest.

THE FIFTY-SIX RECRUITS.

When the door of the Church was opened, fifty-six of us went up and gave our hands to the preacher. There was a moral sublimity, or beauty rather, in the scene which some appreciated, while others went off into a doleful prophecy as to how many would stand six months out. My brother and I were in the number, and we wrote home the joyful news. The boy that went up just before me, (for we went up single file, through a narrow pass,) and warmed the pastor's hand that took mine, was a remarkable youth. S. M. R. was from Camden, South Carolina; a little my senior in years, and much in manner and manliness. His spirits were like the stream of a pebbly brook—flowing, bright, unfailing, and gladdening. Though a boy, I must speak of him as lovely. We were bosom friends. The beautiful letters of his sister, traveling that year abroad—into Ireland—were read to me, and enjoyed with exquisite relish. "As one mourneth for his mother" has not passed into a proverb; but it would, if all sons were like Sammy. One morning, about nine o'clock, as a company of us were in our room, I saw him get up on a chair, and look at Mr. N.'s watch, hanging on the wall. A shade passed over his face, and he went away. I missed him from church and from dinner. In the evening he came up, like one who had taken a degree in holiness. It was the anniversary of a Christian mother's death, and he had kept it alone, in meditation and prayer, and evidently had wept much. What influence has a dead mother over a living son! An influence strangely tenacious, and most powerful when he is most in danger—away, absent, and alone in the world. I read of Sam's death a year or two ago. I believe he held faithfully to his religion; but the obituary sketch intimated—what I was prepared to learn—that his social and fun-loving nature was his chief besetment to the last. He is still ahead of me, and I follow on.

COLLEGE-CAMP-GROUND, CLOSET AND PREACHERS.

At that day a camp-ground formed part of Cokesbury. The tents were hallowed spots. Nearly every pious student found a closet, to which, at morning, noon, and evening, he quietly retired, and read his Bible, and communed with his father in heaven. The tent-apartments, separate, clean and dry, and floored with straw, were well adapted for such a use. There, in a niche, the Bible or religious volume lay, turned down at the place where reading was left off, and ready to be resumed. The student's habits in this respect were just enough under each other's observation for mutual watchfulness. Absence for a few times might be accounted for by sickness or unavoidable detention; but if by and by the place "where prayer was wont to be made" became deserted, the ill omen was correctly interpreted, and the backsliding soul sought after. That camp-ground might seem a small circumstance, but in my memory of Cokesbury it was a material feature in the religious life of its students. Private prayer was an institution, and the devotional habits of young converts were regular. Hence their stability. The first year of spiritual life is of great importance, when viewed in this light. The closet, the closet! when and where was there ever deadness to the world or depth of piety without it? To it the weary Savior retreated for strength, and he has for ever consecrated it to the rest and comfort of his followers. Often, as he returned from the conflicts of outward life to the place of secret prayer, the pious Wilberforce would repeat to himself:

"The cool retreat, the pleasant shade,
With prayer and praise agree,
And seem by thy sweet bounty made
For those who worship thee."

Under these auspicies my first year in the Church was passed, and I shall ever be thankful for it. Here the little pocket-Bible was read through for the first time. We went to church three times every Sabbath, to class-meeting once a week, and to Sabbath-school. Not only was there a great deal of preaching, but it was good preaching, and a variety of it. The last sermon preached especially to us, before breaking up to go home, was by that saintly man, Malcolm M'Pherson. Among other things he said, "You leave, my young friends, many of you, such means of grace as you may not find elsewhere. You will have temptations. I tell you, lads, the Devil has rods in soak for you." However it may have fared with the other boys, this one has proved it so.

REV. JAMES DANNELLY.

That summer we had a camp-meeting. I don't recollect much about it, except that my father came up to see us, bringing messages of love from home, and good things put up by Mother's hands; and that old Mr. Donnelly was the generalissimo on the ground. I must say something of him, for he was a character. His voice was fine yet strong, like the sound that comes from sharpening a cross-cut saw on a cold, clear morning. The picture of Captain Webb, the British soldier and early Wesleyan preacher, reminds me of James Donnelly: stout in body, short, broad, courageous face, both. True, Webb lacked an eye, but Donnelly matched that in the lack of a leg. His wooden leg was a feature. His resolute thump, thump on the floor was expressive of decision. When he put his foot down, it was there—especially his wooden one. On it he wheeled with tremendous force, in the sharp appeals that his shrill voice rang out to saints and sinners, on the right and on the left. In one of his rounds, he saw a preacher, who had just got off a sermon, lounging on a bed with coat off. "Ah! that's the way with you preachers generally: weed a short row, and then lie down." He hated tobacco in all its uses, especially smoked—"This making chimneys of your mouths and noses." Seeing a dandy puffing a cigar at the tent-door, he reproved him. "O, Mr. Donnelly, excuse me; a friend gave me this." "Mistaken, Sir: an acquaintance, you mean." He had a way all his own of pouring it on and rubbing it in. Once, after the building of the new church, the Lord's Supper was to be celebrated. Preaching over, the non-communicants and sinners had gone out, and stood, a crowd, about the door; the communicants drew up nearer the altar. Lo! the elements had not been provided. Brother Williams had depended on Brother Bobo, and he on Brother Hodges or Brother Herndon, and so it was. Donnelly waited till this state of things was fully ascertained, and then, without saying a word, went thump, thump, thump to the door. Pivoting himself on that wooden leg, till insiders and outsiders were within his raking fire, he began: "No sacrament to-day. You can go home. If it had been a party or a pic-nic, I'll be bound these Christians would have come up every one with his basket full. But it was only to celebrate the death and suffering of our Savior, and not one of them has brought a piece of bread. You can go home, Lord have mercy on us."

Towards the close of the year, I went timidly to him for my Church-letter.

"What! not coming back to Cokesbury?"

"No, Sir; should like to, but my father is going to move to Alabama this winter, and I can't come back."

"Use your letter, you reckon, if I give you one? Be ashamed of your religion?"

"I mean to put the letter in wherever I go, and will try and never be ashamed of being a Christian."

Then, for the first time, under a doughty, rough exterior, the old man showed me his kind heart. He drew me to him and blessed me, and said, "Yes you shall have a letter."

DR. MITCHELL.

With the rector, as he was called, Rev. A. H. Mitchell, (now Dr. Mitchell) I had most to do. He singularly inspired fear and love. His voice and altitude subdued a boy right off; and his higher qualities continued the beneficial sway. Often since, I have met him on the Conference floor and the platform, and am afraid of him still. One thing against him: he will not remember or confess that I ever went to school to him!

CALL THE LABORERS AND GIVE THEM THEIR HIRE.

We made a fair crop in the field—corn and fodder, peas, potatoes and cotton—and gathered it; besides cleaning some new ground. In the school-room our examinations passed off well. Collier made the valedictory, and as it was the first one I ever heard, it made me cry heartily. How little did I then suppose that vale, vale, longum vale could ever wear out. But college boys and commencements can wear out anything. The best part was yet to come. The Steward called the laborers, and gave them a check on the Treasurer for their hire. Every boy was graded in annual labor as in study. The stoutest and steadiest "hands" got paid at the rate of three cents an hour; this was the maximum. The brush-gang got much less. As for me, I never was any great things at working; but my pile astonished me. Shinplasters had just come into vogue, and the amiable Treasurer, Mr. Shackleford, to please us, had sent down to Augusta and got a supply for the occasion. Five cents looked like five dollars, and felt the same in the pocket. When it came to paying out, though, you got poor fast. Seriously, that money was not the least valuable part of the education then obtained at Cokesbury. Had our fathers or rich uncles given the same sum to us, none of us would have known its value. Come easy, go easy. But we had labored for it, and that labor furnished us with a unit of value whereby to estimate its worth. Every five cents stood for two or three hours of sweat and dust; and, with the blisters on his hands, almost any boy would look at least five times at it, before giving five cents for a cigar, that is puffed away in a few minutes, leaving a residuum of smoke and ashes.

"Good-bye, Sam; good-bye, Ben, and Tom, and Joe; good-bye, Henry; write to me." And remembering the pocket-Bible, I ran away to fetch it from the tent, not without dropping tears that the consecrated spot should know me no more. Taking stage at Stony Point to Aiken, and thence by railroad, the two little boys are soon at home.

FAREWELL TO COKESBURY.

With grateful love, I shall ever regard the providence that directed my steps there, for the trunk was packed more than once to start for other places. May all our church schools send forth a generation to bless them, as I do, in my heart, bless Cokesbury. It has never put on any college airs, but holds on its way of usefulness, as a school. Though twenty-two years have gone by since I obeyed the call of its bell to morning and evening prayers, I love it still. No one reads the published reports and every thing about it, even to the calls for meetings of the Board of Trustees, with more interest than I do. It is in the care of a noble Conference, and long may it live. If I were rich, I would endow it.

Changing about for the next few years, among strangers and at new schools, "dry and thirsty places where no water was," often did the holy M'Pherson's sermon come to mind. My Cokesbury friends, on finding out my post-office in the new country, remembered to write to me, but without thoughtful concert, for by one mail I received three letters, and the postage broke me flat. (What times those were—twenty-five cents for every letter!)

A THRILLING NEW ORLEANS FUNERAL.

One there was, who quitted Cokesbury the year after I did, whom no distance nor lapse of time dimmed in my grateful memory. In the course of years, we lost sight of each other entirely. After a long while it vaguely reached me that he had been unfortunate in business, and rested under a cloud, and, soured with misfortune, had gone to some place unknown. Often I said within myself, "If this soul is ever saved and shines, it ought to be in his crown who noticed me in the prayer-meeting. Where is he, and how fares it with him?" One morning in 185-; as I was crossing Gravier street, New Orleans, a voice called, "Mr. ——, can we engage your services for a funeral this afternoon? Mr. C. died last night." "Mr. C.," I replied, "what was his full name?" He told it to me. "Where did he die?" Pointing to a large granite-front store, corner Magazine and Gravier streets, he answered, "There, in his room on the third floor. I will step up there with you, if you wish to see." I asked to go alone. The tidy creole nurse—her mission done—was adjusting the furniture, and folding up clothes. A coffin rested on two chairs in the middle of the cheerless room. I uncovered the face, and there lay my dear friend, B. F. C.!.... Strange conjunction! Like two voyagers on life's tempestuous sea, whom the waves had long parted, here we were again! My thoughts and feelings, as I gazed upon the dead face, and reviewed the past, were such as I can have but once. I uncovered the hands, folded by strangers on his breast, and took hold of the one that, in the Cokesbury prayer-meeting, was laid on my head as he told me to pray, and placed a chair for me to kneel upon. It was so cold and stiff!

Madame ——, the landlady, out of respect for her boarder, whose amiable nature always gained on those about him, offered her parlor for the funeral services. The store was closed, and the employers and clerks attended. Few, formal and deferential was the company—just such as can be found only in a great commercial city, and on such an occasion. My friend had even won upon "the leading man of the firm," from whom I learned that he had been there for a good while; he was retiring, not making new acquaintances, seldom going to church, and was not aware that he belonged to any Church, Protestant or Catholic; rather thought he was a Protestant—"very moral man, very upright, and a gentleman." The company were surprised at the emotion of the preacher, until he departed from the ritual so far as to let them know that the dead was no stranger to him. The preacher was the chief mourner. The last benedictions were pronounced at the tomb, and thus again was fulfilled the saying that is written, "The last shall be first, and the first last."—Home Circle.

JESUIT MISSIONS IN PARAGUAY.

BY REV. O. D. LOBE.

INTERNAL ARRANGEMENT.

THE Jesuit establishments were conducted on the principle of a community of goods. All worked for the common benefit, with the exception of a small portion of time granted for family purposes. The produce of all their labor was placed in the sole control of the Jesuits. On the farms large quantity of grain, cotton, sugar, tobacco, wax, honey, etc., were produced, which were advantageous articles for traffic. The priests directed every thing in the way of sale and purchase; indeed, every branch of industry was under their immediate inspection. Some of the most intelligent Spaniards have estimated that the Jesuits of South America transmitted to their superiors in Europe an annual average of £900,000! But we think this must be an exaggerated estimate.

The police of these communities was of the strictest character. All the inhabitants were required to be at home at a certain hour every evening, after which the regular watch was set and relieved at proper intervals. Each town kept on foot a body of infantry and another of cavalry. A party of horse was always engaged in scouring the country, and all the defiles by which strangers could penetrate it were well guarded. The strictest precaution was used to prevent any communication with the exterior world, except through the medium of the priests.

Daily life in these settlements was regulated with military precision. Every hour was definitely and unalterably appropriated to toil or rest, to prayer or recreation. With military step and martial music they marched to and from the fields, and passed from one employment to another, with all the order of soldiers changing guard. The attendance at Church service was imperative. All the little formalities of the imposing Popish ceremonies were performed with the accuracy of a drill. Baptisms were celebrated in the afternoons, and marriages only on least days.

For civil government, Dean Funes says they had no penal laws, only a few simple precepts, the violation of which were punished by fasts, prayers, imprisonment, and sometimes whipping, which was the highest degree of punishment. In imitation of the primitive Church, public penitence was introduced. An Indian detected in a fault of consequence was clothed with the penitent's dress, conducted to the temple where he made his confession, and then led into the public square and whipped.

Christian missions, in the proper sense of that phrase, they certainly were not. But however the Jesuits may have used their influence and privileges for personal aggrandizement, it can not be denied that, if they did not Christianize, they civilized and instructed to a considerable degree a very large number of the aboriginals of that country.

BEGINNING OF TROUBLE.

At the height of their prosperity, when the fathers had thousands of hands in their employment, an army well equipped under their command, and an overflowing treasury, the storm of opposition broke upon them.

The first organized opposition to the Jesuits originated in the bosom of the Church. In 1643 the Bishop of Asuncion, jealous of their successes and influence, planned the total subversion of the missions. He placed himself at the head of a military force to attack them by fire and sword. The Governor interposed his authority and prevented the collision. Upon the death of the Governor, the Bishop had himself proclaimed Governor and Captain-General of the province. And true to his grudge, one of his first measures was the forcible expulsion of the Jesuits from their college in Asuncion, marked with every circumstance of disgrace. They appealed to the supreme civil authority, and were reinstated and the Bishop deprived of his civil rule.

Quiet being restored, the Jesuits continued to prosecute their enterprises with growing success, extending their territories, and multiplying the number of their converts. In 1715 they report thirty towns and a population of 117,488 souls. The fathers had managed thus far to maintain a tolerably good understanding with the civil government, their difficulties were found in the Church—so boastful of unity and harmony. In 1724 they furnished an army of their Indians to assist the King's troops in expelling a usurper who had seized upon the government of Paraguay, when being defeated they were again expelled from Asuncion. Order, however, soon triumphed, and they were again restored. In 1732, during another season of tumult and insurrection, they were expelled for the third time from their college and the city of Asuncion. Lawlessness continued till 1735, when, principally by the power of the neophytes, order was again restored, and, as a consequence, the Jesuits reinstated. Up to this period, so far as history has made any record of their transactions, the Jesuits were found upon the side of royal authority. With but little interruption they continued to prosecute their labors and form new establishments among the various Indian tribes until 1750, when, by a convention between Spain and Portugal, fixing a boundary line between their possessions, seven mission establishments on the Uruguay were ceded to Portugal. This produced great dissatisfaction, and the missions ceded rose in arms, headed by Jesuits, against both Spain and Portugal, and when defeated, they destroyed their towns and property, and fled into the wilderness, in 1759, just one hundred years ago. The ultimate consequence was that the treaty was annulled in 1761, and the old limits restored; but the prosperity of the missions and the power of the Jesuits were gone beyond recovery.

EXPULSION FROM EUROPE.

The society of Jesuits had now fallen into great disrepute in Europe. They were expelled from Portugal in 1759, from France in 1764, from Spain and Naples in 1767, and their order totally abolished in 1773 by Pope Clement XIV.

Charles III was King of Spain at this time, and considered a most devoted son of the Church, and the last one to lift his hand against any of its holy orders; but such were the exposures of Jesuitic policy on the continent of Europe, and such were the reports brought to him from his American provinces, that certain significant indications at home aroused his fears. He counseled with his minister Aranda, and with his advice resolved upon immediate and energetic action. On the 27th of February, 1767, he issued a decree banishing all Jesuits from his dominions forever, forbidding them to hold intercourse by letter or otherwise with his subjects. In Spain the colleges were surrounded at midnight, the bells secured, each brother allowed his breviary, linen, chocolate, snuff, and money, then surrounded by an escort of dragoons, they were conducted to the coast and shipped for Italy. The general of the order refused to admit them into Italy. They were driven from Civita Vecchia, Leghorn and Genoa successively, and some six thousand of them for six months were tossed about upon the Mediterranean Sea. Finally a landing was effected at Corsica.

After Charles had shipped the Jesuits he wrote to the Pope. The letter was not favorably received by Pope Clement XII. In his reply he expressed his great grief that his "dearest son in Jesus Christ" should so "overwhelm his old age with bitter afflictions and finally precipitate him into the tomb." He entered also upon a spirited defense of the Jesuits, and "in the presence of God declared their innocence, piety, usefulness, and holiness, in their laws, maxims, and objects."

CHARGES AGAINST THEM.

Neither Charles nor his Council, however, were moved from their position by the appeal. The Council replied to the letter, recapitulating the charges against the Jesuits: "That they had altered the theological doctrines—that some of them had been so daring in their skepticism as to doubt the authenticity of the sacred Scriptures—that in China they had rendered compatible at once the worship of God and mamaon—that in Japan they had, in so scandalous a manner, persecuted the bishops and other religious orders, as that it could never be blotted from the memory of man—that in Europe they had been the very point and focus of all the tumults, rebellions and regicides—that it was proved by the undeniable testimony of their own papers, that in Paraguay they took the field at the head of organized armies to oppose themselves against the claims of the crown—and that in Spain they had just been endeavoring to change the whole system of government, and modify it according to their own ominous purposes. The Council, after, from the most unquestionable authorities, drawing this gloomy picture of the fraternity, concluded by recommending his Majesty never to lend his royal ear to any applications in their behalf."

FINAL RUIN IN PARAGUAY.

Three days after issuing

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1860.

$1 75 to 1861.—With this number of the Advocate we have increased the edition, to supply future new subscribers.—Will our agents and friends see that we suffer no loss by this accommodation? Send hundreds of new subscribers immediately—at $1 75 to 1861.

Introduction of Protestantism into Mississippi.—We have, by request, delayed the commencement of these interesting sketches until next week.

A Missionary Reinforce.—An Alabama friend sent us $25 for the Pacific Methodist Press. From Mississippi, we have received $20 for the same purpose—from Mrs. Elizabeth Hudson, Pickens Station, Memphis and Charleston R. R. Holmes County, Miss. Who next? Let us have the Press!

POPULAR AMERICAN LITERARY CULTURE.

A new Country—The progress of Culture—The work yet to be done—The Power of Popular Literary Culture—The New Orleans Christian Advocate—Physical and social influences of Literary Culture—European Writers—American—Mrs. Ellis—Dr. Bond—Bishop Soule.

We live, and the present generation of Americans, especially in the South and South-west, will die, in a new country. Among the formative influences of our national character and civilization, there are none derived from association with things old and venerable. Everything is young and new—our cities, our railroads, our steamship lines, our educational institutions, our publishing houses, our periodicals, our general literature. Much of the very country that forms a part of our great republic has been acquired, and rescued from the dominion of the primeval wilderness, within a few years. And, in the inevitable evolutions of "manifest destiny," imperial regions, for size and resources, are yet to be added, on the Gulf and the Pacific. A frontier element has always modified our civilization, and will continue to do so for many years to come.

The rude and primitive ideas and manners of our backwoods American settlements, if witnessed by a polished European tourist, thirty years ago, would very naturally have inspired the prophecy that centuries would have to pass, before the light of culture and refinement could penetrate those mental wilds. But the axe and the plow have already redeemed the soil, and books and newspapers, and flourishing schools, and a missionary itinerant gospel ministry, have done an analogous mental and spiritual work. Culture, both of soil and soul, has made remarkably rapid and strangely harmonious progress. But there is much of the same kind of work yet to be done. The regions already brought under the influence of an enlightened Christian civilization, are capable of more than a hundred-fold future development—a culture of the masses, as well as the few, unknown in any other country upon earth. And the same work is to be done for the regions being added, and yet to be added to our already gigantic young country.

Although the culture of such a people as ours embraces many elements—freedom, material prosperity, scope for enterprise, religious influences, and literary enlightenment and refinement—yet it is apparent to every observing mind, fully acquainted with the history of the country and the character of "the people," that no influence is more powerful for good, in its largest sense, than sound popular literary culture, derived from the general circulation of attractive, tasteful, healthful books and newspapers. Where educational advantages, commonly so-called, are not available, these can go, at little cost, and come nearer being a compensation for all other disadvantages, than any other agencies. Rays of light from the accumulated taste and intelligence of ages, penetrate, and illumine with an inspiring glory, territories, habitations and intellects, strangers to such blessings before. The seed once planted, the inspiration once imparted, the expansion and results, in every direction, and of every character, are beyond calculation and without limits, in a free land like this, abounding in the opportunities of personal independence, and the encouragements to personal development.

From the ranks of the "people" ourselves, thoroughly acquainted with the character and wants of all classes, from the frontiers to the cities, and owing much to the very influences of which we are speaking—those of a popular literature—we have constantly kept the literary culture of the masses in view in our conduct of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and endeavored to make it contribute thereto.

Besides the blessings of information, thought and refinement, usually attributable to popular literature, there many others. Health is promoted, and life is lengthened. The burden of undue labor, too common among Americans, is lightened; the mental and spiritual assume a healthful dominion over the material and earthly; the beautiful illumines the useful, as the sunny heavens do the earth. Selfishness, if not driven away, loses its rude manners; kindness, courtesy, and conciliation, take the place of cruelty, collisions, and brutal personal combats. The dominion of brute muscle and bloody weapons is broken.

We have said that life is lengthened by literary culture. In the last Home Circle, Hon. Gabriel P. Disosway, a distinguished member of the Northern Methodist Church, has thrown together many interesting facts bearing on this point, some of which we use.

Cowper, author of the "Task," ended his pilgrimage peacefully at sixty-six; Sir Walter Scott, under ambitious efforts, sank at sixty-one; Southey disappeared into nyscope and darkness before sixty-eight; Goethe, unimpaired by his strong imagination, reached his eighty-second winter. Young, of the "Night Thoughts," saw fourscore and four. At the same advanced age, the infidel Voltaire was still the slave of vanity and fame; and Cibber, the poet-laureate of England for twenty-seven years, lived to eighty-six. Charles Wesley, that sweetest singer in Israel, called his wife to his dying pillow, and, with a heavenly smile, dictated his last poetic effusion; and Klopstock, the author of the "Messiah," to the same long period delighted and cheered his friends. Dr. Watts consecrated his sacred harp until seventy-four. Montgomery, the pious poet, blessed the world with his cherished lines till eighty-two; whilst Rogers, the most venerable poet of Europe, has recently departed, at the great age of ninety-four. His first essay was the "Pleasures of Memory;" his last, an Epithalamium to a friend. John Wesley, before his seventieth year, had published more than thirty octavo volumes, and was enabled to persevere in his wonderful labors till eighty-eight! Neither do literary pursuits appear to have been opposed to the happiness or longevity of females. In great honor and dignity, Jane Porter and Mrs. Hofland reached seventy-four. Mrs. Montague and Mrs. Sherwood lived to eighty-one, and Mrs. Barbauld to a still greater age. The latter, when eighty-two, possessed her faculties in full perfection; her manner peculiarly gentle, her voice low and sweet; and she spoke of death with the firmest and most cheerful hopes. Mrs. Chapone reached seventy-five; Piozzi, the biographer of Dr. Johnson, eighty-one; Miss Barney, eighty-eight; Mrs. Carter, eighty-nine; and the beloved Hannah More died only a year younger. After sixty, with untiring industry, she composed eleven books. Mrs. Edgeworth once saw in England Joanna Baillie, then seventy-six, her sister Agnes, beyond fourscore, whom she so intensely loved, with Rogers, the poet, in his eighty-sixth spring, sitting on the same sofa between them. What a beautiful trio of philanthropy, poetry, and Christian faith.

In her eighty-fifth year, Hannah More was so attractive in manners and conversational powers, that not less than four hundred visitors called to see her in the space of three weeks!

The mother of President Edwards was a most remarkable lady. Ten daughters were well instructed to discharge the duties of woman's sphere, and attested her maternal fidelity. During the long period of sixty-three years, she never neglected the mental improvement of her children. It was her custom to place upon the parlor table a Bible, with some standard works of biography, history, and theology, and here assembled every afternoon the neighboring ladies. A passage of Scripture was first read; then other useful pages, with remarks and illustrations from her own knowledge and experience. Many in the morning of life dated their earliest impressions from the truths of these venerable and pious lips. At the extreme period of ninety-nine, the "golden bowl was broken," and the long-embodied spirit set free.

Mrs. Ann Royal assumed the arduous and responsible duties of an editor, and conducted a paper in Washington City with ability, until the advanced age of eighty-five. In the same Capital reside two other venerable editors—Colonel Seaton and Mr. Gales, of the National Intelligencer. The widow of the great American statesman, General Alexander Hamilton, was among the illustrious American ladies. As long as she lived—almost a century—Mrs. Hamilton was admired for the ease and polish with which she entertained her numerous guests.

The Golden Bridal, as it is called, originated in Germany, where domestic aniversaries are universally cherished. It is the celebration of the fiftieth return of the marriage day, when the happy parents receive a congratulatory visit from their children, grandchildren, near relatives and friends. Wedding-gifts are also presented, with the kind expressions of love and good wishes expressed in strong German prose and poetry. We have introduced this beautiful family custom in our more favored and happy land. Some time ago, Dr. Bangs and wife celebrated their Golding Wedding. He is now about ninety, and his companion somewhat younger; and the aged pair sat side by side, the picture of serene, pious old age. On the walls hung their portraits, taken at an earlier period; but not more beautiful than the venerable heads, now living in the Indian summer of life. Very long have they beautified this holy estate, which will be perfected ere long at the marriage-supper of the Lamb, where love is indestructible. They had congratulations, songs of joy, and the voice of prayer.

That eminent scholar and statesman, John Quincy Adams, celebrated his Golden Bridal the last summer he passed on the earth. His own venerable parents had walked hand in hand reaching the same epoch.

The Southern Methodist Church, with the whole evangelical Church of God, is blessed with the presence and counsel of the wise, zealous, and holy Bishop Soule, now bearing the burden of fourscore years.

"It is a holy sight
To look upon that venerable man,
Remembering all his honors, all his toils,
And knowing that his earth-receding grasp
Was on the anchor of eternal life."

THE SOUTHERN METHODIST CHURCH AND THE COUNTRY.

PRESIDENT WIGHTMAN'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

We have, at length, been gratified by finding on our table the Inaugural Address delivered in October last at the opening of the Southern University, Greensboro, Ala., by the Rev. W. M. Wightman, D.D., LL.D., President of the University. We had sought to obtain, at the time, not only a full report of the address, but also of the ceremonies attendant upon the important initial occasion. We were disappointed, however, by what we must regard as that failure to realize their representative position in the country, and that insensibility to the value, in all modern civilization, of the public press, which is, as yet, too characteristic of the Methodist people. Had such an address, on such an occasion, been delivered by the President of any of the great institutions of any of the other Churches, it would have been reported, immediately and in full, not only for their denominational papers, but also for the secular press generally. The land would have been awakened by it. The press of the entire United States has heralded the coming advent of the "University of the South," of our Episcopal brethren, because they have taken the proper steps to bring their enterprise before the country; while, from the cause above-named, the "Southern University" has hardly been heard of outside of our own Church press. And even our own press is tardily and meagrely furnished with the requisite data.

An instance of this was seen in the articles, on the "University of the South," of the Montgomery Mail, to which we alluded a few weeks since. More recently, the Mobile Register, in a fine article on our Publishing House, rejoices that while the Methodists are establishing a "national publishing house," the Episcopalians are establishing a "national university"—thus ignoring the existence of the "Southern University," in its own state, equal in every respect to the other. We do not blame our brethren of other Churches for their superior wisdom in this respect; we applaud them, and commend their example to the emulation of our people.

In addition to the fault mentioned in the beginning of these remarks, there seems to be among Methodists a sort of reluctance to bring their leading representative men before the public, lest they should receive undue personal consideration among themselves. We do not say this is a fact, but it certainly seems so. With numbers, wealth, social position, literary establishments and educational institutions, and leading and eloquent men and ministers, unequalled by any Church in the land; yet, in consequence of the absurd, antiquated, antidiluvian policy alluded to, we are less heard through the great lungs of the time—the public press—than Churches which have not a tithe of our numbers and influence.

We say these things, not in anger, but in sorrow—not from selfishness, but for the public good, and in just vindication of our own dignity and honor. We are a part—much the largest part, ecclesiastically—of the civilization of the time; and unless we understand our position, and appreciate our responsibility for our possible influence upon our day and generation, we are not only abridged of our power for good, but unworthy of the position we hold. Old Bishop Asbury, traveling, like a frontier circuit-rider, upon horse-back, from one end of the country to the other, annually, had a more enlarged and common sense view of the importance and dignity of his ecclesiastical position, and his relation to American progress, than many of our people of the present time. He was heard and felt throughout the land, through all channels of communication with the public ear.

We say these things on this occasion, because it is the most important occasion of the kind which has occurred in the Southern Church—the Southern University being the most important educational movement that Church has ever made. We have long intended to say these things, and the occasion has now come. Those who have in charge the interests of the great Southern Publishing House are, now at length, letting the country know what they are doing, through the secular press as well as their own. We trust the time has come when our other great movements will be "ventilated" in the same way. The secular press has always evinced a generous appreciation of all the great enterprises of the Southern Churches. Some of our people, instead of availing themselves of the advantages thus afforded them, and of the greater advantages of their own press, prefer to unworthily wrangle among themselves, and with their best friends whom they do not understand, about matters upon which they have not experience enough to speak. One man, with his eye upon one interest, sees nothing else, and quarrels with all whose vision is not thus narrow. Let all this cease, at once and forever. We have too many local Sir Oracles among us, and too few who have faith in our whole system, and in all our public servants. We have much money, and much energy, and much noble aspiration; we need much conservative, far-seeing sagacity, much comprehensiveness of view, much faith in general principles, and much patient waiting for the natural ripening of things.

But, to the address. In the language of the Charleston Courier, it contains the history of a most noble enterprise. The Alabama Conference of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church, has for several successive years worn the plume for liberality in one department of Christian benevolence. Its contributions to the cause of Missions she has long been far in advance of the other Conferences of the South. The South Carolina Conferences several times held this honorable position, but she was outstripped by her young and lively sister. The Georgia Conference has labored with a zeal, perseverance and liberality in the cause of education deserving of all praise; the South Carolina Conference has given evidence of its high appreciation of institutions of learning, and all the other Conferences embraced in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are industriously engaged in founding and endowing High Schools and Colleges. But this strong and growing Conference, by one earnest, bold and united effort, has established and set in vigorous operation a scholastic institution of the highest grade. The Southern patriot and Christian must greet the grand enterprise with heartfelt joy and inspiring hopes.

After an eloquent allusion to the august occasion, and the grand and noble purposes of the Institution, the orator happily avails himself of the opportunity to pay a glowing and hearty tribute to the far-seeing intelligence and open-handed liberality of those who have aided in this great monument. "Our men of wealth," "says the speaker," have contributed tens of thousands; persons in more limited circumstances have not withheld their gifts; a charter of ample provisions and singular privileges has been granted by the State; this imposing structure has arisen; others, corresponding in elegance, and devoted to the uses of the University, are in process of erection; an endowment of between two and three hundred thousand dollars has been secured; the services of literary and scientific gentlemen of established reputation, as a Faculty of instruction, have been laid under contribution; and this auspicious day witnesses the commencement of a career, destined, we devoutly trust, to meet the largest expectations of the Conference; to remunerate a thousand fold those who have laid out their liberal investments of property, of labor, of anticipation, and of prayer; a career through all coming time illustrious and blessed; which will promote public liberty; rear great men—the special want of representative governments; advance intellectual refinement, and diffuse the blessings of a Christian culture and civilization over ever-widening circles."

President Wightman gives us some valuable information concerning the plan of instruction pursued in the University of Germany and England, which we quote.

The German University realizes the ideal of European institutions of that class. It is well styled the culminating point of public instruction; the Common School, and the Gymnasium, which corresponds generally to the American College, furnish preliminary stages of education. It embraces four Faculties—Theology, Law, Medicine, and Philosophy and Arts. Each of these employ the services of Ordinary and Extraordinary Professors, Privatim Docentes—licensed Lecturers, made up chiefly of graduates of the University. All the instruction is carried on by means of lectures, the students selecting at their option the course they wish to attend. The English Universities are collections of Colleges and Halls, each possessing its seperate buildings and library, its own head and tutors and students. The University possesses the authority of examining and conferring degrees; in most other respects it stands nominis umbra. The instruction of the under graduates pass by degrees into Colleges Halls from University Lecture Rooms, and finally into the hands of private tutors. Thus, to a great extent, the University course of study is abolished; "the shreds of the professorial system," in the language of Sir William Hamilton, "are now little more than curious vestiges of antiquity; and boys who ought to be under the strict discipline which properly belongs to the Gymnasium, are endowed with a University freedom which ends, in regard to many of the students, in frivolity and dissipation."

After explaining the method of instruction in the Universities and colleges of this country, he tells us that in addition to the usual curriculum of a Collegiate Institution, the Southern University embraces in its plans, a full course of instruction in Theology, Law, and the Sciences. It will have eight distinct professorships, "that, namely, of Moral Philosophy, of Ancient Languages, of Mathematics, of Natural Philosophy, of Chemistry, of Modern Languages, of Biblical Literature, and of Law." Five of these chairs have been filled; and the Institution is prepared to give full instruction in the Collegiate department, embracing the usual curriculum in the Faculty of Arts and Philosophy, together with an extensive course in Civil Engineering. The University Department will be opened and provided for, just as the demand of the public and growth of the Institution indicate the proper time. To accomplish the object of the originators and supporters of this majestic scheme, $500,000 is needed. The noble response that has been already made by the members of the Methodist Church, and the friends of education generally in Alabama, is assurance strong and convincing that this magnificent sum will not long be withheld.

President Wightman then proceeds to make some observations on the true criterion of scholarship; the best modes of instruction and discipline; the studies to be pursued; and the necessity of imbuing the mind and heart of the student with the principles and the spirit of Christianity. On each of these points the reverend gentleman is eminently clear and forceful; his ideas of education are the results of experience, observation and thought, and they are expressed with an elegance of diction worthy his reputation for scholarship, and with an earnestness and power that shows he realizes intensely the vast importance of his subject and the grave responsibility of the post he has been called to occupy.

After showing the advantage of denominational institutions of learning over all others for conveying religious instruction, the reverend gentleman, in the following eloquent passages, shows the nature of the Christian training with which the scholars of the Southern University will be favored:

The Greek New Testament holds the place of honor among all the text-books of the Southern University, since it alone is carried through the whole course, from matriculation to graduation. It is the authentic record of that Gospel which will be preached here—I trust, "not in word only, but in demonstration of the spirit and with power." This is the heaven-appointed instrument of man's conversion, edification, and salvation. In its truth, in its power, in its suitableness to all stages of culture, all advances of civilization, all ages and conditions, we have an unquestioning confidence. It alone can turn the moral darkness of man into a day of glory. "It is perfect, converting the soul." It is eminently the guide of youth. From the light of its majesty the Gospel looks down on all researches of thought, all progress of science and social improvement; it lends its aid to all, but borrows none. Omnipotence moves through its agencies, and its providence grasp all interests, and ages and worlds. Its God is "the God of salvation;" and nature, whose elements fell down at his feet and acknowledged his power, in the days of his flesh, still does homage to his glory to the voice of seas and thunders—its stars his torch-bearers—its nebular firmaments chiming the chorus of his praise.

When I bid you rely on the power of the Gospel as one of the chief means by which a pervading christian influence is to be hoped for in this institution, you will understand me to mean that the original system of truth and grace revealed in the New Testament will be adhered to in its full integrity and strength. The great substance of that truth—"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life"—will not be darkened into a dreamy mysticism, which, passing through the light of divine truth without catching its irradiations, soars to the region of the transcendental, in the dim wanderings of sentimentality; nor transmuted into the mummeries of a poor formalism which substitutes for the life of God in the soul of man, pantomime and pageant, the mere masquerade of worship—finds religion in certain styles of ecclesiastical architecture, and sanctity in a particular quarter of the sky—and instead of feeding the soul with knowledge, holds up to the eye the painted toys of a puerile superstition.

The following passages have the clarion eloquence of Bascom, the affluent beauty of Jeremy Taylor, and the classic elegance of Henry Melville. Recollecting an editorial in our last issue on "preaching in our Colleges," the reader will feel that in the "University Preacher," as well as President, the right man has been chosen:

Nor will a gospel, according to science, take the place of the "glad tidings," as the instrument of the soul's regeneration. Let metaphysical philosophy push its analysis into the secret places of the mind, and fathom the depths of spontaneity, autonomy and liberty; which contains its personality; these researches all terminate in the discovery of humanity in self-conflict; all the speculations of psychology point to the God-man, who alone can confer spiritual life. Let nature display her august Temple and open to the view of science its deep foundations. We trace the forces which were in play beneath the crystallizations of the solid granite. We read in the stony sepulchers which entomb the dead of a long cycle of past animal existence, the power of that Almighty One with whom "a thousand years are as one day." We approach the vestibule. Organization the most exquisite, adaptions the most perfect, stand open to observation. Visions and voices meet the rational insight on every hand. We perceive the eternal archetypes which were in Supreme Reason, and catch the sentiment of the sublime in dimly apprehending the supernatural. But science strives in vain to raise the curtain which shuts out the inner shrine. Beyond that veil shines the pavilioned glory, the majesty ineffable and unapproachable, of the Uncreated Mind. Standing with uncovered head and awed spirit in the outer court, unable to catch a glimpse, yet wondering and longing, the gospel lifts the veil and reveals to man "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ." And the theme of all our preaching is "Christ crucified;" "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever."

In this new seat of learning, then, let the authority and influence of Christianity be enthroned as supreme over its whole scheme of educational influences. August is its function, the culture of the faculties of mind—the unfolding of the divine gifts of reason, judgment and invention—treasures in comparison to which princely revenues are dross, and hereditary titles mere courtly gewgaws: powers which construct and defend governments, institutions, laws; which invent the mighty steam-engine, and create the immortal poem, and hurl the massive links of the grand oration; which adorn civilization, bridge oceans, girdle continents, and bind nation to nation;—powers which lift the torch upon the "dark, backward and abysm of time," and read the hieroglyphics written on the stratified rocks of primeval ages;—powers which climb upward to the stars; interpret their shining syllables, and enter "the unfolded gates burning in the sun"—Sublimer study, its office is to measure the fearful greatness of the mind by its immortal destination; by the tragic grandeur of its very disorders* by the magnificent reach of its insatiable cravings; by the cost of its redemption; by the doom of the lost day;—to lift up all the knowledge here imparted to the seals of its immortality; and to point its wandering destinies to the Cross of the Son of God, as the centre of all light and hope.

DR. NEELY AND THE PUBLISHING HOUSE.

When the plan was adopted of raising $200,000 as a "free cash capital" for our Publishing House, in connection with the establisment of Conference Depositories for the more effective distribution of our publications, Alabama undertook to raise $100,000, half for the Publishing House, and half for the Depository. Drs. Hamilton and Neely were appointed the Agents. At the last session of the Alabama Conference, over $91,000 were reported in cash and notes. Had not Dr. Hamilton's health been too feeble during the year to allow him to labor as he might have done, the whole amount, over and above expenses, would have been raised. Dr. Neely was re-appointed Agent, to complete the amount, and to raise such an additional amount as would cover all necessary expenditures—$150,000 was named as the gross amount to be raised. Dr. Neely, earnestly desiring to devote himself to the pastoral work, sought to be released from the Agency, though willing to yield to the call of his brethren, whatever it might be. The Bishop was requested, by a unanimous vote of the Conference, to re-appoint him, and he is now in the field in prosecution of his great work. We see, by the Montgomery papers, and the press generally of Alabama, that his mission is generally and enthusiastically approved. The effort to free the country from dependence upon an "unfriendly" literature, especially an unfriendly religious literature, by building up a great unsectional publishing house, must be appreciated by all right-minded men, wherever prescated.

And Dr. Neely is most happily adapted to this great work. With all our knowledge of his eloquence as a preacher, we were not prepared to witness such a grand result as the raising of near $10,000 in one village community, in response to one public address—as was the case at Eufala. His address was inspiringly eloquent, and the enthusiasm produced by it in behalf of his cause overflowed all denominational bounds—members of all Churches, and citizens, members of no Church, giving heartily and largely to the enterprise. We sincerely wish he had been appointed by the General Conference as special Agent for the whole Church to raise the $200,000 free cash capital for the Publishing House, and the $100,000 Sunday School Publication Fund. He would have raised every dollar of it, over and above expenses, by the meeting of the next General Conference. Not that we undervalue the faithful labors of other brethren—not in the least—but that Dr. Neely is especially gifted for this sort of work.

His eloquence is popular and thrilling to a degree never surpassed in this country. Throwing all the energies of his immensely enthusiastic nature into his subject with a voice of unequalled tenderness and power, we have never seen immense audiences more moved by one man. We trust he will have a much larger success this year than last, and that Alabama may raise $200,000, over and above expenses, instead of $100,000. And much as we know Dr. Neely desires the repose of the pastoral relation, we earnestly hope his gifts may yet be made fully available in the successful accomplishment of the great financial enterprises now in the hands of the Southern Church. The country is prosperous, our people are wealthy, we have the money, we have the man—and common sense dictates the rest.

ORATORY OF HILLIARD AND EVERETT.*

Hon. Henry W. Hilliard is well known to our readers, to many personally, to all by a worthy fame—a fame national in character as well as extent. Mr. Everett is the orator-laureate of the Union. Mr. Hilliard is also an orator in the true sense. His mind well furnished with the great suggestive facts of ancient and modern history, and with the treasures of literary lore; with a keen intuition, a poetic identity, and a philosophic generalization; with a refinement and elegance of language and elocution, and a grace of person and manners which we have never known surpassed; with a spirited and heroic, yet well-tempered energy, and with a pathos as delicate as touching; with an eye that alternately flashes and smiles, and a voice that alternately thunders and sings; he is the beau ideal of a polished, gallant Southern orator—worthy to be called the Everett of the South. Indeed, much as we admire both the character and the oratory of Mr. Everett, we believe Mr. Hilliard to be fully equal to him in all the elements of commanding eloquence—superior to him in some—especially in imagination, pathos, and fire. He has the advantage of Southern blood and culture. He has only the disadvantage, in comparison with Mr. Everett, of not having devoted himself to eloquence as earnestly as Mr. Everett has; perhaps the further disadvantage of not having devoted himself to polite literature as he has. Mr. Hilliard has been too much devoted to affairs, and too little to study. There is much similarity in both the history and character of Mr. Hilliard and Mr. Everett. Both are ministers of the gospel, both statesmen, and both noted for polished eloquence. Here again, however, is a characteristic difference. Mr. Everett's faith, however warm on its humanitarian side, is the cold and classic unitarianism of New England, too cold for the tropical mind and too cheerless for the earnest and sympathetic heart and hopes of the great Webster. The result has been that his faith has not filled his heart, and, since his earlier years, he has preached but little. His noble impulses, not satisfied by his lifeless gospel, have flowed out in the channel of an enlarged patriotism. Mr. Hilliard, on the contrary, though as patriotic as Mr. Everett, yet, brought up in the faith of salvation through the atonement of a divine as well as human Redeemer, has never ceased, amid all the dissipations of politics, and the temptations of position, to "preach the unsearchable riches of Christ" with a fervent heart and a willing mind. In the midst of fiery partisan canvasses, after gallantly bearing aloft the flag of his party, in opposition to the most powerful antagonistic leaders, when the Sunday has come, whether in city, village, or country-side, in the neat sanctuary, or under the rude arbor of a back-woods camp-meeting, he has doffed his political armor, brushed away the dust of the conflict, and unfurled the banner of the cross, as the highest hope and joy of both himself and his hearers. We have often dissented from his political opinions, we have often wished he had devoted himself wholly to the gospel ministry; but we do not claim that our judgment is infallible; and we have never ceased to admire his genius, and to respect his high-toned character and religious purity. We know him well, and only utter a heart-felt tribute. The oration which has suggested these remarks was unsurpassed in the enthusiasm of its reception.

* Mr. Hilliard's oration at the University of Virginia. Mr. Everett's eulogy on Rufus Choate.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Rev. P. A. Peterson gives an important table in the Richmond Advocate, showing the annual strength and increase of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, since its organization in May, 1845. We insert it as an interesting document for our statisticians:

Revenue Miss'y Society for year ending May	$6,075	88,579	62,013	85,575	113,401	166,901	201,325	214,964
Total Ministers and Mem's	462,423	439,667	496,346	520,256	534,235	579,359	811,706	809,169
Indian Members	2,976	3,372	3,375	3,483	3,104	549,173	622,992	164,336
Colored Mem's and Prob'rs	124,411	124,961	135,534	149,949	154,204	3,051	3,481	3,858
White Members and Prob'rs	330,710	327,284	354,238	375,520	385,856	416,911	585,277	635,777
Local Preachers	2,580	2,833	3,026	3,365	3,644	4,325	4,659	4,907
Supernuated Preachers	90	97	103	104	113	134	143	167
Traveling Preachers	1,384	1,433	1,476	1,538	1,659	1,741	1,903	2,171
Year	1845	1846	1847	1848	1849	1850	1851	1852

HELP FOR THE MISSIONARY TREASURY.

Below, our readers will find an appeal for help from our Missionary Secretary, Rev. E. W. Sehon, D. D. We trust it will not be in vain. While many of our preachers and people have done nobly for this great cause, many others have done but little. And yet our whole missionary system, home and foreign, has been projected upon faith in their missionary zeal and christian liberality. We have the money—we are wealthy enough to support two such missionary systems as we have—and yet the cause languishes. It is a pity—it is a shame—it is a sin. Let us repent. Hear the Secretary:

The undersigned would respectfully call the attention of the ministers, members, and friends of the M. E. Church, South, to the more immediate and prayerful consideration of the important subject of our missionary work, and our duty in regard to the same.

A sincere and anxious desire to discharge my own duty, as a officer of the General Conference, prompts me to make this personal appeal to every minister of the Church. No one can be more conscious than the writer of the ever-recurring objection made, whenever a subject, already deemed by many too often presented, is again brought prominently before the church. But we should remember that its triteness forms no valid ground of excuse for continued rejection of this important subject. Our duty, our imperative duty, still remains the same.

Have I done my duty on this subject? should be the earnest question of each member of the Church. O that I could prompt each reader now to ask and answer the question! If duty has not been performed, let the question result in immediate action now, and faithful performance in time to come.

From extreme stringency in the money market, increased missionary appropriations, and the decreased collections in many of the Conferences, our condition is truly a critical one. No individual interest, no inkind feeling, prompts the writer in making this appeal. Your interests are ours, and ours yours. We must have funds, or our drafts will be dishonored, and the missionary appropriations greatly decreased.

I hesitate not to say, if each preacher will, according to the Discipline, bring the subject of missions properly before the people, show its importance, and urge its claims, the treasury will be full, and, as a consequence, larger appropriations, with an increased field of missionary labor, be instantly reported by the Board.

Have you done your duty, my brethren, as presiding elders and preachers? Have you carried out the vows solemly taken upon you? Have you brought the matter before each quarterly conference? Have you, in each congregation, taken the necessary steps to secure a missionary collection? There is no place at last so sure, so simple, as that proposed in the Discipline.—We give the duty and the place, found at page 289, last edition of the Discipline, which reads:

"It shall be the duty of the presiding elders to bring the subject of our missions before the first quarterly conference of each of the circuits and stations of their districts, yearly, for the purpose of moving the quarterly conferences to adopt such measures as shall be deemed best for the promotion of the cause by increasing the number of contributors, and the amount contributed for missions, in their several circuits and stations.

"It shall be the duty of the preachers in charge of circuits and stations, to appoint a suitable person in each class as a missionary collector, who shall keep a book, in which shall be enrolled the names of all the members of the class, and who shall collect from each member who may be disposed to contribute a cent or more a week, or fifty cents or more a year, and shall pay over the sums so collected to the preacher in charge, at or before the last quarterly meeting of the Conference year. And the preacher shall transmit the money thus paid over, together with such other sums as shall have been collected from the congregations, or from branch societies, or otherwise, to the treasurer of the Conference Missionary Society, to be duly reported."

I now have to ask, earnestly ask all our preachers on districts, circuits, missions, or stations, to commence and carry out this work. Present the subject to every member of the Church by collectors appointed in every class for the purpose; and in every congregation, for the benefit of strangers, and those not seen by the collectors, and even those who may have previously contributed, let a public collection be made for missions, and duly reported, as required by the Discipline.

Let these collections now commence in all the Conferences; and I would kindly ask each preacher to forward immediately part of the same to the General Treasurer, I. Litton, Esq., Nashville.

The preachers can give as great relief by paying the drafts maturing by the collections thus made within their own work.

The subject is with you, and we shall patiently and prayerfully wait an answer which shall place in the treasury the sum necessary to meet our present demands.

I would earnestly request all our editors to publish this circular, with an urgent call upon the ministry and membership to immediate action.

E. W. SEHON, Missionary Secretary.

FINANCIAL SECRETARY'S REPORT.

MR. EDITOR: The Conferences for the season are over; the Church is in very general prosperity, and all her several interests are in an improving condition. Our financial enterprises, take them all together, were ever in so good condition as at this time; though it must be conceded that there is still great room for improvement. We are getting to understand better and still better that what are sometimes called the financial interests of the Church, and the spiritual interest thereof, are not two separate things, but are only twin aspects of one thing, so intimately are they blended, and interwoven, and interlarded with each other.

The Publishing Plan of the last General Conference, viz., the establishment of Conference Depositories in the several Conferences, and the building up of a Southern Publishing House on an adequate scale, has secured well nigh the entire confidence and co-operation of the Church. It was a great measure, embodying great novelty, large outlay of plan and undertaking, and far reaching and capacious in commercial frame work and adjustment.

The little hindrance it has met, that could be called opposition,—in a very few instances outspoken, and in others, more effectively, by "feint praise,"—has grown entirely out of a very partial and restricted comprehension of the great end in view. Many seemed slow to get away from the old idea, that the enterprise contemplated merely the setting up and keeping along a clever book-making house, with a few thousand dollars, where some of the preachers, and a few others, could occasionally supply themselves with a handful of books for sale and distribution. And if such a house could be so conducted as to "get along," and maintain its existence and commercial credit, the enterprise was successful.

Some very good people thought that an augmentation of the capital of the Publishing House, and the setting up of Conf. Depositories all over the country, both, was an undertaking too great for the Church so feeble as ours. They failed to see that these two things, as they call them, were but twin or supporting branches of one and the same thing—that unitedly they could succeed, while neither one, by itself, could make more than a slow, restricted and crippled progress.

Any attempt, therefore, to rend asunder these two co-operating engines, had, so far as they were carried, the same effect as an attempt to cut anything else in two, and thus destroy it.

From the first, the plan of operation, as a whole, attracted the favorable attention, and secured the confidence and approval of commercial and business men, almost without exception, so soon as it was carefully looked into.

The grand idea, as it ought to be understood, is this, in brief:

1. The time has come, when it is necessary for the well being of the South, to protect our country and people against Northern impudence and dangerous interference, to guard against the false and insidious teachings of a corrupt and vitiated literature—that we begin to free ourselves from a literary vassalage which is no longer bearable in or out of the Church.

2. This constant Northern supply of a sectional, one-sided, reasonless reading for our children and our people, is the mere dangerous and vicious, by ten fold, for the reason that it comes to us not by itself, as it is, but in the garb of holy religion, and in the most intimate and intermingled proximity with the very best and most wholesome and pure precepts and teachings of Christianity. The stealthily blended, hidden, and insidious association, is generally a hundred fold worse than the thing.

3. There is but one way possible, by which the country, as well as the church, can be freed from the political, social, moral and religious injuries we suffer from this sectional, unwise, and pestiferous interference on the part of our fanatical neighbors of the North. This is, by the establishment of large, adequate Publishing Houses in the South, by which the South will supply itself, at least, with a wholesome literature for our schools Sunday-schools, our nurseries, and our families. Nothing short of this will answer in any even tolerable degree. Northern Houses cannot protect us if they would.

4. To take the lead in this grand Southern movement—to demonstrate its practicability before the world—to make a relentless, but practical declaration of our literary independence, and thus, at the same time, to furnish our children and our people with uncorrupted moral and religious reading, and to extend this wholesome, social and religious influence over the country at large, on a national scale,—to carry it into every Southern State, and every Southern town, and every Southern neighborhood—to rally the moral and religious powers of the South, by an unobtrusive demonstration to a defensive warfare in this important behalf; this, and nothing less than this, is the publishing enterprise we have undertaken; and the instrumentality by which we expect to consummate it is, our Publishing House with its surroundings and co-working Depositories.

5. In the prosecution of this enterprise, few will fail to see that the house could neither rise nor prosper without the Depositories; neither could the Depositories be useful without the House. They are well connected commercially, and, together, form a compact and wholesome system. It is working well.

The desideratum now is this: The eye of the country, as well as the church, is turned towards us, and sympathizes promptly and strongly with us in patronage, so that without help to enable us to enlarge our means, we will not be able to fill the orders for books as they flow in upon us.

This assistance we expect, we look for it, we anticipate it.—Our friends are many, many—in the church and out of it. We will not undervalue our resources. We rely on the providing power of God and our country. Our cause is as holy as truth is holy—it is as patriotic as love of country is patriotic. To open out our enterprise before Southern liberality, and Southern sympathy in the cause of truth and of right, is to turn to a strong arm that will not fail us. We ought to have, and we must have, and we will have the largest, and by far the most useful Publishing House on the continent.

We invite a liberal, hearty, open financial correspondence.—Brethren, friends, men of morals and of religion, men of money and liberality, let us hear your suggestions, your propositions.

Nashville, Tenn., Jan., 1860.

METHODISM IN NEW IBERIA.

MR. EDITOR: It is with pleasure that I indite a few facts relative to the interests of Methodism here, believing they will be pleasant to others and a stimulant to labor for the same things. You say to the preachers, you wish all such news, and at your bidding you have it.

The gospel of our blessed Savior has been preached in this town about twenty-five years. There has been a Methodist Church here eighteen years. Our Episcopalian brethren shared with us in its use, until about eighteen months ago when they built a neat brick church which they now occupy.

In the latter part of the month of April last the Trustees and a few friends resolved that they would erect a house of worship suited to our position and wants, the old one being inadequate. The effort was made with happy results. That we have the most beautiful, well-proportioned church edifice in the State, out of New Orleans, is the testimony of some of the ministers who passed through here to Conference.

It is a wooden building sixty-five feet long, thirty-six feet wide, eighteen feet high. It is central in its location, slightly in appearance, unique and perfect in its architecture and symmetry. Exteriorly and interiorly it is a gem of beauty. The body of the house is painted straw color with the blindings and cupola (except the windows, which are green) pure white. The cupola when completed will reach seventy-eight feet from the ground, with a spire having two gilt balls, and an index pointing heavenward. The pews are walnut finish with panels. The pulpit is modern. The altar is semi-circular with walnut railing and banisters. The windows are large sash hung with weights, and venitian blinds. It has a spacious end gallery for the servants. It has all the modern improvements. It will seat about four hundred persons. (See in this paper a notice of dedication.)

PARSONAGE.—A "home for the evangelists" is now in process of erection on an adjoining lot. The good people have just contributed to build the Church, yet their generosity and love for God's cause and His prophets has influenced them to build a Parsonage. It is forty feet long, thirty-six wide, with galleries, hall, up-stairs, etc. The kitchen is separate.

Now I feel personally interested in this thing. How comfortable and grateful will the toil-worn itinerant feel when he is snugly ensconced in the Parsonage for the year! God bless the generous people!

INSTITUTION OF LEARNING.—Doing good makes people feel so well, that one act of generosity is apt to lead to another. How true is it: "It is more blessed (makes happier) to give than receive!"

The friends have bought the old Methodist Church and will in due time donate it to the Methodist Episcopal Church for a High School or College. With some repairs it can be fitted up to answer present purposes and will be a nucleus around which in a few years may be built up a school of high grade. Now we can have our children educated at home where they will be saved from these sectarian influences which are frequently thrown around them at other schools. How clearly has been verified in all this, that trite saying: "We don't know how much we can do, till we try."

These people deserve praise for all this. I could mention names, but I desist, their record is on high.

PIETY.—We have a goodly number of pious, exemplary members in the society here. Brotherly love prevails. There is no "biting and devouring one another." The piety in many instances is of a deep cast. Some are groaning for full redemption. Oh that the church may abide in the faith and "be holy and without blemish!" Our Sabbath-school is prosperous. Our class and prayer-meetings are good.

Your Brother in Christ, THOS. B. WHITE, Pastor.

New Iberia, La., Feb., 1st, 1860.

LETTER FROM BALTIMORE.

Baltimore, Jan. 6, 1860.

Our holidays are over, and business has generally been resumed. We have had for a week past an unusually tight spell of weather. The merry sleigh-bells have been jingling in almost every direction. We have had a very favorable season for ice-dealers compared with last winter. Owing to the mildness of the season a year ago, there were only a few days in which ice was of sufficient thickness to be cut; the consequence was, that our ice-dealers had to procure their ice from the vicinity of Boston, at a high rate, which made it a poor business to them the past year. We have been cutting ice for individual use as thick as ten inches.

We have been favored with a visit from that venerable pioneer of the West—Rev. Peter Cartwright. He lectured in the Exeter-street Church, on last Friday evening, for the benefit of the Ladies' Mite Society. His lecture consisted chiefly of the relation of some thrilling and amusing scenes in his own personal history, such as his father's emigration from Virginia to the West, when he was a boy; his being licensed to exhort, and sent out by his presiding elder to form a circuit. His first regular appointment by the Conference removed him five hundred miles from home; the second, three hundred further; and in his third year he had not money enough to take a letter from his mother out of the post-office. Starts for home, without money, in his old patched clothes, journeying by faith like Abraham of old; arrives at home, and undertakes to haul rails for his father, to earn the means to refit him for traveling; blisters his hands; his father stops him, gives him a new suit of clothes exchanges horses with him, and presents him with forty dollars in cash, and he starts out again to travel. He only had part of a libile for the first three years of his travel.

The Rev. Peter Cartwright is now 75 years of age; he has been preaching over half a century, and is quite active now.—He preached last Sabbath in the Exeter-street Church. He lectured again on Monday evening, in the Exeter-street Church. He lectured again on Monday evening in the Strawbridge Church, and has gone to fill some engagements in New Jersey, promising to return again to Baltimore shortly.

The time-honored custom of holding Watch-Meetings was observed in most of our churches on last Saturday night. Some of the meetings were of a very interesting character.

The Legislature of our State assembled in Annapolis, on last Wednesday. It is supposed that the contested elections of our city delegation will be among the first business of the session.

M.

HOMER COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR: By order of the Board of Trustees of Homer College, I send you the enclosed card for insertion in your paper.

The College opened in September last, under charge of the present faculty. To the last Louisiana Annual Conference, the Trustees reported seventy-five pupils in attendance, suggesting that the prospects for a large increase were very flattering. The number now has reached to about one hundred, with still flattering prospects of increased numbers.

The second Session opened on the first day of February. The Board has elected Mr. William Clegg Tator, to Preparatory Department, and they hope soon to be able to add other Professors and make the facilities for education in Homer College as good as those are in any Institution in the South.

In the selection of the Rev. Baxter Clegg for the Presidency of the College, the Board has been most fortunate. Having firmness and energy of character with long experience and ripe scholarship, he brings to the conduct of the Institution those advantages which many enjoy only after a long probation and an arduous struggle for existence. Dr. C. G. Young, than whom none is better prepared to judge in such cases, writes "that in the selection of President Clegg, the Trustees have secured the services of the very man they most needed."

Professor Stacy has been long and most favorably known among us here as a successful educator. He brings to the Department of languages an experience of eight years, with a peculiar tact and talent for imparting to the young information in classic literature.

Professor Grethe is but recently from Chapel Hill, North Carolina, where he graduated in 1852 with marked distinction, having taken the first honors in a class of thirty-nine pupils.

President Swain recommends him as a finished scholar and an accomplished gentleman.

With this faculty, and the great advantage, in location, healthfulness, etc., secured to our enterprise, the College cannot fail to reach, at once, a degree of prosperity rarely attained by young Institutions in so short a time.

J. M. THOMASSON, Sec.

LETTER FROM TEXAS.

MR. EDITOR.—When you were editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, and I was traveling a frontier mission, I frequently corresponded with your sanctum, and you published my correspondence. Since then both of our positions have changed. The General Conference, for reasons satisfactory to themselves changed you from Galveston to New Orleans, and placed you in the chair editorial of another of our glorious family of Advocates, and Bishop Pierce, for good and weighty reasons, of course, changed me from the region of Indians and grass-hoppers, to the land of corn, cotton and sugar. Last year I was sent to Columbus circuit, Texas Conference, and, as Bishop Kavanaugh would say, it was well that I was sent, for it was nearly the last place to which, if left to myself, I should have thought of going. But, because I was sent I did go; and now I am, perhaps, a permanent citizen of Colorado county, of which Columbus is the county site. I believe that "there is a divinity that shapes our ends, rough-hew them as we may."

Columbus is a thriving little town, and will soon be in a few miles of the terminus of the Harrisburg railroad. This county is the third, on the Colorado river, from the coast. It is one of the most productive counties in the State. In fact, according to the cotton-growing statistics, published in De Bow's Review some years or so back, Colorado county stood at the head of the list as a cotton growing county. And yet it contains a considerable amount of inferior land. The most productive lands are in the river bottoms; the second class is the black prairie; then the sandy post-oak lands, and last, is the poor white prairie, fit for nothing but stock range. There are some historical reminiscences connected with this county. During the darkest period of the Texas revolution, after the fall of the Alamo, and defeat of Col. Fannin and his brave compatriots at Goliad, Gen. Houston, at the head of a little Texas army, retreated from Gonzales and pitched his tent at Burnham's, near the boundary line between this and Fayette counties. From there, after a short stay, he crossed to the east bank of the river and marched down to a point two miles below where Columbus now stands. When Santa Anna arrived he took his position on the west side of the river, and thus the two armies lay for several days, within a few miles of each other. And many of the old Texian patriots who were in the army at the time, think that here Houston ought to have given the merciless invader the same genteel thrashing that he received a short time afterwards at San Jacinto. This is a question, however, that I will not attempt to settle.

There is an old tradition about that when the Mexican army left here in pursuit of the retreating patriots, they buried a large amount of gold and silver coin which their discomfiture at San Jacinto prevented them from regaining. Some persons, I learn, have been credulous enough to search diligently for this hidden treasure, but they never found it. When they do I will try and let you know it. So much for Colorado county. If this sketch finds favor in your eyes, you may expect to hear from me again about something else.

Columbus, Texas, Feb. 1860. WESLEY SMITH.

THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

THE Minutes of the last session of the Louisiana Conference, held at Franklin, handsomely printed, have been laid upon our table.

We first notice the missionary report. Embracing the German Missions in New Orleans, which have 274 members and 328 children in Sabbath Schools, served by three German missionaries, and prosperous, there are in this Conference, 14 missions, white and colored—about 35 Churches, preaching-places, and plantations—about 1472 members and probationers—about 600 children in Sunday School, or catechized—about 5000 population served—and over $3000 paid for the support of missionaries on their respective works. The items are not well and fully reported. The amount of missionary money raised in the regular way during the year was $6,801 81. If reported as some of the other Conferences do, including the amount paid missionaries on their works, Louisiana raised last year about $10,000. At the last session she resolved to raise $10,000, nett, during the present year. We hope every district will raise its assessment.

Six ministers and preachers were received on trial—two were admitted into full connection and ordained deacons—one readmitted—seven received by transfer—two local preachers elected to deacon's orders, but not present to be ordained—five traveling preachers ordained elders—one local preacher ordained elder—three located this year—three are supernumerary, and two superannuated—none had died.

The membership of the Church in the Conference is, 7221 white members in full connection—1894 white probationers—5239 colored members in full connection—1295 colored probationers—100 white local preachers—8 colored local preachers—total 15,757—increase last year, 2218—a very gratifying advance. We hope it may be doubled this year.

The amount necessary to support the Bishops, superannuated preachers, and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers is raised by a per. cent assessed on the salaries of the members of the Conference. Thus, the amount is raised in full. There is never a failure. The assessment now is 4 per cent. The preacher can raise it, or pay it himself. The people will always raise it for him, if properly called upon.

This Conference is moving earnestly and successfully forward in the work of building parsonages in every charge.

As to Education, the Conference is joint owner, with the Mississippi Conference, of Centenary College of Louisiana, located at Jackson La., the most prosperous college, we believe, of the Southern Church. Both Conferences are harmoniously laboring to endow it this year. Both have good agents in the field. If Louisiana and Mississippi are true to themselves, they will not be behind Alabama in this work. They have an institution of which the whole South may be proud—with between two and three hundred students.

Homer College, at Homer, which has just gone into operation, under the Presidency of Dr. Clegg, is out of debt, the building nearly finished, with an endowment fund of $24,000, and a prospect of raising it to $50,000 during the present year.

Pierce and Paine College, at Pleasant Hill, expects to have its building completed by October next, and has, in cash and notes, over $63,000, and the prospects for its success are very encouraging. Rev. B. F. Alexander has been and is still the Agent.

Mansfield Female College, under the Presidency of Dr. Thweatt, is in a flourishing condition, with over a hundred pupils, good buildings, and every facility.

The Conference also has a deep interest in the success of those flourishing schools at Baton Rouge—the College to Institute under Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, one of the most experienced and successful instructors in the country—and the Female Seminary under Mrs. Mary W. Read, who has long been known as an excellent instructor of young ladies; and also in the New Iberia Female Seminary at Opelousas.

There are reported in the Conference, 83 Sabbath Schools—595 officers and teachers—2785 Scholars—17,852 volumes in library—$1,582, 61 raised for Sunday School purposes—1289 Sunday School Visitors taken—$463 raised by Sunday School missionary collections. This report ought to be quadrupled all round during the present year.

The Conference was most hearty in its support of its organ, the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and also of the Nashville Christian Advocate, the Quarterly Review, the Home Circle, and the Sunday School Visitor. It was resolved that each preacher, immediately on arriving at his work, take energetic steps to increase the circulation of the New Orleans Advocate, and to invite the assistance of laymen. The Conference was unanimous in support of the New Orleans Agency of the Publishing House, at 112 Camp Street. All misunderstandings and difficulties were removed. The Book Agent at Nashville, Dr. McFerrin, is expected to keep the House fully supplied with books, under the control of a suitable Agent, and we doubt not he will redeem his pledge.

LITERARY NOTICES.

LIFE AND TIMES OF GEN. SAM. DALE, the Mississippi Partisan. By J. F. H. Claiborne. Illustrated by John M'Lenan. New York: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, Franklin-square. 1860. For sale in New Orleans by Thos. L. White, 105 Canal street.

Here is a book that Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Florida, Arkansas, and Texas, particularly, and the South-West generally, will read. It is the thrilling history of a leading actor in a thrilling time. The verity and importance of the history are well known, and Col. Claiborne's qualifications as a historian are equally well known. The style is fine, and the illustrations are also fine.

LIFE IN SPAIN: Past and Present. By Walter Thornbury, author of "Every Man his own Trumpeter," "Art and Nature," "Songs of the Cavaliers and Roundheads," etc. With Illustrations. New York: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, Franklin-square. 1860. For sale in New Orleans by Thos. L. White, 105 Canal street.

Our New York literary correspondent, some weeks since, characterized this as "a very brilliant book." Mr. Thornbury was for many years the art-critic of the London Athenæum, of which Mr. Hepworth Dixon was editor, and the treatment Mr. Thornbury's book received at the hands of his chief, on account of its superiority to his book on the same subject, is alleged as the cause of his leaving the Athenæum. Mr. Thornbury's book first appeared, serially, in Household Words. Spanish life and manners are especially interesting to Americans at the present time.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE.—On this page, fifth column, will be found the advertisement of this institution under the new arrangement. Read it.

FROM THE RIO GRANDE.

WAR RENEWED—BATTLE ON MEXICAN SOIL.—AMERICANS VICTORIOUS.

In addition to the wholesale robbery of Americans on the Rio Grande, by Cortina, we have now new and exciting intelligence. By the Arizona, from the mouth of the Rio Grande, which arrived here last Saturday, letters have been received by the papers of this city, informing us that the war has been renewed on the Rio Grande, and that a battle has been fought on Mexican soil, between the Texian Rangers, sixty in number, under Capt. Ford, and two hundred Mexicans under Cortina. The Mexicans were routed, with 25 or 30 killed, the Americans having one mortally wounded. The canoe of the fight was, that the steamer Ranchero, with a considerable amount of funds, and several passengers, among them women and children, was fired into by Cortina's party, from the Mexican side, about 80 miles above Brownsville. The Rangers were near at hand, on this side, marching down, for the protection of the boat, and they immediately crossed over and chastised the robbers. Reinforcements were immediately sent to the Rangers, raising their numbers to two hundred. The Mexicans also sent reinforcements from Matamoras. It is now certainly ascertained that the Mexican authorities sympathize with Cortina. There was no doubt of it before. Therefore, war between the two countries has really commenced.

The Purser of the Arizona furnishes the following additional intelligence: On the 7th, an express came down stating that Cortina had again crossed to the American side, followed by Ford; that he robbed the mail-rider from Rio Grande City of what money he had, and let him pass; and that he (C.) was about thirty miles above Brownsville, with 300 men.

Later from Northern Mexico.

The Brownsville (Rio Grande) Flag of the 26th ult., has the following: On Tuesday we received information, by private letters from Monterey, which we consider quite reliable, to the effect that the Liberal forces met the Reactionists under command of Miramon, and were overwhelmingly defeated. Their entire artillery, numbering fifteen pieces, and six hundred prisoners, were taken by Miramon.

The authorities of Monterey, headed by the Governor, have exiled Gen. Arrombarri, Gen. Blanco, and a lawyer by the name of Simon Garza Melo. The object is unquestionably to reinstate Ex-Governor Vidaurri; and it having been ascertained that Aramberri had received a majority vote for Governor, it became necessary to exile him and his friends before publicly announcing the fact. The next news will be the return and reinstatement in office of Mr. Vidaurri.

LATER AND IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

Arrival of the Isabel at Charleston. Success of the Liberal Army. Defeat of the Reactionary Movement. Liberals recaptured Orijava. Expedition against Vera Cruz abandoned. Ocampo's Special Mission to Washington and London.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Feb. 13.—The steamship Isabel has arrived at this port from Havana, bringing advices from that port to the 8th inst; also brings advices of the most important character from Mexico.

The advices from Vera Cruz are to the 4th inst., five days later than those received by the schooner Red Fox, at New Orleans.

Among the passengers by the Isabel is Mr. E. L. Plumb, who comes from the American Legation at Vera Cruz as bearer of important despatches to our government at Washington.

The position of the two contending parties had very much altered during the week previous to Mr. Plumb's departure, the prospects of the Constitutional Government having very much improved, while those of the Church party, or Miramon's Government, had become proportionately discouraging.

The Liberal troops had defeated the Reactionists' forces at several important points and re-taken important positions.

The Vera Cruz correspondent of the Charleston Courier, writing from that city under date of Feb. 4th, states that Gen. Cobos, at the head of 2000 men of the Reactionist army, had been entirely defeated at Oajaca, and were obliged to retreat in disorder.

These 2000 men were a portion of the force which Miramon was intending to concentrate on Vera Cruz, and their disastrous defeat, it is believed, will make it necessary for Miramon to abandon his contemplated expedition against Vera Cruz.

Advices from San Louis Potosi are also of the highest importance and most cheering character to the Constitutional Government.

The Liberal troops in that quarter had everywhere been successful, having recaptured Colima, San Louis Potosi and Zacatecas.

The Church forces had also been entirely defeated near Jalasco by the Liberal troops under Gen. Cenavajal, with the loss of one hundred prisoners taken by the Liberals, together with a large quantity of artillery and munitions of war.

The progress of Gen. Woll, of the Reactionist army, had been successfully checked in Jalasco, and the territory now occupied by the Miramon government had been reduced to a very limited circle.

The available force now at the command of the Juarez government, is stated at 30,000 men. Miramon, by extraordinary exertions and unscrupulous means, managed to raise $450,000 by negotiating the bonds of his Government to the amount of $15,000,000. This was only accomplished by illicit dealing among the friends of the Ministers.

Nine millions of these bonds are to be entered in the French convention as a part of the foreign debt of the Government.

The report is confirmed that Mr. Matthews, the English Charge d'Affaires at the capital, had presented the ultimatum of his Government, demanding full payment of the claims of British subjects as recently presented, and allowing eight days for their settlement, at the expiration of which period, if the claims were not satisfied, he would demand his passports.

But little confidence, however, was placed in the sincerity of the British Charge d'Affairs.

Senor Ocampo has resigned his seat in the Juarez Cabinet as Minister of Foreign Affairs, and has accepted a special mission of great importance to the United States and to England.

His mission to the United States is with a view of arranging more definitely the terms of our intervention in Mexico under the pending treaty.

His mission to England is for the purpose of urging the importance of its recognizing the constitutional government as the legitimate government of Mexico.

Ocampo was to visit England first, and was making his arrangements to leave by the English packet of the 5th of March. Gen. Degollado, the late commando-in-chief of Liberal forces, had been appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs in place of Ocampo.

MR. BUCHANAN'S POLICY TOWARDS MEXICO.

[From the London Times, Jan. 13.]

The condition of Mexico is delineated in Mr. Buchanan's Message with such remarkable force, and the actual state of that Republic is so entirely without precedent in ancient or modern history, that we must once more draw attention to the facts. That Mexico had been left a prey to anarchy and disorganization was generally understood, but the subject has now received that specific and authentic exposition by which national intervention is usually preceded.

The state of Mexico is altogether without example. There is no element of stability in the people which could enable the State to survive a casual disorder. In other countries great nobles or obstinate factions have fought for years without much affecting the habits or pursuits of the bulk of the population, but in Mexico the anarchy extends to every man's hearth. There is no protection for life or property—no guarantee for justice or order in any part of town or country. Then, again, there is no definable cause of conflict, no question which might be settled, once for all, by the predominance of this principle or that. The only explanation we can offer of these interminable revolutions is, that the Mexican Church will not acquiesce in the liberalism of the only kind of government which has a chance of durability. The Church in Mexico, as well as everywhere else, sticks stoutly for its prerogative, its endowments and its power, and these are not likely to command unlimited respect from a popular government. Hence, probably, the failure of the constitutional experiment; but apart from this obstacle, which might be eventually surmountable, it seems extremely doubtful whether the material for self-government exists in Mexico at all. No constitutional fabric erected by Mexicans possesses any cohesion, and the country exhibits the spectacle of a community as incapable of self-organization as an infant school. The picture drawn by the American President of its actual condition as reported to him by his own envoys, is such as the pages of history would be search'd for in vain.

The Mexicans snap their fingers at the United States. They imprison, rob, maltreat and murder American subjects without the smallest scruple; and, though they lie, as it were, at the very feet of their formidable neighbors, such is the strength of their weakness that they set the Union at defiance. A fiftieth part of the provocation given by Miramon would, if ordered by England, France, or Spain, have covered the ocean with American privateers; but the "President Substitute" is perfectly aware that in the case of Mexico the United States have but one method of redress, and that is by actual military occupation of the Mexican territory. There is no room for diplomatic finesse, for there is no government to which it could be addressed, nor could any species of political coercion be felt by a country so profoundly disorganized already. The Mexicans, in fact, are safer than the Mormons, for the Mormons had at least a solid establishment, though it was a long way off, whereas Gen. Miramon's constituents would elude the grasp of an invader as effectually as the red Indians of Sonora.

An attempt, however, of this kind, Mr. Buchanan is prepared to recommend. He conceives, very reasonably, that the Government at Vera Cruz would receive with alacrity the proffer of so powerful an alliance as that of the State, and that Juarez, enforced by an American contingent, might not only re-establish the constitution of 1857, but also gratify his allies with the proper amount of redress and indemnity.

There is no question but that the Americans, if they so please, can march to Mexico, nor is it to be doubted that their advance would be attended with at least the temporary benefit of tranquillity.

MOBILE AND GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD.—The Mobile Advertiser learns that the Directors of the Mobile and Great Northern Railroad Company have closed contracts with experienced and responsible parties for grading, bridging, etc., thirty miles of the proposed Mobile and Great Northern Railroad, and that the work will be commenced immediately.

WE WERE agreeably surprised this morning with a visit from Mr. Healy, the celebrated artist, who is paying his first visit to the Crescent City. Mr. Healy proposes to spend the winter here, and will be welcomed by all our amateurs. At present he is at the St. Charles Hotel.—Picayune.

RECEIPTS, BY THE POST-OFFICE,

From February 7, to February 14th, 1860.

A—W H Armstrong, $5; M J Abbott, $1 75; C G Andrews, $10.
B—B Borden, $2; L Ballard, $2; J C Bruff, $2; W Brack, $2.
C—M E Crawford, $2; E G Cook, $10.
D—J F Dicklason, $8; T H Dawson, $4; J M Davis, $2; J C Duvall, 60c; T L Densler, $2.
F—S Flowers, $2.
G—J N Glover, $5; J W Gelson, $2; H C Grayson, $6; G W Gibson, $2.
H—R H Hall, $2; J C Hicks, $10; W B Hill, $5; W C Harris, $2; J T Harrison, $2 70.
K—O T Keller, $116 30.
L—M J Lafitte, $2.
M—G W M'Innis, $5. W M'Pherson, $2; J Mathews, $2 P R M'Crury, $4.
P—W G Perry, $2 A Post, $11.
R—J W Ratliff, $2; E A Richardson, $2 87; J C Reid, $30.
S—R A Sibley, $6; J O Strickling, $2.
W—P J Walker, $2; J W Warwick, $2.
No name, $10.

MARRIAGES.

"It is not good for man to be alone."

In Columbus, Miss., at the residence of the bride's mother, by Rev. B. F. Larrabee, Judge MARION E. NORRIS, of Quitman, Miss., to Miss ANNA CANNON, of the former place.

On Tuesday, the 17th January, at the residence of the bride's mother, by the Rev. Wm. C. Ross, Dr. J. C. FANT to Miss ANNE E. CONNOR, all of Noxubee county, Miss.

On the 25th inst., at the residence of Noble Lea, Wm. M. FARMER, of Copiah, to Miss Sophrona Lea, of Pike county, Miss.

By the Rev. F. M. Featherstone, on the 18th inst., Mr. M. J. FUTERALL to Miss MARGARET E. FESTAS, all of Yazoo county, Miss.

On the 20th Dec., at the residence of the bride's father, by A. B. F. Rawls, Mr. G. W. MOODY to Miss ARETTA DAVIS, all of Marion county, Miss.

On the 24th, inst., by Rev. John D. Worrell, THOMAS H. HARRIS to Miss TELITHA C. TRAYWICK, all of Monterey, Butler county, Ala.

On Thursday, Jan. 26, by the Rev. James W. Shores, Dr. JARVIS M. MCCARY to Miss HURSILINE E. MOTELY, all of Autauga county, Ala.

COMMERCIAL.

MONDAY EVENING, February 13th, 1860.

We condense the following statement from the New Orleans Price Current of the 11th instant:—

A fair amount of business has been done in our general market during the past week, though operations were somewhat interrupted in the early part by unfavorable weather, and it will be seen by the details which follow that the rates for our leading staples, and most descriptions of Western Produce, have steadily tended in favor of holders. In Cotton a large business has been done at higher prices; while Tobacco remains inactive, with nearly nominal quotations.

COTTON.—With respect to prices, we have to remark that there has been no further change, though rather easier for buyers within the last day or two, especially for the lower grades of Cotton.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	6 @ 7	Good Middling	11¾@12
Ordinary	7½@ 8¾	Middling Fair	12¼@12¾
Good Ordinary	8¾@ 9¾	Fair	—@—
Low Middling	—to @10¾	Good Fair	—@—
Middling	10¾@11¼	Good and Fine	—@—

SUGAR.—The sales of the week amount to 2500 hhds. We quote for Inferior and Refining 3¾ to 5; Common to Good Common 5¼ to 6¼; Fair to Fully Fair 7 to 7¾; Prime to Choice 8 to 8¾; Centrifugal and Clarified 6¼ to 9¼ cents per pound. The above quotations apply to round lots, but small orders of 5 hhds and under, could not be filled without paying a further advance of ¼ to ½c per pound.

MOLASSES.—Total receipts of the week 10,000 barrels. The prices obtained during the week were: Inferior to Fair, 32 to 38 cents per gallon; and Prime to Choice, 30 to 40½ cents; half barrels, 38 to 45 cents per gallon.

FLOUR.—About 6,000 bbls have been sold during the past week, at from $6 00 to $6 25 for superfine, $6 25 to 7 00 for ordinary to good extra, and $6 75 to $7 50 per bbl. for choice extra brands.

GRAIN.—The receipts of Corn continue light. About 13,000 sacks have been sold at from $0 75 to 0 85 for ordinary, and $0 95 for good white. Oats have been in moderate request at 60c to 65c per bushel for good to prime St. Louis. Bran sells at $1 00 to $1 75 for ordinary to choice lots. Wheat sells at $1 15 per bushel for prime red.

PORK.—The principal sales reported through the week were at $17 75 to $18 50 per bbl. for Mess.

BEEF.—We quote Primo Mess at $14 00 per bbl. for extra brands.

BACON.—Shoulders 8¼ to 0; Ribbed Sides 10 to 10¼; Clear Sides 11 to 11¾; Sugar-cured Hams 12 to 12½ cents per pound.

LARD.—We quote 10 to 10¾c for prime to choice prime, in tes., and 12¾ to 13c. for kegs.

BUTTER.—Western generally selling at 14 to 16 cents per pound, according to quality; and Cheese 9 to 9½c.

BAGGING AND BALE ROPE.—We quote Kentucky Bagging at 13 to 15 cents per yard; India Bagging, 11¾ to 12½c; Bale Rope, hand spun, 7¾ to 8¼, and machine made, 8¼ to 8¾ cents per pound.

GUNNY BAGS.—Limited parcels sell at 10 cents for light and 11 to 11½c. to heavy and extra heavy bags.

COFFEE.—We quote fair at 11 to 11¾, and prime at 12¼c. per pound.

LIVE-STOCK.—Beef Cattle—Western, 7 to 9½c. per lb. net; Texas—ordinary to fair $15 to 18, and choice $20 to 30 per head.

Hogs, selling at 7 to 8½c. per pound net.

Sheep—Selling at $3 50 to $6 00 per head.

Veal Cattle—Selling at $8 00 to $11 00 per head.

Milch Cows—Dull, at $30 to $85 per head.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

ALABAMA DEPOSITORY.

No. 11 Water Street, Mobile, Alabama.

The notes given to the Alabama Book and Tract

Poetry.

TENNYSON'S NEW POEM.
For which he received fifty dollars a line

SEA DREAMS. AN IDYLL.

A city clerk, but gently born and bred;
His wife, an unknown artist's orphan child—
One babe was theirs, a Margaret, three years old:
They, thinking that her clear germander eye
Droopt in the giant-factoried city-glooms,
Came, with a month's leave given them, to the sea:
For which his gains were dock'd, however small:
His gains were small, and hard his work; besides,
Their slender household fortunes (for the man
Had risked his little) like the little thrift,
Trembled in perilous places o'er a deep:
And oft, when sitting all alone, his face
Would darken, as he cursed his recklessness,
And that one nauseous mouth which lured him, rogue,
To buy wild shares in some Peruvian mine.
Now seaward-bound for health, they gained a coast,
All sand and cliff and deep-incurving cave,
At close of day; slept, woke, and went the next
The Sabbath, pious variers from the church,
To chapel; where a heated polpiteer,
Not preaching simple Christ in simple wise,
Announced the coming doom, and fulminated
Against the scarlet woman and her creed:
For sideways up he swung his arms, and shrieked
"Thus, thus with violence," or "as if he held
The Apocalyptic millstone, and himself
Were that great Angel: "Thus with violence
Shall Babylon be cast into the sea;
Then comes the close." The gentle-hearted wife
Sat shuddering at the ruin of a world;
He at his own; but when the wordy storm
Had ended, forth they moved and paced the sand,
Ran in and out the long sea-framing caves,
Drank the large air, and saw, but scarce believed (The sootflake of so many a summer still Clung to their fancies) that they saw the sea.
So anw on sand they walk'd, and anw on cliff,
Lingering about the thymy promontories,
Until the sails were darken'd in the west
And rosed in the east: then homeward and to bed:
Where she, who kept a tender Christian hope
Haunting a holy text, and still to that Returning, as the bird returns, at night,
"Let not the sun go down upon your wrath,"
Said, "Love, forgive him:" but he did not speak;
And silenced by that silence lay the wife,
Remembering our dear Lord who died for all,
And musing on the little lives of men,
And how they mar this their sphere, yet to be added, on the Gun aged pair at their little window, old age. On the walls hung Wilson's, but not more beautiful than the
And I will sing
Since summer of life. Very
Saying him,
The woman half turn'd round from him she loved, ill be Left him one hand, and reaching through the night
Her other, found (for it was close beside)
And half embraced the basket cradle-head
With one soft arm, which, like the pliant bough
That moving moves the nest and nestling, sway'd
The cradle while she sung this baby song.

What does little birdie say
In her nest at peep of day?
Let me fly, says little birdie,
Mother, let me fly away.
Birdie, rest a little longer,
Till the little wings are stronger.
So she rests a little longer,
Then she flies away.

What does little baby say,
In her bed at peep of day?
Baby says, like little birdie,
Let me rise and fly away.
Baby, sleep a little longer,
Till the little limbs are stronger.
If she sleeps a little longer,
Baby too shall fly away.

"She sleeps: let us too, let all evil, sleep.
He also sleeps—another sleep than ours.
He can do no more wrong: forgive him, dear,
And I shall sleep the sounder!"

Then the man,
"His deeds yet live, the worst is yet to come.
Yet let your sleep for this one night be sound;
I do forgive him!"

"Thanks, my love," she said,
"Your own will be the sweeter," and they slept.

And others, 'Let them lie, for they have fall'n,
And still they strove and wrangled: and I grieved
In my strange dream, I knew not why, to find
Their wildest wailing never out of tune
With that sweet note; and ever when their shrieks
Ran highest up the gamut, that great wave
Returning, though none mark'd it, on the crowd
Broke, mix'd with awful light, and show'd their eyes
Glaring, and passionate looks, and swept away
The men of flesh and blood, and men of stone,
To the waste deeps together: and I fixt
My wistful eyes on two fair images,
Both crown'd with stars and high among the stars—
The Virgin Mother standing with her child
High up on one of those dark minster fronts—
Till she began to totter, and the child
Clung to the mother, and sent out a cry
Which mix'd with little Margaret's, and I woke,
And my dream awed me:—well—but what are dreams?
Yours came but from the breaking of a glass,
And mine but from the crying of a child."

"Child? No!" said he, "but this tide's roar, and his,
Our Boanerges with his threats of doom,
And loud-lunged Antibabylonianism,
(Although I grant but little music there)
Went both to make your dream: but were there such
A music, harmonizing our wild cries,
Sphere-music such as that you dream'd about,
Why, that would make our passions far too like
The discords dear to the musician. No—
One shriek of hate would jar all the hymns of heaven:
True Devils with no ear, they howl in tune
With nothing but the Devil!"

"True indeed!
One ot our town, but later by an hour
Here than ourselves, sucke with me on the shore;
While you were running down the sands, and made
The dimpled flounce of the sea-fan hollow flap,
Good man, to please the child: she brought strange news.
I would not tell you then to spoil your day,
But he, at whom you rail so much, is dead?"

"Dead? who is dead?"

"The man your eye pursued.
A little after you had parted from him,
He dropt dead of heart-disease."

"Dead? he? of heart-disease? what heart had he
To die of? dead!"

"Ah, dearest, if there be
A devil in man, there is an angel too,
And if he did that wrong you charge him with,
His angel broke his heart. But your rough voice
(You spoke so loud) has roused the child again.
Sleep, little birdie, sleep! will she not sleep
Without her 'little birdie?' well, then, sleep, you 'birdie.'"

"Nay, but net more beautiful than the
Saying him,
The woman half turn'd round from him she loved,
Left him one hand, and reaching through the night
Her other, found (for it was close beside)
And half embraced the basket cradle-head
With one soft arm, which, like the pliant bough
That moving moves the nest and nestling, sway'd
The cradle while she sung this baby song.

What does little birdie say
In her nest at peep of day?
Let me fly, says little birdie,
Mother, let me fly away.
Birdie, rest a little longer,
Till the little wings are stronger.
So she rests a little longer,
Then she flies away.

What does little baby say,
In her bed at peep of day?
Baby says, like little birdie,
Let me rise and fly away.
Baby, sleep a little longer,
Till the little limbs are stronger.
If she sleeps a little longer,
Baby too shall fly away.

"She sleeps: let us too, let all evil, sleep.
He also sleeps—another sleep than ours.
He can do no more wrong: forgive him, dear,
And I shall sleep the sounder!"

Then the man,
"His deeds yet live, the worst is yet to come.
Yet let your sleep for this one night be sound;
I do forgive him!"

"Thanks, my love," she said,
"Your own will be the sweeter," and they slept.

A frontier element he always modified our civilization, and with a little by their fends.
to come.
ame the two were sleeping, a full tide with ground-swell, which, on the foremost rocks
Touching, spjetted in spirits of wild sea-smoke,
And scaled in sheets of wasteful foam, and fell
In vast sea-cataracts—ever and anon
Dead claps of thunder from within the cliffs
Heard through the living roar. At this the babe,
Their Margaret cradled near them, whil'd and woke
The mother, and the father suddenly cried,
"A wreck, a wreck!" then turn'd, and groaning said,

"Forgive! How many will say, 'forgive,' and find
A sort of absolution in the sound
To bate a little longer! Ne; the sin
That neither God nor man can well forgive,
Hypocrisy, I saw it in him once.
It is not true that second thoughts are best,
But first, and third, which are a riper first;
Too ripe, too late! they come too late for use.
Ah love, there surely lives in man and beast
Something divine to warn them of their foes;
And such a sense, when first I lighted on him,
Said, 'trust him not:' but after, when I came
To know him more, I lost it, knew him less;
Fought with what seem'd my own uncharity;
Sat at his table; drank his costly wines;
Made more and more allowance for his talk;
Went further, fool! and trusted him with all,
All my poor scrapings from a dozen years
Of dust and deskwork: there is no such mine,
None; but a gulf of ruin, swallowing gold,
Not making. Ruin'd! ruin'd! the sea roars Ruin: a fearful night!"

"Not fearful; fair,"
Said the good wife, "if every star in heaven
Can make it fair: you do but hear the tide.
Had you ill dreams?"

"Oh yes," he said, "I dream'd
Of such a tide swelling toward the land,
And I from out the boundless outer deep
Swept with it to the shore, and enter'd one
Of those dark caves that run beneath the cliffs.
I thought the motion of the boundless deep
Bore through the cave, and I was heaved upon it
In darkness: then I saw one lovely star
Larger and larger. 'What a world,' I thought,
'To live in!' but in moving on I found
Only the landward exit of the cave,
Bright with the sun upon the stream beyond:
And near the light a giant woman sat,
All over earthy, like a piece of earth,
A pick-axe in her hand: then out I slipt
Into a land all sun and blossom, trees
As high as heaven, and every bird that sings:
And here the night-light flickering in my eyes
Awoke me."

"That was then your dream," she said,
"Not sad, but sweet."

"So sweet, I lay," said he,
"And mused upon it, drifting up the stream
In fancy, till I slept again, and pieced
The broken vision; for I dream'd that still
The motion of the great deep bore me on,
And that the woman walk'd upon the brink:
I wonder'd at her strength, and ask'd her of it:
'It came,' she said, 'by working in the mines:'
Of these to ask her of my shares, I thought;
And asked; but not a word; she shook her head.
And then the motion of the current ceas'd
And there was rolling thunder; and we reach'd
A mountain, like a wall of burs and thorns;
But she with her strong feet up the steep hill
Trod out a path; I followed; and at top
She pointed seaward; there a fleet of glass,
That seem'd a fleet of jewels under me,
Sailing along before a gloomy cloud
That not one moment ceased to thunder, past
In sunshine: right across its track there lay,
Down in the water, a long reef of gold,
Or what seemed gold: and I was glad at first
To think that in our often ransack'd world
Still so much gold was left; and then I feared
Lest that gay navy there should splinter on it,
And fearing waved my arm to warn them off;
An idle signal, for the little fleet
(I thought I could have died to save it) near'd,
Touch'd, clink'd, and clash'd, and vanish'd, and I woke,
I heard the clash so clearly. Now I see
My dream was Life; the woman honest Work;
And my poor venture but a fleet of glass
Wreck'd on a reef of visionary gold."

"Nay," said the kindly wife to comfort him,
"You raised your arm, you tumbled down and broke
The glass with little Margaret's medicine in it;
And, breaking that, you made and broke your dream:
A trifle makes a dream, a trifle breaks."

"No trifle," groaned the husband; "yesterday
I met him suddenly in the street, and ask'd
That which I ask'd the woman in my dream.
Like her, he shook his head. 'Show me the books!'
He dodged me with a long and loose account.
'The books, the books!' but he, he could not wait,
Bound on a matter of life and death:
When the great Books (see Daniel seven, the teuth)
Were open'd, I should find he meant me well;
And then rose to bloat himself, and ooze
All over with the fat affectionate smile
That makes the widow lean. 'My dearest friend,
Have faith, have faith! We live by faith,' said he,
'And all things work together for the good
Of those'—it makes me sick to quote him—la-t
Grip my hand hard, and with God-bless-you went.
I stood like one that had received a blow;
I found a hard friend in his loose accounts,
A loose one in the hard grip of his hand,
A curse in his God-bless-you: then my eyes
Pursued him down the street, and far away,
Among the honest shoulders of the crowd,
Read rascal in the motions of his back,
And scoundrel in the supple-sliding knee."

"Was he so bound, poor soul?" said the good wife;
"So are we all: but do not call him, love,
Before you prove him, rogue, and proved, forgive.
His gain is loss; for he that wrongs his friend
Wrongs himself more, and ever bears about
A silent court of justice in his breast,
Himself the judge and jury, and himself
The prisoner at the bar, ever condemned:
And that drags down his life: then comes what comes
Hereafter: and he meant, he said he meant,
Perhaps he meant, or partly meant, you well.

"'With all his conscience and one eye askew'—
Love, let me quote these lines, that you may learn
A man is likewise counsel for himself,
Too often, in that silent court of yours—
'With all his conscience and one eye askew,
A false, he partly took himself for true;
Whose pious talk, when most his heart was dry,
Made sure the crafty crowstoot round his eye;
Who, never naming God except for gain,
So never took that useful name in vain;
Nor deeds of gift, but gifts of grace he forged,
And snakelike slimed his victim ere he gorged;
And oft at Bible meetings, o'er the rest
Arising, did his holy oily best,
Dropping the too rough H in Hell and Heaven,
To spread the word by which himself had thriven.'
How like you this old satire?"

"Nay," she said,
"I loathe it: he had never kindly heart,
Nor ever cared to better his own kind,
Who first wrote satire, with no pity in it.
But will you hear my dream, for I had one
That altogether went to music? still,
It awed me. Well—I dreamed that round the north
A light, a belt of luminous vapor, lay,
And ever in it a low musical note
Swell'd up and died; and, as it swell'd, a ridge
Of breaker came from out the belt, and still Grew with the growing note, and when the note
Had reach'd a thunderous fullness, on those cliffs Broke, burst with awful light (the same as that Which lived within the belt) by which I saw
That all these lines of cliffs were cliffs no more,
But huge cathedral fronts of every age,
Grave, florid, stern, as far as eye could see,
One after one: and then the great ridge drew,
Lessening to the lessening music, back,
And past into the belt, and swell'd again
To music: ever when it broke I saw
The statues, saint, or king, or founder fall;
Then from the gaps of ruin which it left
Came men and women in dark clusters round,
Some crying, 'Set them up! they shall not fall!'

Obituaries:

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

T. W. BADON.—The students of the New Orleans School of Medicine passed the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, on the evening of the 31st January, an all-wise Providence removed from among us our beloved friend and classmate, T. W. Badon, one who was well calculated to adorn the social circle—Resolved,

1st. That we greatly deplore his loss, though we submit to the providence that has taken him from among us.

2d. That we extend our sincere sympathies to the parents and relatives of the deceased.

3d. That the friends of the deceased unite in a procession, to accompany the remains to the depot of the N. O., Jackson & G. N. R.R.; and that the students of the University of Louisiana be invited to join in the same.

4th. That the proceedings of this meeting be published in the Sunday Delta and the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and that a copy of each paper be sent to the relatives of the deceased.

ROBERT MIDDLETON, Chairman.

MRS. E. L. MEREDITH, daughter of R. A. Blanks and wife of Dr. C. C. Meredith, died in Caldwell Parish, La., Jan. 11th, 1860, in the twenty second year of her age. She joined the Methodist Church in September, 1857, and up to the time of her death lived a consistent member. The Bible was her companion; meditation and prayer her delight. Her love to God, his Church and people everywhere, seemed daily to increase. Her sympathies were ever enlisted in favor of the poor and afflicted, and she embraced every opportunity of extending an assisting hand and tendering words of consolation. As a wife, she was affectionate and dutiful, sustaining her husband by gentle words and christian example when discouraged and perplexed by the cares and troubles of life. Her tender infant preceded her only three days to the spirit land. Her little, innocent daughter, of only two summers, and disconsolate husband, are the only remaining ones of the happy little family group; and though they, in connection with relatives and friends, mourn their loss, yet they are doubtless in a much better condition, and, ere this, have fully realized the cherished belief of her life—that friends and relatives, who knew each other on earth, would recognize and join each other in heaven.

M.

LITTLE BETTIE BRAD CHAPMAN, infant daughter of Dr. B. F. and Mrs. S. A. Chapman, died January 21st, 1860, aged one year and twenty days. Its funeral was preached at the Plensant Hill Academy, Sabbath evening, 22nd ult. While friends mourned over its body, the Gospel presented the pleasing thought that its unpolluted spirit reposed in the presence of him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

JOHN PIPES.

Telegraph, Macon, Ga., and Times, Columbus, Ga., please copy.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.
are has arisen; others, corresponding in elegance, and devoted to the use of the University, are in prepar-
W. A. BROADWELL. A. P. HAYNES.
BROADWELL & HAYNES,
(Formerly BROADWELL & PAYNE)
COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
No. 40 UNION STREET, N. O.

HAVING RETIRED FROM BUSINESS, I TAKE PLEASURE IN soliciting for my former Partners, BROADWELL & HAYNES, the patronage and confidence of my friends, believing their experience, capacity and means, will merit its continuance, and enable them to give general satisfaction. [jel] M. U. PAYNE.

W. R. STUART, New Orleans. DR. D. A. JAMES, Madison Parish, La.
STUART & JAMES,
No. 42 Union street, New Orleans,

HAVE ASSOCIATED THEMSELVES TOGETHER for the purpose of conducting a COTTON FACTORAGE and GENERAL COMMISSION BUSINESS; are prepared to make the usual Advances to planters, in the way of supplies, etc., and respectfully solicit patronage

B. M. LOWE & CO., COTTON FACTORS AND General Commission Merchants,
ap6 No. 97 GRAVIER STREET, New Orleans.

PILCHR, GOODRICH & CO.,
COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS and Commission Merchants, No. 47 Carondelet, corner Union street, New Orleans. jy1t-1y

A. H. May & Co.,
COTTON FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION Merchants, No 94 Ornier street New Orleans. au21y

J. C. PAYNE. J. C. HARRISON.
D. W. HUNTINGTON. WM D. DAMERON
Payne & Harrison.
COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 51 Union street, New Orleans. dec1-1y

S. L. WALKER, New Orleans. SOLON C. HUTCHINSON Caddo Parish, La.
Walker & Hutchinson,
COTTON FACTORS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 87 Carondelet street, New Orleans. je28

J. BOYD & Co.,
Cotton Factors, Receiving & Forwarding Merchants,
No 4 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.
apr 17-1y

LEONARD FASH. T. S. LAURANS
LEONARD FASH & Co.,
COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
And Dealers in Western Produce,
61 MAGAZINE STREET, NEW ORLEANS
Oct 24.

LANE, SALTER & CO.,
[Successors to LANE, MAYFIELD & Co.]
COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 79 St. Charles street, New Orleans. jy6-1y

JOHN F WYCHE & Co.,
COTTON FACTORS and COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No 119 Commoo street, New Orleans. my2-1y

PROFESSIONAL.

JAS. J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Livingston, Alabama.
.. [au24] Will Practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties.

DR. E. D BEACH, HAVING RESUMED THE practice of Medicine, offers his Professional services to the citizens of New Orleans.
N. B—Special attention paid to diseases of the RECTUM, PILES, FISTULA IN ANO, ETC.—Advice in any permanently cured without the use of the knife, cautery, pain, or confinement whatever. Office No. 6, Baronne street near Canal. ap27.

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY AT LAW, BATON Rouge.
REFERENCES—Henderson & Gaines and Chinn & Bolton, New Orleans; W. S. Pike and A. Matta, Baton Rouge.

B. D. & A. W. ROBERTS, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Floyd, Carroll Parish,
ja19 Louisiana.

J. D. FUQUA. J. G. KILBOURNE.
FUQUA & KILBOURNE,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
CLINTON, LOUISIANA,
PRACTICE in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana, East Baton Rouge and St. Helena, and in the Supreme Court at New Orleans.
References—Payne & Harrison, Byrne, Vance & Co., Broadwell & Payne, Pritchard & Flower, Edw. Nalle & Co., Rev. H. N. McTyeire, New Orleans.

W. P. WINANS. J. T. HEATH
WINANS & HEATH,
Attorneys and Counsellors at Law,
SHREVEPORT, LA.,
Office—Market Street.
Will practice in the courts of Caddo, De Soto, Bossier, Claiborne, and Bienville.

G. SPENCER MAYO,
Attorney at Law,
HARRISONBURG, LA.,
Will practice in the Courts of Catahoula, Concordia, Caldwell and Franklin Parishes.

FALL AND WINTER OF 1859.
SOUTHERN CLOTHING ESTABLISHMENT,
25, 28 and 30 St. Charles Street,
CORNER OF COMMON.
CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS
AT
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
Just received, per late steamers, one of the largest and most magnificent Stocks of Fashionable Fall and Winter Clothing
Ever Brought to this Southern Market
Which, for Style, Material, Workmanship and Cheapness, is not surpassed. Goods are divided into Three Departments, but all under one general view.
Store No. 26 St. Charles street, for Boys' Clothing:
Store No. 28 St. Charles street, for Mrn's Clothing:
Store No. 30 St. Charles street, for Furnishing Goods and Shirts:
L. W. LYONS,
Nos. 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles street, corner Common st.
Salesmen speak French, Spanish and English. [oc12

BOYS' CLOTHING EMPORIUM:
26.....St Charles Street.....26
Between Canal and Common Streets.
This Store is exclusively for
YOUTHS', BOYS' AND CHILDREN'S CLOTHING, SHIRT AND FURNISHING GOODS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
Just opened a large and excellent
Stock of Fall and Winter Dress and School Clothing;
EMBRACING
Every style and quality All of which will be sold at VERY REASONABLE PRICES
Salesmen speak French, Spanish and English.
L. W. LYONS,
oc12 Nos. 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles street, corner Common st.

SHIRTS! SHIRTS!!
Just received, by late steamers, a large assortment of
SHIRTS OF THE LATEST FASHION,
Of all the various qualities and sizes, White and Colored, Manufactured EXPRESSLY FOR THE NEW ORLEANS CITY TRADE,
To fit Men, Youths, Boys and Children
L. W. LYONS,
oc12 Nos. 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles street, corner Common st.

Trunks, Traveling-Bags and Valises,
UMBRELLAS, AND WATER-PROOF CLOTHING
Of the best styles and qualities, made to order and warranted.
L. W. LYONS,
oc12 Nos. 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles street, corner Common st.

Children's Column.

BIBLE PICTURES.—NO. 1. BY THE EDITOR.

Chaos.

DEAR LITTLE READERS: Last week we promised to paint with the pen, for your amusement and instruction, some BIBLE PICTURES. Our first picture is that of CHAOS. What is "Chaos?" It was that state of confusion and disorder between the creation of the elements of nature, and the perfection of the heavens and the earth. Before the Creation, there was nothing in the universe but God—no earth, no sea, no sky, no sun, moon and stars; no mou and women, no heaven, no angels. There was nothieg but God, and "God is a spirit." God created everything out of nothing. But before he created this beautiful earth, and these beautiful heavens above us, he created the things to make them out of. Those things are what we have called the elements of nature. After he had made these elements, and before he had arranged them in proper order, and under appropriate laws, they were all in confusion and disorder. This is what is called "Chaos." The first two verses of the Bible describe it. They say: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth; and the earth was without form, and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep." Have you ever noticed how grand this language is? An old heathen poet has also attempted to describe it. He says:

"Before the seas, and this terrestrial ball,
And heaven's high canopy that covers all,
One was the face of nature; 't a face
Rather a rude and indigested mass;
A lifeless lump, unfashioned and unframed,
Of jarring seeds, and justly Chaos named."

We have not told you much about Chaos, because we have not much to tell you. We have never seen it. Nobody else ever has. It existed, and passed away, before any human being ever lived. All we know about it we get from these two verses of the Bible. It is something like the condition of a sinner's soul before the Lord has enlightened it and made it new.

We shall give you another BIBLE PICTURE soon. Tell all your little friends about this one, and get their parents to send for the Advocate, so that they may read all these BIBLE PICTURES.

For the New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

"HE BEING DEAD, YET SPEAKETH."

About two years ago, in one of the rural districts of Mississippi, lived Melville—a meek, gentle-spirited lad of nine summers. His intellectual and moral developments were most decidedly precocious. My attention was first called to his very remarkable development while delivering an address to the Sunday-school of which he was a member. Having occasion to speak something on the subject of Sabbath-breaking, I heard a modest voice say, "there was a good story in the book I read last week on that subject." "Can you relate it?" I replied.—The diffident lad arose, and gave a most pertinent narrative of some three or four minutes' length. The episode was most pleasant and instructive. The Superintendent then informed me that it was part of his plan to induce the pupils to give such narratives when anything striking occurred in the week's reading. The custom appeared admirable to me. A few short weeks intervened, and poor Melville lay pale and emaciated by long continued typhoid fever. I stood beside his bed, and heard him try to sing the beautiful hymn commencing—

"O happy day that fixed my choice
On Thee, my Savior and my God?"

He had unquestionably given God his heart. It was the time of Quarterly Meeting, and he learned that a collection was to be taken for Missions. He requested that his little purse should be given him, containing the avails of his own labor. With his own feeble and attenuated fingers, he opened and took from it a generous sum to be contributed. I had the honor of being its bearer.

A few days passed, and again he attempted to sing the sweet hymn as above, but it died away into the soft whisper of death, and angels kissed his spirit away while in the act. He was a flower too sweet for earth, plucked to grace the garlands of the skies. The angel mother said, with a broken and submissive heart, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord. She, too, has gone to join him in the happy land."

It was only yesterday when the father, whose earthly treasures had been so recently garnered in the skies, brought out the tiny purse of little Melville, and emptied its contents into the Missionary treasury. This excited the two little cherub sisters to bring their savings, and cast them into the same treasury.—Little Johnny, too, only four years old, insisted on giving his twenty cents, saying he was determined to be "just like buddy Melville." "He being dead, yet speaketh."

H. M. DRAKE.

January 31st, 1860.

TO THE BOYS.

We hope our little boys, especially those at school, and more more particularly those who are at school from home, will read a school-boy's story which they will find on the first page. It is headed, "REMINISCENCES OF CORKERBY (S.C.) MANUAL LABOR SCHOOL." We are almost inclined to tell you who wrote it. Nobody told us, but we know. The writer used to sit where we are now sitting, at the editor's desk, in the Advocate office. If you do not feel a desire to be converted, and become the children of God after reading this story, we are mistaken.—How easy to be converted when you are willing! All our education is little worth if it be separated from religion and the blessing of God.

EDUCATIONAL.

DOLBEAR'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
OF THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS,
Founded in 1832—Chartered by the Legislature of Louisiana, with Agricultural and Mechanical Departments—
Capital Stock, $250,000.
In the new and spacious iron edifice, known as
STORY BUILDING,
South-east corner of Camp and Common Streets,
ENTRANCE ON BOTH STREETS, OPEN DAY AND EVENING.

FACULTY:
RUTUS DOLBEAR, PRESIDENT.
MATHEMATICAL DEPARTMENT.
GEO E. BRACKETT, Professor.
BOOK KEEPING DEPARTMENT.
RUFUS DOLBEAR, Lecturer.
J. W. BLACKMAN, Professor.
ENGLISH DEPARTMENT.
HON. J. N. PANDIAN, A.M., late Sup't Education, La.; Prof. and Lecturer on Commercial Law, etc and M. B. McCALEBY, Professor.
FRENCH DEPARTMENT.
MARC. ROUX, Professor.
DEPARTMENT FOR PENMANSHIP.
RUFUS DOLBEAR, Lecturer
J. B. GRIFFITH Professor.
SPANISH DEPARTMENT.
MANUEL MARINO, Professor.
GERMAN DEPARTMENT.
GEO. GESSNER, Professor.
LATIN AND GREEK DEPARTMENT.
M. MARINO and G. GESSNER, Professors
ITALIAN DEPARTMENT.
RHETORIC, LOGIC, AND ELOCUTION.

This is the only chartered Commercial College in the South-West, and the oldest in the United States, and has stood for
FOR MORE THAN A QUARTER OF A CENTURY
On its own merits alone.
Persons from 12 to the years of age, can attend to any branch they may wish.
Board can be had with the Professor, or other good families speaking English, French, Spanish or German, from $5 to $6 per week.
Catalogues with terms, specimens of the press and leading men of the nation, etc., sent to all who desire them.
N.B.—To prevent mistakes or imposition, Students intending for this College should bring this advertisement as special directions, as there are every winter temporary rooms open for a few months, all of course making wonderful pretences and promises, and putting flaming placards to enlighten the people of New Orleans and of the South! When three or more form Clubs and enter at the same time, ten per cent will be deducted from tuition.
Citizens and strangers are invited to visit.
feb1 1y RUFUS DOLBEAR, President.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
Corner of Camp and Common Streets,
ENTRANCE NO. 81 COMMON STREET.
[Established in 1856.]
OPEN DAY AND EVENING THE ENTIRE YEAR.

A full course of instruction in this institution embraces Double Entry Book-keeping, Commercial Calculations, Commercial Law, and Penmanship. Gentlemen can enter for the full course, or any branch they desire, and at any time, as there is no class system, nor copying from books, and no memorizing at arbitrary rules.

FACULTY:
GEO. SOULE M.A., Principal and Professor of the Theory and Practice of Double Entry Book-keeping, Lecturer on the Science of Accounts, Exchange, Commercial Correspondence, etc., etc.
W. J. KENNON, Practical Accountant, Associate Professor in Book-keeping Department.
J. M. BILLINGHAMMER, Esq., Lecturer on Commercial Law.
H. C. SPENCER, Professor of Plain, Ornamental, and Epistolary Penmanship
GEO SOULE, Teacher and Lecturer on Commercial Calculations.
J. B. ANDERSON, Esq., Special Lecturer on Exchange, Business Customs, Commercial Rules, etc., etc.
LEON LAURIN, Professor of Languages.
This is the only Commercial School in the city where Double Entry Book-keeping is taught practically, and as practiced in the New Orleans business houses.
Each of our young gentlemen has his respective desk, and proceeds in the opening, conducting, and closing of books, under all the variety of circumstances that can possibly occur in the various departments of business
Merchants, Book keepers, and young gentlemen wishing instruction, are respectfully requested to call and examine our practical forms and peculiar manner of teaching.
For catalogues containing full information, and Balance sheet Caricatures, the most magnificent work of the kind ever executed in the United States, address, GEO. SOULE, New Orleans.

FELICIANA FEMALE INSTITUTE,
JACKSON, LA.

THE exercises of the second term of the scholastic year will commence on the first of March. Pupils entered at any time, only charged from the time of entrance.
Extensive grounds and buildings have been added to the premises.
A good library, a new and complete apparatus, a full and competent corps of teachers, comfortable and newly furnished apartments, afford the best facilities for a thorough education.
BOARD OF TRUSTEES:
WM. H. WATKINS, 1st Pr. President.
J. N. EVANS, Secretary.
Prof. W. N. McGUIRE, WM LIPSCOMB,
JOHN W. ROBERTS, Esq., Col. S. M. BRYAN,
F. V. R. HAGAMAN, Esq., Rev. A. G. MILLER
Rev. JOHN C. MILLER, JOHN McKOWEN, Esq
Hon. JOHN McVEA.
THOS W BROWN, Principal.
6m

KENNER ACADEMY:
A Boarding and Day School, for Boys and Young Men.
VICTOR SCHEIHLA, PRINCIPAL

THIS Institution is located in the town of Kenner, Jefferson Parish, La., ten miles from New Orleans by railroad, and sixteen miles by river. The location is extremely delightful and pleasant The health of the place is unsurpassed during the whole year
The course of study is thorough, embracing the English, French, Spanish, German, Latin, and Greek languages Students can be prepared for any class in college, or for business pursuits.
The Academy Year is divided into Two Sessions of Five Months each, commencing on the First of October and March, respectively. Scholars will be received at any time during the year; none for less time than one session.
For further particulars see circulars, or address Principal.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.
SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.
SAVE THE PIECES!
ECONOMY! DISPATCH!
"A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE"
Accidents will happen, even in well-regulated families, it is very desirable to have some cheap and convenient way for repairing Furniture, Toys, Crockery, &c.
SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE
meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. It is always ready, and up to the sticking point. There is no longer a necessity for limping chairs, splintered veneers, headless dolls, and broken cradles. It is just the article for cane, shell, and other ornamental work, so popular with ladies of refinement and taste.
This admirable preparation is used cold, being chemically held in solution, and possessing all the valuable qualities of the best cabinet-makers' Glue. It may be used in the place of ordinary mucilage, being vastly more adhesive.
"USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE."
N.B—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cents.
Wholesale Depot, 48 Cedar-street, New York.
Address HENRY C. SPALDING & Co.
Box No. 3,600, New York.
Put up for Dealers in Cases containing four, eight, and twelve dozen—a beautiful Lithographic Show-Card accompanying each package.
A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times its cost annually to every household.
Sold by all prominent Stationers, Druggists, Hardware and Furniture Dealers, Grocers, and Fancy Stores
Country merchants should make a note of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE, when making up their list. It will stand any climate.
jao 25 1y

HELMBOLD'S GENUINE PREPARATION!
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for the Bladder.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for the Kidneys.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for the Gravel.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for the Dropsy.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Nervousness.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Loss of Memory.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Dimness of Vision.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Difficult Breathing.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Weak Nerves
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for General Debility.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Universal Lassitude.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Horror or Disease.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Night Sweats.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Wakefulness.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Dryness of the Skin.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Eruptions.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Pain in the Back.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Heaviness of the Eyelid, with Temporary Suffocation and Loss of Sight.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Mobility and Restlessness, with want of attention and horror of society.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Obstructions.
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU for Excesses arising from Indiscretion, and all diseases of FEMALES—FEMALES—FEMALES
FEMALES—FEMALES—FEMALES
FEMALES—FEMALES—FEMALES
OLD OR YOUNG, SINGLE, MARRIED, OR CONTEMPLATING MARRIAGE.
TAKE NO MORE PILLS, THEY ARE OF NO AVAIL
TAKE NO MORE PILLS, THEY ARE OF NO AVAIL
HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU
IS THE VERY BEST REMEDY IN THE WORLD
For all complaints incident to the Sex, whether arising from indiscretion, habits of dissipation, or in the DECLINE OR CHANGE OF LIFE.
See Symptoms above.
NO FAMILY SHOULD BE WITHOUT IT.
TAKE NO MORE BALSAM, MERCURY, OR UNPLEASANT MEDICINE FOR LADIES—ANY-AND-DANGEROUS-DISEASES.

Helmbold's Extract Buchu
Cures SECRET DISEASES in all their stages, little or no change in diet, at little expense, no inconvenience, and no exposure.
Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU for excesses arising from habits indulged in by young and old and for diseases arising from habits of dissipation. It removes all improper discharges, and will restore the patient in a short time to a state of health and purity.
Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU for all cases and affections of the most distressing character.
Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU for all affections and diseases of the Urinary Organs whether existing in Male or Female, from whatever cause originating and no matter of how long standing.
All the above diseases and symptoms, result of the same treatment, and may originate from the same cause.
READ! READ! READ!
HELMBOLD'S BUCHU is safe and pleasant in taste and odor, but immediate in its action.
H. T. HELMBOLD, Sole Manufacturer.
Price $1 per bottle, or six for $5, delivered to any address.
A Trial costs but a dollar—try it? And be convinced of its efficacy. And it is accompanied by reliable and responsible certificates from Professors of Medical Colleges, Clergymen and others. Prepared by H. T. HELMBOLD, Practical and Analytical Chemist.
104 South Tenth Street, below Chestnut Philadelphia
NECESSARY CAUTION—Should unprincipled dealers try to palm off another article, which pays a better profit and is worthless—Helmbold's Extract Buchu the most only for cash—ask for Helmbold's, take no other CURE GUARANTEED
JOHN WRIGHT & CO., 21 and 151 Chartres street, New Orleans, Wholesale and Retail Agents, by appointment
Cut this out, and send for it.

WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE.
A Certain Remedy for Worms.
Physicians generally now use WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE, this medicine is a simple vegetable preparation and can always be administered with perfect safety and confidence as to the result, as it will always destroy Worms and restore the patient to health
Over one thousand certificates have been sent to Agents from planters, merchants and physicians, bearing testimony to the efficacy of this infallible remedy. Warranted in all cases.
For sale to New Orleans, wholesale and retail, by
J. WRIGHT & Co.,
21 and 151 Chartres street,
Sole Proprietors.
Medical Evidence.
We, the

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 8.
WHOLE NUMBER 471.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1860.

$2 00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE.
OFFICE—112 CAMP ST.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate

INTRODUCTION OF PROTESTANTISM INTO MISSISSIPPI.—NO. I.

Congregational Church.

MR. EDITOR: It is a matter of interest to all succeeding generations of Christians to know when, and by whom, Christianity was first introduced into their country. But if the question was now asked, "When, and by whom, was Protestant Christianity first introduced into what is now the State of Mississippi?" perhaps not one in a thousand of all the professors of religion among us could give a satisfactory answer, and yet it is not too late for that question to be answered satisfactorily.

Being a lineal descendant, by both my parents, from the families that first organized Protestant Churches in this country, I have it in my power, not only from uniform family tradition, but also from well authenticated family records, to give, at least, a correct outline of the history of those Churches. In doing this I may differ in some dates and facts from others who have attempted it, but I consider my sources of information more reliable than those of mere memory.

Of the secular history of the country I shall say but little, as that has been amply detailed by those who have written expressly on the subject. It is the religious phase alone which I wish to bring to view. From 1763 to 1779 the Province of West Florida, including what was then called the "Natchez country," was under British rule. The fertility of the soil in the Natchez District of the province, and its being bordered on the west by the great Mississippi river, made it very desirable to occupy the country by permanent English settlements. In order to this great inducements were held out to adventurers to remove to this promising locality. Among the first who came was Amos Ogden, a reduced Captain in the British Navy. On the 13th of May, 1767, George III issued a Mandamus to the Governor of his Majesty's Province of West Florida to "grant unto Amos Ogden under the seal of the Province 52,000 acres of land, and to have the same surveyed in one contiguous tract wherever the said Ogden or his Attorney might chose." The conditions of the grant required the land to be located and permanently settled by a certain number of families. Captain Ogden, finding himself unable to comply with the conditions of the grant without assistance from others, fortunately met, in the city of New York, two wealthy planters from Morris county, New Jersey, by the name of Richard and Samuel Swayze, (generally pronounced Swe-ze,) to whom he sold 19 800 acres of his grant at twenty cents per acre, on condition that they would assist in the selection of the land, and settle their proportion of families thereon.

In the spring of 1772 Captain Ogden and the Messrs Swayze come in person to the Natchez District, and located their grant on the Homochitto river, in what is now the south-eastern portion of Adams county. In the following October the two brothers, Richard and Samuel Swayze, chartered a schooner, and with their families and connections, consisting mostly of their married children, set sail from the port of Perth Amboy, for their new home in the south-west. After a tedious and perilous voyage, having touched at Havana de Cuba, they landed at Pensacola, where they discharged the schooner. They there provided themselves with a suitable number of open boats in which they embarked with all they had in the way of personal property. They followed the line of coast westward to Lake Borgne, through which they passed into Lake Ponchartrain, and from thence through Lake Manrepas up the Amite river, and through the Pass Manchac into the Mississippi river; and from thence they ascended the opposing current of that majestic stream by slow and toilsome stages to the mouth of the Homochitto, and following the sinuosities of that river up to their grant, landed in time to raise corn in 1773. They settled near Kingston, and formed what is still known as the "Jersey Settlement." For the sake of mutual protection from hostile Indians, they at first settled in village form on a creek, which from thence took the name of "Town Creek," which it still bears. I might say much that would be interesting to their descendants about their privations, hardships, and exposure to hostile savages, but I will pass over this, and advance to the main object of my correspondence.

Rev. Samuel Swayze, one of the original owners and settlers of the famous Mandamus grant, of which I made mention in my last, was a Congregationalist Minister, and had sustained the pastoral relation in that Church from early manhood. As the birth of his children dates back to 1733, it is likely that he had been in Minister of the gospel thirty or forty years previous to his removal to the Natchez country. Most of his family and connection who came with him were, probably, members of his Church in Jersey. Soon after their arrival at their new home in the wilderness, they were regularly organized into a Congregationalist Church, and Mr. Swayze took charge of them as their pastor, until his death in 1784. He was, beyond doubt, the first Protestant minister that ever settled within what is now the State of Mississippi, and his church was the first Protestant church ever organized in this country. From some documents in my possession, I see that our Baptist brethren claim to have been the pioneers of Protestantism in the Natchez country, but in this they are evidently mistaken, as I expect to show in subsequent numbers of this correspondence. Rev. Samuel Swayze and his little flock had to endure many hardships, privations, and dangers in their wilderness home; one of the most appalling of which was the stealthy and repeated incursions of the the hostile Indians. Several persons were killed by them, among whom was Mr. Cory, a grandson of Richard Swayze. These troubles had not abated, when in 1779 the Province passed under Spanish rule, and Roman Catholicism was declared by law to be the only allowable religion of the land. The voice and hand of persecution were soon raised against Mr. Swayze and his little church at Kingston, and their religious privileges were greatly abridged. Search was made for Protestant Bibles and religious books, and whenever they fell into the hands of the priests, or their emissaries, they were committed to the flames. Mr. Swayze, in order to secure himself and his flock from the inquisitorial grasp of the Catholic Hierarchy, retired to a cane-brake on the margin of a small stream, which yet bears the name of "Samme's Creek," and fixed him a seat in the hollow of a large sycamore tree, where he often sat to read the Holy Book, and where he kept it concealed from the eyes of his persecutors.

About 1780 the Indians, and not much less treacherous Spaniards, became so annoying to the settlers on the Mandamus grant, that they removed temporarily on to the St. Catherine, near Natchez, where Rev. Samuel Swayze and his wife died about 1784. When I had the pastoral charge of Washington, six miles from Natchez, in 1834-5, I was several times visited by James Swayze, a grandson of the old Minister, who told me that he had been familiar with that vicinity for sixty years. From him I learned when and where his venerable grand-parents, Rev. Samuel Swayze and his wife, died; and also that they were buried on a high ridge of land that jutted out to the water's edge on the Mississippi river, just below old Fort Rosalie, at Natchez. The grave-yard has long since caved off into the river, so that the remains of the venerable minister and his wife have been literally "Carried downward by the flood,

And lost in following years."

By 1786 the alarm about the Indians had, to a great extent, passed away, and most of the settlers returned to their former homes on the Ogden grant. A son of the deceased pastor, rather informally, took charge of the Church for the time being until they could do better, but he did not long survive his father, so that it was left without a pastor for many years, and was never again organized as a Congregational Church. But the blessed fruits of that original church in the Natchez country have not been lost. In addition to a large number already gone to rest in Abraham's bosom, many more are now on the way, manifesting in all the details of probationary life "the anfeigned faith that dwelt" as conspicuously in their godly ancestors. A few of the connection by marrying into Baptist families, united with the Baptist church, but the great majority, from some cause, did not seem inclined to affiliate with that branch of the general church, but considered themselves members of their own church, though without a pastor, until the Methodists began to organize churches in the country, and then they as readily united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, as though they had been trained up under its auspices. Many of the descendants of the original settlers yet live on and in the vicinity of the Mandamus grant, while many others are scattered over Missisippi and Louisiana, and some have gone to more distant localities. A fair proportion yet retain the name of Swayze, but many of the females having married into other families their descendants are known by the names of Colemin, Callender, Corey, Farrar, Fowles, Fowler, King, Lane, Hopkins, Griffing, Jones, etc. It is a matter of devout gratitude to God that the lineal descendants of this first Protestant family in Mississippi, have lately built us a superior brick church, near the site of the first settlement on the Mandamus grant, where our ministers are preaching to large and attentive congregations. In a subsequent number I shall ask the privilege of individualizing some of the descendants of this pious ancestry, but as their personal religion and ardent zeal in the cause of Christ, were mainly conspicuous after their connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church, I shall defer it until I come to speak of the introduction of that form of Christianity into our country.

J. G. JONES.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate

BRIEF CRITIQUES ON ARTICLES IN OUR QUARTERLY.—NO. 2.

The able editor of the Christian Advocate deserves thanks for his well-timed and admirable article on the "Philosophy of the Conditioned." The theory of Sir William Hamilton, which he combats, may be briefly stated thus: The human mind, being limited cannot understand or conceive God, who is infinite; for in the effort to conceive him it must limit him in thought, and a limited God is no God. In other words, a finite idea of an infinite object is a contradiction. Whatever the object, we bound it in taking it into our narrow minds; whatever, therefore, enters the mind must be finite; hence, God is of necessity excluded.

Mr. Carnes, in reply, shows that this proves only our inability to comprehend, not to apprehend God; and that both Hamilton and Mansel (who has adopted his theory) contradict themselves by granting that hereafter we shall conceive the Infinite. If the finite cannot conceive the infinite, and if we must remain finite amid all possible changes in our situation and expansion of our powers, how shall the apprehension of God ever be possible to us?

Thus far I agree with the reviewer. But he seems to concede unnecessarily that the position of Hamilton cannot be refuted logically, and hence resorts, to the disparagement of logic, to the defence of Cousin's doctrine of the impersonality of reason, and the assertion of a vague intuitional power, which Cousin does not claim for the human mind. It appears to me an easy task to overthrow this "philosophy of the conditioned," viz.:—that our faculties can be employed solely about the "conditioned or limited," though we admit the fundamental principles of the Hamiltonian system. They are that we must accept the testimony of our senses, the revelations of consciousness, and those original truths which every mind is compelled to believe because they are self-evident; and logic can give us results only from the data thus afforded. Now let us examine more carefully the theory of Hamilton and Mansel on the inconceivability of the infinite.

Hamilton was a firm believer in Christianity, and Mansel is, if I mistake not, a minister. How can our minds be brought into any relation with God so as to know him, and commune with him, and delight in him, if their notions be true? How can we, with any sense, speak of him? They answer that we must apprehend him by "faith," and they are correct. But can we believe in the inconceivable; is not faith a mental act, an exercise of thought? We believe what we cannot fully understand, but it is absurd to say that we believe what we cannot think—cannot form any idea of. As Mr. Carnes forcibly argues on Mansel's admission of a conscious intercourse between God and our souls, if we are conscious of him as finite, our consciousness is false; if conscious of him as infinite, the point in dispute is granted to us, viz., that our minds can apprehend God. A blind faith will not avail them. However blind it may be, there is no possibility of faith in any object without an idea of that object. If they are right, the existence of God cannot be proved or believed, because inconceivable; his character cannot be described, he cannot be loved or worshipped; he is to us—nothing. There is no escape, I think, from this conclusion.

But where is their fundamental error? Let me repeat in different language their argument. The mind can embrace only so much as answers in extent to the measure of its faculties. One man has few and narrow views, and is capable of such only; another has larger views, because greater breadth of intellect. No man can have infinite conceptions, because his faculties cannot be developed to infinitude. God, therefore, cannot be comprehended by us. Fully to know God were to be God. But it follows that we cannot "conceive" him. There can in this case be no cognition which is not perfect. Conception implies comprehension; for if our thought include less than the infinite, it is not a thought of the infinite. God is not altogether, or in the infinity of his perfections, taken into our little souls; and anything less than infinity is certainly not God. The fallacy is in the assumption that the size of our thought, if it be a true thought, must be equivalent to the dimensions of its object. Many consequences would follow from such a strange position besides the exclusion of Deity from our understanding. We would not be able to know or conceive any being above ourselves—at least we could conceive him only in those respects in which we are his equals. I have been accustomed to admire the wonderful genius of Newton; but it seems that I was only admiring myself, for only so much of him could I conceive as corresponds to the capacity of my own mind, and as that excited my admiration, my compliments to him were only an ingenious form of self-flattery. It is the application of a material law to the immaterial substance. A quart-measure cannot contain infinity; it is equally true that it cannot contain a gallon, or any quantity exceeding itself. The contents of the mind are thoughts—knowledge. If my mind is of a certain finite capacity, it cannot receive into itself that which transcends it—the immeasurable. For a similar reason, it cannot receive any object greater than itself, though it be not limitless. But what we mean by the mind's reception of any object is a conception or understanding of it. Therefore I cannot conceive of any being, God, angel, or man, superior to myself. If I think of him at all, it is of so much of his nature as is equal to my own; so far as he exceeds my mind, he evades my thoughts, and he cannot know that there is somewhat in him beyond myself. Let not the reader imagine that the force of this argument can be broken by saying that though the quart cannot hold the gallon, we may see by the attempt at measurement the superior magnitude of the latter quantity; and so we can see the incapacity of our own minds to understand a greater than ourselves, and infer his superiority. We can see and compare the quart and the gallon; but the measure in the other case is myself, my own mind, and that which in no way enters my mind is to me as though it were not; all outside the measure is, by the supposition, outside the range of my conception, and therefore I know not and suspect not its existence; I do not think of it. The assumption is therefore fallacious. I can conceive that which is greater than myself—and it so, why cannot I, a finite being, conceive the Infinite God?

What need is there of Cousin's notion that the reason is not personal; what sense is there in the expression? Is it not incomprehensible? It means that my reason is not mine, and that is only self-contradictory. It is true that no man ever says "my truth," and this is because the truth is objective and impersonal. But we do speak of our reason, and we know that it belongs to our personality as really as our will belongs to ourselves. I cannot understand any argument in support of this crotchet, that the highest intelligence is no part of the individual self; and it is needless to offer any argument against it, for it is self-evident that the intellect belongs to the man in the same sense as the sensibilities and the will.

I am confident that many readers of the Quarterly will agree with myself in thanking the author for this article, and in hoping that we shall be favored with other contributions from his pen.

J. C. G.

THE END OF THE WORLD.

There are in every generation some presumptuous men eager to expound the inscrutable, and to read for us through their narrow spectacles all that has been foreordained by the Divine Wisdom. Their choice amusement is the making an End of the World. They cannot foretell whether their mutton will be burned at the next dinner-time, but when the world will be burned up they tell us that they do know to a year, and sometimes almost to an hour. They wish to tell us the date of its end as distinctly as the sage, quoted by Chevreau in his history of the World, had calculated the beginning of it to have been Friday, the 6th of September, at four o'clock in the afternoon, a period which he states in his French idiom to have been "four hours after dinner. Some say that the ending of the world will, and some say that it will not bring about the conversion of the Jews. The belief in the end of the world is not Jewish and Christian only. A doctrine of the final tumbling together of all things into chaos was held by the old heathen philosophers and poets, taught by Empedocles and Heraclitus, sung by Lucretius and Lucan. Seneca wrote in a book of consolation: "When the time comes, and the world, seeking renewal, is destroyed, things will, by their own powers, wound each other, the stars will strike together, and what all matter is smoking with one fire, everything that now shines in its order will be burned up."

Many later writers have informed us of the manner of the world's destruction. It is to be taken to pieces, some have taught, in the order in which, as a mechanism, it was put together; the last things added being first removed. But when the question of destroying all the stars arises, then vain man, masquerading as a prophet, has to discuss, and does boldly discuss, the probability of all the worlds that fill the heavens being inhabited like ours, and the chance their inhabitants, if they have any, may run of being destroyed with us for our sins.

Then again, sections of speculators have decided for themselves whether the world is to be destroyed by natural agencies—as by fire from its centre, or the stroke of a comet—or by means wholly miraculous. The time to be occupied by the destruction has been also variously settled. Some know that it is a day; others have been equally sure that as there were six days of creation, so, there will be also a gradual process of destruction. Some have taught that, while all things upon earth were slowly decomposing into their elements, the signs foretold by the prophets would be happening. We are assured now that the signs are happening, and we are often told that men are not so large as they once were.

It was an old Jewish doctrine that the world would last six thousand years; two thousand before the Law, two thousand under the Law, and two thousand under the Gospel. In the Christian Church there has been question whether the heavens and earth were to pass wholly away, or whether only all their evil was to be destroyed out of them, and they were to be renewed.

In our own day, fashionable expounders of the secrets of the Most High dwell especially upon the thousand years that are to come before the end.

There was a time when the duration of the world was thought to be bound up with that of the Roman Empire. Then every comet, every earthquake, was a terror. He-ychius, Bishop of Salone, wrote, in the fourth century, to Saint Augustine, asking him whether it was true that the end of the world was near. Saint Augustine replied that a few years of respite would most probably be granted. From year to year the date was put back till the ninth century, when there was a special expectation and dread, lasting till the year one thousand, which had been definitely fixed as the term of the world's existence. During that century many grants of estates were made to the churches and monasteries, under the formula, "Terribio mundi appropinquante," "Whereas the end of the world is approaching." When the thousandth year had passed without any catastrophe there was a new reason why gifts should be made to the clergy. A new lease was granted to mankind, and the fine payable was a renewal and redecoration of the episcopal churches, monasteries, and chapels, which took place all over Europe. The illustrious Manuel Comnenus, in the reign of the Emperor Basil the Second, was incessantly tormented by men who would predict the very hour and moment of the end of all. This Emperor, who wore monastic dress under his armor, whom his people cursed and his Church blessed, had caves prepared, in which he might take refuge, and his courtiers and flatterers were busy as ants about him, making galleries under the earth against the time of need.

In the year eleven hundred and seventy-nine the Eastern astrologers sent letters all over the world, announcing positively that in the middle of September, seven years after date, the end of all things would be brought about by storms of wind. Terrified men were surprised when the time came by gentle zephyrs and the mildest autumn weather.

In the year fifteen hundred and twenty-four there was great terror because John Stoffler, a German astrologer, had predicted universal deluge for the month of February. There were many great conjunctions in the constellation of the Fishes, which indicated terrible mutation by flood in all lands and among all creatures. Men in France, England, Spain, Italy, and elsewhere, fled from the low grounds, and lived upon the hills. A Professor of Divinity at Alcala wrote a book, blaming the great cost incurred in removals, and suggesting cheap ways of escape. A doctor of Toulouse built himself a boat raised on four pillars. Nevertheless, this February, in which all Europe was prepared to battle with the floods, turned out to be "extremely clear and fine." In Hall's contemporary chronicle we read that, in this year, because of the signs, "many persons victualled themselves and went to high grounds for fear of drowning, and specially one Bolton, who was prior of St. Bartholomew's in Smithfield" (but the story, true as to many, was a mistake as to Bolton), "builded him a house upon Harrow-of-the-Hill, only for fear of this flood, and thither he went, and made provision for all things necessary within it for the space of two months; but the faithful people put their trust and confidence only in God. And this rain was, by the writers, prognosticated to be in February, wherefore, when it began to rain in February, the people were much afraid, and said, 'Now it beginneth!' but many wise men which thought that the world could not be drowned again, contrary to God's promise, put their trust in Him only, but because they thought that some great rains might fall, by inclinations of the stars, and that water-mills might stand still and not grind, they provided for meal, and yet, God be thanked, there was not a fairer season in many years. And, at the last, the astronomers, for their excuse, said that in their computacion they had mistaken and miscounted in their number a hundreth yeres."

In 1586 the Sieur Andreas announced that in two years the world would come to an end, and that immediately afterward all the powers would fall under the dominion of the Turks.

A famous book in the history of Physical Science, "Whiston's Theory of the Earth," professed, on its title-page, to make "the Deluge and the General Conflagration perfectly agreeable to reason and philosophy." This reverend gentleman was—in accordance with the scanty knowledge of more than a century and a half ago—the philosophical beginner of the vulgar dread awakened still whenever a comet moves in the direction of this earth.

One day the Duchess of Bolton pretending to come to court in a great fright, explained that she had been at Mr. Whiston's, who told her that the world was to be burnt up in three years, and that, for her part, she was determined to go to China. Certainly that was a place quite out of the world. Horace Walpole's reflection upon the matter was: "For my own part, I comfort myself with the humane reflection of the Irishman in the ship that was on fire—I am but a passenger."

In our day, "End of the World" cries are to be heard in plenty. We are still also taught by ingenious gentlemen, able in their own conceits to tell us who is the Beast. Greek letters represent numbers. The number of the Beast is six hundred and sixty-six. Any man's name being written in Greek letters, the numbers represented by the letters are cast up, and if their sum prove to be six hundred and sixty-six, or whatever other number that number may be interpreted to mean, the man is proved to be the Beast. Upon this principle many a Pope has been denounced, and so has Martin Luther, his name being spelled Lauter for this occasion only. Once upon a time Napoleon Bonaparte was detected as the Beast, and the last of this series of discoveries, not many months old, occurs in a large book entitled Theorion, more than six hundred pages long; if the number of pages had but been six hundred and sixty-six, the book itself might have come under serious suspicion.

We are ashamed that there is need to call attention to the emptiness of all these false pretensions to a kind of knowledge that no man possesses. Another writer of a large book, lately issued from the press, seeing the Scarlet Woman in the Papacy, interprets for us the history of what is yet to come. Rome is yet to place her foot upon the necks of kings before she is swallowed up in the abyss.

A contemporary French wiseacre interprets Scripture for us into the cry of an approaching "End of the World through Science." The pile of Science cracks under its own weight, and is about to fall in after ruin on our heads. It is no misstatement to say that this gentleman, M. Eugene Huzar, conceives that the last conflagration of London may arise out of one man's having set the Thames on fire. "See," he says, "round our globe, that immense ocean, with its phosphorous fires, with its oily and fat beds, with its elements so combustible that the volcanoes catch fire at it incessantly, and never go out for want of fuel till the sea shall have deserted them. See, on the other hand, this chemical product burning on the water, true Greek fire, which will lay open the road to a hundred other discoveries still more incendiary. And understand how, some day or other, conflagration may be kindled in the world." Fire set to the Thames or Seine in one of the two great capitals of science, by an unforeseen chemical accident, will spread over the Channel, raise the North Sea and the Atlantic into one great blaze, and the more water the more fire. The Pacific will blaze up, the rivers will run flame, and every thing living will be roasted to a cinder.

Wherein are these our contemporary speculations better than that of the Judas who fixed Antichrist for the tenth year of the reign of Severus, or that of Dionysius of Alexandria, who promised him in the days of Valerian, or those who promised that the end of the world should begin when Lady Day fell upon Easter-eve. An old French wiseacre, M. Jurieu, taught that "Antichristianism was born about the year four hundred and fifty; it shall die about the year seventeen hundred and ten. This may happen sooner, but I do not see that it can go much farther, unless it be to 'seventeen fourteen.' And he fixed the beginning of the Millennium for the year seventeen eighty-five, as impudently as another wiseacre now fixes it for eighteen sixty-seven. Richard Brothers, a presumptuous oracle in the same school at the end of the last century, taught that "the very loud and unusual kind of thunder heard in January, seventeen ninety-one was the voice of the angel mentioned in the eighteenth chapter of Revelations," and fixed the 15th of August, ninety-three, for the destruction of London. "Write, write," the spirit says write," prophesied an old Suffolk woman ninety-four years ago; "the High Priest, the High Priest shall never have another Christmas dinner!"

The last, and at this particular moment most notorious, of these would-be prophets, is a doctor, to whom we have already referred, who talks big words empty of wit, and streams incessantly the mendiest of books from all his fingers' ends. He points to the wars and the police reports; tells us, in his own inflated way, that "there is at present an area accumulation and intensity of morbific agencies in the air which no previous year has witnessed"—did he never hear of the plagues of the Middle Ages?—observes a general "dereliction of moral obligations," and fills for us a window of coming tribulation. "I hope," he says, "soon to publish a photographic sketch of the Millennial state," as a companion to this volume." The next step in audacity will, perhaps, be an advertisement of Heaven in the Stereoscope.

SKETCHES FROM CLAIBORNE'S LIFE OF GEN. SAM. DALE.

DEATH OF DOUBLE-HEAD.

While this engaged I witnessed the death of Double-head, the great chief of the Cherokees. I had gone with several pack-horses, loaded with merchandise, to a ball-play on Hiwassee River, where more than a thousand Cherokees, the officers from Hiwassee Fort, and numerous traders had assembled. The chief affected to receive me with severity, and said, "Sam, you are a mighty liar."

I demanded why he insulted me in public. He smiled and said, "You have never kept your promise to come and see me. You know you have lied."

He then produced a bottle of whisky, and invited the officers and myself to drink. When we had emptied it I offered to replenish it, but he refused, saying, "When I am in the white man's country I will drink your liquor, but here you must drink with Double-head."

When the ball-play ceased I was standing by the chief, when the Bone-polisher, a captain, approached, and denounced him as a traitor for selling a piece of the country, a large and valuable tract near the shoals of the Tennessee River, to a company of speculators. The great chief remained tranquil and silent, which only aggravated the Bone-polisher, who continued his abuse with menacing gestures. Double-head quietly remarked, "Go away. You have said enough. Leave me, or I shall kill you." Bone-polisher rushed at him with his tomahawk, which the chief received on his left arm, and drawing a pistol, shot him through the heart.

Foreseeing trouble, I left immediately for Hiwassee Ferry. Some time after night Double-head came in, evidently under the influence of liquor. One John Rogers, an old white man, who had long resided in the nation, was present, and began to revile the chief in the manner of Bone-polisher. Double-head proudly replied, "You live by sufferance among us. I have never seen you in council nor on the war-path. You have no place among the chiefs. Be silent, and interfere no more with me." The old man still persisted, and Double-head attempted to shoot him, but his pistol missed fire; in fact, it was not charged. Ellick Saunders, and Ridge, a chief, were present. Ridge extinguished the light, and one of them fired at Double-head. When the light was re-kindled, Ridge, Saunders, and Rogers had disappeared, and the chief lay motionless on his face. The ball had shattered his lower jaw, and lodged in the nape of his neck. His frie ds set out with him for the garrison, but, apprehensive of being overtaken, they turned aside, and concealed him in the loft of one Mr. Black, a schoolmaster. In the mean time, two warriors, of the clan of the Bone-polisher, who had been designated to avenge his death, traced Double-head, by his blood, to the house where he had been concealed. At the same moment Ridge and Saunders came galloping up, shouting the war-whoop. Colonel James Blair, of Georgia, and I followed them. The wounded chief was lying on the floor, his jaw and arm terribly lacerated. Ridge and Saunders each leveled their pistols, and each missed fire. Double-head sprang on Ridge and would have overpowered him, but Saunders discharged his pistol and shot him through the hips. Saunders then rushed on him with his tomahawk; but the dying chief wrenched it from him and leaped upon Ridge, when Saunders seized another tomahawk and drove it into his brains. When he fell, another Indian crushed his head with a spade.

It was a dreadful spectacle and most cowardly murder. Double-head was a renowned chief. In single combat he never had a superior. He wielded much influence by his oratorical abilities, and was often compared with his predecessor, the "Little Turkey," the most famous and popular of all the Cherokee chiefs. The cupidity of speculators, who have sa often robbed and ruined the Red Men, tempted him to sell a portion of his country. From that moment his death was resolved upon. The rencounter with the Bone-polisher, where he acted strictly in self-defense, merely precipitated his fate. He perished apparently upon the Indian maxim of blood for blood, but was really the victim of conspiracy.

GEN. DALE'S CANOE FIGHT.

Austill, and myself got in. I made Cæsar paddle within forty paces, when all three of us leveled our guns, and all missed fire! As the two boats approached, one of them hurled his scalping knife at me. It pierced the boat through and through, just grazing my thigh as it passed. The next moment the canoes came in contact. I leaped up, placing one of my feet in each boat. At the same instant the foremost warrior leveled his rifle at my breast. It flashed in the pan. As quick as lightning, he clubbed it, and aimed at me a furious blow, which I partially parried, and, before he could repeat it, I shivered his skull with my gun. In the mean time an Indian had struck down Jerry, and was about to dispatch him, when I broke my rifle over his head. It partook in two places. The barrel Jerry seized, and renewed the fight. The stock I hurled at one of the savages. Being then disarmed, Cæsar handed me his musket and bayonet.

Finding myself unable to keep the two canoes in juxtaposition, I resolved to bring matters to an issue, and leaped into the Indian boat. My pirogue, with Jerry, Jim, and Cæsar, floated off. Jim fired, and slightly wounded the Indian next to me. I now stood in the centre of their canoe—two dead at my feet—a wounded savage in the stern, who had been snapping his piece at me during the fight, and four powerful warriors in front. The first one directed a furious blow at me with his rifle; it glanced upon the barrel of my musket, and I stayed the bayonet through his body. As he fell the next one repeated the attack. A shot from Jerry Austill pierced his heart. Striding over them, the next sprung at me with his tomahawk. I killed him with the bayonet, and his corpse lay between me and the last of the party. I knew him well—Tar-cha-chee, a noted wrestler, and the most famous ball-player of his clan. He paused a moment in expectation of my attack, but, finding me motionless, he stepped backward to the bow of the canoe, shook himself, gave the war-whoop of his tribe, and cried out, "Sam Dale-ee lana dahmaska, ta lanestha—lipsa—lipsa—lancstka." Big Sam! I am a man—I am coming—come on!" As he said this, with a terrific yell he bounded over the dead body of his comrade, and directed a blow at my head with his rifle, which dislocated my left shoulder. I dashed the bayonet into him. It glanced around his ribs, and the point hitching to his backbone, I pressed him down. As I pulled the weapon out, he put his hands upon the sides of the canoe, and endeavored to rise, crying out, "Tar-cha-chee is a man. He is not afraid to die." I drove my bayonet through his heart. I then turned to the wounded villain in the stern, who snapped his rifle at me as I advanced, and had been snapping during the whole conflict. He gave the war-whoop, and, in tones of hatred and defiance, exclaimed, "I am a warrior—I am not afraid to die." As he uttered the words I pinned him down with my bayonet, and he followed his eleven comrades to the land of spirits.

THE INDIANS AND LA FAYETTE.

We met him and his suite at the Chattahoochee, and, with an imposing cortege, conducted him to the seat of government. The most remarkable feature of his reception was the enthusiasm manifested by the Creek warriors on the route. At the Chattahoochee we found Chilly McIntosh (son of the famous General McIntosh), with a large party of warriors, who marched past the general in single file, each one giving him their hand. They then, at his request, went through the exercises of the ball-play, a display of strength and activity such as the nations of antiquity never witnessed, and only to be seen among the Southern tribes, who, by the way, are superior, physically and intellectually, more warlike, and capable of a higher civilization than any of the North-ern or Western races. I refer more particularly to the Choctaws, Cherokees, Chickasaws and Creeks, whose experiments in republican government, and the administration of an enlightened system of laws, are now attracting the admiration of mankind.

When we reached the Callabee swamp, usually very bad, the Indians had preceded us, and had laid down poles, and across them heavy transverse logs to prevent them from floating, themselves in the water, and holding down the logs until the procession passed over. They escorted the general to the confines of their territory, evidently regarding him as a great warrior, deserving this spontaneous homage to his fame.

From 1825 to 1828 I served in the Alabama Legislature. In 1831, Colonel George S. Gaines and myself were commissioned by the Secretary of War to remove the Choctaws to their new home on Arkansas and Red Rivers. By the treaty of Dancing Rabolt Creek they had ceded all their fine domain in Mississippi and Alabama, except a few special reservations and contingent claims. This treaty was brought about by pressure. The Indian is ever averse to the surrender of land. Though only tenants in common, they have a superstitious reverence for the soil of their birth and the ashes of their ancestors. The Southern Indians fought long and bravely for their homes—the achievements of the Creeks rival the prodigies of antiquity. At an earlier period, the Chickasaws, single-handed, defied and defeated the science and power of the French of Louisiana, directed by officers trained in the armies of Europe. The Choctaws did not resist the session of their country by force of arms; their chiefs conceded it, and, appealing to the tradition of their tribe that they had never shed the blood of a white man, silent submission was readily obtained.

I can not, of course, enumerate all the distinguished men who were of this party. The military escort was commanded by my old friend General Thomas S. Woodward, a man whose life has been full of incident and adventure of startling interest. Captain Abercrombie and Captain Moore, Colonel James Johnson, ex Governor Murphy, John D. Bibb, John N. Freeman, Dandridge Bibb, and others, were along.

PATRICK HENRY.

Three Baptist preachers were brought to trial in about 1775, for preaching. The indictment brought against them was, "For preaching the gospel of the Son of God," contrary to the statute in that case provided, and therefore disturbers of the peace. The clerk was reading the indictment in a slow and formal manner, and he pronounced the crime with emphasis, "For preaching the gospel of the Son of God," when a plain dressed man dismounted from his horse, entered the court house and took his seat within the bar. He was known to the court and lawyers, but a stranger to the mass of spectators who had gathered on the occasion. This was Patrick Henry, who, on hearing of this prosecution, had rode some fifty or sixty miles from his residence in Hanover county, to volunteer his services in the defense of the prisoners. He listened to the further reading of the indictment with marked attention, the first sentence of which that had caught his ear was, 'For preaching the Gospel of the Son of God." When the indictment had been read, and the prosecuting attorney had submitted a few remarks, Henry arose, stretched out his hand and received the paper, and then addressed the court:

"May it please your worships, I think I heard read by the prosecutor, as I entered this house, the paper I now hold in my hand. If I have rightly understood, the King's attorney of this colony has framed an indictment for the purpose of arraigning and punishing by imprisonment three inoffensive persons before the bar of this court for a crime of great magnitude—as disturbers of the peace. May it please the court, what did I hear read? Did I hear it distinctly, or was it a mistake of my own? Did I hear an expression, as if a crime, that these men whom your worships are about to try for a misdemeanant, such being the weakness of his stomach that, for many years, he contented himself with one meal a day. Of sleep he had almost none. His memory was incredible; he immediately recognized, after many years, those whom he had once seen; and when he had been interrupted for several hours in some work about which he was employed, he could immediately resume and continue it, without reading again what he had before written. Of the numerous details connected with the business of his office, he never forgot even the most trifling; and this notwithstanding the incredible multitude of his affairs. His judgment was so acute and correct in regard to the most opposite concerns about which his advice was asked, that he often seemed to possess the gift of looking into the future. I never remember to have heard that any one who followed his counsel went wrong. He despised fine speaking, and was rather abrupt in his language; but he wrote admirably, and no theologian of his time expressed himself so clearly, so impressively, and accurately as he, and yet he labored as much as any one of his contemporaries or of the fathers. For his fluency he was indebted to the several studies of his youth, and to the natural acuteness of his genius, which had been still further increased by the practice of dictation; so that proper and dignified expressions never failed him, whether he was writing or speaking. He never, in any wise, altered the doctrine which he first adopted, but remained true to the last; a thing which can be said of few theologians of this period.—Henry's Calvin.

VALUABLE WORKS.—Lepsius' great work on Egyptian and Ethiopean Antiquities, has been presented by order of the King of Denmark, from the great Royal Liberty at Copenhagen, through the Danish Ambassador, Mr. Raasloff, to the New York State Library. The part which has arrived (it is not yet all out of press) contains over six hundred imperial folio engravings, drawn and colored in the highest style of art. They illustrate the Nilatic remains, such as the pyramids of Gizeh, Sahhara, and Daschen, views of Thebes, Philoe, and Dendera. Mr. Lepsius, as will be remembered, was three years in Egypt, and is now the greatest archæologist living. His work is issued under the auspices of the King of Prussia.

AN AMUSING scene took place at the baptism of a young lady in Chicago lately. The minister requested her to assume the dress peculiar to such an occasion, but she persisted in declining to take off her hooped skirt. When she came to descend into the bath the inflated skirt touched the water and rose up around her like a balloon. Her head was lost to the congregation; she was swallowed up in the swelling skirt; the minister tried to force her down into the bath, but she was kept above the surface by the floating properties of the crinoline, and was buoyed up so successfully that it was not until after much difficulty and many forcible attempts to submerge the lady that the minster finally succeeded in baptizing the fair one.

WHAT A SHAME!—Lavater and his work on physiognomy have so long taken their place among the fixed stars of science, that it is almost startling to see, in the English literary papers, an advertisement from his daughter, Madame Laveter, at Zurich, offering for sale, as "a Memorial of her Father," his silver mounted medicine chest and instruments, to relieve her own distressed circumstances. That she should be so far reduced, is a scandal to the scientific world, which ought to be remedied.

PEWS IN BEECHER'S CHURCH.—The regular annual sale of the pews in Rev. Henry Ward Beecher's church, in Brooklyn, took place lately. The highest premium was $160, and the lowest twenty-five cents. The assessed value of the pews was set down at $12,650, being the same as last year. To this was added, for premiums upon pews, the sum of $16,690 25, the assessed value of the chairs $668, with premiums thereon $21 25, thus resulting in the net sum of $29,429 50; being about forty per cent. increase upon the amount realized last year.

THE Duke of Wellington, giving orders one day, during his campaign, for a battalion to attempt a rather dangerous enterprize—the storming of one of the enemy's batteries of St. Sebastian—complimented the officer by saying that his was the first regiment in the world. "Yes," replied the officer, leading on his men, "and before your lordship's orders are finally executed it will probably be the first in the other world."

ROSA BONHEUR COMING TO AMERICA.—The New York correspondent of the Philadelphia Press says: An artist friend gives me a fresh and reliable bit of news about Rosa Bonheur. That triumphant specimen of a manly woman is about to visit the United States professionally. An opulent French gentleman, an enthusiast in art, some time since commissioned her ladyship to cross the Atlantic, proceed to the great prairies of the far West, and paint from life a herd of wild buffaloes. She was to take her own time, accomplish it in her own way, and fix her own price. At first she declined to entertain the proposition; but finally after turning it over in her mind, and reflecting upon what an original and splendid work she could make, she has accepted the offer and comes over in the spring to make the picture.

THE VICTORIA BRIDGE.—The estimated cost of the Victoria Bridge at Montreal was one million five hundred thousand pounds sterling. But its actual cost was only one million three hundred pounds sterling, or one million dollars less than the estimates. Before the bridge was accepted of the contractors, it was put to the severe test of a loaded train weighing the enormous amount of one ton to the square foot, which it was difficult for three powerful locomotives to drag along.

AN IMPERTINENT QUESTION.

It was a most impertinent question. And it was proposed to me—or rather hurled at me—by my Thought, as I sat cosily last evening by my fire.

I have had questions of the same genre quietly put to me before in the solitude of my chamber, but never before in this plump, matter-of-fact, bringing the thing "down to a point" fashion.

At any time the question would have startled me; but coming, as it now did, on the top of—as agonizing, romance-pulling-down climax—half a dozen happy, sanguine schemings for the Future, I must confess that

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1860.

$1 75 to 1861.—With this number of the Advocate we have increased the edition, to supply future new subscribers.—Will our agents and friends see that we suffer no loss by this accommodation? Send hundreds of new subscribers immediately.—At $1 75 to 1861. All new Subscribers will be charged, if the money is not sent, $1 75 to 1861; if the money is sent, they will be credited only to 1861. Let all take notice. The rule is inexorable.

Introduction of Protestantism into Mississippi.—We commence, this week, these interesting sketches. This is the first complete and authentic contribution to this department of the history of the South-west ever published. The style is one of charming simplicity, and the narrative is full of interest. The back numbers containing the first part can be had, if applied for in time.

Book Department.—Orders will be delayed a few days, as the new supply of books is just now being received.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Annual Meeting of the Joint Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will take place at the office, 113 Camp street, New Orleans, at 9 o'clock, A. M. Wednesday, March 7, 1860.

THE PAPAL CRISIS.

The Imperial Pamphlet—Imperial Plagiarism—Known simultaneously at Rome and Paris—Effect on the Pope—Walewski's Dilemma—Excitement of the French Bishop's—Suppression of the "Univers" newspaper—The Mortara case—Intrigues between the Pope and the Emperor—Hungary Aroused—Peril of the Pope—Papal Despotism at an end—Secret Support of the French Clergy—Latest Movement in Italy—Future Residence of the Pope.

Not long since we gave the substance of the celebrated pamphlet of Laguerroniere, "The Pope and the Congress," supposed, and not denied, to express the opinion of the French Emperor. It is now asserted, by the London Herald's Milan correspondent, that the entire scheme thereby [illegible] of the [illegible] proposed, for the arrangement [illegible] question, is to be found in a little work by Professor Giorgini, of Florence, and recently published in that city, and that not only are the two schemes absolutely identical, with the exception of a more liberal provision in Giorgini's work for the inhabitants of the city of Rome, but the expressions employed are frequently in both cases precisely the same. Whether the Emperor drew from that work, or whether it also proceeded from his inspiration, it matters not. It is said also that the pamphlet was known at the Vatican the same day it first appeared at Paris. M. Sacconni, the Papal Nuncio at Paris, had received the proof-sheets of it, which he forwarded by a special courier to Rome. The effect produced upon the Pope was intense. The same courier was sent back to Paris with a dispatch instructing the papal representative to ask for a formal and public denial from Count Walewski of any participation of the government in the pamphlet in question. He committed himself to the Pope's Nuncio against it, went to the Emperor about it, the Emperor approved it, and Walewski had to resign.

Europe is astir with the matter. The Moniteur has not denied the Emperor's connection with the pamphlet. The French bishops are in a rage against it. The Bishop of Orleans has written a fiery reply. The Bishops of Arras and Poitiers, it is said, are about to publish against it. The Constitutionnel replies to the prelate of Orleans. The report that Russia condemned the Emperor's pamphlet is pronounced false. The papal paper, L'Univers, first received a government warning for its too favorable pleas for the Pope, and, not heeding sufficiently, was suspended. The Mortara case has been dramatised in Paris, and the Emperor attended the performance and joined in the applause. The government of Bologna has arrested the man who kidnapped Mortara's child. The consequence of all this is that Louis Napoleon is again wonderfully popular in Italy, and becoming popular in England, even with the London Times. Whether he can stand against the Jesuits or not is yet to be seen.

A Council of Cardinals was held on the 28th of December, in which the following decisions were adopted:—

"1. Suspension of the departure of Cardinal Antonelli for Paris until the temporal rights of the Church were recognised as the basis of all discussion in the Congress.

"2. Immediate increase of the papal army for the defence of the States of the Church.

"3. Publication of a solemn declaration, condemning the pamphlet 'Le Pape et le Congres.'"

This last decision was put into execution next day by an official protest in the Giornale di Roma.

And now Hungary is about to make common cause with Italy. In Hungary, both Catholics and Protestants unite in behalf of religious freedom. By the last steamer we learn, that a telegram from Vienna states that a delegation from the Protestants of Hungary had visited Vienna, with the view of obtaining an interview with the Emperor Francis Joseph, and imploring him to grant some little relaxation of the rigorous laws now in force in Hungary, and especially to grant some reforms in these applying particularly to Protestants. The Emperor, however, refused to see them; and the delegation had left Vienna without having an interview with him. The people of Hungary were in the most violent state of agitation, and a serious struggle was apprehended unless martial law was proclaimed.

The question now is, if French protection only secures to the Pope Rome and immediate vicinity, how will his Holiness maintain his government of the States of the Church, outside of the above-mentioned circumscribed line? With only 8,000 or 9,000 troops, when Napoleon's position becomes fully known and assured, the movement for independence will immediately drive the papal officials from every place but Rome and its campagna. This will probably be the next news unless Austria and Naples interfere, which France and Sardinia will resist. Meanwhile, the glorious Garibaldi is biding his time, and, if the exigency demands, will be among the papal hirelings like a firebrand in dry stubble. With the Italians and Hungarians unsettled, there is danger of another European war.

At any rate, the power of European religious despotism is broken for ever. "Free Catholicism" will take the place of Papal Ultramontanism. This was the ancient position of France. Napoleon intends to restore it, and if the Pope resist him, he will prove a second Henry VIII., and establish himself at the head of the "Gallican Church," as Henry did of the "Anglican Church." Freedom to worship God according to conscience will ultimately grow out of this confusion. If Napoleon be firm and wise, he will be the central historical personage of the nineteenth century.

From the Pope's obstinate persistency in refusing the mild measured propositions of Napoleon, it is inferred that he not only receives an immense support from other Catholic States, but from France as well, and that the very large proportion of the clergy who favor the Monarchy in France, are urging him not to yield a point to the suggestions of Napoleon. An intimation of this is seen in the fact that the hitherto docile Archbishop of Paris, Cardinal Mariot, has resigned his seat in the Privy Council of the French Empire.

But the movement on the other side is even more vigorous. Recent advices from Florence state that deputations from the non-liberated Roman provinces, and even from the city of Rome itself, have held an assembly in Tuscany, and have expressed their firm conviction that the temporal power of the Pope is no longer possible, and their determined resolve no longer to endure it. The deputies of the Romagna have promised not to separate their cause from that of the other provinces. A central junta has been formed at Florence, and an address to the Emperor has arrived at Paris, signed by the members of this assembly. The future residence of the Pope is even designated. It is said he will retire to Benevento if the French army should be ordered to evacuate Rome. Benevento is a small Duchy, containing about thirty thousand inhabitants, given to His Holiness by the treaties of 1815, and is entirely possessed by the religious corporations established there. It is hemmed in by the Neapolitan territory, is very strongly fortified by nature and its isolated position. He would be surrounded by the subjects of the King of Naples, hitherto very devoted to the Pontifical Court.

ROSA BONHEUR.

As the Advocate has recently had something to say in regard to the enlarged sphere of usefulness open to Christian womanhood in these times, in teaching, and writing, and art; and as Rosa Bonheur, the popular French lady-artist, is said to be about coming to America to paint buffaloes, it may be interesting to our readers to give them a brief biographical sketch of her. She is now nearly thirty-eight years of age, having been born March 16, 1822, in Bordeaux. Her name is as beautiful as her art; her person is as beautiful as both; and her nature is as beautiful as all three. And yet she is unmarried, having resolved to live single for the sake of her art, as St. Paul did for the sake of his Apostleship. Unwomanly Fanny Fern says it is because she has no confidence in the constancy of the love and kindness of men. Her father's name was Oscar Raymoud Bonheur, also a painter, and her mother—Sophie Marques—was at first a pupil of her subsequent husband.

Rosalie—or Rosa, the name she likes best—was a wild frolicsome little girl, hating books, and loving the sunshine, the green fields, the woods, the flowers and the birds. Her father and mother were poor, having both to teach—the one drawing and the other music—for a living, and the mother died in 1833. Rosa learning [illegible] books, they tried to make a seamstress of [illegible] out from her hated confinement in the room of the seamstress, and help the husband to work at his turning-lathe. They sent her to a boarding school, where she was a great favorite, originating all sorts of fun, drawing caricatures of the teachers, and learning but little except drawing. Her companions were rich and well-dressed; she was poor and plainly-clad; and she was unhappy. A noble ambition was born out of this travail—she resolved, not to seek the means of splendid personal decoration, but to make something of herself. Her father, hopeless of her, took her from school, left her to herself, and she spent her time in his studio, imitating him, until, seeing her bent, he taught her carnestly, and then sent her to the Louvre to copy the works of the great masters, where she worked with all her might, and with great success, the sale of her copies helping to support her father's family.

She was now seventeen, and had found her life-work. Having studied and copied, in the Louvre, all the schools—the splendid coloring and form of the Italian, the lofty idealism of the German, the broad naturalism of the Dutch—and happening to paint a goat, she devoted her self to animal painting. Too poor to procure models, she visited the fields and pastures, and even the filthy butcher-pens and bloody slaughter-houses, to paint animals, in all circumstances and attitudes—coming home covered with mud and fly-spots. She also visited the public stables, the animals in the museums, and the horse and cattle fairs—in her visits to these last wearing male attire, for convenience and protection. Her father was her only teacher. Fame followed her efforts, and honor is now paid her throughout Europe and America.

Her two brothers—Auguste and Isidore—were also artists—the first a painter, the second a sculptor. Her young sister, Juliette, is also a painter, and at public exhibitions the works of the entire family are grouped together. In 1849 her "Cantal Oxen" took the gold medal, awarded by Horace Vernet, the great painter. Her father, who was now director of the Government School of Design for girls, died, and Rosa was elected to his place, her sister, now Madame Peyrol, being resident professor. Having studied animals in all situations, by association, and by dissection, and having studied outward nature, at all hours of the day, and in all weathers, in the rain and in the sunshine—her pictures are wonderfully fresh and life-like, and, unlike most artists, she attained great fame in early life. She has made a fortune, but spends it on others, except a little farm near Paris. She gained, according to regular French usage, the Cross of the Legion of Honor, but the Emperor refused it because she was a woman.

Her city home is in a quiet street of Paris, surrounded by gardens, with trees and flowers, animals and birds. Friday is her reception day, and her studio the reception room. It is ornamented with articles of peasant costume, utensils of rural labor, fishing and hunting accoutrements, poles and branches from the woods, and skins of all sorts of animals. She says they give her ideas, whereas costly furniture would suggest nothing. She is very plain and simple in her dress, rejecting all female finery. She is modest, truthful, kind-hearted and enthusiastic. Her house is kept by a widow lady, Madame Micas, whose daughter, also an artist, is Rosa's companion. Together they visit the wildest and most distant ranges of mountains, sleeping in peasant huts and wayside inns, eating what they can get, braving storms and cold and studying nature in all her phases. They visited the highlands of Scotland, and now it is said she is coming to America. Her history is an inspiring evidence of the power of "self-help" and self-culture, even among the poorest. It is also an example of the advantage of being associated in early life with the refining influences of works of literature and art, and of the blessings of the love of outward nature. But few can become great writers or great artists, but all may become cultivated men and women.

NORTHERN LITERATURE AND THE SOUTH.

We do not at all wonder that the South should be jealous of Northern Literature, especially of its religious literature, for so many of its periodicals and works have bitterly and vehemently, or else in religious guise, assailed Southern character and institutions, that it is both natural and right for the South to be guarded against its publications. But this jealousy becomes unfair and unjust whenever the innocent are confounded with the guilty. If it is our duty to protect ourselves against a vitiated Northern sentiment, it is equally our duty not to make false charges against those writers and publishers, who have remained, amid all the excitement, true and faithful to the conservative feelings of American brotherhood. In times like the present, when the public mind is inflamed, it is impossible to escape mistakes in the heat of excitement. But every principle of honorable dealing requires that we should be open to conviction and prompt to repair a wrong thoughtlessly done.

These remarks are called forth by the fact that some of our Southern journals have been too loose and indiscriminate in their denunciations. Our Northern friends are worthy of all honor from the South, and they should have the evidences of Southern appreciation and friendship. John G. Saxe, of Vermont, is not only one of the most accomplished poets of the day, but he was lately the Democratic candidate for the office of Governor of that State. With little or no prospect or hope or success, he took the field against the Black Republicans, even in their Green Mountain strongholds. He was defeated, of course, but by a majority so much reduced as greatly to detract from the triumph of his adversaries, and to inspire his friends with fresh hopes of success for the next campaign, when it is understood that he is again to be brought forward as their candidate. Notwithstanding all this, a paragraph recently appeared in the Knoxville Whig (Mr. Brownlow's paper,) charging Mr. Saxe with having returned from South Carolina to the North, and published "a villainous account" of certain things that he saw there, as specimens of Southern society. This brings out a letter from the poet, who says, with regard to this charge: "I am quite sure, gentlemen, that where I am known, whether North or South, the above most mendacious assertion needs no words of contradiction. But the statement of the Whig has so positive an air, that, with your permission, I desire to give it a positive denial. Briefly, then, I have never published or written any account whatever touching the sale or treatment of slaves. It is hardly important to add that I never was in South Carolina, though I hope to visit that State at no distant day."

Other Southern journals have assailed Harper's Magazine and Harper's Weekly newspaper, with the charge, that George W. Curtis, who is known to be a violent anti-slavery man, is the editor of those periodicals. The statement is, "that the largest book establishment in the country is obliged to employ one of the most obnoxious abolitionists in the country to edit its periodical literature." This is an utter mistake. Mr. Curtis is not the editor of these publications. There is no editorship outside of the firm of Harper & Brothers, and these gentlemen are constantly watchful that nothing of a sectional character appear in their works. The Department of the Weekly styled "The Lounger," has been conducted, it is said, by Mr. Curtis, but no abolitionism has ever appeared in it. Mr. Curtis also contributed a serial story, entitled "Trumps." It matters not who writes for a paper, so the paper itself is sound. No men could have been more careful and consistent than these gentlemen in this respect, and as they have positively refused to cater to abolition taste in this matter, or in any way contribute to the wretched divisions of the country, they heartily deserve our appreciation and regard. Harper & Brothers have won the confidence and esteem of the South. They have won it fairly and magnanimously. Amid all the agitation, they have stood firm and true to the honorable principles on which [illegible] They have [illegible] they proposed to do business. They have given us no cause of offence—not even of suspicion—and it is the simplest dictate of just and manly dealing, to let them enjoy the legitimate fruits of an elevated and consistent course in trade.

THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE AND THE LEGISLATURE.

At the recent session of the Louisiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, that body adopted the following resolution:

"That the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, through our Agents, request the Honorable Legislature of the State of Louisiana to donate to the Centenary College, in Feliciana Parish, to Pierce and Paine College, in the Parishes of Sabine and DeSoto, and to Homer College, in Claiborne Parish, twenty-five thousand dollars each, for the purpose of aiding us in affording the youth of this State facilities for a thorough collegiate education."

This measure was not hastily originated or adopted. It was thought to be in accordance with simple justice and duty, in view of the relative ability and liberality of the Methodist Church in providing facilities for the education of the sons of the State. To understand the case properly, we have only to subtract what that church has done from the aggregate educational institutions of the State.

Centenary College, with buildings superior to any in the South, not excepting the University of Virginia, with largely over two hundred students, and steadily increasing, is an honor to the State—indeed, the only thoroughly established and successful literary college proper, within its bounds. It is doing a great work for Louisiana. Mississippi, and the South-west generally, support it. But it needs an endowment, the only thing it lacks to place it in the front rank of American colleges. The Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences are laboring to raise an endowment fund. Will not the State assist to the reasonable amount of $25,000 in paying for the magnificent Centre Building recently finished? It would be but a small investment in comparison with the interest the State has in the institution, and with the actual educational advantages it affords to her sons.

The other two male institutions mentioned—one in the North, and the other in the West—are happily located, in view of the educational wants of those sections. Homer College is out of debt—the building is nearly finished, and will be a fine one. The number of students amounts already to one hundred, and is increasing—a prosperous state of things for a college just opened. The endowment now reaches $25,000, and will, it is believed, reach $50,000 during the present year. Has not the State interest enough in this institution to take stock in its endowment to the amount of $25,000? Pierce and Paine College, at Pleasant Hill, will soon have an excellent building finished. The amount already raised for it is over $63,000, all of which is for the endowment. It is not in debt, and for a new enterprise, has singularly encouraging prospects. Cannot the State give $25,000 to help pay for the fine building now going up? All these institutions are managed, financially, by the most prudent and experienced business men in the country. There is no danger of failure. They will succeed whether the State assist or not. But their success would be much more rapid, and honorable to the State, and they would much sooner reach the rank of first-class colleges, were the State to assist them.

The State is not asked to build colleges for us. Private enterprise, zeal, and liberality have already done that. The State is asked to give reasonable sanction, encouragement and assistance. And to enforce the propriety of such assistance, let us ask, what would Louisiana have to show in the way of educational institutions for her sons, had not those institutions been built? The Churches, embracing in their membership and adherents the bulk of the population, can do, in this matter, what the State cannot do. This point needs no argument. It is matter of history. Let the State, then, assist the Churches. Thus, without any objectionable Church-and-State feature, to which we are unalterably opposed, we shall harmonize the wishes of those who desire Christian education, and of those who desire State education, for our sons. "If 'sectarianism' be made an objection, we answer, first, that we shall be ready to favor similar help, under similar circumstances, to the other Churches. We answer, second, that the Methodist Church has no sectarianism to teach. No proselytism is allowed in her schools. The Bible, the religion of all Churches, and the "Apostle's Creed," the creed of all, constitute her religious platform and interpretation.

In the way indicated by the above resolution, the State can do more for the cause of education by the investment of $100,000, than by the investment of $1,000,000 in a simple State institution. For, first, State assistance to Church institutions, on condition that the Churches invest a certain amount before receiving aid, would call out the zeal, denominational interest, and private enterprise of the Churches, to the utmost degree. And, second, State institutions will never absorb the denominational school interest; and the two will always be in antagonism—one weakening the other; but the denominational schools, though they may not succeed as desired, will always triumph. The plan we propose harmonizes both interests, and secures first-class educational institutions to the State. The question involved is, whether or not the Legislature will co-operate in the only practicable plan for establishing in Louisiana first-class male colleges. While we conducted the Texas Christian Advocate, we urged similar views, for several years, upon the Legislature of that State. We are glad to see that at length they have been partially adopted—the Legislature having recently granted five leagues of land to each of the colleges.

What say our fellow-citizens of the Louisiana Legislature? We take our ground, and make our request openly. We have nothing to conceal, nothing to explain; and without electioneering, or personal influence, depend upon the merits of the case, and the wisdom of our State Legislators. The successful establishment of first-class colleges in the Southern States will do more for Southern independence than resolutions and conventions will do in an age. Our sons will be sent school—at school their characters will be formed, and their sentiments receive their direction. If they have not schools at home, they will send them abroad. Hundreds of thousands of dollars leave Louisiana every year in this way.

WHAT IS TO BE DONE WITH THE MORMONS?

Distant as these moral and political heathen are, and, consequently, little as is thought of it, this is one of the great questions of this country, and will have to be practically answered at no distant day. "Freedom to worship God" must be interpreted, as well as the status of the negro, as in the "Dred Scott" case.

The political rostrum, in certain parts of the country, resounds with the question, "what shall be done with the free negroes"—and a great society—one of the prolific genus humbug, sailing under the "American" flag—is entering Churches, employing silly preachers, and ambitious pseudo philanthropists, in raising money to salary useless officers, under the pretence of sending them to Liberia—itself a comparative humbug—while they can be inexpensively sent back to their masters' homes, as Paul sent Onesimus to Philemon—which they should never have left. But the great Mormon question, which admits of no such solution, and is increasingly aggravated by the influx of free-soil fanatics from all parts of the world, is allowed to sleep, until the nation is already threatened with disgrace.

In addition to all we have heard, and which cannot be denied, however softened, for sinister purposes, by letters from Horace Greely, a distinguished gentleman in Utah, [illegible] Correspondent of Camp and Creative of Mormon iniquities and abominations which ought to startle the country, and arouse the Government to action. He says:

"The Church" has ordered and executed two hundred and sixteen murders within the sound of a cannon of this city, since the 1st of March, 1857. "The Church" has ordered and executed the murder of seven hundred and eight emigrants passing from the East to California since 1850. "The Church" accumulated by the operation one million two hundred thousand dollars worth of money, goods and live stock. "The Church" ordered and its Bishops and strikers executed, the dreadful massacre at Monatahi Meadows, two hundred miles south of this, of one hundred and sixteen emigrants on their way from Arkansas to California. "The Church" ordered and executed the massacre of half a dozen emigrant trains last July and August, one hundred miles north of this, in which many lost their lives, the survivors living on the charity of the army at Camp Floyd, and on that of the Chief Justice, Judge Eckels. "The Church" robbed and plundered emigrants of large numbers of cattle the past summer within ten miles of Camp Floyd, by running their cattle off at night while in camp, and concealing them for several days in the rawines and mountains till the owners had to give up searching for them and go their winding way. The cattle, mules or horses were then quietly driven to the "Church Herd," which now numbers its thousands. The pliant tools who execute this work are composed of what are known as "Danites," or the "Herds of Dan," or, as "Destroying Angels," headed and commanded by tried and chosen leaders, and numbering at present about six hundred and forty rank and file. Their long tried and favorite leader, "Bill Hickman," appearing to be not so zealous in plundering for the Church, was placed under severe police surveillance, and some very clever Gentile merchants in this city had all their animals stolen, on the night of the 18th of December last. Hickman, on learning it, ordered them brought back, which was done in eight hours. But in eight hours more poor Hickman suffered the penalty of "The Church," being assassinated in the street.

"The Church" requires for its creed, polygamy and incest. Uncle and niece are married, cohabit and breed children; half-brother and sister, step-father and daughter do the same; a widow, with all her daughters, by a deceased man, are married to the same man and breed children by him. The Church fund now reaches the enormous amount of five millions of dollars, all of which is in the control of the Vicegerent "Brigham." The money is mostly on deposit, about as follows: In New York city, $200,000; in other parts of the United States, about $200,000; in London, $1,000,000; in Liverpool, $500,000, and the balance in Glasgow, Copenhagen, Manchester, Australia, and other portions of Europe. The professed object of these Mormons in assembling out here is to enjoy their religion; their real object is, and was from the beginning, to plunder, rob, murder, and give unrestrained liberty to all the lower and baser passions of corrupt nature. We, who have studiously studied their daily walks, examined their Legislative grants, their Church creeds, and practices, their secret and terrible executions, their midnight assassins, and the antecedents and character of their leaders, strikers and assistants know this to be true. You in the States living under reasonable laws of restraint, enacted and acquiesced in by the popular voice, think the partial revelations we have made are too monstrous to believe. Several of the old members of the once famous band of robbers, under the lead of John Marrel, known in history as the land Pirates of the West, are now in Utah, and are the fearful and midnight executioners of the will and behest of "The Church."

Toleration of these miserable traitors against all divine and human law—against "the covenant of God" and the faith of mankind—increases their boldness, and encourages the spread of their moral virus over all lands—for their agents are every where. The streams of Abolition fanaticism, Helperism, John Brownism, Free-Loveism, the moral sewerage of foreign lands, all uniting with the spirit of avarice, theft, murder, adultery, infidelity, and lawlessness, now so unhappily common, threaten to create such a flood of crime and anarchy as will endanger the institutions of the country. Moreover, the Mormon hierarchy cannot now reform its debased subjects, if it would; no more than the chief of a band of robbers could reform his followers, or the keeper of an infamous house could her unhappy lodgers. There is work for the wisdom and power of the Government. All that has heretofore been done is lost labor, and life, and money.

THE ITALIAN QUESTION.

There seems to be no doubt, now, that the French Emperor will not use force to restore to their thrones the Austro-Italian dukes, or to force the rebellious Legations to return to their allegiance to the Pope. Nor will he suffer others to do it. In this course he has the moral support of England and Prussia. Meanwhile, things in Italy which have only been chilled by doubt of Napoleon's intentions, are ripening fast. Becoming assured that their destiny is in their own hands, they are beginning to act decisively. Italy is at this moment freeing herself, forever, let us hope, from both Austrian and Papal dominion.

London advices, of Feb. 2, informs that a telegram had just been received from Brussels, which states that Le Nord, the Russian official journal, announces that special couriers had left London and Paris with important dispatches to their respective representatives at Turin. Le Nord states that these dispatches convey instructions to the representatives of France and England, directing them to state to the King of Sardinia that the Governments of France and England see no objections to the annexation of Central Italy becoming a fait accompli. Paris advices, of Feb. 4, say that it is stated that the French and English Cabinets have come to a full understanding upon the Italian question, and that these Governments are about to demand of Austria the surrender of the Venetian kingdom, and to accept such indemnity as Italy may be ready to offer her.

Advices from Ancona, via Bologna and Turin, of an important character, reached London on the 4th, to the effect that a serious collision had taken place at Ancona, between the Papal troops of the garrison at that place and the gendarmerie, in which some three hundred of the Papal troops were arrested, after a desperate struggle. Forty of the soldiers arrested had been wounded in the affray, and a large number of the gendarmerie were wounded, though none are reported killed on either side.

The Paris Patrie a semi-official journal, publishes a statement denying the report which has been very generally circulated that the French troops were about to be withdrawn from Rome. The Patrie also announces that the question of the annexation of Central Italy to Sardinia will be submitted to the popular vote, and is subordinate to universal suffrage, the early application of which in the Romagna and elsewhere will positively make known the state of public opinion in Italy. Several of the Paris journals, in commenting upon Italian affairs, speak openly of the annexation of Savoy, and consider it the same as if already annexed to France. A telegram from Turin announces that several high officers of the Sardinian army, had left that city for Bologna, for the purpose of reorganizing the army of Central Italy, in anticipation of its being united with that of Sardinia under the same government. The insurrectionary spirit was rapidly increasing in Venetia, and at Venice arrests continue to be made by the Austrian officials to an alarming extent. The London Post—Ministerial organ, says that the Austrian Government has given up all hopes of retrieving its influence in Italy, and that the stubbornness of the Pope bids fair to deprive him of his temporal power. The Post concludes an article upon the subject by authoritatively stating that "England's policy towards Italy now is: No Foreign Intervention, but ITALY FOR THE ITALIANS." The Turin journals continue to discuss the question of the annexation of Savoy to France, and express the opinion that such a step will be productive of no harm to Sardinia.

FREE CATHOLICISM.

It is remarkable that the threatened overthrow of the temporal power of the Pope is to be by Catholic hands. No Protestant power has sought to harm him. Nor do Catholic powers seek, primarily, to overthrow his temporal power, so much as they seek to relieve themselves of the odium of forcing upon unwilling Catholics the abhorred government of a prince whom they, at the same, are willing—to acknowledge as their spiritual head. And this leads to what the wisest and most candid Catholic minds have always apprehended as desirable—the relief of the head of their Church from the antagonistic and irreconcilable responsibilities of both temporal and spiritual sovereign. And, as an almost necessary consequence of this progressive movement—at least a result of the same enlightened liberality which has produced it—freedom of conscience will be established in those Catholic States opposed to the temporal power of the Pope—France, Sardinia, the rest of Italy. Austria, Spain, and Naples will be left alone in their Ultramontane glory. The South American States, and Mexico, already as free from the old-time control of the Pope as France, will soon be blessed with freedom of conscience to anti-catholics. One of the principles of the Juarez government in Mexico, is religious toleration.

Napoleon is now the head and patron of Free Catholicism. The Catholics of Hungary Bohemia, and Switzerland, as a general rule, entertain the same liberal sentiments. What the effect of these things will be, upon the character and prospects of the Romish Church, we cannot, of course, now determine. But that the world, and the cause of the Christian religion, will be ultimately benefited, there can be no doubt. Indeed, we should not be surprised if Louis Napoleon, whose general ambition is the aggrandizement of France, and whose particular ambition is to make French civilization equal to that of England—and who is too much of a philosophic statesman not to know that Romanist rule is ruinous to a State—should establish a "Gallican Church," somewhat after the ideal of the "Anglican Church."

THE MEXICAN QUESTION.

The President's Message is having about the same effect on Mexican affairs, as the Emperor's pamphlet is having on Italian affairs. The moral effect of the one is disintegrating Miramon's power, and that of the other the Pope's temporal sovereignty. In both instances, the Romish hierarchy, true to its traditions and instincts, is allied with the desperate and decaying despotisms. This is not the less true in this free land, whose entire history is one of opposition to both civil and religious oppression.

Mexican affairs are approaching a crisis. The successes of the Liberalists, telegraphically reported in our last issue, are confirmed. Gen. Cobos, with a portion of Miramon's army, intended for the attack on Vera Cruz, was defeated and utterly routed at Oajara in two battles. Curavajal has defeated Miuon at Tlascala; Beriozobal has routed the Church forces near Maravatio; Valle and Ogazon are checking off Woll in Jalisco; Colima, recently taken by Miramon, has been reoccupied by the Liberals; Zacatecas has been taken by Ortega; and Garza has taken San Luis. The Liberals have 25,000 to 30,000 troops, and will soon attack Miramon, whose power is now confined to Guadalajara, Guanajuato, Queretaro, Mexico, and Puebla. A compromise between Juarez and Miramon is spoken of, but denied.

Meanwhile, Washington advices of the 17th inform us that the Juarez government has accepted the proffered services of several thousand American volunteers, and has agreed to cede to them large tracts of land in several of the Mexican States. Until lately, such a movement would have aroused the instinctive Mexican hatred of the Americans, and made the Juarez government unpopular; and, united with the undying church-power, would have overthrown it. But all Mexico is now helpless, and the people are worn out by robbery, suffering and death, and are anxious for peace, convinced also that nothing but help from abroad will secure it.

While all this is going on, the Americans and Mexicans are about to come to open war on the Rio Grande. One battle has been fought on Mexican soil, and we expect soon to hear of others. Cortina is recruiting his forces, and the Rangers are scouting up and down the river, and will cross at the first provocation.

AMERICAN ROUTE TO CHINA AND JAPAN.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate possesses an attractive advantage, as a newspaper, over all papers of similar character, in the fact that it is the first to bear into the interior the news from Mexico, Central and South America, California, Oregon, the Sandwich Islands, China and Japan. This advantage is now being more fully developed. The United States Senate, a few days since, adopted a resolution instructing the Committee on Post-offices to inquire into the expediency of establishing a line of steamers between San Francisco and China, via the Sandwich Islands.

The quickest and shortest route to China from the great Atlantic seaboard is undoubtedly that across the North American continent, and by sea to the ports of the East now open and to be opened in future to commerce. Even by the Isthmus routes to California, the channel of communication proposed would be of inestimable advantage to our trade, while, should the Pacific Railroad be completed, the benefit will be inestimable. We have already received frequent news from Japan, in advance of the regular mails via England, brought by American vessels to San Francisco, and from thence overland, or by the Isthmus, to New York. The latest accounts from San Francisco teem with glowing descriptions of newly-arrived cargoes of Japanese goods, and the merchants of California are vieing with one another in this new channel of American enterprise. Should our commercial comity with China, as we have reason to expect it will, says the New York Times, become fixed on a firm basis, who can estimate the advantage to the Golden State from her comparative proximity to the land of the Celestials? Already is San Francisco teeming with her Chinese population, and who can say how soon the manufactures will follow where the people have been so long established?

THE HUNGARIAN QUESTION.

The latest European news, to Feb. 4, is to the effect that the increasing discontent in Hungary, together with the unexpected turn very recently given to the Italian question, has created much uneasiness in the Cabinet of Vienna, and the Government, it is said, is sending large reinforcements of troops to the Tyrol, and also to Venice and various portions of Hungary. The whereabouts of Kossuth has not been definitely traced for some time, but from information received at London, and the activity of the revolutionary spirit in Hungary, it is believed that he is again among his own people, arousing them to make another struggle to throw off the baleful yoke of the Austrian oppressor. The extensive society called the Hungarian Political Association has issued secret circulars to its friends, in all parts of Europe, that Hungary is ready, and will improve the first opportunity to detach herself from Austrian rule. From these things it seems probable that Austria is about to lose Hungary as well as Italy. Let us hope so. Let us hope that Louis Napoleon will, in the end, be as strangely favorable to Kossuth and Hungary, as he turns out to be to Victor Emanuel, Cavour and Garibaldi. Let us hope that that proud and gallant race, the noble Magyars, and that glorious man, the sometimes erring, but always wonderful Kossuth, may yet be rewarded for their patriotism, their bravery, and their sufferings.

DIRECT TRADE BETWEEN NEW ORLEANS AND LIVERPOOL.

A movement is now on foot in this city to establish a line of six screw steamers, each 1,500 tons and carrying a cargo of 3500 bales cotton, between New Orleans and Liverpool, with American and British capital—$500,000 to be raised on each side. The New Orleans Chamber of Commerce has had the matter before it, appointed a committee, and the committee has reported favorably. It is proposed to make the passage from port to port in twenty-five days. It is intended to have the steamers constructed in time to transport the next crop of cotton. New Orleans is the largest exporting city. Indeed, the largest purely commercial city, in the Union; a good outward cargo and freight list can be had at any season of the year; the import trade is already large and rapidly increasing; now is a favorable time for the inauguration of the enterprise; we trust, therefore, that the everlasting talk on the subject of direct trade will be substituted by earnest and fruitful action. What is $500,000 in such enterprise? Absolutely nothing. Five individual men in the South-west could be found to who would thus invest that much, we should think.

RAILROAD BETWEEN NEW ORLEANS AND MOBILE.

We see that in the Louisiana Legislature, Dr. W. O. Austin, of this city, introduced a bill providing for the incorporation of the New Orleans and Mobile Railroad Company, which was referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements. This, it seems to us, is a movement in the right direction. Why a railroad between these two important Gulf cities has not been built long since is a matter of amazement. Energetic efforts are being made to unite New Orleans by railroad with Houston, Galveston, and San Antonio, and it is probable that we shall be able to reach the latter place, in far Western Texas, by rail, before we shall be able, by the same convenient mode of travel, to reach Montgomery, Alabama. We can now go from New Orleans to Memphis, Nashville, Charleston, New York, even to the cities of Canada, by railroad, and yet we cannot thus go to Mobile. This is creditable neither to New Orleans nor to Mobile, nor to the progress of the country. Mobile will soon be united with Montgomery by railroad, and we trust New Orleans will soon be thus united with Mobile. The statement of the case is all the argument it needs.

PACIFIC METHODISM.

We have just received three numbers of that handsome paper, the Pacific Methodist. It begins its fourth volume with more vigor than ever. It has had a hard struggle. A movement has been started in the New Orleans Advocate to procure a press for the Methodist—$45 in hand. Let us raise the whole amount. The Church in Stockton is flourishing—so are Clear Lake and El Dorado circuits. The presiding elders of San Francisco and Petaluma Districts report encouragingly. Revs. Thomas B. Ruble, N. B. Peterson, and J. L. Burchard, of the Southern Church, transfers to the Pacific Conference, had arrived. Mr. Burchard goes to Oregon. But death has been among them. Rev. D. W. Eppes, who went with Bishop Pierce, and also Rev. N. B. Peterson (immediately after his arrival) are dead. The will of the Lord be done. The Agent of the Pacific Methodist College is succeeding gloriously. Subscriptions are reported every week, from $50 to $500. The editor likes the President's Message. We see that the editor is receiving presents of "fat quails," "boxes of apples," and similar delicacies. A great country that, for an editor.

REV. JAMES PEELER.

When the writer hereof was a boy, James Peeler was an exhorter in the then wild county of Randolph, in Alabama. He entered the ministry, traveled many years in the Alabama Conference, and for several years past has been a member of the Florida Conference. Recently he has invented a Plough, which has become celebrated. The Tallahassee Floridian says that the Rev. James Peeler has just returned to that city, having sold the patent right of his plough and manure distributor, for twelve States, for the sum of two hundred and fifty-one thousand dollars in notes and cash. He has donated two hundred thousand dollars for church purposes, thirty-six thousand of which are for taking scholarships in colleges under care of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, hoping when he shall cease to work and live, young men will be educated to bless the church and his country. That is rather the "deepest ploughing" of which we ever heard.

OUR CORRESPONDENCE.

Our Correspondence this week is highly valuable and interesting. Dr. Hamilton's letter from Aspinwall has evidence of the poetic influence of tropical associations. We hope for more of the same sort. Mrs. Cross' letter from San Antonio reads like Thornbury's "Life in Spain." We are glad to have such a correspondent in such a place. The letter of our Kentucky correspondent is able and brilliant. We wish, however, he would take the Constitution, as his political Bible, and then the Union, as his political Church, would be safe. That is the sole sin of South Carolina and the fire-eaters, whom he lashes so unmercifully. Devotion to the Church, in forgetfulness of the Bible, made Romanism. The fire-eaters are simply political Protestants. We like his love of the Union, however. Only let the Constitution be the standpoint. Our readers will be glad to know that he will write for us regularly. We love to hear from Kentucky.

Our Next Paper. We have some charming things in store for our readers, to be found in next week's issue—among which is a singularly valuable letter from our New York Literary Correspondent, received too late for this paper. We have also an elegant and excellent paper from one of the most distinguished writers in the country, on the "Imagination and Christianity." We are succeeding in procuring a strong corp of contributors. We are encouraged by the conviction that the paper will be far more interesting hereafter than heretofore.

DEATH OF MRS. P. M. GOODWYN.

Rev. P. M. Goodwyn, we are sorry to learn, has lost his wife. She died in perfect resignation on Thursday last. The funeral discourse was preached by Rev. Mr. Linfield. An obituary will appear shortly. She was an amiable and pious lady. Friend after friend departs.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

FEBRUARY 22, 1860.

LETTERS FROM KENTUCKY.—NO. III.

Many things conspire to render Kentucky, especially the Northern section, one of the most interesting and attractive portions of the globe.

The State is four hundred miles in length, by something over one hundred in width, stretching from 82 deg. to 89 deg. west longitude, and lying between 36 deg. and 39 deg. north latitude, and is ornamented on her entire northern border by the silver-sheeted waves of La Belle Riviere. The climate is consequently mild and, all things considered, as healthy as any region on the continent. It is a rare thing for the thermometer, in winter, to indicate a greater degree of cold than 10 deg. below zero, or a higher temperature in summer than 80 deg. above. The only objection that could be urged is found in its frequent and sudden changes.

This is pre-eminently an agricultural country. In the northern and eastern States the wealth, intelligence and influence of the people are, to a very great extent, concentrated in and confined to the towns and cities. Not so here: the "substantial patriarchal farmer" constitutes, by odds, the larger and most influential portion of the Commonwealth. Without title or ancestral distinction, except such as flow from honest industry and a properly balanced frugality, they are emphatically our "lords" and "noblemen." A rich, beautiful blue-grass farm, ornamented with the sleek, short-horned "Durham," the snow-white "South-Down," and the fat, lounging "Berkshire," is justly the pride of Kentucky's yeomanry. No member of this great confederacy, we suppose, would presume to enter into a dispute with Kentucky for the palm in stock-raising. In respect to this she is the banner State. It is from her vast cotton, rice, and sugar plantations, in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, are mainly supplied with mules; and from here may be seen weekly herds of beef cattle, weighing from two to four thousand pounds, wending their way to Cincinnati, and from thence to New York and Boston, to replenish the larders of Yankeedom.

Here we have milk and butter. Away down there, amid the long moss and cypress trees, you only have a sort of substitute—a faint and imperfect imitation; here we have the reality.—You may think we are disposed to boast, but, in all truth and soberness, one good blue-grass cow will yield more milk and butter, and of a far better quality, than half a dozen of your little, long-horned scrubs. And to crown all, Kentuckians possess in its fullest sense, the elements of true Southern hospitality. Just across the river from us, amuag our Buckey-Yankee neighbors, it is not at all an uncommon occurreace, nor is it considered at all out of place, for a man to leave his neighbor standing at his gate, while he goes to partake of a warm, sumptuous dinner. But for a Kentuckian to do such a thing would be considered the quintessence of niggardly parsimony.

Kentucky possesses an inexhaustible treasure of wealth in her coal and iron resources. The outlay of time and energy on the part of the Geological Corps, during the past few years, both in the field and laboratory, with particular reference to the resources of the State in coal and iron, has tended greatly to enhance the intrinsic value of our lands.

To those whose attention has not been specially called to the matter, it will doubtless sound almost fabulous to state that the United States annually pours thirty millions of dollars into the treasury of England, for the one single article of iron alone.—Yet Kentucky, so far as the simple ore is concerned, is fully able to meet this demand; and when her mineral resources shall become fully known, and her enterprize, skill, and industry, are laid fully under tribute, this golden stream will be changed, and a large portion of this thirty millions, instead of going to enrich the privileged classes, living under the smiles of crowned heads, will be emptied into the coffers of this grand old Commonwealth. And while her aggregate wealth is being rapidly increased in the iron trade, it will, in time, be augmented almost beyond the power of figures to calculate, from her inexhaustible "Coal Measures." A very considerable portion of Kentucky's vast area is occupied by this most important of all geological formations—most important, at least, so far as all practical purposes are concerned. There are within the territory of this State, a large area of two coal fields, a fact which has not been found to exist in reference to any other State in the Union. The middle coal field of the Mississippi Valley extends over the whole of eight counties, and over a large proportion of five others, in South-western Kentucky; while in the Eastern part of the State, the whole of fifteen counties, and a goodly portion of five others, are embraced in the Great Appalachian coal field or the coal region found on the Western slope of the Alleghany mountains and the Cumberland range, being partly in Pennsylvania, Virginia, Ohio, and Tennessee, and the counties alluded to above in the Eastern part of Kentucky.—There are just one hundred and three counties in the State, and of this number twenty-six are situated in the coal measures.

Who can possibly conjecture what a source of revenue these coal mines will be to the people of this Commonwealth in the lapse of years. This single State could furnish the whole confederacy with coal as an article of fuel. Recent experiments have demonstrated its immense utility in another point of view. It has been clearly ascertained that the Breckinridge coal, and others of similar composition, possess in great abundance benzine, cupione, and lubricating oils, and a kind of coal-wax called paraffin. Many of these coals are exceedingly rich in hydrocarbons, and by properly directed chemical processes are made to yield coal naptha in great quantities. This coal naptha, by repeated distillations and subsequent exposure to the alternate action of acids, alkalies, and oxydizing agents, may be so thoroughly rectified as to give out a volatile liquid called benzole or benzine. The rare interest and value of this singular product are evinced by the fact that it is so volatile as to allow atmospheric air to be transmitted through it, and by a small admixture of alcohol, at a temperature of not less than 60 deg., a bright and beautiful illuminating gas is produced and carried along in a current, and, as it issues from the jet, burns with a brilliancy equal to the finest chrisiant gas.

The business, however, is only in its infancy, and whereunto it may grow no one can conjecture. The day is pressing fast upon us when the vesper light, formed from this gas, will almost entirely supercede lard oil and tallow caudles.

Since the completion of the railroad between Nashville and Louisville, we are beginning to feel that here in Kentucky we are about in the centre of the world. We can take breakfast around our own tables any morning in the week, Sundays excepted, and the next evening take supper in Chicago, St. Louis, Nashville, and almost in New York. A trip to Charleston or Montgomery is regarded as a trifling affair, and in a very short time we expect to be next door neighbors to you all in the Crescent City.

We look back a few years, when our fathers carried their produce to New Orleans in flat-boats, and then walked home through the Indian Nation; and when they packed their silver to New York and Philadelphia on horseback, for dry goods, and wonder, Mr. Editor, how in the range of possibilities they lived. We of the present generation would about as soon undertake to find the North-West passage, or to circumnavigate the globe, as to do the one or the other.

If the progress of our country during the next fifty years, should equal the last half century, and we may reasonably calculate that it will double it, life in this part of the world will be a grand affair.

Another thing which greatly endears Kentucky to the heart of the true Christian patriot—she is a conservative, Union-loving State. She is neither the victim of the wild, fanatical, abolition feeling of the extreme North, or the equally wild and wicked fire-eating, disunion element which is rife in some portions of the extreme South. She is a Southern State, more loyal to the South, we undertake to say, than even South Carolina, whose frequent ebullitions indicate that she is fast approaching a state of political insanity. We give it as our deliberate conviction, that the course she is pursuing will bring about the abolition of slavery in the South much sooner than the empty rantings of Seward, Giddings, and Company.

We are no prophet, and, so far as we know, are not even distantly related to one, but mark what we say: Kentucky will stand up for the Union "to the last syllable of recorded time." No, Mr. Editor, in the bosom of this State sleep the remains of the renowned, Union-loving sage of Ashland; and while his monument stands in Lexington's cemetery, pointing to the dazzling heights of earthly fame to which he, by the force of his noble character, ascended, and where to-day his image stands in full life-form before the nation's gaze, Kentucky will stand by the hope of the world—the Union of three States. Dissolve the Union! Perish the thought!

Our faith in the stability and perpetuity of this great Republic tells us that, despite the treasonable doings of selfish, designing demagogues, who would sell their country's "birthright for a mess of pottage," this nation will continue to exist as a beacon-light to the rest of the world. Our Eagle has her eye fixed upon the full-orbed sun of glory, and her flight is steadily upward, and though corrupt politicians, marshalled under the banner of their old father, the devil, may cry disunion, the period will come when, through our Influence, the temple of Liberty will be erected on the prostrate thrones of monarchical dynasties, and upon its apex, encircled with the rays of millenial morn, will perch the noble bird of Freedom and sing the world's emancipation from despotism and cruelty.

NORTHERN KENTUCKY.

Feb. 9, 1860.

SONORA AND CHIHUAHUA.—From latest accounts the desperadoes of Sonora, had driven out the Americans; afterwards 3,000 Americans had taken possession of the country.—Accounts from Washington say that the Government has determined to order Col. Fauntleroy to march his troops into Chihuahua, for the protection of American citizens.

The President will not send troops to Vera Cruz, as Juarez is able to take care of himself.

NOTES FROM ONE ON A FURLOUGH.—NO. II.

Aspinwall, Jan. 26, 1860.

It was one of the pleasantest evenings that one is permitted to see in half a lifetime, that we steamed out of the port of Havana and went on our way to the Isthmus. The view of the island and city that we had, as they lay bathed in the mellow light of the descending sun, will haunt the memory of some of those who enjoyed it through many a coming year, for it is among the scenes never to be forgotten.

Our voyage was unusually pleasant until we passed Cape Antonio and entered the Caribbean Sea, when we took the full force of the trade winds, and had no lack of exercise the rest of the way. We entered the harbor of Aspinwall on Saturday evening, at eight o'clock, greeted by music from the band on board the U. S. frigate Roanoke, lying at anchor.

Aspinwall, the name of which has become so familiar to the country within a few years past, is located on a crescent-shaped sand-bar, some nine miles south of the older town of Chagres, at the mouth of the river of the same name. The whole surface susceptible of occupation is not larger than that covered by four or five squares in New Orleans or Mobile; and most of that has been reclaimed from its original condition of swamp. All the land around the town for miles is about the character of that through which the Ponchartrain railroad runs; a mile or two from the lower end it only to be occupied by mosquitoes, frogs, alligators, &c. Why it is not very unhealthy, one cannot see, unless the strong trade winds which prevail here constantly sweep away the miasmatic exhalations. The town has been created by, and derives all its importance from the Panama railroad, which starts from this point. Not only is there an immense amount of travel through here, to and from California, but a very large transit business is done; so that it is altogether the most important point upon the Atlantic side of the Isthmus. Here also rendezvous all the naval force kept in these waters by the United States government. But all this business or nearly, is done by Americans and other foreigners; and as this is in the extreme northern portion of the republic of New Granada, and intercourse with the capital is difficult and seldom, it has little or no influence, politically, socially or otherwise, upon the country. Indeed, residents here regard themselves as belonging to New Granada in hardly any important sense. They claim for the place a population of 1500; if there be this number, near 1200 of them must be negroes, either pure or in different states of combination.

Here we have an opportunity of contemplating the negro without his master, and a more idle, dissolute, degraded population I have never seen. Without the restraints of authority, the correction of a wholesome public sentiment, or any one to take any special interest in them, every tendency is downward. Yet many of this class are said to have come from the Island of Jamaica—poor representatives of the benefits of emancipation! Never was I so forcibly impressed with the truth, that "every negro has a right to a master;" and those who deprive him of that right inflict upon him a great wrong.

There is neither church nor school in the place; the absence of them, and the almost utter want of society, render gentlemen unwilling to bring their families here, and so the place loses all the benefits of the presence of ladies.

The climate and productions are such as are found in the tropics generally. The year is divided into two seasons—the dry and the rainy. It is never either as hot or as cold as we have it in the Southern States. The range of the thermometer is from 76 deg. to 86 deg., and the constant sea-breeze makes it always pleasant in the shade. I think the climate delightful. Among the productions are found the sugar-cane, plantain, banana, pine-apple, cocoa-nut, papaya, and the bread-fruit tree.—The cultivation of the soil is almost wholly neglected; the natives are too indolent. A few plantains and bananas, and small patches of sugar-cane and corn, are the extent of their agriculture. Yet, the soil is exceedingly productive. The cocoa-nut and palm tree are both beautiful, and would be regarded in the United States as ornaments. The bread-fruit tree has a magnificent leaf, in size and color. Nature has done much for man in this country, and he nothing for himself.

Monkies of different descriptions, and parrots, abound in different parts of this region, and not a few specimens of each are found in this place. Here, too, I saw a specimen of natural history belonging to a species thought to be fabulous by some writers on this country—the Condor. It was a huge bird; its wings would spread eight or nine feet; its head was entirely bald, and about three times the size of that of a turkey. The color of the wings and a portion of the neck is a dingy white; the body is dark-colored. While two negroes were carrying him on their shoulders, in a crockery crate, he put his head through an opening, took one of them by the arm, which induced the negro to quit his hold very suddenly, and his birdship had a fall.

Our gentlemanly and efficient Consul, C. J. Fox, Esq., to whom I had a letter of introduction, did all in his power to make my stay in Aspinwall pleasant, and to facilitate my movements. To him I am indebted for the courtesy of an introduction to the agent of the railroad, who gave me a free pass over the road, by which I saved $29 50. I have received other favors from the agents of companies here, which deserve mention in the proper place.

J. H.

LETTERS FROM TEXAS.—NO. VIII.

The people of Texas, particularly Western Texas, never see rain enough. They are continually crying to the clouds, "Give, give!" and the coquettish clouds, coming through the golden morning gates with Aurora, nod their fair heads with gentle recognition toward the prairie flowers, and just as the expecting earth is waiting for a nearer salutation they pass on, and are lost amidst the ineffable splendors of the court of the sun. Yet, when we entered San Antonio, one could but smile to hear complaints of dry seasons, when the mud was absolutely up to the hubs of the carriage-wheels. One day we went to drive, accompanied by Mrs. Boring, and during the drive we found ourselves in a bog; but Mrs. Boring is the very person to get herself or her friends out of a bog. She has learned that most difficult of lessons, "to labor and to wait," for those who labor seldom know how to wait, and those who wait do not often care to labor. I would not compare her to "Patience on a monument," but Patience off the monument, among the household, attending to the wants of the family; Patience cutting slices of bread and butter for the children; Patience giving herself to hospitality; Patience throwing the stones out of the road for other people; Patience sewing as fast as "Grover & Baker's" machine can move; Patience "mulling it" spilled milk. Ah, "Patience on a monument" may retire from such competition! Your quiet working patience is the thing that is desirable and available in this world. Sometimes when I have buttered my wings to pieces, and lie quite breathless at the bottom of the cage, I look up and behold this friend of mine perched aloft, warbling away like a real canary. I have frequently thought, in looking at her, of what Sheridan says of his sister-in-law—He says that if her dress were on fire, she would get up quietly and ring the bell; and when the servant would make his appearance, she would say, "William, is there any water?" He would answer, "No, madam, but I will have some brought immediately." But she would reply, "Never mind, William, I dare say it will go out of itself."

You will perceive from this that she is the very person to share a difficulty with. Of course we were soon out of the bog, and the remainder of our drive was very pleasant, through the narrow streets of San Antonio, over the bridge that spans the river, through the Alamo Plaza, by the gurgling waters of the San Pedro. We drove past the convent—a large, buff-colored building, with green Venetian blinds inclosing the gallery, and the whole place surrounded by a substantial stone wall. There the noiseless nun passes away her life, listening to the music of the flowing waves, the monotony of her existence varied only by some refractory school-girl scribbling upon her desk, or shuffling her feet in time of prayers, or throwing her bonnet on a chair instead of hanging it upon a peg. Perhaps our little pale nun, with her folded hands and closed eyes, may sometimes be thinking, as she listens to the ever purling waters, how strange it would be if some gallant knight, with a face as beautiful as St. Sebastian's, should suddenly dash through the river on a grey charger, and bear her away to some palace far off in Mexico, quite on the shores of the Pacific. Of course she would be very much distressed, but after a while, with softened sorrow, she can fancy herself wandering on the sea-shore, while the broad waves are made rosy by the setting sun, and her lover, beside her, finds in his own passion and in her beauty the excuse for his hasty action; and——If a dispensation of the Church could be obtained—hark! the prayer bell sounds! Sister Agnes hastens into the chapel, and with the tips of her pretty fingers, dipped in holy water, wipes out the vain and worldly thoughts. This is a mere vain and worldly surmise of my own—perhaps she never thinks of any such thing.

We visited the new cathedral, which is built of the beautiful, soft, creamy-looking limestone which is so abundant in San Antonio. This stone very obligingly permits itself to be moulded and carved into any shape by the hand of the artificer, and having taken the form that pleases him, it thenceforth grows ever harder and more enduring. In thinking of this I have said to myself: "Would that our souls might be thus pliant to the hand of the Divine Artificer, and, when once fashioned aright, remain so forever!" In this new church the German and perhaps American Catholics worship; but a more interesting place is the old church, massive, and strong, and venerable, though not large. It has stood for nearly 200 years, and here, where the Spanish cavalier, brave, and proud, and graced with every manly accomplishment, knelt beside the untutored and unlettered Indian; here their undistinguished descendants mingle and worship together; the blood of Castile flows without curdling with the blood of the aborigines. I like to sit in this old church, and look around me at the solid walls, at the heavy leaved doors, and up to the small compartments of stained glass that decorate the dome, and permit the light of heaven, colored it is true, and turned aside, to enter the church and play upon its walls. Those walls I often mutely question of the scenes that they have witnessed in 200 years!

JANE T. H. CROSS.

LETTER FROM TUSKEGEE.

A charming lady, the reader will not doubt, sends us a letter on business, some portions of which must see the light. We hope for many such letters. We crave her pardon for publishing extracts from a private letter, but we assure her we never will tell the name of the writer. She says:

The next time you visit us the 'iron horse' will, in all probability, bear you to our very doors. We are talking of a railroad to Chehaw, $30,000 being already subscribed towards it; $40,000 is the sum required. We are looking up intellectually and artistically, too. Dr. Lipscomb, one of the greatest preachers in the United States, is delivering a highly finished series of lectures on Art, which, though prepared for school-girls, are worthy of the most intelligent audience in America. Your friend, G. F. Price, occasionally gives them an address, in which the richness of language is only equalled by the endless variety of a kaleidoscope. Several married belles have gone into the Art Department of the Methodist College, and are drinking in new draughts of pleasure under the refined touchings of Miss Spear; and freshly feeling their intellects through the medium of their tastes. But the culminating point of our glory consists in a newly organized corps of light infantry. The girls are to make and present them a banner, and, in an excess of Southern patriotism, they are going to dissolve the Union. The coming event has cast its shadow before, or else they take time by the forelock, and disdaining the old time-honored stars and stripes, they will repudiate all but fifteen. It is premature, certainly, an abortion, and, like an unthinly birth, will not prosper.

ANSWERING THE APPEAL.

It gives me very great satisfaction and pleasure, to inform the friends of Southern Methodism, that both ministers and laymen are responding to my late appeal in behalf of our Church in Washington City. If the spirit is kept up, and if all who are able throughout our connection will respond by sending me five dollars promptly, I shall be able to buy the lot in question, and commence the building just as soon as spring opens. Why not all, as well as a few, send me five dollars. Are not all alike interested? Brethren, one and all, look at this question with regard to my proposition! See if you do not discover something in it worthy of your consideration; worthy of your patronage and worthy of your admiration. Look to and consider well, the great and important end to be accomplished. The Church which you love as you love your life, is involved in this question, and upon your action, depends the success of that Church at the metropolis of your country. I am persuaded that you will act, and that speedily. Hear what one of my correspondents (an eminent minister of our Church) says: "I have just read your appeal of Dec. 28 in the Richmond Christian Advocate, and I hasten to mail the five dollar bill. I want you to have that lot, whatever becomes of the Union, or whatever may control the future destinies of Washington. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, ought to have a fine Church there." Let us do our duty as a Church, and God will take care of the Union, and his chosen people.

W. T. SMITHSON.

MISSIONARY DONATIONS.

Natchez Miss., February 16th, 1860.

DEAR BROTHER: It is not generally known, that a donation of $3000 was made at the Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference, at its last session, by our venerable friend Rev. N. H. Raiford.

The donor stipulated that the principal should be put at interest for a limited period; the amount arising from its annual loan to go into the general Missionary Treasury. This loan has been effected by the appointee of the Conference, and I have to report $270, in addition to the whole amount raised in our limits for Missionary purposes.

I desire to state, also, that in the report made by me immediately after our Conference, two omissions were made, to wit: Pearl River circuit, $20 25, and Paulding circuit, $18 00.

W. H. WATKINS.

UNION SPRINGS, ALABAMA,

Preamble and Resolutions adopted by the official members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the first Quarterly Meeting Conference for this Station, held on the 16th day of January, 1860:

WHEREAS, as a Society destitute of a House of Worship, we have been treated with marked Christian courtesy by the membership of the Baptist and Presbyterian communions in this place, in extending to us the free, full and cordial use of their respective Buildings for all church purposes; and whereas the Methodists of this community have a just appreciation of that good fellowship and Christian kindness shown them by their brethren of other denominations here, and being desirous of expressing in this public manner their high sense of the accommodation afforded them, do, in Quarterly Conference assembled, unanimously

Resolve—That we tender the Baptist and Presbyterian communions at Union Springs our cordial thanks for that marked courtesy and cordial fellowship at all times manifested towards us, not only in giving us the free use of their commodious house of worship, but also in that enlarged liberality and Christian charity by which all their actions towards us have been characterized.

Resolved—That we will cherish, with fondest recollections, the kindly and pleasant intercourse we have held with them, as, together, we have united upon the Most High in his earthly sanctuaries, and, earnestly praying the blessings of Heaven, in richest measure, to rest upon them, will rejoice to hear of their prosperity and success in fulfilling their high and holy mission, and should their day of adversity come, as come it may, we tender them, in advance, the assurance of our earnest Christian sympathy, and a cordial reciprocation of favors.

Resolved—That the foregoing Preamble and Resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this Conference, and a copy furnished the Pastors of the Baptist and Presbyterian churches; and the Editors of the Union Springs Gazette, and the New Orleans Christian Advocate, with the request that they publish them in their respective journals.

A true extract from the Minutes.

J. W. LANEY, P. E.

RICHARD H. POWELL, Rec. Steward.

LITERARY NOTICES.

LIFE AMONG THE CHOCTAW INDIANS, and Sketches of the South-West. By Henry C. Benson, A. M., of the California Conference. With an introduction by Rev. T. A. Morris, D. D. Senior Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North.) Cincinnati: Published by Wormstedt & Poe. 1860.

This book is the result of the writer's missionary life and labors among the Indian tribes of the South-west. Having just read the life of Gen. Sam. Dale, by Col. Claiborne, where Indian character is described by a Southern man and a citizen, who spent his life among them, we were glad of the opportunity to read an account from a Northern man and a preacher, who had been sent among them. It is a book of interesting sketches. But the "dead fly" is in the "ointment." The South is looked upon with an unfriendly eye.

From the New York Book Concern.

We are indebted to Carlton and Porter, Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) for the handsomest collection of children's and Sunday School books we have seen. The illustrated "Alphabet," the "Twelve Illustrated Story Books for Boys and Girls," about two dozen pages each, and the "Pretty Little Library," of ten books, price $1.00, are exceedingly beautiful. The first, with illustrated paper covers, in strong colors, is a marvel of ingenious arrangement to attract children. The second, bound in crimson muslin, is equally so. Nothing is more attractive to children than such colored books, with charming little stories and pictures. Carlton and Porter deserve credit of their country and their times for the improvements they are making in Sunday School literature, and Sunday School art—shall we call it?

Then we have "The Arbor"—"Little Muy"—"The Christmas Party"—"Hannah Lee"—"What Norman Saw in the West"—"Gerald and his friend Phillip"—"Girls at School"—"Old Jonas"—"Widow Davis"—"Myra"—"Bible Pictures"—"Little Joe Ashton"—"Miles Lawson"—"Stories in Verse"—"Sylvia Austin"—"Willie Trying to be Manly"—Willie's Lessons"—"Willie Trying to be Thorough"—"Willie Trying to be Useful." These are larger than those first named, and have pictures.

Then we have the "Sunday School Manual"—the "Sunday School Almanac"—"Methodist Almanac for 1860"—a sermon on the "Itinerant Ministry" by Rev. S. H. Clements—the "Minutes of the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) for 1859"—all in paper.

Then we have some larger books—the "Young Pilgrims"—"Inside Views of Methodism"—"The True Evangelist," by Dr. Porter—"My Sister Margaret," a temperance story, by Mrs. C. M. Edwards, with illustrations—"The Christian Lawyer," being a Portraiture of the Life and Character of William George Baker, a book for the times. Last, we have a book which we are glad to get, and which every body ought to have—"The Pronouncing Bible"—an elegantly printed book, in which the pronunciation of all the proper names is given. We shall notice some of these books again.

The Minutes of the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE, which we have just received, show a net increase of 3000 in Church-membership. More than $27,000 was raised for missions, about $5,300 for superannuated preachers, and nearly $2,800 Sunday-schools.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

ADVERTISING IN THE ADVOCATE.

The business public are slowly learning that the Advocate is THE GREAT ADVERTISING PAPER OF THE SOUTH AND WEST. Advertisements in it are more valuable than in any half dozen other papers.

1.—It has the largest circulation west of Charleston, and South of Cincinnati; larger than any other two weeklies in New Orleans, and is increasing rapidly—will, in a few years, double its present circulation.

2.—Of medium size, and not crowded with advertisements, an advertisement is not lost in it, but can be easily found.

3.—In our "Editorial Notices," which we give to every advertisement, we specify the page and column on which an advertisement may be found. We seek to make every advertisement valuable to the advertiser and to the paper.

4.—The circulation is spread out over Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, principally; Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas, partially.

5.—It is the only weekly of large and widely spread circulation in the great and growing metropolis of the South.

DERBY & JACKSON.—These well known and worthy publishers advertise in the fifth column of third page, several works—Rev. C. W. Thomas, "West Coast of Africa;" "Wild Sports of the South;" "Beulah;" Milburn's "Ten Years of Preacher-Life;" The "Fool of Quality;" "The Methodist."

M'LEAN'S STRENGTHENING CORDIAL.—On the fourth page sixth column, will be found the advertisement of the above medicine. It is pleasant to take, and has a wide reputation. Read the advertisement.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.—In the fifth column of the third page, will be found another advertisement of these celebrated machines, to which we wish to call attention.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

EUFAULA DISTRICT.—Rev. W. J. Laney writes: I have commenced the first round on my district. Congregations good; great attention to the Word preached; the preachers at their work in fine spirits; several Parsonages have been built, and bought, and furnished; the ministers of Jesus Christ are being made comfortable and happy. I expect to give all my missions to colored people a two days' meeting; these meetings are gladly hailed by the patrons. Eufaula is improving rapidly; worthy citizens are coming in; some due acquisitions to the Methodist Episcopal Church; quite a number of good buildings going up; business greatly on the increase. What is to hinder this from being a considerable city—the prettiest location in the State, and the healthiest? None more moral. A fine female college.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

DEDICATION.—Rev. J. J. Clark writes us that the new church at Palmyra was dedicated January 29th, sermon by Rev. Wm. H. Watkins, D.D. Three persons joined the Church. Beautiful for situation, capacious and comfortable, is the Parsonage, hard by, now being built. Another "home of the evangelists!" The land is being beautified by them. Bro. Clark sends three new subscribers.

NEW ORLEANS, OPELOUSAS, AND GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD.

The eighth annual report to the stockholders of the New Orleans, Opelousas, and Great Western Railroad Company, shows the enterprise to be in a progressive condition. The earnings of the road steadily increase, though the business is yet limited to the eighty miles of finished track between Algiers and Berwick's Bay. The receipts for about ten months were $370,062 86. A loss of nearly two months business was caused by a crevasse on Bayou Lafourche, but for which the earnings would have amounted to near $450,000. The track has been raised, and the road secured against crevasses in future. The bonds of the Company issued in June, 1857, have been cancelled, and a new issue made, payable in thirty years, three hundred and fifty of which had been sold up to December 31st, 1859, and a much larger amount would have been disposed of but for the European war.

The company has determined to sell such of their Gretna property as is not required for business purposes, to pay off a mortgage loan thereon of $25,000, and the floating debt is in process of rapid reduction. On the 31st of Dec., 1857, the floating debt was $723,000, and at the date of this report it is but $205,000, and it will be materially reduced in February instant. When the floating debt is paid off, there will remain resources sufficient to complete the road to Opelousas. A contract has already been made for the embankment over the swamp and marsh west of Berwick's Bay, and the company has determined on the purchasing of negroes for carrying on the construction between Opelousas and New Iberia. An estimate of the cost of continuing the road to Opelousas, and thence to Texas, shows that the road can be built to the Sabine with the proceeds of the land donated by Congress, and the bonds paid from its earnings. In this case the road of 258 miles in length, and worth, at a low valuation, six and a half millions of dollars, becomes the property of the stockholders, while the cost of them will have been only three and a half millions, for it is estimated that the land will produce from two to three millions. Eighty-six thousand acres of these lands, of great value, need but great request, will be secured on the road reaching Opelousas, and the sales will, in all probability, exceed the estimate.

The report directs attention to Pine Prairie, about twenty-five miles beyond Opelousas, as a point of vast importance, for on reaching it a branch of twenty miles would connect with a road now in operation from Alexandria. It will place the thriving planting population of Red River valley in daily communication with New Orleans. It will relieve them of the changeful mood of Red River.

OUR SILVER TRADE WITH MEXICO.—Speaking of Mexico, the New York Times says in the article of silver alone, the energy displayed by our adventurous countrymen in that quarter of the world, and the hope of just such a consummation as Mr. McLane has now achieved, have given an enormous impulse to our importation from Mexico during the last two years. In the year ending June 30, 1856, our imports of silver from Mexico reached, all told the sum of $2,678,000. In the year ending June 30, 1857, they amounted $4,822,060. They are still increasing. On Staten Island, and other points along our Atlantic coast, great smelting works are even now busy with the Mexican metal; and as the annual shipments of silver to England from Mexico, illegal and legal, have amounted to more than $20,000,000, it is evidently quite reasonable to anticipate that at no distant date our silver trade alone with Mexico, under proper conditions and care, will equal, if not exceed, in value our golden traffic with California itself.

DR. MACKENZIE, of the Philadelphia Press, says that James, the novelist, intends quitting his present diplomatic post, Venice, and returning to his old one, of British Consul, Richmond, Va.

THE CARDINAL VICAR OF ROME has issued an edict forbidding ladies to go to church in crinoline. The confessor is to forbid them to present themselves at the altar to take the sacrament, unless they are dressed in a simple manner.

RECEIPTS, BY THE POST-OFFICE, From February 14 to February 21, 1860.

A—M S Andrews, $2.
B—J D Barbee, $1 50.
C—H Carlin, $5; J Coon, $15.
E—W A Edwards, $2; Everett & Midgett, $2.
F—F G Ferguson, $5.
G—W F Garnett, $2.
H—R T Hennington, $5; H J Harris, $5; C J Halbeug, $10.
J—H F Johnson, $10.
L—J A Lundy, $3 75; J J Ludlow, $5.
M—A M'Bryde, $2; J H Massey, $5 25; W G Millsapps, $5; W A Montgomery, $2.
N—J Nicholson, $5; E B Norton, $4; J E Newman, $5.
P—L P Peacock, $5.
R—T Y Ramsay, $12; J Roberts, $8.
S—J C Stricklin, $2; J W Solomon, $7; F W Sharbrough, $5.
T—W R Talley, $4.
W—L M Wilson, $1; A West, $4.

COMMERCIAL.

MONDAY EVENING, February 20th, 1860.

We condense the following statement from the New Orleans Price Current of the 18th instant:—

Our market generally has worn a rather heavy appearance during the past week, though in some descriptions of produce a fair amount of business has followed a reduction in the rates. In Cotton the operations have been on a moderate scale with prices in favor of buyers, while in Sugar we have noticed a more active movement at a considerable decline. Tobacco has arrived more freely and we notice a slightly increased business. The movement and variations in Western Produce will be found detailed below.

COTTON.—With respect to prices, we have to remark that they have been quite irregular, and still more in favor of buyers for the grades below strict Middling, though most of the transactions have been within the range of our quotations.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 1,645,715 bales, against 1,339,872 bales to same date last year, and the increase of the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 638,794 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 512,757 bales to Great Britain, and of 69,343 to France, while to other foreign ports there is a decrease of 32,165 bales.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	6 @ 7	Good Middling	11¾@12
Ordinary	7½@ 8¾	Middling Fair	12¾@12¾
Good Ordinary	8¾@ 9¾	Fair	—@—
Low Middling	10 @10¾	Good Fair	—@—
Middling	10¾@11¾	Good and Fine	—@—

SUGAR.—The sales of the week amount to 2500 hhds. We quote for Inferior and Refining 3¼ to 5; Common to Good Common 5¼ to 6¼; Fair to Fully Fair 7 to 7¾; Prime to Choice 8 to 8¾; Centrifugal and Clarified 6¼ to 9¼ cents per pound. The above quotations apply to round lots, but small orders of 5 hhds and under, could not be filled without paying a further advance of ¼ to ¼c per pound.

MOLASSES.—Total receipts of the week 10,000 barrels. The prices obtained during the week were: Inferior to Fair, 32 to 38 cents per gallon; and Prime to Choice, 39 to 40½ cents; half barrels, 38 to 45 cents per gallon.

FLOUR.—About 6,000 bbls have been sold during the past week, at from $6 00 to $6 25 for superfine, $6 25 to 7 00 for ordinary to good extra, and $6 75 to $7 50 per bbl. for choice extra brands.

GRAIN.—The receipts of Corn continue light. About 13,000 sacks have been sold at from $0 75 to 0 85 for ordinary, and 90c to 95c per bushel for good to prime St. Louis. Bran sells at $1 60 to $1 75 for ordinary to choice lots. Wheat sells at $1 15 per bushel for prime red.

PORK.—The principal sales reported through the week were at $17 75 to $18 50 per bbl. for Mess.

BEEF.—We quote Prime Mess at $14 00 per bbl. for extra brands.

BACON.—Shoulders 8½ to 9; Ribbed Sides 10 to 10½; Clear Sides 11 to 11½; Sugar-cured Hams 12 to 12½ cents per pound.

LARD.—We quote 10 to 10½c for prime to choice prime, in tcs., and 12½ to 13c for kegs.

BUTTER.—Western generally selling at 14 to 18 cents per pound, according to quality; and Cheese 9 to 9½c.

BAGGING AND BALE ROPE.—We quote Kentucky Bagging at 13 to 15 cents per yard; India Bagging, 11½ to 12½c; Hemp Rope, hand spun, 7¾ to 8¼, and machine made, 8½ to 8¾ cents per pound.

GUNNY BAGS.—Limited parcels sell at 10 cents for light and 11 to 11½c. to heavy and extra heavy bags.

COFFEE.—We quote fair at 11 to 11¼, and prime at 12½c. per pound.

LIVE STOCK.—Beef Cattle—Western, 7 to 9c, per lb. nt; Texas—ordinary to fair $15 to 16, and choice $20 to 30 per head.

Hogs, selling at 7 to 8½c. per pound net.

Sheep—Selling at $3 50 to $4 00 per head.

Veal Cattle—Selling at $8 00 to $11 00 per head.

Milch Cows—Dull, at $30 to $35 per head.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

NOTICE.—Persons having business with the NEW ORLEANS DEPOSITORY, will please direct to KEENER & PARKER.

Sunday School Convention of the Mississippi Conference.

The Committee of Conference has fixed upon Wednesday, the 9th of May as the time, and Vicksburg as the place, of meeting.

All Ministers of the Gospel, and all Superintendents and Teachers of Sunday Schools, are invited to attend. Presiding Elders in the bounds of our Conference will please urge each Sunday School in their bounds to send one delegate to the Convention.

H. JONES, Sec. of Committee.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

The new Methodist Episcopal Church, at New Iberia, La., will be dedicated to the service of Almighty God on the third Sunday (18th) in March next.

Dedicatory Sermon by Rev. J. H. Walker, D.D., of New Orleans.

T. R. WHITE, Pastor.

New Iberia, La., Feb. 15, 1860.

SITUATION WANTED.

A YOUNG LADY, a successful and experienced Teacher of Music, French, and the English branches—having taught for years, North and South—desires a situation as Principal of a Female Seminary, or as head of the Music Department. Good salary expected. Address Rev. C. C. Gillespie, New Orleans, who will forward communications.

A SOUTHERN LADY, competent to teach the English branches and Music, wants a situation either in a family or a school.—For particulars apply at this office.

ALABAMA DEPOSITORY.

No. 11 Water Street, Mobile, Alabama.

The notes given to the Alabama Book and Tract Society are in my possession; many of them are now due. Shareholders whose notes are due, will confer a great favor by paying the same at once.

Those entitled to the Genealogical Bible can get it on application at the Depository in Mobile. When ordering it by steam boat or railroad, please remit $1 to pay expenses.

JOHN F. EARLY, AGENT.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Greenville Dist.—Second Round Quarterly Meetings.

March—Upper Deer Creek, 4th; Middle Deer Creek, 11th; Lower Deer Creek, 17th and 18th; Greenville colored mission, 25th.

April—Tallula, 1st; American Bend, 7th and 8th; Rolivar, 14th and 15th; Greenville 21st and 22d; Duncan Plantations, 28th and 29th.

May—Sunflower, 5th and 6th.

Preachers' Meeting, third Wednesday in March, at Greenville.

WM. B. HINES, P. E.

THE MINUTES OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE are now ready at Vicksburg. Members of the Conference will address Rev. Geo. H. Clinton, stating number desired, and how they must be sent.

THE THOMPSON FUND.—Rev.

FEBRUARY 22, 1860.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Children's Column.

BIBLE PICTURES.—NO. II. BY THE EDITOR.

Light.

Last week we talked about CHAOS. This week we will talk about LIGHT. Light is that which enables us to see. Where there is no light, it is utter darkness. It is the light that makes the business day. It is the absence of light that makes the darkness and the night. Light is something—a real substance; darkness is nothing—it is only the absence of light. If there were no light, we could never see the beautiful blue sky, nor the bright shining stars, nor the sweet green leaves and fragrant flowers. We could not see each other's faces. The birds would never sing. Little children could not see to play. They would never laugh and shout. They would sleep, or mope gloomily about. Indeed, we should all die, and so would every living thing. Light is a part of our very life. When we have had light enough for sufficient work and play at one time, God takes it away, and gives us the dark and quiet night to sleep in, and rest our bodies; and then, when we have slept enough, he sends the light back again to wake us, and tell us to get up, and go about our daily duty. What a wise, and good, and happy arrangement that is! God said, on the first day of the world, "Let there be light, and there was light. And God saw that the light was good; and God divided the light from the darkness." What a glorious thing that first morning must have been! Do you remember that God sends you the light of every day? It is a great beauty and a great blessing.

CAPT. BLOWHARD'S STORY.

A Good Father.

I remember as well as if it was yesterday the night my father, tired out at last, settled I should go to sea. His had set me to learn Gray's Elegy for swinging myself from one poplar-tree to another by a rope, and then fighting Bogy Griffin, the bully of the village, for saying I wasn't fit even for a powder-monkey on board the Lord Mayor's barge. I had been reading a book of voyages, and gone to bed so full of them, that I lay awake fancying I heard, in every beagh that shook at the window, a shot snap or a mast go by the board. I was still awake when my poor father came up, as he always did the last thing, to put by his papers for the night. I heard him go into his study, stop a few minutes, then come out as usual, composedly lock the door, walk twenty yards down the corridor, then go back—unlock the room, look in nervously to see there was no fire, again relock it—and go down stairs. This time, to my astonishment, however, he had not descended three steps before he came back toward my room; his hand was on the lock—he was in. I can now see his grave, formal face, keeping down all rebellious emotions as he came through the slant moonbeams and stood by my bed. "Tom," says he, gravely, "you have always been longing to go to sea. Now you're going." I left your mother all in tears, packing your things down stairs. You go to-morrow aboard coach, that will be at the Bernt Ash Turnpike at ten o'clock. May my poor prayers avert the evil that sometimes falls on disobedient children. Good-night. God bless you."

The Farewell.

He was gone! I put my head under the sheet, and blebbered like a young whale that is cutting his wisdom teeth. I fell asleep just as the sky was getting gray, awoke with a shiver two hours after, dressed, and went down stairs. I gulped down a mouthful or two of breakfast, and was ready to take my father's hand to walk to the turnpike a full hour before there was any occasion. The weather looked dirty behind me as I left mother and sisters in tears, and tried to look like a man, but I comforted myself with my new navy jacket, blue and glossy, and smelling of the wool. Presently the Stroud coach came flashing in sight. My father—"sir" I always called him—pressed my hand, whispered in my ear, as advice for my behavior at Bristol, where I was to join my ship. "Take care of crimps and ring-droppers," said he, as he drew me to him, and gently pushed me off. Away we went. Sober John the coachman kept up his steady and safe pace of four miles an hour, to the great derision of some wild young bloods who passed us, bound for the covert. My father's foreboding about a disobedient son made me cry for a night or two, but I soon forgot it.

An Old Hag.

Not any thing happened to me at Bristol worth recording; for I was all day in the counting-house, making out lists of sugar casks and rum-puncheons—the cargo of a West Indian vessel, that the merchants to whom my ship belonged had just received from Sierra Leone, and which work he kept me at, kindly, to prevent my being taken by a press-gang, or getting into any other mischief. It was one day that I was walking round Queen Square—whose deserted splendor inspired me, and where I got the sailors, for small treats of grog, to tell me all the horrors of the late riots: how they had seen men floating about screaming in the watery lanes of lead on the top of the porticoes; and how they had seen dragoons slice off a thief's head at a single hack cut—I was idling along one of the quays, looking at the ruined and tumbled-down houses, when an old negro woman, frightfully ugly, and scrunched up in a heap between two sugar casks, fixed her eye on me, and asked me for alms. "Gib hum something for de lub ob de Lord," she mumbled, holding out her black cup of a hand. I looked at her, whistling and making fun of the old wretch. She was a batt of the river-side taverns. I asked her if she could give me change for a five-pound note. I saw her mouth twitch, and her eyes work. I had heard she was epileptic; and, before I could speak, she fumbled in the ragged bosom of her gown, and pulled out what looked like the white skull of a snake, with dry grass wrapped round it. "Do you see dat," she said. "Dat is my fetish—fever fetish; has been in this hands forty year, ever since I left Brass River. You have been and broken your father's heart, and now you will pay for it, my little picaninny—burn mad rot you!" I moved on whistling "Up with the Jolly Roger," and thought no more of it till I got to Mangrove River. Then I began to remember what she had said.

The Voyage.

We had a pleasant voyage out. Went first to Bonny River for oil, then to Old Calabar for ivory. Every thing went well. The captain was stern, but kind. The first mate made a pet of me, and turned schoolmaster, keeping me at quadrant and observation making, so that I got on, to the astonishment of the ship. The first week out, I had learned by name every rope and spar in the vessel; and, as for climbing pranks to the cross-trees, I cared no more for the mast-head than a squirrel for a high bough. Every thing went well. We had made a quick passage out—fair wind and good weather. The cash came in. We sold half our powder, all our beads and muskets, and had already stowed away enough oil and tusks to pay a handsome profit on the voyage. We had seen nothing of pirates or slavers, and were as snug and healthy as if we had been lying in the Bristol Docks, or at Portshead, waiting for a wind. We arrived at Mangrove River the day before we had expected, to lay in some hard wood, just to fill up the hold. I was proud of my ship, and happy as a king. I bought a red and gray parrot at Cape Coast for my sister Kate, and I now began to think of dear Gloucestershire and home.

Evil Signs.

One or two of us, however, had a sort of feverish cold, which the captain laughed at, and called a "seasoning;" and, except rubbing the decks now and then with dry sand, we laughed at all the croaking stories of our supercargo about the African climate. The cook, who had once lived on the Nun River, said, with a sort of grumbling regret at his prophecies not coming true, that even Africa wasn't what it used to be. I really believe that he would have liked to have seen just one or two of us with a shot tied to our heels, to prove he knew more about fever than we did. The doctor, who was writing a book on "Seamen," and unfortunately, while making an experiment on himself, knocked down by the sun (who did not like being met at defiance, even by a doctor), grew delirious, and was obliged to be lashed in his hammock. This was the only drawback on the universal good temper of every one on board. The cook sulked a little, and used to go about looking at the sky, and muttering; but as his moodiness only showed itself in getting out on the bowsprit in royal solitude, and scouring a favorite stew-pan, he offended no one. The captain was in a dancing state of delight, and swore, if the old vessel ever was broken up in his lifetime, he would buy her figure-head, to put in his garden at Lower Easton. I used to go on shore to shoot parrots, or get a cat at a hippopotamus; and, what with that and the flute, and learning all the sail-maker's knots and my trigonometry, I was pretty well occupied.

Mangrove River.

How well I remember that river, turning the sea to a slab green color at its mouth, and narrowing to mangrove creeks and jungly ditches, as it muddied the bright, blue, crisp water that I had learned to love as so safe and so sure a sign of the deep sea! 'Twas up this fatal river—not green and transparent yellow, but brown and sewer like—that we lay, some way from the bar, where there was always a trembling line of fruits; near the ruins of an old Portuguese fort, which some husky dwarf palms, dry and bloodless, crowed over, and some three miles from the negro village where we got our hard-wood cutters from. The heat was that of a furnace-door when you throw it open suddenly, and shut your eyes as the great tongues of fire lick out savagely and blindingly. The low morass banks were without a tree, and covered with thick jungle of palm and mangrove. No sound came from them but the mournful shriek or bellow of some unknown amphibious bird or beast. The wild cocoa on the banks, too, had a way of tossing and heaving, apparently without a cause; but—except for four hours in the evening, when the negro king came to us for rum, or the workmen brought us wood—we saw no living creature, so that we got dull and satiated with incessant steaming sleep, and eager as children for a holiday to get home.

"All Doomed."

One day the negro king, a magnificent potentate, with a fish-skinner for a breastplate, and a tripla turn of old hat, came in state, followed by a retinue of greasy rascals with spears, to warn us of the hot season that would begin in a few days. The captain winked at us, and said that if it rained brimstone he was not going to trip anchor till he had got all his hard wood on board. He knew all their tricks. They had got all the presents out of us, and now they wanted to save their trouble with the wood and get us off. Words ensued between the king and the captain, ending with the captain kicking the king into his boat, and one of our men getting wounded in the hip with a spear—rather a troublesome thing; for the wound wanted probing, and when we went in the doctor, he only raved and wallowed about, and said, "we were all doomed." He indeed kept steaming throughout the night, "All doomed!"

The next day no negro came near us, and, we got anxious; but the captain said the voyage had been a good one; there was no hurry, and he should wait if it was three weeks, but season or no hot season, for he wasn't going to be cheated by a set of niggers. That was Tuesday. Wednesday, when I got up an hour before daylight for my watch, I found a hot steaming fog choking up the river—fog that made you cough involuntarily. I felt as sick as I was in my first gale of wind; and, to my surprise, when I looked round, I saw the cook holding his nose, and pulling a longer face than usual.

"What church-yard are you last from?" I said:

"I think," said he, "I could tell you better what churchyard I am going to—and more of us."

Upon this we fell to words, and I declared I would report him to the captain; for, in those young days, like all youngsters I stood very much on my dignity, having nothing else to stand upon in fact.

"Pipe away," says he; "but cap'en has just turned in."

"Not well?" said I.

"Not well," echoed the sulky fellow, looking at me from under his eyes with, I thought, more pity than vexation.

"Why are all doomed?" roared the doctor from his hammock.

"And that's about it," said the cook, grumbling off to get on the bowsprit to scour his stew-pan.

The African Fever.

Every day came that mist, passing into a warm dropping dew as the sun broke out like a swift, red-hot 24-pounder through the winks of fading stars. Then followed the long, long, burning, dull day; then night, and the low creeping death-mist and its warm strangling vapor over again. The doctor got worse and worse, and when I went in one morning to see if I could get from him some advice about the captain's fever, found him, with clenched teeth, trying still feebly to repeat the words, "All—doomed." A short interval of feeble sanity came on; the man raged to raise himself le bed, and point to a certain drawer in his medicine-chest. I touched the two first keobs, and he shook his head. I touched the third, and he smiled, grasped out something, fell back, and died.

When I opened the drawer I found a paper labelled Peruvian Bark, a great antidote for such fevers as were now smouldering through the ship; but, unluckily, the rats and cock-roaches had got at it, and not more than two tablespoonfuls were left. I, whom they all looked up to because I had some book-learning, divided this among the men; for the captain refused to take any and said I wanted to poison him and to sell the ship to the nigger king. His mind wandered through weakness; and he seldom came on deck; sleepleg much, and, I am afraid, drieking, no one daring to stop him.

There was no doubt now that we had the fever. Five were down. The cook first fell ill; then the boatswain, who died positively of sheer fright. Still we dared not turn the ship homeward while the lading was unfinished. The work went on very languidly; for now seven of the best hands were ill, and the negroes sent as fewer men than before. The sailors were sulky, frightened, and quarrelsome; and I think, if the fever had not spread like a devouring fire, every morning claiming some fresh victim, that they would have either broken into the spirit-room, or seized the ship and steered home. One day the negroes took alarm. I thought they would. They wormed the fever-secret out of a drunken sailor by giving him some gold-dust.—One of them raised his paddle as a signal, and suddeely dropping their burdens, the rest leeped into their canoes, and paddled away up the river. They never came near us again; and the drunken sailor firing a pistol after them did not improve matters. That night the captain was found dead in his cabin, his arm resting on a letter begiening, "Officers and men, I implore—"

Death and Solitude.

But how can I bear to recall that horrible time? One by one every man sickeeed. Some, while aloft, fell down pale and trembling. Others while at table; others while on watch; others at the galley fire; others were taken in their hammocks: all the same symptoms—fever, cramp, coevulsions, and death. The cook died. Then I thought of my father's words and the old negro woman. Some died grappling and screaming, as if death were a real visible being that could be threateeed and driven away; others weet as to a sleep, with prayer and moan; oee, a boy, talking of green fields and primrose meadows; otherewith alleslons to crime and sin. One by one they passed away, till the horrid coevietion came over me that I should be left aloee in the ship to die of the fever, unpitied and aloee. I was, however, still just stroeg enough to drag the last poor fellow to the side, and push him overbonrd in the clothes that he had just died in.

Oh! how horrible the loneliness of that first night, as the shadows of the palms stretched across the vessel, like the black feelers of some devilish ereature groping for its prey! The fire of sunset died ont over the swamps and jungles, and the vessel grew dark. Mosquitoes spread in clouds, as if they had been bred from dead bodies. The bar sneeded louder. The beasts on shore howled as if impatieet at lingering life. The loeg white vapors stole toward me like ghostly snakes. Heaven knows how my brain escaped, but I suppose the hope of life saved my reason. I went to all the berths where the men had died that I might catch the disease. I headled the spokes of the wheel. I climbed aloft. I threw myself into a hammock: I pet on the doctor's clothes. I threw myself into the captain's chair. I fell on my kneen in the lonely cabin, and prayed for forgiveness, for disobeying my father and insulting the wretchedness of the aged and miserable negro woman. I also prayed passionately for death.

A Horrible Week.

I passed a week thus—such a week as a sane man rajustly confieed in a med-hone may speed. I eeed to go aed sit aloft, lookieg ep the river for the nerro boat. Sometimes my reasoe seemed to wander, and I fancied the dead men were thrusting their heade up roend the ship, and cursing me as the brieger of evil to the ship. Sometimes I fancied I heard voices in the cabins, or could see shadows pacieg at the watch or turning the wheel. Sometimes I fancied the vessel locked ie a sea of corpses, though I had by tremendous efforts set every stitch of sail, ie hopes that it might serve as algnals, and be seee by some waedering benter of the hippopotamus from the shore. Thee the planks would appear covered with the doctor's words, "All doomed;" and thousande of black beggar-wnmeu's hands would be held up before my eyes, ready for that alms I had refused.—I must have been on the very verge of madeess—yet between madness and death—and stood unharmed.

I remember as if it was yesterday how weak I became with this dreadful stroggle of fear and hope, superstition and repeetaece. One day, a vulture, attracted by the smell of death, after hovering round the vessel for nearly an hour, alighted on the mast—a grim omee of death and doom. At any other time I should have been startled at so ghastly a proof of the silence and desolation of my vessel; but now I spread food on the deck, in half hnaee hopes to tame and win this grisly pursuer of corruption; and when at last the filthy bird stretched ont its sleggish wiegs, and slowly staggered to the shore, I fell on my face and wept that every living thieg should desert me. Yet, all this time, though muskets and powder were in the ship, thank God I kept some hope, ain I never once even thought of suicide.

If there had been one living thieg to rest my heart oe, this dreadful suspense had been more tolerable. I used to spend many hoers a day listlessly angling over the ship's side, just to while away the hours, and yet keep a bright look-out up the river and over the bar. One day I caught a large mud-fish—a sort of pig-fish—that was so heavy I could hardly draw it up; but I did at last, taking care not to teav his mouth in getting the hook out. I turned it into a large tub, which I filled with the brackish water, and at nnce decided to make a pet of him. I grew as fond of this monster in two days as if it had been a brother; and I really used to think that those fat glazed eyes grew brighter when I came townrd the tub the first thieg in the morning with food. But every thing hut myself aeemed cursed; for on the Thursday (the last men died Monday), when I got up and ran to play with my favorite, I found it dead and ewollen, floating on the top of the water. Oh! those weary hoers I waited, watchieg that hot mist burn away to a fiery-qulveriog horizon, hemmed in with bloodless palme and jungle.

But I had forgotten the most horrid night—it was to see the alligators round the vessel the third day, when some of the bodies I had thrown overboard began to float, fighting for them, and tearing them to shreds with their huge, saw-like teeth, and their glaring eyes, that I fancied turned up mockingly at me. There was something so devilish and horribly ferocious in their snapping and gnashieg fight, their tiger rush, and their plunging races as every fragmeet disappeared; and though it lasted but a few minutes—for the river was dark with them; you could have walked on shore on their backs—it drave me nearly mad: had it lasted longer I think it would have killed me.

But I must cut my tale short. Suffice it to say that the negro king at last sent down a boat to me to propose peace; gained courage at findieg me still alive; and, after much diplomecy, threats, entreaties, and presents, put a negro crew on board to take the vessel to Baragoon, where I got assistance from the coesul. I reached England, and was at once promoted. You may be aure I asked for that fetish woman when I got back to Bristol, and curiously enough (you will call it a sailor's superstition), I was told she died the very day our first man was taken ill le Mangrove River. We of this age are deeeed clever, but I don't think, in spite of The Times and the "Electric Telegraph, that we have got to the bottom of every thieg.—From Thornbury's "Life in Spain."

Obituaries:

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

DR. JOSHUA WEST departed this life at his residence near Montevallo, Shelby county, Alabama, oe Sunday, 8th January, 1860. He was born in Rockingham county, Virginia, in 1771. While a youth, he moved with hie parents, and settled in Green River county, Vn. Here, and before he was nineteen years of age, a preacher traveling through the country called at his father's house, and asked for permission to preach, which was graeted. Dr. West was convieted under his first sermon, and on his second roued, four weeks afterwards, joined the church as a seeker of religion, and was himself the final person he ever saw joie the church; his mother and sister joined the same day. In a few weeks after Dr. West was converted, he commeneed family prayer in his father's house. A society was formed, and he was appointed class-leader, nud also licensed to exhort.—About this time Dr. West was sorely tempted; he did not dnubt his conversion, but was tempted to believe that he could not remain faithful; that he would backslide. He resorted to prayer for aid and direction, and while in the posture and exercise of prayer he became unconscious, in which condition he remained for several houre. In the eveniu, of that day he found himself shouting at the top of his voice; the tempter was gone, and he had gained a victory over this temptation for life.

In the twenty-first year of Dr. West's life, he was licensed to preach. As a matter of interest, and as a specimen of the olden times, we will give a copy of his license: "This may certify to whom it may concern, that Joshua West is permitted as a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Given nnder my hand this 17th day of October, 1702.—Bennet Massey, E. M. E. C."

On the 17th day of October, 1800, Dr. West was ordained Deacon. On the 20th day of October, 1813, he was ordained Elder. Both these solemn and important rites in the church he received at the hands of Bishop Asbury. Did space allow, we would give copies of his credentials both as deacon and as elder—they are both preserved, and have the signature of Bishop Asbury.

In the year 1793 Dr. West was married to Hannah Prentice, who was his beloved companion for eear sixty years. In 1794 Dr. West settled near his wife's parents le Sevier county, Tenn., where he resided up to the latter part of the year 1817. While he resided in Tennessee he was, for a time, the traveling companion of Bishop Asbury; and one year he ltinerated, traveling the Dandridge circuit.

In the year 1811 Dr. West was licensed to practice medicine, in which profession he was skilful and useful, and by which he made a competency for life.

The latter part of 1817, or first of 1818, Dr. West removed and settled near Montevallo, Shelby county, Ala., in which neighborhood he resided up to the time of his death, except a few years he resided at Centreville, Bibb enunty, Ala. Dr. W., through a long and eventful life, preached much; no one in the local ranks, perhaps, has preached more, or administered the sacrameets and ordinances of the church oftener. The administration of the Lord's supper, the administration of the ordinance of baptism (always by pouring or sprinkling, and never by immersion), preaching funeral sermons, prayer and praise, were his happy vocation fur more than half a century.

Dr. West was never embarrassed by debts; was ever in court or in law, except he acted on the defensive in one small lawsuit. Having promised his God if he would make him a useful preacher, that he would ask or receive no other distinction, he would never accept political office, though often solicited. He did not nur would not, at any time, receive pecuniary aid from the church. His energy and integrity kept him independent of the wants of this world. Dr. West was a true Methodist. He remarked to Rev. J. W. Starr, at Meed Town Camp-meeting, last fall, that he never had doubted the correctness of the doctrine he had preached. In another conversation with the writer hereof, he stated that after his death he wanted it eegraved on his tombstone, that he died a firm believer in every one of the doctrines of the Methodist Church. Faithful friends will see that this is done.

Several years ago Dr. West had a long and severe attack of pneumonia. Since then he has been subject occasionally to epilepsy. When these attacks were upon him, his mind was more or less affected; and it is remarkable that, however forgetful or indifferent he might be on all other subjects and pursuits (even his meals), he never forgut or neglected his prayers. True to this duty, at his stated hours, secret or public, it was neglected at no time, nor under any circumstances, if he was able to perform it. As all who knew him will readily conclude, even without inquiry or a statement from us, Dr. West died as he had lived—a man of faith, and his works do follow him. The lights of eternity alone will reveal the measure of his usefulness. Dr. West so requested it, and is interred by the side of his companion, in the country near Montevallo.

J. M. M'CLANAHAN.

Shelby Co., Ala., Feb. 9, 1860.

☞ Nashville Advocate please copy.

AGNES HANNA, wife of Rev. A. T. Simmone, departed this life in West Feliciana, Louisiana, Jan. 5th, 1860. Born in Sumner county, Tennessee, March 7th, 1791; she married, April 21st, 1808, the Rev. Samuel Sellers, one of the most useful and popular preachers of the Mississippi Conference, in its earlier times. After the death of Mr. Sellers, in 1822, the widow struggled in bereavement, though in earnest Christian faith, for about eleven years, rearing her two little daughters in that "fear and nurture" which has blessed society with two noble women, to-day, witnesses of pious maternity.

Mrs. Sellers was united in marriage to Rev. A. T. Simmone, August 22d, 1833. Dulty of sympathy in thought, feeling and purpose, made this a couple happy indeed—a household more hospitable, cheerful, and religiously exemplary, it has never been our lot to enter. But Death's minister—disease of the heart—came. She suffered greatly for three years, but for the last six months previous to her death, beyned description. Through suffering made perfect, the spirit departed to the home of the pure and blessed.

As a mother, stepmother, and wife, sister Simmons had no superior. In the relations of friend and neighbor, she was and preserved the love and confidence of all who knew her; and died without an enemy, amid the thronging affections of multitudes of friends. We esteemed and loved none better than Sister Simmoee, and scores of hearts eels back the same sentiment. The writer realizes the loss of one of his best friends, but how many hundreds feel the same lose.

Joining the Methodist Church soon after her first marriage, she continued a Christian exemplar for about 40 years. How many pious deede, earnest, enswered prayers in the long and holy life? A true and devout Christieu, her piety was a living oracle—speaking at the fireside, the class or prayer-meeting, in the Sanctuary, or on the encampment—at all times and places. Her heart was wedded to the Methodist Church, and to it and its charities she often dispensed her liberality with a hand free beyond her means. The Church and Christianity have not a stroeger friend, left.

She has gone! but, ere she departed, left her leguiring husband the comforting assurance, "my hope is in God—I am happy in God; aed oh, how happy I am!" To the ewcet-spirited friend and sister, who, like an angel of mercy, clung to her day aed night, in her last illness, she said: "Sister J——s, the place I am goieg to is eo delightful, I have seen Jesus, and you shall go there too, aed we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

Here is a finished life. She rests from her labors, and her works do follow her. Clad, in compliance with the Apostolic lejenction, with the "whole armor of God," she was able to "withstaed in the evil day, and having done all to staed." The bereaved, aed utterly disonsolate husband weeps, but with the Christian's tears. Lingering hatia few more days in loneliness aed feebleeess, he too shall go, eed join her who awaits him le that home where there is neither sorrow nor parting. The children who rise ep to call her blessed, she being dead, yet by her holy life, invites to "follow her." Ae friends and acquaintances, while we mingle our tears with those of the bereaved, let us, aceleg we have such e witness, press, that we too may gain the race, and enite oer songs aed thenksgivings with hers as in other days on earth, in Him who hath redeemed us, "washed us from our alue le his own blood."

W. H. SCALES.

Jackson, La., Feb. 4th, 1860.

☞ Nashville Advocate please copy.

BENJ. F. JONES, my beloved brother, long the Recording Steward of Fayette Ct. Miss. Conf. died at his residence in Jefferson county, Mississippi, February 6th, 1860, in the fiftieth year of his age. His whole life was ane of unusual innocence, so far as his outward deportment was concerned. From early manhood he filled all the relations of life well. As a Layman in the Methodist Episcopal Church, for near thirty years; his course was more than ordinarily brilliant and useful. For more than twenty years he constantly filled oee, and sometimes two or three of the subordinate offices in the Church, and always very acceptably. He was bever regularly licensed as an exhorter, and yet many of his exhortatiues were good speelmens of gospel preaching. Many of the traveling preachers in the Southwest will alied a teur over the lonely and eelntly man when they see this notice, for he and they were equally at home in each others society. He died of Pneumonia oe the tenth day of his illness, and his end was full of the Christian's faith and hope. Meny of his expressioes of huly confidence and triumph will be cherished by his family and christian brethren to the end of life. This is not a fluel separtiee. I shall meet Hise again my Brother.

J. G. JONES.

Fayette, Mississippi, Feb. 9th, 1860.

PROFESSIONAL.

JAS. J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Livingston, Alabama.
[au24] ☞ Will Practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties.

DR. E. D BEACH, HAVING RESUMED THE practice of Medicine, offers his Professional services to the citizens of New Orleens.

N. B.—Special attention paid to diseases of the RELTUM, PILES, FISTULA IN ANO, ETC.—Fistula in ano permanently cured without the use of the knife, cautery, pain, or confinement whatever. Office No. 6, Baroane street near Canal. ap27.

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY AT LAW, BATON Rouge.
REFERENCES—Heoderson & Galees and Chan & Bolton, New Orleans; W. S. Pike and A. Matta.....Baton Rouge.

B. D. & A. W. ROBERTS, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Floyd, Carroll Parish, Louisiana.
ja19

J. B. FUQUA. J. B. KILBOURNE.
FUQUA & KILBOURNE,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
CLINTON, LOUISIANA,
PRACTICE in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana, East Baton Rouge and St. Helena, and in the Supreme Court at New Orleans.
References—Payne & Harrison, Byrne, Vance & Co., Broadwell & Payne, Pritchard & Flower, Edw. Nalle & Co., Rev. H. N. McTyeire, New Orleans. mar 20-1y

W. P. WINANS. J. T. HEATH
WINANS & HEATH,
Attorneys and Counsellors at Law,
SHREVEPORT, LA.,
Office—Market Street.
Will practice in the courts of Caddo, De Soto, Bossier, Claiborne, and Bienville.

G. SPENCER MAYO,
Attorney at Law,
HARRISONBURG, LA.,
Will practice in the Courts of Catahoula, Concordia, Caldwell and Franklin Parishes.

FALL AND WINTER OF 1859.
SOUTHERN CLOTHING ESTABLISHMENT,
26, 28 and 30 St. Charles Street,
CORNER OF COMMON.
CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS
AT
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
Just received, per late steamers, one of the largest and most magnificent Stocks of Fashionable Fall and Winter Clothing
Ever Brought to the South:
Which, for Style, Material, Workmanship and Cheapness, is not surpassed. Goods are divided into Three Departments, but all under one general view.
Store No. 26 St. Charles street, for Boys' Clothing;
Store No. 28 St. Charles street, for Men's Clothing;
Store No. 30 St. Charles street, for Furnishing Goods and Shirts:
L. W. LYONS,
Nos. 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles street, corner Common st.
Salesmen speak French, Spanish and English. [oc12

BOYS' CLOTHING EMPORIUM:
26.....St. Charles Street.....26
Between Canal and Common Streets.
This Store is exclusively for
YOUTHS', BOYS' AND CHILDREN'S CLOTHING; SHIRTS AND FURNISHING GOODS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
Just opened a large and excellent
Stock of Fall and Winter Dress and School Clothing;
EMBRACING
Every style and quality. All of which will be sold at VERY REASONABLE PRICES
☞ Salesmen speak French, Spanish and English.
L. W. LYONS,
oc12 Nos. 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles street, corner Common st.

SHIRTS! SHIRTS!!
Just received, by late steamers, a large assortment of
SHIRTS OF THE LATEST FASHION,
Of all the various qualities and sizes, White and Colored, Manufactured EXPRESSLY FOR THE NEW ORLEANS CITY TRADE,
To fit Men, Youths, Boys and Children.
L. W. LYONS,
oc12 Nos. 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles street, corner Common st.

Trunks, Traveling-Bags and Valises,
UMBRELLAS, AND WATER-PROOF CLOTHING
Of the best styles and qualities, made to order and warranted.
L. W. LYONS,
oct2 Nos. 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles street, corner Common st.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.
SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.
SAVE THE PIECES!
ECONOMY! DISPATCH!
☞ "A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE."
As accidents will happen, even in well regulated families, it is very desirable to have some cheap and convenient way for repairing Furniture, Toys, Crockery, &c:
SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE
meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. It is always ready, and up to the sticking point. There is no longer a necessity for limping chairs, splintered veneers, headless dolls, and broken cradles. It is just the article for cane, shell, and other ornamental work, so popular with ladies of refinement and taste.
This admirable preparation is used cold, being chemically held in solution, and possessing all the valuable qualities of the best cabinet-makers' Glue. It may be used in the place of ordinary mucilage, being vastly more adhesive.
"USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE."
N.B.—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cents
Wholesale Depot, 48 Cedar-street, New York.
Address HENRY C. SPALDING & Co.
Box No. 3,000, New York.
Put up for dealers in Cases containing four, eight, and twelve dozen—a beautiful Lithographic Show-Card accompanying each package.
☞ A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times its cost annually to every household.
Sold by all prominent Stationers, Druggists, Hardware and Furniture Dealers, Grocers, and Fancy Store
Country merchants should make a note of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE, when making up their list. It will stand any climate.
jan 25 1y

EDUCATIONAL.

DOLBEAR'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
OF THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS,
Founded in 1832—Chartered by the Legislature of Louisiana, with Agricultural and Mechanical Departments—
Capital Stock, $250,000.
In the new and spacious Iron edifice, known as
STORY BUILDING,
South-east corner of Camp and Common Streets,
ENTRANCE ON BOTH STREETS, OPEN DAY AND EVENING.
FACULTY:
RUFUS DOLBEAR, PRESIDENT.
MATHEMATICAL DEPARTMENT.
GEO. E. BRACKETT, Professor.
BOOK KEEPING DEPARTMENT.
RUFUS DOLBEAR, Lecturer.
J. W. BLACKMAN, Professor.
ENGLISH DEPARTMENT.
HON. J. N. CAMERON, A.M., late Sup't Education, La.; Professor and Lecturer on Commercial Law, etc
and M. B. MCCARTHY, Professor.
FRENCH DEPARTMENT.
MARC. ROUX, Professor.
DEPARTMENT FOR PENMANSHIP.
RUFUS DOLBEAR, Lecturer.
J. B. GRIFFITH, Professor.
SPANISH DEPARTMENT.
MANUEL MARINO, Professor.
GERMAN DEPARTMENT.
OEO. GESSNER, Professor.
LATIN AND GREEK DEPARTMENT.
M. MARINO and G. GESSNER, Professors.
ITALIAN DEPARTMENT.
RHETORIC, LOGIC, AND ELOCUTION.
This is the only chartered Commercial College in the South-West, and the oldest in the United States, and has stood fus
FOR MORE THAN A QUARTER OF A CENTURY
On its own merits alone.
Persons from 12 to 60 years of age, can attend to any branch they may wish.
Board can be had with the Professor, or other good families speaking English, French, Spanish or German, from $5 to $6 per week.
Catalogues with terms, opinions of the press and leading men of the nation, etc., sent to all who desire them.
N.B.—To prevent mistakes or impositions, Students intended for this College should bring this advertisement as special directions, as there are every winter temporary rooms open for a few months, all of course making wonderful prelenses and promises, and posting flaming placards to enlighten the people of New Orleans and of the South! When three or more form Clubs and enter at the same time, ten per cent will be deducted from tuition.
☞ Citizens and strangers are invited to visit.
feb1 1y RUFUS DOLBEAR, President.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
Corner of Camp and Common Streets,
ENTRANCE NO. 80 COMMON STREET.
[Established in 1836.]
OPEN DAY AND EVENING THE ENTIRE YEAR.
A full course of instruction in this institution embraces Double Entry Book-keeping, Commercial Calculation, Commercial Law, and Penmanship. Gentlemen can enter for the full course, or any branch they desire, and at any time, as there is no class system, no copying from books, and no memorizing of arbitrary rules.
FACULTY:
GEO. SOULE M.A., Principal and Professor of the Theory and Practice of Double Entry Book-keeping, Lecturer on the Science of Accounts, Exchange, Commercial Correspondence, etc., etc.
W. J. KENNON, Practical Accountant, Associate Professor in Book-keeping Department.
J. M. DIRAHAMMER, Esq., Lecturer on Commercial Law.
H. SPENCER, Professor of Plain, Ornamental, and Epistolary Penmanship.
GEO SOULE, Teacher and Lecturer on Commercial Calculations.
J. B. ANDERSON, Esq., Special Lecturer on Exchange, Business Customs, Commercial Ethics, etc., etc.
LEON LAURIN, Professor of Languages.
This is the only Commercial School in the city where Double Entry Book-keeping is taught practically, and as practiced in the New Orleans business houses.
Each of our young gentlemeee has his respective desk, and proceeds in the opening, conducting, and closing of books, under all the variety of circumstances that can possibly occur in the various departments of business.
Merchants, Book keepers, and young gentlemeo wishing instruction, are respectfully requested to call and examine our practical forms and peculiar manner of teaching.
For catalogues containing full leformation, and Balance-sheet Circulars, the most magnificent work of the kind ever executed in the United States, address, GEO. SOULE, New Orleans.

FELICIANA FEMALE INSTITUTE,
JACKSON, LA.
THE exercises of the second term of the scholastic year will commence on the first of March. Pupils entered at any time, and charged from the time of entrance.
Extensive grounds and houses have been added to the premises.
A good library, a new and complete apparatus, a full and competent corps of teachers, comfortable and newly-furnished apartments, afford the best facilities for a thorough education.
BOARD OF TRUSTEES:
WM. H. WATKINS, D.D., President.
J. N. EVANS, Secretary.
Prof. W. H. N. MAGRUDER, WM. LIPSCOMB,
JOHN W. BURRUSS, Esq., Col. S. M. SHYLAN.
F. V. D. HAHAMAN, Esq., Rev. A. G. MILLER
Rev. JOHN C. MILLER, JOHN MCKOWEN, Esq
Hon. JOHN MCVEA.
6m THOS. W. BROWN, Principal.

KENNER ACADEMY:
A Boarding and Day-School, for Boys and Young Men.
VICTOR SCHEHIHA, PRINCIPAL.
THIS Institution is located in the town of Kenner, Jefferson Parish, La., ten miles from New Orleans by railroad, and sixteen miles by river. The location is extremely delightful and pleasant. The health of the place is unsurpassed during the whole year.
The course of study is thorough, embracing the English, French, Spanish, German, Latin, and Greek languages. Students can be prepared for any class in college, or for business pursuits.
The Academy Year is divided into Two Sessions of Five Months each, commencing on the First of October and March, respectively. Scholars will be received at any time during the year; none for less time than one session.
For further particulars see circulars, or address Principal.

Huntsville Female College.
THE undersigned, by direction of the Board of Trustees of the HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE, take great pleasure in announcing to its patrons, and the public generally, that they have elected the Rev. JOHN G. WILSON, of Limestone County, Ala., to the Presidency of said College, rendered vacant by the death of the lamented Erwin. Mr. Wilson is favorably known as an eloquent Minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is a native of Tennessee, and graduated, with distinction, at a Southern University. His great purity of character, his long experience as a successful teacher of youth, his ripe scholarship, prudent discipline, and gentlemanly manners, afford ample guaranty to parents and guardians, that they may safely entrust the education of their daughters and wards to the Institution over which he has been called to preside. Mr. Wilson, with his lady, will reside in the College Building, after the 30th inst.; at which time, he will enter upon the discharge of his official duties, assisted by the efficient corps of teachers at present employed in the Institution.
WM. ACKLEN,
President of the Board of Trustees.
JAMES H. SCRUGGS, Secretary.
Huntsville, Alabama, Jan. 21st, 1860.

Homer College, Homer, La.
FACULTY:
Rev. D. CLEGG, President, and Professor of Moral, Mental, and Natural Sciences.
J. W. STACY, Professor of Ancient Languages and Literature.
J. B. GRETHE, Professor of Mathematics and Modern Languages.
WILLIAM CLEGG, Tutor, Preparatory Department.
TERMS FOR SESSION—Preparatory Department, First Division, $15: Second, $20. Collegiate Department, $25. Contingent Fee, $1. Matriculation Fee, $5.
Second Session will open 1st February, 1860.
Board, Lodging, &

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.—C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 9. WHOLE NUMBER 477.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 29, 1860.

$2 00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE. OFFICE—112 CAMP ST.

NEW YORK LITERARY CORRESPONDENCE.

British Quarterlies on the Reviewals. Lawrence and misrepresentation of the Westminster.—View of the Christian Life.—Reveals Exceptionally Sudden Conversions Christianly and Culture.—Westminster on Dr. Stevens.—The Quarterly Review on Revivals.—The Irish Revival Great and gracious change.—The "National" on Darwin.—Organ of Spence.—Miss Bremer's Appeal.—Theology and Christian Life.—Mr. Mahan's New Book.—Church at Lady of Dale.—Wesley's Christian Conference.—Dickens' Second Reputation.—Olmstead.—Japan Missions.

New York, Feb. 13, 1860.

Since my last the British "Quarterlies" have made their appearance. They contain several articles of more than usual interest. The recent great revivals of religion in America and in Ireland attract notice from the Westminster and from the Quarterly Review. Both articles are interesting and important.

The Westminster, which is the organ of the "liberal" or "anti-Christian" party in England, treats the subject with considerable fairness, from its own point of view of course. But it sets out with an ingenuous misrepresentation of the Christian doctrine, endeavoring to prove that the religion of the Bible appeals solely to the "fears" of men; that so far as it has any effect upon the believer, it "terrifies and oppresses;" of course, the deduction is that any religions doctrine which only terrifies and oppresses is, on the face of things, wrong and false.

The statement of the difficulties which any "educated man" must have in believing in the Bible and the Christian doctrine, has been so often repeated and re-repeated, both in the Westminster and other periodicals of that side, that I only refer to them here. The statement of the difficulties which attend the attempt to live a Christian life, or realize the Christian ideal, is never born from that side, and is not so badly put. It is in fact a statement of the Scripture requirements, only the deduction drawn, or insinuated, is wrong: that the Christian is necessitated to give up the world, to live out of the world, to have no concern with the world. I have known some mistaken Christian men who agreed with this, but it is too clear for argument that just the reverse is required of us; that the man who tries to live a Christian life, can make that effort successfully only in the every-day life—and that if his Christianity will not carry him safely into business, into society, into every form of life, which is real, useful, necessary, and consequently noble and right, then he has a wrong conception of Christianity. The reviewer says very truly that if Christendom were really Christian, their revivals would be constant, would be the rule, and not exceptional. I think no religious-minded man will gainsay this. And experience proves that wherever there exists in a congregation or in a region of country a living spirit of Christianity, these revivals are in fact constant—there sinners are continually being awakened and converted—there, in short, there is constantly going on that quiet working of the Spirit of God in the souls of men, which brings them to a consciousness of the falsity of their natural lives, and the necessity of forgiveness and a change of heart. Only when great communities, have, for a time, tried to live without God, and whole masses of men have been sunk in vice, great or small, and have systematically forgotten their souls—only in such communities do we find occurring those vast religious changes which are known as great revivals. God gives according to the need, and the impartial observer or reader does not wonder that among the rude and non-religious backwoodsmen of Tennessee and Kentucky, in the last century—among the besotted and demoralized factory men, colliers, and miners of England and Wales, under Wesley and Whitfield; among the masses of New York, high and low, lost in money getting, in 1857–8; or among the Irish factory people, living almost the lives of brutes; that in all these places, it men could be at all brought to see the enormity of their lives, they would come to God with a fear and trembling, and accept his mercy with an joy which could not always escape loud and singular manifestations. It was so in the olden times. It would be only matter for extreme surprise were it otherwise.

Of course the Westminster reviewer takes exception to sudden conversions. "The habits of a life are not changed in an instant," says he. Granted; but the purposes of a life are not only in the matter of religion, but in most other of the graver affairs of life; and, naturally, the greater the change, it seems to me, the more sudden is it likely to be. As for Christ's teachings not calling for such "sudden conversions," there is not a single conversion mentioned in the New Testament, either in our Saviour's time, or afterwards, but what was emphatically sudden; and there have been few revivals so violent in their "exhibitions" as that which shook the church on the day of Pentecost.

The Reviewer has a customary little sneer about chiefly weak-minded and illiterate men joining the Christian side. His difficulty seems to be that, while the "liberal" writers unveil their infidelity in every body's face, and seem to have no peace till the world exclaims, "see what wonderful people these unbelievers are," the Churchman, or the Methodist, or Presbyterian, is content to work as a worker—not as a sectarian—knowing that if Christianity fills his heart, all he writes and speaks will be properly infused with that spirit; and that, as his works speak for this point, it is not necessary to enforce it by a constant and separate assertion. It is not in the church but in the great world that the Christian writer or speaker finds his greatest field; and the fact that that part of the literature of this age which has exerted the greatest influence on the thoughts, tastes, and habits of the Anglo Saxon race, and which is most likely to live, is essentially, thoroughly, and broadly Christian—this fact is surely sufficient answer to the insinuation that Christianity sends out no, or few, enlightened or great writers.

I am glad to notice that even the Westminster reviewer bears witness to the "extensive information, ability and liberal spirit" as well as the admirable method displayed in "Dr. Steven's History of Methodism."

The Quarterly Review article on Revivals is very fair, and of very great interest. I trust most of our religious papers will either print it or give extracts from it. I have nowhere seen so clear a setting forth of the Irish revival and its results, and the fact that the writer visited the localities and investigated for himself, gives it additional value. He has had abundant accounts of this great work from its beginning, and I will only quote here from the reviewer, his summary of its results. He says: "Convictions of sin, deep and intense—a state of mind in which the remembrance of it is grievous, and the burden of it intolerable, has been a leading feature. Sometimes the sudden agony appeared to be only the culminating point of previous feeling; at others, the sense of sinfulness penetrated the soul as with a lightning flash. Some persons were overwhelmed with unutterable horror by the idea of an angry God and eternal condemnation; others were prostrated with shame and sorrow, for having 'trampled under foot the Son of God.' Peace was invariably obtained by looking to Christ alone for salvation. The cry, 'Lord Jesus, have mercy on my soul,' burst from every heart. No description can convey any idea of the joy which followed. It filled the heart, and dwelt upon the lips, and beamed from the dullest faces with a novel radiance. A spirit of prayer was invariably developed. People met for this purpose at various hours of the day. Family worship was at once established in every house where religious concern was displayed, and prayer for the conversion of neighbors, friends, and relations became general. The exuberant joy which was manifested by the converts, and which found its expression in singing hymns at all hours of the day and night, has resulted in innumerable instances in a settled peace and contentment. Benevolence is not only shown by them to each other and to their neighbors, but to all who are brought within the range of their sympathies. It has been displayed in liberal and ready contributions to many societies which ask for aid in their efforts to alleviate human misery. The self denial which is continually exercised for this purpose, and the change which has come over hard, grasping, miserly men, are very remarkable. The desire for religious instruction is so great, that the ministers are heavily burdened in their attempts to supply it. The Bible classes, which have been almost universally established, are largely attended both by men and women. It is not an uncommon thing to find as many as 500 persons meeting regularly. There is a correspondent demand for Bibles and religious books, and at the country fairs there is a large trade carried on in tracts and short biographies. Some idea of the prevalent taste may be formed from the fact that a single bookseller, in four months, sold 20,000 hymn-books and 200,000 hymns in sheets, and that the Edinburgh Bible Society alone supplied 19,000 Bibles, which is an increase of 11,000 copies over the same period of 1858." An intellectual stimulus has thus been given to the province. In connection with one church there are 30 classes, in which 1000 adults are learning to read, and reading societies are being formed in the towns and villages.

"The attendance on stated religious services has so enormously increased as to necessitate the building of new churches and the enlargement of old ones. At a diocesan meeting recently held in Belfast, 105 clergymen returned written replies to the Bishop's queries upon this subject; 73 of these reported increased attendance at church, and in 64 of the cases the attendance had about doubled. In 29 cases there was little alteration. In the Presbyterian church the increased attendance is universal. Many congregations are trebled and quadrupled. The increase in the number of communicants is also great. Not unfrequently hundreds are found where a year ago there were but ten or twenty; and where the usual number of new admissions was formerly from 12 to 20, in some instances it has lately exceeded 200. The attendance at Sabbath schools has quite doubled, and the number of scholars greatly multiplied. Adult men and women frequently take their places, as pupils, and numbers of young men are giving their services as teachers. The moral results have not been less satisfactory. The change from gross vice to virtue was frequently instantaneous. The boisterous and riotous have become quiet and orderly, quarrelsome families live in obedience and love, squalid habits have given place to cleanliness, and brutality of manners to refinement and gentleness. Sabbath desecration, cock-fighting, petty dishonesties, brawling, and the like are now nearly unknown in several districts. Criminal statistics are low, and the constabulary force has become in some places almost a sinecure.

"Drunkenness has decreased, and often to an extraordinary extent. At the Cromlin sessions ten publicans declined to renew their licenses for the express reason that their trade had become so much reduced by the Revival movement that they could no longer follow it profitably. Six others obtained a renewal only to gain time to dispose of their remaining stock, with a view to giving up what they believe from present appearances to be the ruined calling of a publican. In a district in Derry there was a deficiency of £100 in the excise duty on spirits for one month, showing a decrease of 1000 gallons in the consumption. In a town where on market-days 700 or 800 persons spent their evenings in the public-houses, the number varies at present from ten to thirty. In another, formerly notorious for drunkenness, the taverns were so deserted at a recent fair that the publicans in revenge hired men to beat drums amidst the groups surrounding the preachers, who now usually attend these gatherings. The markets have been much more free from instances of intoxication, and the people return to their homes three or four hours earlier than formerly, almost as quietly as from church. In one place where the market is held on Saturdays, as many as fourteen persons were frequently brought on the following Monday to the petty sessions charged with drunkenness, but on looking at recent returns we find—October 15th, none; October 29th, none; Nov. 7th, none. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Well may the Reviewer say:—Whatever is good in this great movement is unquestionably due to the Spirit of all Grace; for no other cause is adequate to the production of such an effect. Whatever is evil is to be attributed to the infirmity and error of man. When we consider the extent of the work, its novelty to all who were concerned in it, and the ignorance of many who were the subjects and witnesses of it, the marvel is not that there should have been indiscretions and extravagances, but that they should have been comparatively, how so many and limited in influence.

The National has a review of "Darwin's" just published work, on the "Origin of Species." Mr. Darwin makes a stir among the Naturalists by a revival of the theory of "Natural Development," the setting forth of which in that ingenious book, the "Vestiges of Creation," somewhat unnecessarily excited all Christendom, nearly twenty years ago. Mr. Darwin believes that there is going on constantly, and has been going on constantly, in nature, a "process of selection," by which the best specimens of any given species of animal or plant, namely those which were best fitted for the conditions of its life, were and are preserved—while the weaker, more poorly developed, perish in the great struggle for life, which he supposes to be going on all through creation, and in which every plant and animal is constantly battling. To prove this he cites many observations and experiments, continued through many years, and by different people.

Then he asserts but fails to prove, I think, that so far from "hybrids" or mules being always unproductive, they are not unfrequently productive: that at any rate the produce of animals, distantly related in race, is not always unproductive; and then he supposes, but rather vaguely, to my comprehension at least, that it is possible that by a "process of selection" going on for many millions of years, or for a period which cannot be at all determined, the entire animal and vegetable world has been changed—that in fact the ferns and the monsters of the pre-Adamite periods are not only predecessors, but ancestors and blood relations of the animals and plants of our present world.

I do not think Mr. Darwin will effect any material change in the commonly received opinions or ideas of the most eminent naturalists of England and America. He is ingenious, but his theory is bound by too many coutting ties for a merely human mind to grasp all, and make allowance for all.

Since my last, Messrs. Harper and Brothers have published a new book, by Miss Beecher. It is a sequel to her "Common sense applied to Religion," and is called, "An Appeal to the people, in behalf of their Rights as authorized interpreters of the Bible." I hope she has settled the matter to her own mind: I confess she has not helped me. I once heard a distinguished preacher say, that in his opinion, all theology was of the devil. And Miss Beecher's own philosophy, as well as her reviews of the prominent "theologies," only proves to me that true religion, as men live it and feel it in their hearts, is far, very far, above theology, and that theologians have in all times been much better than their dogmas.

I do not know what effect so cool a dissection of the elements of religious belief has upon the generality of minds. Me it affects unpleasantly. Miss Beecher sets out to prove that there is a God, and, I think, fails. She fails at any rate to convince me. That is to say, if I were an Atheist, I should not be converted by Miss Beecher. Again, she says she proves that the soul does not die with the body. But then she does not prove that there is a soul.

Again, she says a Divine revelation can only be established by miracles and prophecy—the first to convince eye-witnesses, and prophecy to convince all the rest of mankind. Now my "common sense," I think, would hardly submit to believe a book to come from God only because in it were prophecies of things to come, and which had not taken place yet.

You see from Miss Beecher's point I am a rank sceptic. In fact I sum up the results of my thoughts and experience in religion as follows: Every new experience I get of life, and every insight which history or society gives me into the lives of others, only serves to prove to me more conclusively and inevitably, that the words of Christ, and the life of Christ, and the promises of Christ contain the only "philosophy" on which any man can happily regulate his life; that Christianity, that is, the teachings of our Saviour, forms the only rule of life which is applicable to every possible phase or vicissitude of life: and that, therefore, the Christian doctrine must be a Divine Revelation, and cannot be the invention of a man like myself. And I believe all theological hair-splitting is of the devil. There you have it. The faith was pure till philosophy stepped in.

I am glad Miss Beecher has published her book. I think she probably feels the happier for it, and I think the whole subject will be the better for the airing which I think it will get, one way and another.

Rev. Wm. H. Milburn's new book, "The Pioneers, Preachers and People of the Mississippi Valley," is nearly ready for issue. It is a work which will sustain the reputation of his former books, and will have, of course, from the nature of the subject, special interest for the South-west and West.

Did I mention in my last the impending publication of a life of General Sample Dyke of Alabama? Messrs Harper and Brothers have just got it out. It is a very interesting life of one of the prominent backwoodsmen of Alabama, a man whose like it is to be wished we had more of now. The book will not only interest for its stirring adventure, but it will benefit the reader by bringing him in contact with a sterling and brave nature.

The Appleton's have just published "Eighteen Christian Centuries," a resume of the world's history since the advent of our Lord, done in a brilliant and at the same time faithful manner, which makes the book not only remarkably readable but historically valuable.

Charles Dickens is going to employ his busy pen in a new line, or rather, by him, an old line. He began life as a reporter for the press, and he is now projecting a series of papers, entitled "The Uncommercial Traveller," in which he purposes to give, in that style of his which is so inimitable, reports of various important journeys, places, works and events; such as the wreck and recovery of the "Royal Charter," or perhaps some great railway embankment, some great gun-trial, some remarkable manufacturing process. These papers are to appear here in Harper's Weekly, and are looked for with much interest, to see how Mr. Dickens works in his old reportorial traces. Doubtless they will be full of his quaint views and expressions, and he such bright settings out as facts do not get in common hands.

The best account of Japan yet written is in the narration of Lord Elgin's recent mission thither, which is about to be published by Messrs. Harper and Brothers. It appears that the Japanese women black their teeth and shave their eyebrows when they marry, to relieve their lords of the need of jealous watchings. It reads like a tough yarn, but it is the truth, and shows a remarkable degree of complaisance in the softer sex in Japan.

But I must close, and leave much gossip for my next.

INTRODUCTION OF PROTESTANTISM INTO MISSISSIPPI.—NO. II.

Original Baptist Church.

Mr. Editor:—In all I have seen published on the subject, I discover that the Annalists of the Baptist Church have committed a variety of errors in attempting to give a history of the origin of their church in Mississippa. This I attribute solely to the want of correct information on the subject, which it was not in their power to obtain at the time and place of writing. Some of these errors I will briefly notice.

First, They confound Richard Curtis, senior, with his fifth child, Richard Curtis, junior, who was the first Baptist preacher in Mississippi; and hence, they represent their first preacher as being quite an old man with a large family when he emigrated to this country. This is a mistake. Richard Curtis, senior, was an old man with a large family at the time of his removal, but his son Richard Curtis, junior, was at that time, a young man, only about twenty-five years old, with a small family.

Second, Two of their Annalists, who seem to have derived their information from the same source, affirm that the Baptist Church was the first Protestant community formed in all the wide region of the Southwest, below the Cumberland Settlements in middle Tennessee. This is also an error, for, as I have shown in a previous number, Rev. Samuel Swayze, with his Congregational Church in the Jersey Settlement, had preceded them about ten years.

Third, They are also at fault in fixing the time when their first church, under a regularly ordained minister, was organized. The prevalent opinion seems to be that it was in 1795 or 1796. But this could not have been the case, unless it was done in secret, and without an ordained minister, for, according to the best authenticated accounts, the Spanish Government did not terminate in the Natchez District until the 30th of March, 1798, and such was the avowed and uncompromising hostility of the Catholics to the Baptists, that we cannot believe they would have permitted the organization of a regular church while they had authority to prevent it. Moreover, Mr. Curtis fled from his relentless persecutors on the 23d of August, 1795, and did not return to the country as an ordained minister until the termination of the Spanish rule. In the Spring of 1798 is as early as we can fix the organization of the first regular Church after the ordination of Mr. Curtis. While I do not claim exemption from unintentional error, it may be well for me to refer to my available sources for correct information.

First, I am a lineal descendant on my father's side from the emigrant family that constituted the first Baptist Church in Mississippi. Second, I am familiar with the uniform line by tradition in relation to the facts which I shall narrate. Third, I have in my possession reliable family records dating back to one hundred and fourteen years. Fourth, I was born and raised, and now live in the vicinity where this emigrant family connection first settled in this country. And fifth, I have conversed with a number of aged persons, who in their youth were familiar with the persons and scenes I shall bring to view.

About the year 1743 there lived somewhere in the region of Petersburg, Va., a newly married couple, of Welsh descent, by the name of William and Phoebe Jones. Mr. Jones soon after died, leaving a young widow and an only son by the name of John. Within a few years of the death of her husband, Mrs. Jones married the man who will hereafter be known in this narrative as Richard Curtis, senior, by which marriage they had five sons and three daughters.

After the marriage of Mrs. Jones to Mr. Curtis, we have no very satisfactory knowledge of the family for about thirty years. At the breaking out of the revolutionary war they were found in South Carolina, on Great Pedee river, not far from the mouth of Black river, and about sixty miles from Charleston. John Jones, the son of Mrs. Curtis by her first marriage, had grown up to manhood and married as early as 1768. At the Declaration of Independence he ardently espoused the cause of the Revolutionists, served in three campaigns against the British and Tories, and was in several battles, including the seige of Charleston. By the close of 1779, Mr. Jones and the Messrs. Curtis, including his stepfather and half brothers, had rendered themselves so obnoxious to their Tory neighbors by their devotion to the Colonial cause, that they found their situation not only vexatious but perilous. In the meantime several of the leading members of the united family had embraced religion and joined the Baptist Church; among whom were John Jones, William, Benjamin, and Richard Curtis and their wives, John Courtney, who had married Hannah Curtis, and John Standley, who had married Phoebe Curtis, daughters of Richard Curtis, senior. We may safely presume that Richard Curtis, senior, and his wife were also members of the same church. Richard Curtis, junior, was a licensed preacher at the time of their removal from South Carolina.

While they were annoyed by wars and rumors of wars at home, they had heard much said about the salubrious climate, rich lands, exhaustless range, and abundance of game in the Natchez country, and being oppressed in mind, and well nigh exhausted in property, by the horrors of war at their very doors, they determined to seek a peaceful home in the far off Western region. Accordingly in the Spring of 1780, they proceeded by land across the country to the Holston river in the north-eastern corner of the State of Tennessee, where they paused to build their boats, during which time they raised a crop of corn for the sustenance of their families. When the water had attained a sufficient depth for navigation, about the latter end of that year, they, with other emigrant families, embarked their all of earthly substance in three large and well built flat boats, and committing themselves to the protection of God, commenced their perilous voyage.

Such were the natural difficulties in the way of navigation in those early times, that it was, at best, a hazardous undertaking to descend the Holston, Tennessee, Ohio, and Mississippi rivers in such water craft as they were then able to construct, but what made it doubly hazardous was the belligerent stand which the Cherokee Indians had taken against all emigration through their country. They often availed themselves of the narrows, shoals and sudden turns in the Holston and Tennessee rivers to attack emigrant boats. Our voyagers being fully aware of that fact, were as well prepared for it as they could, and kept a constant watch for the approach of their stealthy foe. We who have had peace and truth in our days, think it strange that our forefathers would thus not only peril their own lives, but also the lives of their wives and little ones, but they had already become inured to the horrors of war, and viewed such adventures very differently from what we do. These emigrants, for the sake of mutual protection, agreed to float as near each other as convenient. The foremost boat contained Richard Curtis, senior, and his immediate family, including John Jones and family, and his own sons and daughters with their families. The second boat contained two brothers by the name of Daniel and William Ogden, and a man by the name of Perkins, and their families, most of whom were Baptists. I have no records of the names of those in the third boat. They seem to have fallen in with the other boats for the sake of protection in descending to Natchez. They had in some way contracted the small pox, and to prevent its spread to the other boats, were required to float a few hundred yards in the rear. After floating unmolested for several days the hostile savages espied the boats somewhere near Clinch river, and fixed on a short bend in the Tennessee river near the north-western corner of Georgia, as the place of attack. The foremost boat having to float near the shore to keep in the channel, was vigorously assailed by the lurking Cherokees. All hands on board commenced a vigorous and well directed defence. Mrs. Jones held, upon a thick poplar stool between her eldest son, William, then in his twelfth year, and the bullets while he plied the oar, and it was well she did, for it was pierced by one or more bullets. Mrs. Jones, after the danger was over, laughingly remarked that "their guns were very weak, as they did not make a very deep impression on the stool." Another lady heroically took the steering oar from her husband, that he might ply his rifle on the foe, and with unfaltering courage guided the boat until disabled by a wound in the back. Hannah Courtney was grazed on the head by a ball, and Jonathan Curtis was slightly wounded on the wrist, but, so far as I know, no life was lost. The second boat, in the meantime, having got out of the point of attack, floated by unharmed. The excited and blood thirsty savages now directed their whole force to the capture of the third and last boat, and, as it passed the narrows, they boarded it in full force, and killed all on board, except one lady, whom they retained as a captive for several years, until, by treaty she was restored to her friends. But this was a dear bought victory to the Cherokees, for either from the captured lady, or goods, they contracted the small pox, which passed through their villages like the destroying angel, until multitudes of them died. When suffering from the raging fever and thirst occasioned by the terrible epidemic, they sought relief by lying in the waters of the Tennessee, which only made it the more fatal. Their descendants have, to this day, a traditional horror of that terrible pestilence. It was impossible, from the slow and unwieldy movements of their flat boats, for those who had escaped to round to time enough to afford the captured boat any assistance, even if they had not been so far outnumbered as to render the attempt worse than fruitless; so with gratitude to God for their deliverance, and sadness and sorrow for their lost fellow voyagers, they pursued their dangerous way, until they landed in safety at the mouth of Cole's Creek, about twenty miles above Natchez, to the eastward and southward of which they made their settlements.

A. G. Jones.

HAPPY OLD AGE.

There is a richness and sweetness in the piety of some old persons, which no one who sees it can fail to appreciate. It is true, that, from physical causes, over which the individual has no control, this is sometimes obscured. But the church is favored with many who, like the sun, grow larger, and are surrounded by a glory more gorgeous, as they descend below the horizon. Few things are more sublime in morals, than a saint of God patiently and cheerfully waiting until his change shall come. Such are the church's richest treasure, and should be esteemed far above rubies.

Some years ago, I attended a wedding party at the house of a Methodist sister. She had no intention of having dancing on the occasion. But her brother, who did the honors of the house for the time, had no scruples on the subject; he introduced a musician, and the dance commenced. It was heard in the adjoining apartment where most of the graver portion of the company were sitting. An earnest consultation was held by the mistress of the house with her brother, who was a member of the church, myself, and another minister who was present. It was suggested that to stop the sport suddenly might give offence to some parties, that would result in more harm than good. While we were at a loss to know what to do, the aged mother of one hostess heard the music from an other apartment of the house, and without any consultation, went directly into the festive chamber, while the feet were on the floor and in the midst of the dance. She went directly to the fiddler, who was a servant of the family, and said, "what are you doing here? Begone in an instant from this place." The affrighted fiddler vanished in double quick time, and some of the "merry feet," which were raised for a grand flourish, knew not how to get down. The knot was cut. No offence was given to my knowledge; the lady was too venerable for any one to be offended with her.

The next day I related the circumstance to a brother minister. "God bless the dear old lady," was his prompt reply, "she is worth her weight in gold, and when this consecrated saints dies, I fear we shall have no more such." While this sentiment met a response in my bosom, I was ready to say, let us hope to the end. God, even Jesus our Savior, walks in the midst of the golden candlesticks, and holds the stars in his right hand.

These reflections and reminiscences were the result of a visit I made the present week to an aged servant of God, Mother L. She has passed her four score years, is in great feebleness, and oft recurring infirmities; but patient, cheerful, joyful. From her own lips I received the following sketch of her history. She was reared by Presbyterian parents, learned all the catechism, was early married, and removed with her husband to the Tombigbee river, just above Fort St. Stephens; was there when the frightful massacre of Fort Mims took place. There were no religious persons, or means of grace, in their vicinity. In this forlorn condition, herself and husband made up their minds to become religious, doubtless the result of early christian training. Her husband immediately established family prayer in his house. This was noised through the neighborhood, and one of his associates, more daring than the rest, came to his house to rally and annoy him. It was an associate of his youth, and called him familiarly by his christian name. "Tom," said he, "will you be pleased to tell me what was the size of the oven that baked the five loves that fed five thousand people?" "Sim," said the modest young man, "I am a coward; I expect to meet death some of these days, and I have begun in time to plead for aid." This grave reply nonplussed the trifler with sacred things; he hastily took his hat and left. From that time the house was avoided by their neighbors, as if it had contained a den of thieves. But the family altar stood firm; has not fallen to this day.

Soon after this, the family removed to Jefferson county, Mississippi, the husband's health having given way under the influence of lingering consumption. Patiently did the young wife nurse her afflicted husband for eighteen months, when he could not rise from the bed without her assistance. Four small children divided her attention, with none of this world's goods to aid her. During all this time the constant husband prayed in his family every day, the wife reading the Scriptures; his prayers were sometimes uttered in a whisper, but nevertheless they were uttered, and doubtless entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. In due time death came, but he was not afraid; he met it with christian triumph. How his friend of the big oxen met it I am not informed. Now came a new trial to the wife. "Shall I let the family altar fall, or shall I take up the cross?" Flesh and blood was not long consulted, the altar fires did not die out. The incense has smoked ever since, though that has been some forty or fifty years.

The bereaved mother addressed herself earnestly to the christian education of her children; four boys and one girl. With all the disadvantages of poverty, a wicked neighborhood, no Sunday-schools, to her knowledge not one of her sons ever drank a drop of ardent spirits, or played a card, or went into other dissipation. I believe the living are all worthy members of the church, the dead in heaven. Aged and infirm, the saint of God still lingers in her eighty-first year, reads all the religious books in her power, and encourages the young to persevere. Some weeks since she was very ill, at the very point of death; her mind was in some distraction; she could think of none of the sweet promises which she had so often read, and so frequently feasted on. She would have given any thing for some one to quote the promises to her; at length a verse of an old hymn which she had learned in childhood came to her; it was this:

"O, for an overpowering faith,
To cheer my dying hours,
To triumph o'er the monster death,
And all his hellish powers."

This gave her triumph, and she shouted the loud praises of God. While she related it to me, tears of joy overflowed her eyes, and her wrinkled countenance was lighted up with almost a seraph's fire. "Soon," my aged friend, "will the toilsome strife be o'er, of sublunary care." Sarah will find her long lost Abraham again, and lay her trophies at Jesus' feet.

B. M. D.

BEULAH.—A CRITICISM.

While on a steamboat trip from Montgomery to Mobile, I beguiled the hours by reading that chef d'œuvre of American novelists, "Beulah Benton," by Miss Evans. There are many who condemn, indiscriminately, all fictions—forgetting that the moral fables of Æsop, the allegories of prophecy, the parables of Christ, the sublime strains of Homer and Milton, afford a charter for this species of literature. Who would be willing to blot out Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, because of its allegorical character? Says a distinguished writer: "The entire moral and visible world, from first to last, with its kings and its subjects, its parents and its children, its sun and its moon, its sowing and its harvest, its light and its darkness, its sleeping and its waking, its birth and its death, is from beginning to end a mighty parable, a great teaching of supersensuous truth, a help at once to our faith and to our understanding." The term novel (however innocent in itself) is now regarded as an arbitrary word to express the worthless in literature—to characterize those works which, by a Plutonic chemistry, transmute the diamond of virtue into the charcoal of vice. In this representative character, it no more applies to Beulah than it does to the Analects of Confucius, Bunyan's Pilgrim, or Theophilus Walton. Miss Evans has chosen characters that have their counterpart in real life; and the true merit of her work, in its moral aspects, is as distinct from its fictitious names and plot, as a piece of furniture is from its veneering and varnishing. There is no mawkish sentimentality in it, no crimes clothed in the livery of virtue. The design of the authoress evidently is, to exhibit the cheerlessness of infidelity in all its sublimated aspects, and to show that nothing but an unclouded gospel can impart a "brave, hopeful spirit," and make the hour of death a time of triumph. With this intent the book is opportune. The tendency of our age is to speculative extremes in philosophy. Abstractions imported from Germany, are claiming dominion over the American mind. Theodore Parker, the Pompanatins, and Ralph Waldo Emerson, the Engelharb of America, are daily influencing thousands with their pseudo rationalism.

The rehound of pulpit cant is likely to be the European Kant, with his double basis, the realistic and idealistic philosophy. Fichte, sitting in the centre of self-consciousness and drawing the scenes of its subjective circle, is weaving his webs around scores of intellectual spirits in our land. Hegel, Schelling, and Compte, all have the ear of the American literateurs. Such phrases as "philosophy of the absolute" "subjective and objective conceivableness," "transcendental negation," etc., are flattering to the pride of the intellect. There is a native love in the human heart for the mystical, and reconcilation is the form which Satan has chosen in which to invade our American Eden. We are fond, as a people, despite our republicanism, to admire high-sounding titles in families and in literature. We prefer being told that "God is the entire process of thought, combining in itself the objective movement in nature with the logical subjective, and ever realizing itself in the spiritual totality of humanity," to having it said that "God created the heavens and the earth." I speak, of course, of our educated men—those who have treasured in the mind Crabbe's synonims, and Rogets Thesaurus. Have you not noticed how fashionable it is to talk about Goethe, Carlyle, and Emerson? "Straws show which way the wind blows." We needed some popular antidote for this Teutonic and Bostonic poison. Miss Evans has furnished it. True, her book is not a continuous series of logical arguments. She does not seek to divest transcendentalism of its pompous terminology, and reveal to the reader the naked, horrid, grinning skeleton which its marshalled verbiage clothes; but she endeavors to show, that it cannot fill a heart so expansive in its capacities that it is a fit temple for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. Her story forces upon the mind a resistless conviction of the utter worthlessness of philosophic scepticism. Her characters act before you. Action is the most powerful logic. "In the deed, the unequivocal, authentic deed, we find sound argument."

The picture she draws of Cornelia Graham's sad, comfortless death, is worth a thousand repellant arguments, drawn from the arsenal of intellect. It was in that hour that the maiden queen of scepticism "clasped the phantoms and found them air." Well may the artist of this picture write beneath the portraiture: "What lamp had philosophy hung in the sable chambers of the tomb?" The conversion of Beulah, from the guidance of "Friedland's stars," to the pilotage of Bethelem's lone star, is most beautifully and effectively told.

Beulah deserve well of the religious world. It is in no sense "light reading." The most scholastic divine may receive suggestions from its pages worthy to be treasured. Those who admire the gew-gaws of literature will not like this book. It is written in an ornate, but not a bombastic style. There are no glaring red-ribbons about its rhetoric. The comparisons, alliterations, descriptions, classical allusions, and dashes of sarcasm, are superb. Perhaps scholastic and arbitrary terms occur too often to suit the taste of an ordinary reader; but to one who has read much, especially from the folios of England, even these are gratefully introduced. The plot is not complicate; but, perhaps, too austere to leave a pleasant impression upon the reader. Beulah is too obstinate for model women, and Hartwell too reserved and haughty for a model man. Yet, these characters have their counterpart in real life, and may best suit the draft of this story. On the whole, I like the book wondrously well; and thank the authoress for having unconsciously relieved by her pen the tedium of a long steamboat ride.

H. A. M. Henderson.

SETTLEMENT OF GEORGIA.

The following extract is from J. H. Patton's new History of the United States, recently published by D. Appleton & Co. It exhibits the interesting origin of the colony, now the prosperous state of Georgia.

James Edward Oglethorpe, "the poor man's friend," "a Christian gentleman of the cavalier school," had sympathy for the unfortunate who were immured within prison walls, not for crime, but for debt. He labored to have repealed the laws authorizing such imprisonment, and to reform the entire prison discipline of England. His efforts did not end here; he desired to provide in America an asylum for those who were, while in their own land, at the mercy of hard-hearted creditors, as well as a place of refuge for the poor, where comfort and happiness might be the reward of industry and virtue. There were, at this time, in England, more than four thousand men in prison for debt, with no hope of relief. Through his exertions, "multitudes were restored to light and freedom, who by long confinement were strangers and helpless in the country of their birth."

Others became interested in his schemes of benevolence, and a petition numerously signed by men of influence and family, was presented to the king. They asked a charter to colonize the territory south of the Savannah river, then included in Carolina, with unfortunate debtors, and with Protestants from the comtnt of Europe. A grant was given by George II. of the region lying between the Savannah and the Altamaha, and from their head springs west, to the Pacific. The territory was to be known as Georgia. It was given "in trust for the poor" to twenty-one trustees for the space of twenty-one years. The trustees manifested their zeal by giving their services without any reward.

The climate of this region was thought to be very favorable for the raising of silk-worms, and the cultivation of the grape. Merchants, therefore, who could not be otherwise influenced, were induced to favor the cause by hopes of gain. The "free exercise of religon" was guaranteed to all "except papists." Under no conditions was land to be granted in tracts of more than five hundred acres. This was designed to enable the poor to become owners of the soil, and to prevent the rich from monopolizing the best lands.

Much interest was taken in this new field of benevolence, and donations were made by all classes of society. What a transition for the poor debtor! He was to exchange the gloomy walls of a prison for a home in that delightful land, where grim poverty could never annoy him any more! It was determined to take as colonists only the most needy and helpless, and, as far as possible, exclude those of bad morals. Thirty-five families, numbering altogether one hundred and fifty persons, embarked for their new homes. While others gave to the enterprise their substance and influence, Oglethorpe volunteered to superintend the colony in person. They took with them "a clergyman, with Bibles, prayer-books, and catechisms," and one person who was skilled in the raising of silk. The company landed first at Charleston; by a vote of the Assembly, they were welcomed, and presented with supplies of rice and cattle.

Oglethorpe hastened to explore the Savannah. On a bluff twenty miles from its mouth he planted his colony. This bluff was already in possession of a small band of Indians, from whom it was named the Yamacraw. Through the efforts of Mary Musgrove, who acted as interpreter, the land was purchased. This woman was a daughter of a Uchee chief, and had been sent to school in Charleston, where she had married an English trader. The colonists immediately began to build and fortify their town, which they named Savannah, the Indian name of the river. The town was regularly laid out, with wide streets and spacious squares. A garden of some acres was enclosed for a nursery of mulberry trees to feed silk-worms; and here also experiments were made, in order to introduce European fruits.

The aged chief of the little band of Indians wished protection. He presented to Oglethorpe a buffalo skin, on the inside of which was painted an eagle. "The eagle," said he, "signifies speed, and the buffalo strength; the English are swift as the eagle, for they have flown over vast seas; they are as strong as the buffalo, for nothing can withstand them; the feathers of the eagle are soft, and signify love; the buffalo's skin is warm, and signifies protection; therefore, I hope the English will agree to our faith and to our understanding." The term novel (however innocent in itself) is now regarded as an arbitrary word to express the worthless in literature—to characterize those works which, by a Plutonic chemistry, transmute the diamond of virtue into the charcoal of vice. In this representative character, it no more applies to Beulah than it does to the Analects of Confucius, Bunyan's Pilgrim, or Theophilus Walton. Miss Evans has chosen characters that have their counterpart in real life; and the true merit of her work, in its moral aspects, is as distinct from its fictitious names and plot, as a piece of furniture is from its veneering and varnishing. There is no mawkish sentimentality in it, no crimes clothed in the livery of virtue. The design of the authoress evidently is, to exhibit the cheerlessness of infidelity in all its sublimated aspects, and to show that nothing but an unclouded gospel can impart a "brave, hopeful spirit," and make the hour of death a time of triumph. With this intent the book is opportune. The tendency of our age is to speculative extremes in philosophy. Abstractions imported from Germany, are claiming dominion over the American mind. Theodore Parker, the Pompanatins, and Ralph Waldo Emerson, the Engelharb of America, are daily influencing thousands with their pseudo rationalism.

The rehound of pulpit cant is likely to be the European Kant, with his double basis, the realistic and idealistic philosophy. Fichte, sitting in the centre of self-consciousness and drawing the scenes of its subjective circle, is weaving his webs around scores of intellectual spirits in our land. Hegel, Schelling, and Compte, all have the ear of the American literateurs. Such phrases as "philosophy of the absolute" "subjective and objective conceivableness," "transcendental negation," etc., are flattering to the pride of the intellect. There is a native love in the human heart for the mystical, and reconcilation is the form which Satan has chosen in which to invade our American Eden. We are fond, as a people, despite our republicanism, to admire high-sounding titles in families and in literature. We prefer being told that "God is the entire process of thought, combining in itself the objective movement in nature with the logical subjective, and ever realizing itself

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 29, 1860.

$1 75 to 1861.—With this number of the Advocate we have increased the edition, to supply future new subscribers.—Will our agents and friends see that we suffer no loss by this accommodation? Send hundreds of new subscribers immediately—at $1 75 to 1861. All new Subscribers will be charged, if the money is not sent, $1 75 to 1861; if the money is sent, they will be credited only to 1861. Let all take notice. The rule is inexorable.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Annual Meeting of the Joint Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will take place at the office, 112 Camp street, New Orleans, at 9 o'clock, A. M. Wednesday, March 7, 1860.

COLLAPSE OF "LYING WONDERS" IN LONDON AND NEW ORLEANS.

From the days of Simon Magus until now, the ignorant, the unbelieving, the mentally ill-balanced, have been ready to cry out, "this man is the great power of God," in behalf of every charlatan who has been able to perform feats of jugglery beyond their comprehension. Alas that the world is so little wiser than in earlier ages! Nothing in modern times has demonstrated more fully the dangerous power of religious imposture than the spread and influence of "Spiritualism." But few, who have not been curious enough to watch its progress, are aware of the rapid strides of its desolating march. Its wrecks are all over the land. Ministers, judges, lawyers, physicians, men of all professions and all ages, are among its victims; besides women without number—blasted, ruined for life.

When the writer was residing in the quiet little city of Galveston, a few years since, it was announced that the Rev. T. L. Harris, a convert from Swedenborgianism to Spiritualism, and one of the most learned and eloquent speakers in the country, would preach or lecture at "Morian Hall" on a certain evening. The fame of the speaker led us to attend. As to the eloquence, there was no disappointment. A large audience was enchained for an hour and a half. As to the doctrine, that it was not of God, was a foregone conclusion, a self-evident truth. Half-crazed men, polluted women, and a horrible suicide of a singularly beautiful girl, all Spiritualists, all under our own knowledge, had not helped to weaken our abhorrence of the vile imposture. But Mr. Harris was evidently sincere and earnest. He sought not to make money by his profession. We pitied him. So much genius and spirit immolated upon the altar of a spiritual Moloch. We lost sight of him, with the exception of an occasional newspaper mention. The last we recollect indicated either insanity or depravity. It was a report of a rhapsodical lecture about "spirit-girls," or "heaven-girls," or something of the sort.

But we hear of him again. He is in London. The account is from the London Morning Advertiser. It is announced that he will lecture on Spiritualism. His fame has gone before him, and a large audience greets him. The Spiritualists, especially, are out in force. An unanswerable vindication of their doctrine is expected. What must have been their amazement and mortification, when, instead of this, he exposed the follies, immoralities, and disastrous consequences, spiritually and physically, of their system, with such a power of reasoning, force of eloquence, and earnestness of purpose, as have seldom been displayed by an orator in modern times.—His triumphant exposures and withering denunciations of Spiritualism, as being the results of Satanic agency, fell like so many bomb-shells among his audience. Mr. Harris held up the system of Spiritualism as the most hideous and horrible thing which had ever come from the nether world. He said that he himself was a living proof of the danger, mentally and physically, of cultivating the so-called science. Only a few years ago, it had taken so absorbing a possession of his mind, and had obtained so complete a mastery over him, that it gave rigidity to the muscles of his frame, and a terrible unearthly expression to his countenance. That he had known many others—excellent and amiable persons before they became Spiritualists—from whom the power which the demoniacal system had acquired over them had taken away their appetites, had unfitted them for the ordinary duties of life, crushed all their energies, mental and physical, deprived them of sleep at night, and caused their bodies to waste away, as if the victims of some fell disease which set all medical skill at defiance. Others he had seen, whose arms and legs had become as cold and rigid as those of a marble statue, while the expression of their countenances was so horrible as more to resemble those of demons than human beings. The Spiritualists of America, he further stated, are not only as a body, Pantheists, rejecting alike the scriptures as a divine revelation, and the existence of a God, but that they are gross sensualists and utterly immoral in their conduct in all the relations of life.

Thousands of persons had died in America during the fifteen years that he had been a Spiritualist, who had notoriously lived most immoral lives, and yet the spirits of every one of these persons affirmed that they were all perfectly happy. The Spiritualist literature of America, Mr. Harris also stated, was, with one or two exceptions in a thousand cases, Pantheistic, feeble, drivelling, almost idiotic. The Spiritualists were utterly selfish, as well as sensual and grossly immoral. They were destitute of all human sympathies, and never were known to perform a single benevolent action. They fully believed that, in a future state, they would live the same licentious lives as they had done on earth. The American Spiritualists were in reality a body of pagans, worshipping grossly licentious deities, and as regards the spirits with whom they held communication, they resembled the sorcerers and demons who took possession of men and women in the days of Christ.

There were a few christian men who had been deluded into the adoption of the system, but only in a modified degree, and so long as their Spiritualism was kept in subjection by their christianity, the observations he had made did not apply to them. But these exceptions were so few as to be hardly worthy of notice. All that he said of the system of Spiritualism—which he characterized as an infernal system—was the result of his own personal knowledge and experience. He mentioned some individual cases, of which he was an eye-witness, in which the demon of Spiritualism had obtained so entire a mastery over its victims, as to throw them down on platforms and other public places, just as the evil spirits did of which we read in the New Testament.

The marriage vow imposes no obligations in the views of the Spiritualists. Husbands who had for years been devotedly attached to their wives, have abandoned their wives, and formed criminal connection with other females, because the spirits had told them that there was a greater Spiritualist affinity between these husbands and certain other women, than between them and their lawful wives. Wives, too, the most devoted, and loving, and true to their husbands, had left their husbands and children and lived in open immorality with other men, because the spirits had told them that they ought to do so, on the ground of a greater sympathy between them and these men, than between them and their husbands.

For those who were the victims of this terrible delusion, Mr. Harris expressed the most profound compassion. It so completely subjugated them to its demoniacal power, that they could neither think nor speak of anything else. The only way in which they could escape from the horrible tyranny which it exercised over them was, by having recourse to a throne of grace, by fervent prayer and increasing watchfulness. He sought, in language eloquent and earnest, to warn his hearers of the dangers to their mental faculties and their physical frames here, as well as of their guilt in the sight of God and the consequent danger to their souls hereafter—of having anything to do with seances, circles, table-rapping, which were becoming so common and which had wrought such incalculable mischief to soul and body. He wished to impress upon them, as speaking with the eye of God upon him, and as conscious of his responsibility to the Great Supreme, that the only true Spiritualism was the spiritualism of the Scriptures—the spiritualism of the Holy Spirit—the spiritualism of the apostles and first christians—the spiritualism of Owen, and Baxter, and of the puritans generally—the spiritualism of such men as Fletcher and Wesley—men whose spiritualism had, during their lives, been the means of converting myriads of sinners, and whose holy example, and writings—by which and through their disciples, they being dead, yet speak—had proved the means of converting many millions since their death.

Now for Spiritualism in New Orleans. Some six weeks ago a celebrated Spiritualist from New York, a Dr. Redman, arrived in this city; he had just left Montgomery, Alabama, on account of the $500 a-day tax imposed by the Legislature. The Spiritualists flocked about him. Hundreds of other people from city and country, among them some of our own friends, visited him. The revelations were wonderful. Some of them were made known to us, and seemed utterly unaccountable. But, we have, we trust, long been wonder-proof. Spiritualism was on the rise. The Doctor earned money at the rate of $100 a-day. The most intelligent gentlemen and ladies, in city and country, were attracted. In the language of the "local" of the Delta, we have seen the widower trembling like an aspen, as the Doctor scribbled off in back hand the name of a loved wife gone before him; a son with tears trickling down his cheeks, and his manly form shaken with excitement, as the name of his mother, buried years ago, was held up to him in the light that he might read the hasty tracings of the medium upon the paper; a lover eagerly clutching at a message from the girl he loved, who died only to leave him wretched; and many other scenes, which are not necessary to be enumerated, but for the truth of which hundreds in the city, among citizens and strangers, can bear witness.

But now a Dr. Bly appears. We know nothing of him, except through the papers. He is from New York, and called the great "detective medium." Here on business, and seeing the success of Dr. Redman, he resolves to expose him. He made an appointment with a prominent citizen, who had been duped by Redman out of about $100 dollars, and made to him a clean expose of the manner by which Dr. Redman operated. The gentleman in question, as soon as he became aware that Dr. Redman had swindled him, went to him with a friend, and detected him so clearly that the Doctor was glad to hand back all the money which the citizen and his immediate friends had given him. A few hours after Dr. Redman had taken down his sign and left in a carriage, with a hastily packed trunk, for parts unknown. Since the departure of Dr. Redman, Dr. Bly has been visited by a large number of persons inquiring for Dr. Redman, they having paid him in advance for sittings. Those who have seen Dr. Redman operate, agree that Dr. Bly is by far the more accomplished operator of the two. Dr. Bly informs all who visit him that the whole thing is a humbug; and agrees to show one and all how the manifestations are produced. The reporter of the Delta says he witnessed some of the sittings which he had with a number of highly respectable gentlemen, many of whom are firm believers in Spiritualism. It was amusing, though painful, to witness the anxiety and wonder of some of the gentlemen, who, refusing to believe that the whole affair was a humbug, persisted in receiving supposed dispatches from deceased friends. One gentleman grasping the paper upon which the name of his deceased wife was written insisted upon preserving it, though the Doctor informed him that it was preposterous to suppose that a spirit could have had anything to do with it, and that he merely gave examples the same as those given by Dr. Redman, for the purpose of exposing him. This party all declined receiving instructions how it was done.

It may be "a rogue catching a rogue," but at any rate the rogue is caught.

WORLDLINESS: WHAT IS IT?

The present world, meaning by this phrase the order of creation and the constituted system of society, is God's appointment, and, as such, it is worthy of our regard. Not only the beauty of the visible universe and the charms of domestic life, but the interests of business, the pleasures of cultivated intellect, the attractions of science, literature and art, the diversified forms of human activity, when that activity is healthful and salutary, are all from God. It is no evil to love them; it is a grievous evil, full of wrong, full of injury, not to love them. The eye might as well scorn the light, or the lungs their vital air, as the heart refuse to honor and cherish these divine benefactions.

Worldliness, therefore, does not consist in enjoying God's gifts. Whether those gifts come through beauty or utility, in the fruits of the field or in the pomp of the skies, in the rewards of just and honorable enterprise or in the serene blessedness of home, they are to be prized and heartily accepted as from above. To love these things rightly is to love God, for He is in them; nor have we any right to depreciate His goodness or neglect His presence as they are manifested therein. To live on roots when we should eat bread, to drink water when we should drink tea and coffee, to cut ourselves off from the plenitude of earth when all its objects should minister to our delight, to throw contempt on beauty and taste when these are educating means for the soul, is not to glorify God. This is not to be unworldly. Often it is a disguised worldliness—a worldliness of selfish rule and a cruel imposition on the freedom and gladness of a redeemed life.

Worldliness is a sinful use of the world. And that sinful use is determined by the fact, that it is "lust," and not pure desire, which controls our hearts in their devotion to earthly objects. "The lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but of the world." Our senses, our intellects, our souls, need the world and the things of the world, but need them only and exclusively as Christ's redeemed creatures. If we use them as refined animals, if we use them to gratify our intellects, if we use them to excite mere sensibility or passion, then, they are curses; they are death to the soul. But if in the fear of God, knowing our frailty; if in the love of Jesus, feeling our obligations to his mercy; we humbly and gratefully accept these gifts as divine gifts, and turn them into the instruments of spiritual nourishment, they enlarge and ennoble our christian life. A man's spirit must therefore be above the world, to use the world as an auxiliary to his growth in purity and power. It must be born of God and hallowed by the indwelling of the Holy Ghost, or the world will inevitably be a millstone around his neck, sinking him into irremediable ruin. Draw your lines here broadly and clearly. The world of lust—the world of pride, vanity, luxury, easy content, self-seeking—the world that destroys or even abates the spirit of prayer, and sacrifice, and holy duties—this is the world lying in wickedness and at enmity with God. Such a world is not for us. Not a footstep must touch its circumference. Not an eye must glance towards its charms. Not an ear must open to its blasphemy. But that other world, which belongs to Christ, which includes all that can truly refine and elevate, gives scope to lawful industry, appeals to taste, cheers the heart; this is to be prized and loved for Christ's sake and for Christ's glory.

IMAGINATION AND CHRISTIANITY.

There is not a faculty of our nature more misunderstood and less appreciated than the Imagination. If we treated our physical senses with half the neglect or indifference with which we treat the Imagination, they would soon cease to minister to our daily necessities. The eye, the ear, the hand, would lose their power and value, nor could civilization in its most common forms develop its activity and growth. If we took no greater pains to cultivate the understanding, the memory, the affections, than we employ in behalf of the Imagination, we should soon become a degraded race, incapable of obedience to law, and incompetent to discharge the ordinary offices of social fellowship. By most persons, the existence of the Imagination, and its agency in all the higher culture of mind, are practically ignored. Instead of looking upon it as God's noblest gift to the intellect, designed for a wider realm than any other faculty, and susceptible, perhaps of more beneficent uses than all the other faculties taken together, they regard it as an exceptional endowment, or perhaps as a sort of appendage to the mind that has little or no absolute worth.

Nor is there a much more elevated state of opinion on this subject among our intelligent religious classes. In this respect we are all Puritanic. Not, indeed, that we are as excessive as the Puritans in our hostility to the Imagination and its beautiful creations, but the same elements of thought and feeling, subject to certain modifications, are still alive among Christians. They suppress its activity, repulse its manifestations, and suspect its virtues. But whether open and decided in their aversion to Imagination or not, it is quite obvious that the majority of religious people are insensible to the claims this faculty has upon their regard. They see neither the wisdom nor the love of God in the provisions for its constant and salutary exercise. They have no conscience as to its culture. Indifferent to its lower pleasures, dead to its sublimer joys, they are content to have such souls as God never gave them; such souls, too, as Nature and Christianity can appeal to but partially, and can never fully nourish because one main organ of spiritual nutrition is suffered to lie dormant.

All this is radically wrong. It is in direct violation of God's method to develop and perfect the human soul. The offices of the Imagination, viewed in their simplest connections, are just as necessary to thought, sensibility, will, heroism, purity, as reason and conscience, and hence cannot be neglected without serious injury to mind, character and life. So far from the Imagination being a faculty needed only in some creative task, it is needed every moment to invigorate and cheer the intellect and heart. It is wanted in all our duties, in all our labors, in all our struggles. It is wanted in common things, in our familiar experience, in our daily business, in our friendship and love. Let it be absent, and a man's home is much less a home, the cradle in which his children sleep is an unmeaning symbol, the table is deprived of its moral significance, and the fireside loses its touching expressiveness. Aside, then, from its higher and final ability; minds from those grand openings into the Invisible and the Infinite, which Imagination secures; it is invaluable to our nature on the ground of every-day existence, shedding over our dusty pathway a light of its own, and illuminating landscape and sky with rays it has borrowed from the glory of the Eternal One. A practical argument for its culture may be founded on the facts of ordinary life. What we see around our footsteps, what we feel in the steady pulses of our being, what we suffer whenever experience touches merely the surface of things, what we are compelled to do and to bear simply because we are creatures in the midst of a wonderful creation, these authenticate the claims of the Imagination and establish them in our reverence and love.

According to this view, the Imagination has a practical value in the affairs of common life, so that if we ascended no higher than the platform of daily experience, its aid would be most serviceable in all our exertions. Routine is an essential part of our education in the world, a mechanical observance of the schedule of active engagements cannot be avoided, nor, moreover, would any right minded man wish to escape these obligations. The celebrated Schiller used to say, that he found the great happiness of life to consist in the discharge of some mechanical duty, and without doubt he uttered a truth to which, every one of any experience will respond. But the Imagination must enter into this routine, or we become dead formalists. The tendency of all repetition is to degrade, unless the fresh soul flows into each act and gives it a life above itself. We become the slaves of our own habits, these habits are our boundaries, we are imprisoned within them, and whatever personality we have beyond them is not an integral part of character but a mere possible capacity that knows no activity. To hold these habits subordinate to ourselves, to live in them but not through them, the Imagination must contribute its inspiration to our feelings and aims. Every hour our thoughts must be kept above our work, or they cannot be kept properly on it, and this habitual elevation of spirit can be realized in no other way than by means of Imagination. Labor is a blessing or a curse according to the state of mind in which it is performed. It is a sign of our relations to nature, and through nature to God, and hence its meanings lie in that interpretation which Imagination is competent to put on its bearings upon our present and future destiny. The shallow senses are nothing in work beyond the pressing day or the near to-morrow, and the understanding knows nothing of it besides its economic value. But the Imagination, taught of God, reads the necessities of the soul in all its daily tasks, and irradiates them with the light of an enduring life. It traces the intimate connection between domestic love and the toils of business, and understands how the affections of the heart towards home with its inmates are deepened by sustaining the heat and burden of the day. It comprehends the import of the Night and the Sabbath, the two institutions of rest and repose; and learning from them how activity alternates with quiet and contemplation, it is qualified to appreciate the ultimate relations of labor to that heavenly condition which is promised to our hope and aspirations.

Nor is this all. Imagination is the exponent of every interest in human life. The ideal exists in all things, and only through this ideal can the real be known. Abandon the Imagination, that seizes the ideal and thereby vitalizes the real, and even the material forms are doubly unterialized. The trees are woody skeletons, hard and forbidding; rocks are more rocky; grass is food for cattle; the rainbow is colored water, and the sky a roof over our earthly habitation. Still worse is the effect on our moral sensibilities. Marriage is a symbol. It typifies an union more holy than itself, and is designed to cultivate thoughts and sentiments that lie far beyond the confines of home and its associations. In its most perfect state, the love of a husband for his wife, the love of a wife for her husband, allies itself with God. The earthly feeling rises into the heavenly, and thus completes its beauty. Short of this end it cannot stop and yet nourish the immortal spirit. All marriages are marriages of mere worldly comfort and convenience if they fail to eventuate in this discipline for our future welfare, and every home is only an earthly lodging-place, carved out of rock, fashioned from forests, if the mansions of the Father's house are not pictured on its walls and pre-figured on its altar. The facts of life are all disguised idealities. Hidden from the natural senses, veiled from the most acute understanding, they refuse to yield their secrets, and hour by hour, a dumb procession, they pass on and vanish into the shadows of the impenetrable night. Of all fictions, those of the outward eye and superficial life are most delusive, for they deceive us into the admiration of semblance. Worse than this, they change the temple of the universe into a splendid Mausoleum, in which Death celebrates his triumphs over hearts sepulchred. But such a gigantic mockery, such a miracle of cruelty, is not in life's divine scheme. If the Imagination is inspired from above, it sees into the heart of things. It detects the substance beneath all fugitive forms, and through its awakened instincts, seeking and finding, asking and receiving, recovers the lost patrimony of the soul. The earth is dead no more. Its landscapes live—its mountains, sea, and air. The very graves salute us with their treasured beauty, and out of silence and long-felt sadness come the benedictions of joy and peace.

A christian use of this great faculty is not only perfectly practicable, but it is one of our highest and noblest duties. For our own private strength, we need its best culture. Take, for instance, the evidences of the truth of Christianity. So far as these are eternal, depending on the laws of testimony and bound together link by link in a long chain of satisfactory proof, they are analyzed and accepted by the logical reason. Seen in their true light, these arguments are ample to convince any fair mind that Christianity is from God. There are times, however, when after having been fully persuaded of this fact, the intellect, owing to its infirmities, sees these evidences very imperfectly. Its convictions are staggered, because, as Pascal justly observes, it is impossible "to have a series of proofs incessantly before the mind." The perceptions of the Imagination, its keen eye, its piercing insight, its animating impulse, its realizing power, are therefore needed to brace the reason and support its conclusions. Reason, in such a relation, is never complete or reliable in its absence, for it vivifies its deductions and perfects their influence. Imagination is common sense in its highest form. The observations of the external senses, the impressions on the understanding, the inductive or deductive processes of the reason, reach their final force only when taken up by the Imagination and consummated in their adaptations to experience and conduct. We call it a most practical Christian faculty, capable of the best service to our best thoughts and sentiments, not merely co-operating with reason and conscience, but exalting their offices and enlarging their scope of action. Nor is this all. A Christian Imagination, trained to detect the beauty and glory of the material universe, has a sense of God's presence in Nature, in Life, not possible in other states of mind. All the objects that God has created, are ministers to the redeemed soul, but practically to most Christians they are dead things. And why? The organ through which they are designed to reach us and to bless us, is not developed. The precious gift of the Imagination is suffered to lie dormant, and that, too, when faith, hope, charity, imperatively and absolutely require it in all their agencies. Thus we wrong our souls. Thus we cheat ourselves of invaluable blessings; and thus, too, our Christian manhood is one-sided, partial, bigoted, dwarfed, when it ought to be but a "little lower than the angels."

APPROACHING DOWNFALL OF POPISH ABSOLUTISM.

In our last issue we gave a summary of the condition of the Pope, and of his relations to Italy, France and Austria. It would seem that utter madness has seized the Pope, and also the Austrian Emperor, his principal supporter. Like the dethroned Bourbons, "learning nothing and forgetting nothing"—the principle characteristic of all Romish despotisms—the times have outgrown them, and are ready to shed them off as dead leaves. On the other hand, Napoleon has grown with the times, having become thoroughly imbued with the leading ideas, of modern civilization, as prevalent in Europe and America, before he ascended the throne, and now leads the statesmanship of the old world. But to return to the Pope and the Austrian Emperor. They seem resolved to stand or fall together. The last steamer from Europe informs us that the Pope had resolved to excommunicate King Victor Emanuel, and was about to carry the decision into effect. The Pope has also made another political speech in which he expresses extremely hostile sentiments towards France for the course she has pursued in Italy. So that the French and Sardinian monarchs are both anathematized by the Holy Father. He could not do a better thing for Italian independence, nor indeed, for Protestantism. It has before been hinted that the Sardinian Monarch was inclined to Protestantism. His excommunication may establish an Italian Church, and he at the head. And Francis Joseph is as mad as the Pope. A letter published in the London Times from Milan, states that the news from all parts of Venetia is truly affecting, and awakens the liveliest sympathies of the people in all sections of Italy. At Venice hundreds of innocent persons are being arrested and imprisoned on the slightest pretext, or on the merest suspicion of opposition to the Government. The prisons of Venice are overflowing with victims of Austrian tyranny, and the iron rule of despotism is more cruelly exercized than ever before. The Austrian authorities sent off from Venice, in one day, by one train, eighty, and, by another train, one hundred persons, in chains, without granting the least show of a trial, and on the suspicion of love for their country and hatred of Austria. These prisoners were sent to the dismal fortresses of Moravia and the Danube. Arrests are being made to a fearful extent in all the towns of the Venetian Kingdom, for the purpose of striking terror to the hearts of the inhabitants. In some places a feeble resistance is offered, and the Austrian officials wreak their vengeance by destroying the towns thus presuming to defend their homes and firesides.

Thus, all the historical symptoms of a doomed dynasty are now manifesting themselves in the representative of the House of the Hapsburgs. He is, at the same time, both obstinate and weak. Magenta and Solferino have inflicted an indelible disgrace upon the arms of Austria. These defeats have made manifest to the world that Austria, ruled by her present Emperor, is but a second-rate Power. The prostration of Austrian financial credit has made public the fact that Austria is poor. Weak in arms and poor in pocket, Europe, says the London Times, looks anxiously to discover how this young Emperor, who has so difficult a part to play, demeans himself in the crisis. History has her great men, who have made their fame out of a conjunction such as this. Francis Joseph for a while promised to rise equal to the occasion. When he turned his horse from that square tower upon the Solferino height a great superstition must have been swept out of his head. That force upon which he had been taught to rely with implicit confidence was broken, and he could never again believe it to be invincible. Unhappily, the conviction thus rudely pressed upon him could not be kept a secret. It was shared by the whole world. Italy knows it, and Hungary knows it, and Prussia knows it. It is known to his inferiors, and it is loudly celebrated by them; it is known to his equals, and, while politely ignored, is steadily noted upon. England, France, and Russia cannot but look upon Francis Joseph as a struggling man whose kingdom is in danger of passing away from him.

Under these circumstances, the young Emperor seems to combine in himself all the weakness of Charles I. and all the stupid bigotry of James II. If there be anything which could tide over this crisis in the fortunes of Austria it would be the loyal and energetic assistance of Hungary. This was once not very difficult to obtain. The Hungarians were, traditionally, loyal to the house of Hapsburg. In that nation Francis Joseph had a great source of military power and the materials for many armies. But his opportunity rested upon two conditions. Hungary is warlike, but she is attached to free institutions; she is loyal, but she is to a great extent Protestant. Francis Joseph is a despot and a bigot. The difficulty is precisely that which beset James II. He, like Francis Joseph, had to govern a Protestant and a free people, whose institutions had been assailed and whose religious fears had been aroused, and he ended by being sneered at by shrewd priests as a simpleton who lost three kingdoms for a mass. Here, in our days, is an Imperial pilgrim traveling in the same path. Hungary is as much attached to her free institutions as our fathers were. Yet she has seen them all swept away, and now lies writhing under a tyranny so heavy that it is even an offence to ask to speak her own language in her own Universities. Hungary also is to a great degree Protestant, and her Protestantism is of the most turbulent and uncompromising character. The Calvinism with which tolerance is a crime is rife among the Hungarians, and now finds itself the object of persecution. How has this young Emperor dealt with this valuable but difficult portion of his empire? He has in effect said to it, as was once before said with a fatal issue, "My father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions." Instead of restoring the institutions which had been taken away, Francis Joseph has made even petitions for such a restoration a crime. He has not only punished all agitation for such an object, but he has proscribed all those who indicated any leaning towards a liberal policy for Hungary. He has persecuted the Protestants till even the Roman Catholic priests cry shame, and sympathize with their heretical countrymen, postponing their bonds of faith to ties of blood. A deputation from the Protestants of Hungary had been sent to Vienna to ask for the restoration of the historical rights and the old State recognition of the "Evangelical Church of Hungary;" to demand the revocation of the Patent which proscribes the Reformed religion, and to attempt to induce the Emperor to convoke a Protestant Synod. These men, some of whom are of the highest rank, have been refused an audience by the Emperor, and have been rudely scolded and sent away from Vienna by his Ministers. They are gone back again to Hungary, and as they recount the incidents of their stay in Vienna, and repeat the coarse words of insult addressed to them by M. de Rechberg, they are arousing far and wide that formidable religious zeal which the prosecution of the Seven Bishops created in England. The Bishop of Erlau and his inferior clergy are as anxious as the Calvinistic Synods to take advantage of any opportunity for making demonstrations against Austria, and they subscribe their thousands of pounds to a National Academy with this object. The people are all assuming with ostentation the national costume. Where will all this end? This empire, lately so strong and so powerful, is brought to the brink of ruin. Lombardy is rent away, Central Italy is gone, even the faithful Tyrol is disaffected, Venetia is ardent for revolt, Hungary is awaiting only the first occasion for armed resistance, and Croatia and Servia are ready to unite with her. Yet, in the midst of this stands Francis Joseph, weighed down with the Concordat, his Confessor and Director instigating his every act, persevering, with the indomitable stupidity of the Hapsburgs, in heaping up religious hatreds upon political discontents, and laboring blindly until some casual hand shall fire the pile.

ARRIVAL OF MRS. LAMBUTH.

On Thursday last, says the Nashville Advocate, we had the pleasure of meeting Mrs. Lambuth in the city, on her way from China to Mississippi. She reached New York a few weeks ago, after a voyage of one hundred and nine days from Shanghai. Mrs. L. thinks her health has been benefited by the voyage. She is now spending a few days with Rev. D. C. Kelley and his parents, at Lebanon, Tenn. In 1852 or 1853 we first saw the young missionary and his wife—just married—at Canton, during a session of the Mississippi Conference there. It was known that they had laid themselves on the altar of service for the foreign field, and a peculiar interest was given to the anniversary of the Missionary Society by their presence. Well and largely have the hopes of their usefulness, then expressed, been fulfilled. Mrs. L. brings their two children to be reared and educated under Christian auspices. The moral influence of paganism is too corrupting, and its constant pressure too powerful, for the missionary parents to be willing to bring up their children there. They submit rather to be separated for years, and to have the globe between them and their loved ones. What a view does this give us of the missionary work and spirit on the one hand, and of the world without God on the other.

The little boy, Walter, a handsome and intelligent child, speaks more in Chinese than in English—being a native of that side of the world. His sister, being younger, will have a better start in our language.

There are in company two other natives, genuine specimens; as Post-Oak would say, having "their eyes set cornering;" two boys—though their native frocks and pigtails and cramped feet, with half-inch wooden soles under them, present them to us barbarians more under the appearance of girls. Nee-bau is eleven years old; his Christian name is John R. Lambuth—after the father of the missionary. Dear old father Lambuth's faith hardly took in such an early return, when he gave up his son to China.

Nee-bau is a sprightly, well-set fellow. A phrenologist would give him a good chart. He is amiable and wide-awake. Sier-whoa is thirteen years old, and will do anywhere. Head up, and of royal stride, with a native grand flourish of pigtail. At home in a crowded parlor, and, like Peter among the apostles, the spokesman of his crowd. We asked him his name, and exploded into a hearty laugh as he measured out the syllables—Charles K. Marshall. It brought China to the door. There is but one C. K. Marshall on this side the globe; there ought to be one on the other side, to preserve a balance. Sier-whoa (pronounce the last syllable as the word used in stopping a horse) might make a Mandarin: may he turn out more—a missionary like his own noble countryman, Liew. He takes readily to the class-meeting order, for, soon after our introduction, he came up to us—"You love God?" He is full of life, fine-cheeked, and round-headed.

The Louisiana Conference Missionary Society long since requested two natives to be sent out, not as Coolies, but for Christian training and instruction, free from the pressure of heathenism, and where they might obtain and carry back to their own land some adequate conception of the effect of Christianity upon civilization. The Mississippi Conference has made a similar request. We presume this consignment is for Mississippi. In either case, the boys will probably be educated at Centenary College. There is wisdom in the plan, and, in the long run, economy.

What will our readers think—what will that portion of them who are mothers think—when we add that Mrs. Lambuth expects to recall the 15th of April next! Leaving home and friends once more, and children now, she returns to join her devoted husband, and to continue the mission work. The love of Christ constraineth. Do some complain at giving a little money to this cause, when others are doing and suffering so much in it? In the providence of God, it is yours, reader, to send, while others go to carry the gospel. You stay at home, surrounded by friends and loved ones, and the comforts of Christian civilization; they leave all, and plunge into the moral atmosphere of sin and death. Which has the heavier end of the burden to bear, you or they? How little and light is your sacrifice, compared with theirs! And yet perhaps you complain at what falls to your share in going into all the world and preaching the gospel to every creature.

OPERATIONS OF THE PUBLISHING HOUSE.

The demand for the publications of the House is so great, says the Nashville Advocate, at this time that the extensive machinery at disposal is insufficient to keep up a supply; and all the presses are run two hours extra per day, thus making an aggregate of seven working days per week.

Some idea of the business done by the Publishing House may be formed from the fact that during the past year 47,500 Hymn-Books, of one size alone, (24mo,) have been printed, still the orders are in advance of the supply. Of all the different Hymn-Books, upwards of 93,000 have been printed within twelve months.

The issues of the Advocate, Home Circle, and Sunday-school Visitor are largely in advance of the point at which they stood a year ago; the Home Circle alone having considerably more than double the number of subscribers it possessed in February, 1859.

Few books have been added of late to the General Catalogue; but among these is a very important one—Smith's "Elements of Divinity," a 12mo of nearly 600 pp., which occupies a prominent place in the Course of Study, and which our readers had a notice of last week.

A considerable number of excellent works has recently been published for "outside parties;" and several of this class are now in press. Among these are a 12mo and a 24mo Hymn-Book, and the "Confession of Faith" for the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; "Christian Perfection," a 12mo, and "Can a Christian fall from Grace?" an 18mo, by Rev. S. D. Akin, of the Kentucky Conference; "Practical Sermons," 8vo, by Rev. T. B. Wilson, of Texas; "Lectures on Theology," by Rev. Dr. Beard, of Lebanon, Tenn.; "Rural Minstrelsy and Fancy Pencillings," by W. A. Washington, Esq., of Kentucky; the "Medical Adviser," a portly 8vo of 1130 pp., and an "Essay on Fever," by Dr. R. Thompson, of Nashville; "History of a Lawsuit," by Hon. Ab. Caruthers, of Lebanon, Tenn.; and, "last but not least," "The Pulpit and the Stage," by Rev. C. B. Parsons, D.D., of Louisville—a book anxiously looked for, and for which a heavy sale is predicted.

We are promised—as soon as the work can be done—new editions, revised by our Book Editor, of several highly valuable books: Vinet's Pastoral Theology; Butler's Analogy, with the Dublin University Analysis; Whateley's Rhetoric, and Whateley's Logic. A new edition of the Hymn-Book (18mo) is also in progress, which it is believed will be received with great favor. The Minutes of the Annual Conferences are nearly completed, and will soon be ready for delivery.

Of new editions now ordered to be printed, the number is legion. First comes that prince of books, Watson's Theological Dictionary, the Southern Methodist Publishing House edition, on a superb paper; then Hymn Books ad libitum, and Catechisms ("Scripture," "Cupers's," and "Wesleyan") by tens of thousands. Then follows the "Life of Robert Newton," the "Better Land," "Wesley's Sermons," "Hymn and Tune Book," "Sunday School Library, No. 1. "fifty volumes, and Sunday School books too numerous for recapitulation. These heavy orders for books are not the result of any spasmodic effort to "force the trade," but of a normal demand; and are merely an index to that which may be expected. We predict for the Publishing House a steady, healthy, constant increase of business, and (especially when the Endowment shall be realized) a career of usefulness unsurpassed in the history of religious literature. It is no longer an experiment. Give the Book Agent the sinews of war—in the shape of a fair cash capital—and yet greater things than these can be done for home literature. He ought to have, and wants now, more presses; there is work for them; but money that can be spared out of the business to procure them is also wanted.

CAPTAIN HARRISON AND THE GREAT EASTERN.

The confusion of tongues, and the cessation of the Babel-tower enterprise, checked the pride and ambition of those old Saxon-like ante-deluvians; and the failure, according to the first intention, of the Atlantic Telegraph, and of the Great Eastern, the death of Brunel her engineer, and the drowning of Harrison, her captain, have had a similar effect in these times. The tower of Babel, once given up, was given up for ever. But the Telegraph will yet enable all the ends of the earth to hear from each other during the day; the Great Eastern will yet place a floating city upon the great deep; and moreover, the Pacific Railroad will, during the present generation, unite the coasts of the Atlantic and Pacific. It is surprising to consider what effect the life or death of one man has upon enterprises world-wide in their relations and influences. The London Times, itself the Representative of British Opinion throughout the world, expresses the sentiment that the loss of the great Eastern herself would have caused but little more sensation than the unexpected and unfortunate drowning of her brave old captain. From the time the materials were first being brought together, until she was finally launched, he had been associated with her, in all fortunes. He went through all the agonies of her launch when the question was how the Great Eastern was to be transferred from dry land to the element where she was to find her more permanent home; he took her down the river, and to take her down the river was a task that many persons had pronounced to be impracticable. Through the sand-banks at the mouth of the Thames, and off the southern coast of England, he conveyed her in safety to the Isle of Portland, and the trial was complete. For him, it was a grand triumph. But, alas for human honor and pride, Captian Harrison, the man who had been placed in command of the most magnificent fabric which the wit and hand of man had ever devised to float upon the surface of the waters—of the Great Ship which was worthy of the waves of the Atlantic against which she was destined to struggle, has been drowned in a puddle. He went down in a few feet of water, within a few yards of the shore, where hundreds of persons were standing eager to render him assistance. It is scarcely possible to read the details of the story with common patience. A rough day in a river, a lightly built gig, a puff of wind, and a hitch in a rope's run—such seem to be the chief elements of this lamentable tale.

ARE THEY TO BE PITIED?

The papers are full of accounts of the swindling of unsuspecting countrymen by the sharpers who swarm in all large cities. They are induced to bet, or to lose money to some apparent friend to bet, on what they consider a safe game, and the fool and his money parts forever. Why did they ever get in the habit of betting! Why are they straying into every den in the city, instead of behaving themselves? A man of good habits, who minds his own business, and trades with reputable houses, and keeps proper hours, is scarcely ever victimized. Countrymen who come to the city to spree and splurge, may expect to be robbed, and perhaps murdered. If they love drink, they may expect to be "drugged." The city is blamed as "a sink of iniquity" for these things, by those who know no better; whereas both victims and victimizers are the spawn of other regions, who meet here, both intent on sin. It is sometimes the case, we admit, that well-behaved men are robbed, but not often. The following from the New York Ledger is applicable here:

In this great city there are many thousands of persons who continue to live in what they consider luxury, without any legitimate means of support. They wear dashing clothes, sport fancy hats, are hung with chains and starred with gems—true or false as the case may be—eat and drink as taste or the want of it may dictate, and reside—possibly the police know where.

Now how do these people live? The answer is very simple. Their food is fools. Fools supply them with all the necessaries and luxuries of life. Once upon a time, many of these flashy individuals were as green as their present victims are; they have been taught craft by experience and are profiting by a lesson learned perhaps at the cost of all they possessed.

Are the "greenhorns" victimized by this worshipful brotherhood of swindlers, deserving of much pity? We think not. But for a desire for unlawful gains, they had not been robbed. He who pays ten dollars for a pocket book full of bad bills supposing them to be good, or loses his cash at the patent safe game, or buys a "bargain" at a mock auction, is, in purpose, a cheat. He intends to over-reach the pocket-book dropper and the patent safe man—he buys the watch, inferring from the price that it has been stolen.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

FEBRUARY 29, 1860.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON CITY.

COLONIZATION SOCIETY.

The anniversary meeting on Monday evening, the 16th ult., of this society, held in the National Institute, before a full audience, was attended with no common interest.

The Report, read by the President, the Rev. Dr. Gurley, was satisfactory in its details. The venerable man, grown old in the good cause, has lost none of his zeal, and though his time-honored brow shows its foot-prints, but "The principles of beauty hath no age,

It looketh forth even tho' the eye be dim,
The forehead frost-crowned; yea, it looketh forth
Like holy star on all whom God hath made."

An address by the Hon. Mr. Taylor, of Tennessee, was a complete triumph. He bore us along with his happy train of ideas and masterly strokes of eloquence, which chained his audience and thrilled every sensitive heart. His glowing descriptions of the vast continent of Africa, its magnificent scenery, its varied climate, its soil, natural productions, mighty rivers, lakes, and inexhaustible resources in the vegetable world, were truly beautiful.

And this region of nature's Paradise, the home of the colored man, was shrouded in heathenish darkness, where the light of the civilized world had never reached, nor yet lifted the veil which envelopes them. But this little colony of Liberia, planted upon its shores, was the western star, the beacon of light, to send its rays over that benighted land. Beautiful, indeed, was the thought cherished in the hearts of those who suggested this noble and benevolent plan, inspired by God in the hearts of Americans. They could contemplate with gratitude the prospects which opened before them in the vista of life, with the noblest results for the race. And that this grand enterprise had prospered, notwithstanding all its difficulties; and its hallowed influences were felt, and its light was beginning to permeate, through the dark shades of the moral and intellectual night of the tribes which surrounded them. The time was advancing when the colored man should sit down within his vine-clad bower or cottage door, shaded by the lofty palm, with the Bible—that rich treasure—in his hand, which he clasped to his own heart, more precious than gold, from which he himself had derived a knowledge of the life to come, and all that was true of happiness he enjoyed in this. Touching and beautiful were the outbursts of eloquence as this subject threw its warm flush over his soul, and inspired his theme. The time would come, he said, when this little colony from America would become the centralizing power, the nucleus to regenerate the vast continent of Africa, and from it they would receive the first impulse of civilized life; and be able to draw out and monopolize the rich resources it now contains, and avail themselves of its products and its mines of wealth, to send them over the world. Their banners should be seen to float upon all our seas, and Africa should be known over the world by their own representatives, and ships freighted with their own treasures.

We do not profess to note the address verbally, but its substance, for it is quite impossible to do justice to the noble theme. Who, with a reflecting mind, could listen to such impressive truths without secret emotions kindling in their hearts of holy rapture! God works by means, and that little colony, like those who first stepped upon Plymouth Rock, may yet become as powerful in its slow, sure, and successful progress to elevate their own race with religious freedom, as the other heroes—ours, which now shines among all nations of the earth, with the star-spangled banner floating upon the seas.

The proudest monarch which sits upon the throne pays homage to our sails, and acknowledges our power. Yes, the Pashn of Egypt, in his gorgeous robes, suffers the stars and stripes to be draped over a shop in one of the bazaars of grand Cairo, to draw the attention of our American travelers to its oriental treasures; and we thought, while there,

How beautiful in see it wave
In Egypt's sunny land—
A tribute from our pen to crave
Upon its foreign strand.
Our Eagle, in its rapid flight,
Had reached old Afric's clime;
The stars and stripes appear in sight,
In Cairo now to shine.

And the voluptuous Pashn rolls in a carriage of steam made upon our soil; and soon may the Nile be favored with our boats to substitute the little barges which darken their shores, and slowly make their way up to the Cataracts, to the ruins of Thebes, and Luxor, astonish the world with their magnificent ruins.

The Rev. Dr. Styles followed Mr. Taylor with an appropriate and instructive speech. He had been gathering the statistics of the whole missionary world, and the aggregate of those added to churches in heathen lands amounted to one hundred and seventy thousand; those of the slave population in the South, three hundred thousand, who were attached to all the different denominations of the christian churches—are they kept ignorant of the Gospel?

A Presbyterian missionary from Africa closed the meeting with his interesting remarks, observations, and narrations of his own labors in that wonderful country, and the most happy and lasting impressions of the final results of this mission were made upon the mind, never to be forgotten, while the Hon. Judge McLean, and other notable characters on the stand, listened with the smile of joy upon their venerable faces, at the prospect which brightened for Africa in the future.

LECTURE UPON MATHEMATICS, WITH ITS RELATION TO THE RACES, IN THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE, BY PROF. PEIRCE, OF CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY, MASS.

It is no common privilege to listen to the learned, scientific, and gifted men of our country. They who devote their time and talents to the discovery of truth in mental investigations, for the benefit of the world—they deserve our esteem and gratitude. The merchant, mechanic, agriculturalist, and others, can share the benefits of their labors without their toils.

Prof. Peirce, in his person, is above the middling height, with black hair, a calm and ample brow, with an eye beaming with intellectual light which illumines his striking countenance, the expression of which one feels without tracing the features. He moved and stood with careless grace, like one absorbed in his subject; some, however, called him awkward, but so simple and unpretending, so divested of oratorical display, that to us his manner was peculiarly interesting. He would rest his left hand upon his hip, as if with his right he was solving a mathematical problem. In speech, rather slow; in pronunciation, like that of the English schools. We listened with deep attention to his lecture, which was one of a singular and absorbing character in its mathematical developments concerning the races. Although we would not pretend to be accurate in words, yet may be permitted to communicate ideas as we received them, if but imperfectly. He said there was now one subject startling the notion upon which he thought, scientific men were called to investigate, and give their opinions, and it was their duty to do so independent of parties. He had traced the origin of the science of Mathematics among all the races, and found not one among the African who had ever been distinguished in this branch as an intellectual light to benefit the world. They had mingled with the Egyptians, Arabs, and other nations, as freemen; with the Romans in their days of glory, who had penetrated far into Africa, where relics of their monuments are still seen. He followed out with distinctive clearness the superiority of the white race over all others. The Arab had retained the science in the dark age, without advancing it; but the Africans he thought deficient in the science of numbers. He did not know what might appear; but as yet, in all his researches that fact was made evident to him. His lecture was purely intellectual, suggestive of deep thought, much of which was new and instructive. He classed the science in divisions of time, space, and continuity: Arithmetic, time; Algebra, space; and Geometry, continuity—the last in which the Americans excelled all other nations, and were destined to be the greatest astronomers. The beauty of the science and its results, upon which he dwelt for two evenings, led our thoughts to the universe of God's own works, where the astonished mind was lost in contemplation of its vast magnitude, and the adaptation of this science of continuity for a future development of its still hidden wonders in the world above and around us, and felt to apply the words of a poet who has said:

"An indevout astronomer is mad!
One sun by day, by night ten thousand shine
To light us deep into the Deity."

S. B. THOMAS.

LETTERS FROM TEXAS.—NO. IX.

One of the pleasant things in becoming acquainted with a new place and a new house is to pick up the books that lie scattered about, and, by looking into them, learn to know at once the mind of the author and the taste of the owner. The morning after our arrival at Dr. Boring's, my eyes and hands fell upon a copy of Lamar's poems. First I examined the face that forms the frontispiece: It is a face in which there is both beauty and benevolence, not the face of one whom I should suppose would choose a new and rough country, begirt with difficulties, as the theatre of action, unless it were indeed to realize some poetic dream of living among Camanches, such as filled the soul of the enthusiastic Englishman who, tired of the sophistries of society, sought unadulterated nature in the South Sea Islands, and was cured of his passion for this pristine artlessness, by attending a feast, at which there was a baked young woman placed on the table at the head, a cold missionary at the foot, and a pickaninny-pie, with the toes sticking out, in the middle.

President Lamar, however, carried out his idea of living amidst the green prairie-lands, and moss-covered oaks of Texas, and he was not thrown entirely dependent upon the Camanches for society, but saw cultivated friends gathering around him. Texas seems to have become, indeed, the home of his heart, and he became, after a fashion, the David of Texas, alternately wielding the sword and sweeping the lyre. His conversational powers, I am told, were rare, but rarely exercised; so that it was a common thing when he was talking for those who knew him most intimately to say, "Come, let us go into the parlor—Mirabeau is talking!" From looking over his volume of poems, it appears to me that whatever talent he may have possessed for the noble art of poesy, was frittered away in writing little prettinesses—copies of verses to be presented to young ladies in a crowded drawing-room, verses to accompany a bouquet, or the return of a scented pocket-handkerchief. If song is not "the eloquence of truth," it is a mere "tinkling cymbal." A poet may be allowed to think the hands of one lady whiter than snow, and her eyes brighter than the stars; but if he assume these as facts concerning several, we begin to doubt him altogether. Whether Laura were married or single, or whether she had any real existence at all, is a matter of small moment, since, whether a fiction or a fact, she has awakened such wonderful melody in the soul of Petrarch; and her name was the "sesame" that was to open all the treasure-house and enchanted caverns of that great mind; but had these caverns been as easily opened by "barley," or "wheat," or "oats," we might doubt if the jewels glittering within were not mere glass and composition. One has no objection to a poet loving, even if he should, "ot different times, love several different women." But one likes to see him have no doubt himself as to the object of his passion, and when you turn over Gen. Lamar's poems, and find Lines to Sara, and to Cholris, Lines to Selage and to Doris, you are very apt to come to the conclusion that the following is the truest of his effusions:

"Oh! do not say that I'm to blame,
'Tis nature's taint that made me so:
Heaven knows my love's a constant flame,
But whom I love—I do not know."

In the book are some lines to his wife, which one reads with pleasure, not because they are particularly poetical, but because you think he has settled the point now, and has decided that there is somebody who has awakened genuine feeling within him; this breeze of true feeling blows aside the scented pocket-handkerchiefs, and one gets a glimpse of the inner nature.—When I read this poem I had but lately arrived in Texas, and had no very exalted opinion of the sylvanic pleasures of the country, so that it produced rather a curious effect upon me when I read the following lines:

"We'll rise, my love, at early dawn,
We'll ramble down the dewy lawn."

The picture is pretty enough, poetically considered; but when in addition to damp feet, you contemplate the possibility of scaring up a tarantula, or finding a centipede upon the back of your neck, you involuntarily exclaim: "No more of that, Hal, an' thou love me!" But how are you horrified to discover that he proposes not a morning walk only, but a whole day spent in the country:—

"And hand in hand, and side by side, We'll frolic all till eventide."

The best thing in the volume, and one that, to my mind, evinces true and deep feeling, is a piece on the death of his child. These lines speak to the heart, because they come from it:—

"You tell me that my grief is vain,
My child will not return;
No earthly tears can wake again
The ashes of the urn:
You tell me, too, that she is gone
To regions blest and fair;
And wrong it is her loss to mourn
Since she's an angel there.

"I know it all—I know it all,
Yet still with grief oppress
My spirit sighs for her recall,
And will not be at rest:
I cannot, cannot give her up—
I am not reconciled;
Oh, take away the bitter cup,
And bring me back my child!"

JANE T. H. CROSS.

NORTH ALABAMA CORRESPONDENCE.

Thanks to the Editor—New Orleans Christian Advocate—Rev. J. G. Wilson—Revival at Florence—Conversion of College Students—American Cyclopædia—Hickock's Moral Science—Educational Repository.

Allow me to thank you for your kind tender of the "hospitalities of your columns." Intimately connected as I was with the inception of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, I have ever looked with deep interest to its success. It was with great trepidation that the project was undertaken, and certainly not without opposition. It soon, however, took a high position, and to the present time has maintained it. I have ever regarded its first editor as not only one of the most fearless and accomplished writers in the Church, but as one of the most prudent editors. His successor has certainly kept up the interest and dignity, the independence and purity of the paper. "Esto Perpetua."

Dr. Erwin has been succeeded by the Rev. J. G. Wilson, a gentleman of solid attainments, of large experience, and of a reputation surpassed by few educators in our Church. A personal acquaintance with Mr. Wilson, and with his success as a teacher, enables me to say that, for high order of intellect, for thorough and accomplished scholarship, and for indefatigable perseverance, he is a worthy successor of the noble and lamented Erwin. We doubt not the success of the Huntsville Female College under so noble and gifted a President.

Recently our town has been visited by a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit. A revival, which has numbered not less forty converts, has been prevailing for more than three weeks. The students of our College have shared largely in this work.—More than half the conversions were among them. May we not anticipate an increase in the ministry from these college revivals? Such has been my observation, and such are my hopes in reference to this—one of the most interesting revivals I have witnessed. I recently received statistics of preachers converted during their connection with college, and from them I learn that many of the most eminent ministers of other denominations were converted while at college. When our Methodist colleges fail to advance the cause of God directly and powerfully, they become unworthy of patronage and confidence.

I have received the eighth volume of Appleton's great work, "American Cyclopædia," and, really, I think the complaints that have been urged against it, on the ground of abolition tendencies, are undeserved. It is a great and, as far as I can see, an impartial and national work. A circular from them expresses the deepest regret that the names of such men as Bishops Andrew and Bascom have been omitted, and that they shall appear in an appendix.

I notice that Hickock's Moral Philosophy has been introduced at the South. According to this writer, "the master is bound to give to the slave the same freedom that he himself possesses, as soon as he can train the slave for the duties of the citizen and the christian." And again: "Every man in the community is bound to exert his influence, in a wise and prompt manner, and as occasion may offer, both by speech and through the press and legislation, to abolish the unrighteous system of slavery." To use a favorite quotation of your predecessor, it occurs to me that "there is a dead fly in the ointment." I think the Appletons have published a work much less objectionable, by Hubbard Winslow, and would commend it to those Southern schools that are determined to use Northern books. The Appletons have never published an abolition work such as I regard Hickock's.

The Educational Repository and Family Monthly has been received. It is a creditable number. Dr. Thomas has an excellent article on school government, and Dr. Wightman on the college course is learned and polished. I hope the enterprise may be a great success.

R. H. RIVERS.

Florence Wesleyan University, Feb. 15th, 1860.

LETTER FROM MR. SMITHSON.

Washington, D.C. Feb. 14, 1860.

MR. EDITOR: It affords me no little pleasure to announce to the readers of your excellent paper, the fact that I have received a number of responses to my late appeal in behalf of "our Washington City Church," from the ministers and laymen of the Church, throughout the South; and while the number of responses received are encouraging, nevertheless they are not of sufficient magnitude to insure success. I had really hoped—indeed, I pretty confidently expected that, at least, one half of our preachers would have promptly responded to my appeal; but thus far, only about one hundred and twenty have been heard from; and from ladies and laymen, about twenty-two. Now, brethren and friends, I am unwilling to abandon this enterprise. The work is of too much importance to the whole Church to give it up, because of discouragements now and then. I am satisfied that there is a feeling abroad, throughout the South, in favor of this great and important work, and that by-and-by there will be a united, entire and zealous action on the part of "our people," in behalf of its triumphant accomplishment. Impressed as I am with this belief, I can never consent to abandon a work which is fraught with as much interest to the Church of my choice—a work which contemplates such glorious results in the proclamation of the gospel of peace; in the strengthening of Christian union, and in lifting up the consecrated cross to the anxious gaze of countless millions that congregate and mingle within the precincts of the metropolis of the Union.

I therefore must renew my appeal to the friends of the Church, and affectionately urge them to remit me, at once, five dollars, and I will send them, per mail, postage paid, in return, three copies of my book, the "Methodist Pulpit South." Let none disregard this call, but with promptness and unanimity, let us have a response from all.

It is my desire that all the conferences may be alike interested and identified with this great and national work, and that when the Church is built, let us make arrangements for all the Conferences to supply the station alternately. What say you, dear brethren, to such an arrangement? In order that the friends of the enterprise may know something of the feeling that is now pervading the minds of many, I enclose you, Mr. Editor two letters, (I receive a great many others of the same sort) touching the work, which you will please publish in connection with this communication. I trust and believe that their publication will do good. The Church must go up this year The interest of Southern Methodism demands it. I am in earnest about this matter, and I want all who love the Church to be alike interested. Yours most truly,

WILLIAM T. SMITHSON.

TO THE LOVERS OF THE BIBLE.

Have you any of your Lord's money by you or within your reach? If so, He asks the use of a portion of it to be employed in the dissemination of His word. Souls are perishing for the lack of it. Several have lately died in the agonies of despair, and plunged into the abyss of unutterable woe, when you might have instrumentally saved them if you had been a faithful steward, and had not buried or mis-spent your Lord's money. How many more do you propose to let pass through your hands to perdition? What excuse have you made out to offer to God at death and at the judgment for neglecting to aid in circulating his word?

My brother, my sister, here is an opportunity of doing good. You have often said I wish I could be useful. Now, here is an opening. But, say you, "you want money." Whose money? Yours? No—the Lord's.

The Alabama Bible Society, at Montgomery, has been supplying fifteen counties, and is about greatly to enlarge its field. This Society, through me as their agent, ask help to supply the destitute families of the State with the Bible. Is this a praiseworthy work? Is it your duty to engage in it? If it is, pray for its success, and be so kind to yourself and the cause of truth as to send me a donation.

Enclose your contribution to C. D. OLIVER, Auburn, Ala., with your name.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

AUGUSTA MISSION.—Rev. J. Boyer writes that the quarterly meeting at Enon, Feb. 11 and 12, notwithstanding rain and high water, was profitable. During the quarter three had been received into full connection, one on probation, one by letter, eighteen children and five adults baptized. The people are providing liberally for the support of the mission. We are glad to see that the children are being baptized. Let no minister fail to attend to this.

HILOXI.—We had sacrament yesterday; commenced our meeting Saturday night; had Bros. Randle and Long with me; we had three conversions, four joined the church, and eight came forward for prayers repeatedly; a crowded house; prospect for better times.

M. D. T.

LITERARY NOTICES.

THE ELOHIM REVEALED in the Creation and Redemption of Man. By Samuel J. Baird, D. D., Pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Woodbury, N. J. Philadelphia: Lindsay & Blakiston. 1860. For sale in New Orleans by John C. Morgan & Co., Exchange Place, adjoining the Post Office.

This is a large octavo of nearly seven hundred pages, handsomely printed in large, very clear type, on clean white paper, and bound in muslin. Dr. Baird is an Old-School Presbyterian, and, moreover, an Old School Calvinist. The Westminster Confession is his stand point and symbol. The doctrine of the work is, "God revealed through an eternal plan." From this Calvinistic stand-point he elaborates the doctrine of the Trinity—the eternal plan—the providential administration—the history of Adam—the law of God and the nature of sin—the origin of evil and the philosophy of punishment—covenants, redemption, righteousness, and imputation. Dr. Baird will none of the modern modifications which have sought to relieve the repulsiveness of old-fashioned Calvinism. Edwards, McCosh, Hopkins, Beecher, Barnes, the New Haven divines, Stuart, are all wrong in his estimation. He is no doubt an honest and thorough Calvinist, and, as a matter of course, does not seek to soften what he regards as the truth. He is, however, kind in spirit toward those who differ with him. This is well, for but few will agree with him. If an attempt is to be made to revive old-fashioned Calvinism, let there be no mistake in the platform. Let the doctrine of the Confession be avowed, distinctly and specifically. Dr. Baird does this, with one important omission; but this spoils the whole affair. He is thorough, until he gets through with the "elect," but says nothing about the "reprobates." He passes them by." But, according to him, that is God-like. He ought to explain, however.

THE HISTORY OF SOUTH CAROLINA from its first European Discovery to its erection into a Republic, with a Supplementary Book, bringing the Narrative down to the present time. By William Gilmore Simms, L. L. D., author of "The Yemassee," "Eutaw," "Cassique of Kiawah," "The Scout," etc. New and Revised Edition. Redfield, New York: 1860. For sale in New Orleans by John C. Morgan & Co., Exchange Place, adjoining the Post Office.

Dr. Simms is well known throughout the country, as one of the finest poets in the South, as a popular writer of fiction, and as a historian of high merit. He is regarded as one of the leaders in the movement, begun not many years since, but now progressing wonderfully, for the development of the literary power of the South. South Carolina has an interesting history. In the olden time it was Spanish and French, like that of Louisiana. Its old Creole population were Huguenots; however, which cannot be said of those of Louisiana. Dr. Simms is well qualified to give us the history of this ancient and honorable State.

ELEMENTS OF DIVINITY.—A Series of Lectures on Biblical Science, Theology, Church History, and Homiletics. Designed for Candidates for the Ministry and other Students of the Bible. By George Smith, F. S. A., etc., author "Sacred Annals," "History of Methodism," etc. Revised by Thomas O. Summers, D. D. Nashville, Tenn.: Southern Methodist Publishing House. 1860. For sale at the New Orleans Depository.

Here is a book we have long wished to see. It very justly occupies the place in our Course of Study once unworthily occupied by Ralston's Elements. It is divided into thirteen lectures, as follows: The Genuineness, Authenticity, Inspiration, and Authority of the Books of Scripture; the historical books of the Old Testament; the New Testament books; the Being, Attributes and Person of God; the Redeeming Work of Christ; the Doctrine of the Holy Spirit; The Old Testament Church; Christian Church to the time of Constantine, Christian Church from Constantine to the Reformation; the Proper Use of Language; Biblical Criticism and Interpretation; Preaching.

This work was brought out at the instance of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is highly recommended by our Book Editor, as a suitable work for ministerial study, preparatory to the study of more elaborate works on the several subjects treated. Dr. Smith's reputation as a writer, both in England and the United States, is well known.

THE WAY TO HEAVEN; or, Penitent's Manual and Pilgrim's Guide-Book. By Rev. J. E. Joyner, of the Virginia Annual Conference. Richmond, Va.: Published by Chas. H. Wynne. 1860.

The appearance of such books as this is an encouraging sign. There is not enough of the "what-shall-I-do-to-be-saved" philosophy in our religious literature these times. This book is intended to enlighten the serious; to instruct and encourage penitent persons; to guide and edify those newly converted; and to assist young ministers and others in the delicate, spiritual work of teaching others what they must do to be saved. The book is full of what is popularly called "religion," and he who reads it will be apt to have more "religion" than before.

LYRICS AND OTHER POEMS. By S. J. Donaldson, jr. Philadelphia: Lindsay and Blakiston. 1860. For sale in New Orleans by John C. Morgan & Co., Exchange Place, adjoining the Post Office.

This is a beautiful book, printed well, on delightful cream-colored paper. As to the poetry, we have not read it, except portions here and there. We have not found any fine poetry as yet, though we have found some that is pleasant.

DOMESTIC.

Probable War with Mexico.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The dispatches and documents and the letter of Gov. Houston to the President, represent the condition of affairs on the Texas frontier as deplorable, and urge the Government to take prompt measures for suppressing the outrages. Gov. Houston intimates that if the Government does not take immediate action action against Mexico, he shall chastise Mexico for the outrages which the Mexican authorities were a party to.

The Pacific Postal Service.

The Post-office Committee of the Senate are about to report a bill to carry the mails between the Atlantic and Pacific States by the overland routes, with the condition that the letter mail shall go through in twenty days, to leave semi-weekly. The newspaper mail to be carried through in thirty days, and to leave only weekly. The contracts to run three years from the 1st of July next. Bids will also be invited to carry the mail by the water and isthmus routes, from New York or New Orleans, semi-weekly or weekly. Bids for more or less frequent service will also be received.

The Musquitoe Protectorate Abandoned.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald says that Mr. Wycke, the British Minister to Nicaragua, has finally negotiated a treaty whereby the British Government surrenders the Musquito protectorate to Nicaragua—the British Government to receive an annual subsidy from that of Nicaragua of $5,000.

Slavery in the Territories.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The Democratic members of the Senate held a caucus on Saturday evening to consider what course they should pursue in Congress in relation to the question of protection of slavery in the Territories. Senator Brown's resolution, providing for an immediate slave code for the Territories, received but five votes, given by Messrs. Mason, Clay, Chestnut, Johnson, of Arkansas, and Brown, of Mississippi.—The resolution presented in the Senate by Senator Davis then came up, and was carried without a division, and there is little doubt that it will command all the Northern and Southern Democratic votes, except those of Senators Douglas and Pugh.

Consul to Vera Cruz.

Col. Pickett, the newly appointed Consul to Vera Cruz, goes out with instructions from Washington to adopt all necessary and legal steps to meet the contingency which may arise in case Miramon attacks Vera Cruz.

A Printer at last.

The House succeeded to-day in electing a printer by a very close vote. Ex-Governor Ford, of Ohio, is the successful candidate.

Senate Proceedings.

In the Senate Mr. Davis presented a memorial from the Legislature of New Mexico, asking for the organization of Arizona under a territorial government. Referred to the Committee on Territories.

Later from Mexico.

The Mexican war steamer Wave arrived at Minatitlan on the 7th of February, and, in pursuance to orders from Miramon, dismantled the fort at the mouth of the Coatzacoalcos river. She arrived again from Vera Cruz on the 11th February, and reported that Miramon had issued a proclamation ordering all foreigners to leave Vera Cruz within four days. News had also been received overland at Minatitlan, that a proclamation had been issued, ordering all Peons to be pressed into service, and that civil war was raging in Ayeyuchen. A detachment of marines from the sloop-of-war Brooklyn had possession of the steamer Alleghany Belle.

Important Orders from the War Department.—Col Lee ordered into Mexico—Col. Walker ordered to Chihuahua.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—The official information received by the War Department from Gov. Houston has satisfied the Government of the importance of taking immediate measures for the protection of our frontier, and of chastising Cortina and his band of marauders.

The War Department has, therefore, sent orders to Col. Lee, the commander of the military department of Texas, expressly directing him to "pursue Cortina into Mexico, if necessary, and to capture him and his band wherever they may be found, whether in or out of Mexico.

There are at present six hundred and forty-two men scattered along from Fort Brown to Fort Clark.

Cortina is believed to be an American, and it is also believed that there are more Americans than Mexicans among his followers.

The authorities of Chihuahua have appealed to President Buchanan for the services of our troops, which are stationed near the frontier of that State, for the protection of American citizens and property in that State against the numerous marauding bands which are alleged to be in the interest and service of the Miramon Government, and were drilled and organized by Miramon's officers for the purpose of defeating the Liberals and driving out the Americans.

In consequence of these representations orders have been sent to Col. Walker, in command of the force at Fort Bliss, directing him to march his force into Chihuahua, for the purpose of protecting the lives and property of American citizens in that State.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

ADVERTISING IN THE ADVOCATE.

The business public are slowly learning that the Advocate is THE GREAT ADVERTISING PAPER OF THE SOUTH AND WEST. Advertisements in it are more valuable than in any half dozen other papers.

1.—It has the largest circulation west of Charleston, and South of Cincinnati; larger than any other two weeklies in New Orleans, and is increasing rapidly—will, in a few years, double its present circulation.

2.—Of medium size, and not crowded with advertisements, an advertisement is not lost in it, but can be easily found.

3.—In our "Editorial Notices," which we give to every advertisement, we specify the page and column on which an advertisement may be found. We seek to make every advertisement valuable to the advertiser and to the paper.

4.—The circulation is spread out over Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, principally; Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas, partially.

5.—It is the only weekly of large and widely-spread circulation in the great and growing metropolis of the South.

THE METROPOLITAN CHURCH.—Read Mr. Smithson's letter. It is a shame that the wealthy South does not send him money enough in one month. Do send it along, friends. Let some rich man give $25,000, and give his name to the Church. We have not room for the letters alluded to.

A PREACHER ROBBED.—We are sorry to learn that Rev. C. D. Oliver was recently robbed on the Alabama river of three hundred and sixty dollars.

BIBLES! BIBLES!—At 163 Camp street. See fifth column, this page.

1085 BALES COTTON were burned yesterday morning at the Union Cotton Press in this city. Loss over $50,000. Supposed incendiarism.

MARRIAGES.

"It is not good for man to be alone."

In Livingston Parish, near Pontchatoulas, on Wednesday, February 22d, by Rev. James D. Parker, Mr. JAMES H. LOVELAND and Miss SAMANTHA J. SETTOON.

May happiness attend you here,
Each day, and week, and month, and year;
And when your earthly joys are peel,
May heaven crown you both at last.

Jan. 24th, at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. J. Boyes, Mr. JACKSON YOUN to Miss SARAH STAFFORD.

Feb. 16th, by Rev. A. R. Hines, Mr. A. R. JOHNSTON to Miss L. R. CARLISLE, daughter of Rev. James G. Carlisle, of the Mississippi Conference.

RECEIPTS, BY THE POST-OFFICE,

From February 21 to February 28, 1860.

A—T S Abernathy, jr., $2; W A Austin, $2; M A Arrington, $1 75; T S Abernathy, sen., $2; W C Ashley, $5.
C—J L Cotton, $2.
D—M E Davis, $4; Derby & Jackson, $12.
G—W F Garnett, $1 75.
H—W C Hearn, $25; G Hawkins, $2; A R Hines, $2; T A Hopkins, $4; L A Harper, $2 50.
J—H J Jones, $1 75.
L—I A Landy, $1 70; W E M Linfield, $5; W Lord, $10.
N—E Nicholson, $1 66.
O—J N Owens, $4; C D Oliver, $2.
P—R T Parrish, $5; R Parvin, $5.
S—A W Smith, $3 85.
T—C W Thomas, $3.
W—W H Wild, $1; F H Wardlaw, $2.
Y—N B Young, $11.

OUR OWN NOTICES.

TAKE TWO.—We frequently hear it said, or have it written to us, "I wish to take your paper, but I am already taking the ——— Advocate, and I should regret to give up an old friend." Of course you should not. But why, in this rich and prosperous country, cannot afford to take two good papers? That practice is a quarter century behind the times. Sustain your own paper by all means; but every body needs a good paper from New Orleans, whatever else they may have. Send for the New Orleans Advocate.

A CITY EXAMPLE. A brother who is a clerk in one of the largest dry goods establishments in the city, and superintendent of a Sunday-school, and who has no leisure at all, is constantly bringing us the names and money of new subscribers to the Advocate. "Go thou and do likewise."

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.—They are coming in at the rate of nearly a hundred a week. Cannot each preacher send on one each week. Let the laity—ladies and gentlemen—join in the work.

QUERY?—Will our agents and friends not work for such a paper as we present this week?

COMMERCIAL.

MONDAY EVENING, February 27th, 1860.

We condense the following statement from the New Orleans Price Current of the 25th instant:—

Our market generally has been well supplied during the past week, and a fair amount of business has been done in the leading articles. Cotton has moved off quite freely, notwithstanding advanced freights, and the unfavorable weather which has prevailed during a portion of the time, and we have noticed increased transactions in Sugar, with less steadiness in the market. In Tobacco, however, operations have continued on a limited scale, and the market for some descriptions of Western produce has worn a heavy appearance.

COTTON.—With respect to prices, we have to remark that they have been quite irregular, and still more in favor of buyers for the grades below strict Middling, though most of the transactions have been within the range of our quotations.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September, (excluslve of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 1,645,715 bales, against 1,339,872 bales to same date last year, and the increase of the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 638,714 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 512,757 bales to Great Britain, and of 69,343 to France, while to other foreign ports there is a decrease of 39,165 bales.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	6 @ 7	Good Middling	11¾@12
Ordinary	7½@ 8½	Middling Fair	12⅝@12¾
Good Ordinary	8¾@ 9¾	Fair	—@—
Low Middling	10 @10¾	Good Fair	—@—
Middling	10¾@11½	Good and Fine	—@—

SUGAR.—The sales of the week amount to 8000 hhds. We quote for Inferior and Refining 3½ to 5; Common to Good Common 5¼ to 6¼; Fair to Fully Fair 7 to 7¾; Prime to Choice 8 to 8¾; Centrifugal and Clarified 6¼ to 9¼ cents per pound. The above quotations apply to round lots, but small orders of 5 hhds and under, could not be filled without paying a further advance of ¼ to ½ per pound.

MOLASSES.—Total receipts of the week 10,000 barrels. The prices obtained during the week were: Inferior to Fair, 32 to 38 cents per gallon; and Prime to Choice, 39 to 40½ cents; half barrels, 38 to 45 cents per gallon.

FLOUR.—About 6,000 bbls have been sold during the past week, at from $6 00 to $6 25 for superfine, $6 25 to 7 00 for ordinary to good extra, and $6 75 to $7 50 per bbl. for choice extra brands.

GRAIN.—The receipts of Corn continue light. About 13,000 sacks have been sold at from $0 75 to 0 85 for ordinary, and $0 95 for good white. Oats have been in moderate request at 60c to 65c per bushel for good to prime St. Louis. Bran sells at $1 60 to $1 75 for ordinary to choice lots. Wheat sells at $1 15 per bushel for prime red.

PORK.—The principal sales reported through the week were at $17 75 to $18 50 per bbl. for Mess.

BEEF.—We quote Prime Mess at $14 00 per bbl. for extra brands.

BACON.—Shoulders 8¼ to 8; Ribbed Sides 10 to 10¼; Clear Sides 11 to 11¾; Sugar-cured Hams 12 to 12½ cents per pound.

LARD.—We quote 10 to 10½c for prime to choice prime, in tcs., and 12¾ in 12c. for kegs.

BUTTER.—Western generally selling at 14 to 18 cents per pound, according to quality; and Cheese 9 to 9½c.

RAGGING AND BALE ROPE.—We quote Kentucky Bagging at 13 to 15 cents per yard; India Bagging, 11¼ to 12½c; Bale Rope, hand spun, 7¾ to 8¼, and machine made, 8¼ to 8¾ cents per pound.

GUNNY BAGS.—Limited parcels sell at 10 cents for light and 11 to 11½c. to heavy and extra heavy bags.

COFFEE.—We quote fair at 11 to 11¾, and prime at 12¼c. per pound.

NAVAL STORES.—A good demand for Spirits Turpentine, mostly on speculation. Sales of some 600 bbls at 43 to 44. Latterly holders have been asking 47½ to 50c per gallon, the market closing at the outside rate. Of Rosin some 3000 bbls have sold at $1 50 to $1 50 for Common and No 2, and $1 75 to $2 per bbl of 280 pounds for Low No. 1. The finer qualities are scarce and in request. Tar dull and nominal. Stock of some 5000 bbls on hand.

LIVE-STOCK.—Beef Cattle—Western, 7 to 9½c. per lb. net; Texas—ordinary to fair $15 to 10, and choice $20 to 30 per head.

Hogs, selling at 7 to 8½c. per pound net.

Sheep—Selling at $3 50 to $0 00 per head.

Veal Cattle—Selling at $8 00 to $11 00 per head.

Milch Cows—Dull, at $30 to $85 per head.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

NOTICE.—Persons having business with the NEW ORLEANS DEPOSITORY, will please direct to KEENER & PARKER.

ALABAMA CONF. MONUMENT COMMITTEE.

By reference to the published minutes of the last session of the Alabama Conference, it will be seen that a Committee was appointed to erect a suitable monument over the grave of the Rev. J. N. Maffit. That Committee consists of the Rev. Messrs. J. T. Heard, A. H. Mitchell, and E. Baldwin. The object of this communication is to call the attention of your readers to this fact, and solicit their contributions for the above purpose. Rev J. T. Heard resides at Shabuta, Miss., and the other members of the Committee reside in Mobile, to any of whom contributions may be sent.

Let the numerous friends and admirers of Maffit respond to this call.

THE COMMITTEE.

Sunday School Convention of the Mississippi Conference.

The Committee of Conference has fixed upon Wednesday, the 6th of May as the time, and Vicksburg as the place, of meeting:

All Ministers of the Gospel, and all Superintendents and Teachers of Sunday Schools, are invited to attend. Presiding Elders in the bounds of our Conference will please urge each Sunday School in their bounds to send one delegate to the Convention.

B. JONES, Sec. of Committee.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

The new Methodist Episcopal Church, at New Iberia, La., will be dedicated to the service of Almighty God on the third Sunday (18th) in March next.

Dedicatory Sermon by Rev. J. B. Walker, D.D., of New Orleans.

T. B. WHITE, Pastor.

New Iberia, La., Feb. 15, 1860.

SITUATION WANTED.

A YOUNG LADY, a successful and experienced Teacher of Music, French, and the English branches—having taught for years, North and South—desires a situation as Principal of a Female Seminary, or as head of the Music Department. Good salary expected. Address Rev. C. C. Gillespie, New Orleans, who will forward communications.

A SOUTHERN LADY, competent to teach the English branches and Music, wants a situation either in a family or a school.—For particulars apply at this office.

ALABAMA DEPOSITORY.

No. 11 Water Street, Mobile, Alabama.

The notes given to the Alabama Book and Tract Society are in my possession; many of them are now due. Shareholders whose notes are due, will confer a great favor by paying the same at once.

Those entitled to the Genealogical Bible can get it on application at the Depository in Mobile. When ordering it by steam boat or railroad, please remit $1 to pay expenses.

JOHN F. EARLY, AGENT,

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Greenville Dist.—Second Round Quarterly Meetings.

March—Upper Deer Creek, 4th; Middle Deer Creek, 11th; Lower Deer Creek, 17th and 18th; Greenville colored mission, 25th.

April—Tallula, 1st; American Bead, 7th and 8th; Bolivar, 14th and 15th; Greenville 21st and 22d; Duncan Plantations, 28th and 29th.

May—Sunflower, 5th and 6th.

Preachers' Meeting, third Wednesday in March, at Greenville

WM. B. HINES, P. E.

THE MINUTES OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE are now ready at Children's Column.

FICTURES.—NO. III. BY THE EDITOR.

Creation of the Heaven and the Earth.

The Editor has told the little children who read the Children's Column about "Chess," and about the creation of "Light."—Now he hopes you will all get the Advocate, and sit down, and be quiet, and let us talk about the "creation of the heaven and the earth." What! Were there no heaven and no earth when the light was created? No; not such as we now see. It was all earth and water mixed up together. But what is the "earth?" Why, it is the dry land upon which you walk, and out of which the corn and the cotton, and the grass and the trees grow.—And what is the "heaven?" The heaven we are now talking about is not the place where the good people go after they die. Well, what is it, then? Why, it is the "firmament." But what is the firmament? Why, it is the air, or the atmosphere above us, and the sky. When you look down, you see the earth; but when you look up, you see the heaven. In that heaven you see the sun, and the moon, and the stars. But how did God make the heaven and the earth? The Bible says: "And God said, 'Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters.' And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament, and it was so. And God called the firmament Heaven." "And God said, 'Let the waters be gathered together into one place, and let the dry land appear.' And God called the dry land Earth, and the gathering together of the waters called he Seas." That is what the Bible tells us about it in the first chapter of Genesis. Turn to that chapter, or get your mother or some friend to turn to it, and read the sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth verses. So the heaven and the earth were made by dividing the waters. Part of the waters was lifted up in clouds, and when it rains the water comes out of the clouds. The other part of the waters was gathered together into the sea. But it seems that the rains would soon pour all the waters out of the clouds, and then the waters would all be in the seas and rivers and creeks. So it would, but fogs and mists are constantly rising and forming new clouds.

What a grand sight it must have been when this beautiful heaven above us was first lifted up; and when this great big earth first floated up to the top of the waters, and rose above them! But we were not there to see it; nor was any man, woman, or child then living; for God had not yet created Adam and Eve. That was thousands of years ago; and yet, in spring-time the earth looks as new as ever; and every morning the heaven looks like it had just been made the night before.

COUSIN HANNAH.

Let me tell you about my pretty cousin Hannah B——. She was a beautiful girl; her hair was dark and long, and hung in flowing curls about her neck; her smile was so innocent and sweet; to see her was to like her, to love her. Her heart was so kind, so tender: sometimes I used to sing to her and her little sister, and their eyes would fill with tears as I sang of "Him who did salvation bring." Hannah was taught to pray, and every evening she kneeled down, with the millions of other God's children, and said, "Our Father." She used to say, "Pa, why don't you pray?" and this she said so often that he learned to pray too. She loved her Bible, and read it every day. How much her Pa and Ma loved her, and thought she would soon grow up to be a good and beautiful woman, and a comfort to them when they grew old and feeble! But, oh, it was not to be so! Our Father, who cares for her, meant to take her—to take her to himself, to his own blessed and beautiful Heaven. Very early in the spring-time, when the first little buds began to bloom, and the little birds began to sing, she fell sick with a burning fever, and from day to day grew worse, until her strength was gone. She knew she was going to die, but she knew how sad it would make all that loved her to say so; so she said, "Mother, read to me Regan's Request." The book was handed to her; with trembling fingers she turned to the piece, and handed her mother the book, and her mother read it with almost a breaking heart, yet with a firm voice:

Regan's Request.

"Come and take me to the door,"
Said a pale, a poor sick child;
"Let me see the trees once more,
Now the air is soft and mild."

"Let me see the spring and brook;
Take me, take me to the door;
Let me on the green fields look—
I can see them but once more.

"Let me look at the bright sun;
Let me see the clear blue sky;
Let me see the young lambs run;
Let me see the blue-bird fly.

"Let me see the things I love;
I must bid them all good-bye;
Let me look at the white dove,
That will live, but I must die.

"Let me look on the green grass,
Let me see the pink and rose;
Then, O then! all, all will pass,
And my eyes in death will close.

"Tell me, James, oh! tell me, dear,
Do the birds sing in the trees?
What is that low sound I hear?
Hark! it floats on the soft breeze.

"Can the birds sing such a song?
Do you see them in the tree?
Let me stay here all day long,
You can hold me on your knee.

"Hark! who is it sings so wild?
Some one said, 'Come up, my dear;
Here are wings for you, my child;
Take them and you need not fear.'

"James, oh, James! what makes it dark?
Has the sun gone out of sight?
Then I thought I heard the lark,
But it cannot be—'tis night!

"Tell me, have I been here long?
You may take me from the door.
Hark! I hear that sweet, sweet song—"
Then she slept—to wake no more.

Then she said, "Sing to me what Cousin J. used to sing—

'How tedious and tasteless the hours
When Jesus no longer I see,' ending with—

'Or take me to thee upon high,
Where winter and clouds are no more.'

Her mother has a sweet voice, and poured out the song in tender tones, that cheered the heart of Hannah.

The last request she made was, that her Pa would promise her that he would pray. She then closed her eyes in the last sleep, but the angel bands came flying from above, and took her happy spirit to live and sing with them forever.

They will plant roses and evergreens around the grave where her body sleeps until the "trumpet shall sound," and wake it to sleep and die no more forever. We shall never on earth see Cousin Hannah's bright eye and pleasant smile—never hear her laugh or sing; but, oh, she is singing and smiling with the angels on the banks of the eternal river, and there, by and bye, we will go and see her.

CLERICUS.

LITTLE KITTY HOOVER, a little boy six years old, gets his Ma to write the Editor a letter, because he, the Editor, seems to love the children so much. He cannot write, but can read. He has never been to school, but his Mama teaches him one hour every morning—a capital mother that. He likes to look at pictures better than to spell. Ah, Kitty! Not long ago he found a picture in a book, where there was a man, and a woman with a babe lying on her arm. He took the book to his Mama, and she told him the babe was Christ, with Mary his mother, and Joseph, and that He was born in a manger on Christmas day. Kitty thinks it was a poor place for the Son of God to be born; and then his mother had only a bundle of straw for a pillow. Ah, Kitty," He became poor that we might be rich!" Santa Claus did great things for Kitty at Christmas.—Kitty has no brothers or sisters, but some little negro babies are in the place, and he thinks much of them. He gave them some of the nice things in his Christmas bag. Kitty tries to be a good boy, and prays every day that God would make him a good child like Samuel, so that when he dies he may live with God and the angels. That is right, Kitty.

THE BETTER LAND.

A father and mother were living with their two children on a desert island in the midst of the ocean, on which they had been shipwrecked. Roots and vegetables served them for food, a spring supplied them with water, and a cavern in the rocks with a dwelling. Storm and tempest often raged fearfully on the island.

The children could not remember how they had reached the island; they knew nothing of the vast continent; bread, milk, fruit, and whatever other luxury is yielded there, were unknown to them.

These landed one day upon the island four Moors in a small boat. The parents felt great joy, and hoped now to be rescued from their troubles; but the boat was too small to take them all over together to the adjoining land, so the father determined to risk the passage first.

Mother and children wept when he embarked in the boat with its frail planks, and four black men were about to take him away. But he said, "Weep not! It is better yonder; and you will all follow soon."

When the little boat returned and took away the mother, the children wept still more. But she also said, "Weep not! In the better land we shall all meet again."

At last the boat came to take away the two children. They were frightened at the black men, and shuddered at the fearful sea over which they had to pass. With fear and trembling they drew near the land. But how rejoiced they were when their parents appeared upon the shore, offered them their hands, led them into the shade of lofty palm-trees, and regaled them upon the flowery turf with milk, honey, and delicious fruits. "Oh! how groundless was our fear!" said the children; "we ought not to have feared but rejoiced, when the black men came to take us away to the better land."

"Dear children," said their father, "our voyage from the desert island into this beautiful country conveys to us a still higher meaning. There is appointed for us a still longer voyage to a more beautiful country. The whole earth, on which we dwell, is like an island. The land here is, indeed, a noble one in our eyes, although only a faint shadow of heaven. The passage hither over the stormy sea is—death; that little boat resembles the bier, upon which men in black apparel shall at some time carry us forth. But when that hour strikes, then we, myself, your mother, or you must leave this world. So fear not. Death is—to pious men who have loved God, and have done his will—nothing else but a voyage to the better land."

A BEAUTIFUL LESSON.

There were many little occurrences which suggested to me, with a great consolation, how natural it is to gentle hearts to be considerate and delicate toward any inferiority. One of these particularly touched me. I happened to stroll into the little church when a marriage was just concluded, and the young couple had to sign the register.

The bridegroom, to whom the pen was handed first, made a rude cross for his mark; the bride, who came next, did the same.

Now, I had known the girl when I was last there, not only as the prettiest girl in the place, but as having distinguished herself in the school; and I could not help looking at her with some surprise. She came aside, and whispered to me, while tears of honest love and admiration stood in her bright eyes:

"He's a dear, good fellow, Miss, but cannot write yet; he is going to learn of me—and I would not shame him for anything in the world."

Obituaries:

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

MRS. ANGELINE GOODWYN died in the town of Plaquemine, parish of Iberville, La., Feb. 16th, 1860. The burial took place the day following, from the church, after a funeral sermon by Rev. W. E. M. Linfield. Much might be said of the deceased in the relations of companion, mother, friend, and christian; but a paper found in her portfolio, written by herself, and dated at Minden, October 8th, 1859, in which she directs what disposition to make of her personal effects, expresses certain wishes, &c., forbids that much should be written concerning her for publication. In the paper mentioned she says: "I desire that no one write a eulogy of me when I am gone. I wish a notice of my death in few words, to begin thus: Angelina Moore, wife of Philo M. Goodwyn, of the Louisiana Conference, was born in Ohio, January, 1828, died——." Simply to live in the hearts and the memory of friends beloved, she esteemed as of infinitely more worth than any eulogy that could possibly be written of her. She says further: "If I die peacefully, say that and no more." I understand her meaning here, having often conversed with her upon this subject. She objected generally to lengthy obituaries, and not to any thing proper which might be said or written in such cases, provided there was a reasonable probability that others were to be benefitted by it.

I would, therefore, speak further of her, not merely for the sake of doing so, though there is something even in this that is comforting to me; but in the hope that what may be said here will, at least, afford profitable reflection to some. Her disease was consumption; under its ravages she suffered patiently for nearly five years. She could never fix upon the precise date of her conversion; but from about the age of twenty-one to the close of life, she continued to grow forth with increasing clearness the evidences of her faith in Christ. Without seeming to be conscious of it herself, she was possessed of more than ordinary energy; and, through grace, was courageous in the discharge of what she conceived to be her duty as a christian.—When her health would at all permit, she was never absent from church, the prayer-meeting, the class-meeting, or the Sabbath-school; and that she might enjoy the pleasure of being in attendance on these, she often taxed her bodily strength to such a degree, that on reaching home she would threw herself upon the bed, panting for breath, and almost falotleg from exhaustion. As a mother, she endeavored to train her children in the ordinances and admonition of the Lord. To the very last she kept up family prayer regularly, when I was away from home. As a wife, she was truly a "helpmeet," never saying "stay," but always "go, my husband, when and where duty calls, and have no fears—God will take care of me and the children." It troubled her greatly when we came to Plaquemine, that her failing health compelled me to stay with her, and prevented me from preaching on other portions of the work to which I had been recently appointed.

She loved a home, and, as a consequence, encouraged and helped me all she could in procuring and fitting up parsonages wherever this could be done in our travels; and to her, perhaps, more than myself, is credit due for the success that, under a gracious providence, has attended my efforts in different places to secure "homes for the evangelists." To her the very thought of living in a home that for the time being was our own, was peculiarly delightful; and how much more delightful was it to enjoy the reality. I shall never forget with what hearty emphasis she exclaimed, as we entered the parsonage here, all furnished and ready to receive us, "Thank God for a home!"—Her stay in it was of short duration—only three weeks; but, while she was permitted to remain, it was indeed a great satisfaction to her to be there. Though among strangers, the Lord soon raised up many kind friends, who visited and ministered to her in her affliction. To all of these she was careful to express her grateful thanks. May the Lord reward them a thousand fold for their kindness.

Knowing that she had intended to write to several friends, and seeing that she was rapidly growing weaker, on the afternoon of the day before her death, I suggested, if she would dictate, I would sit by the bedside and write for her. She replied, "I will be thankful if you will." To one of her friends she says, "I see no prospect of being able to write to you myself, which I especially wanted to do, but I am feeble and helpless, and mind as well as body is suffering; my husband writes for me. I hardly know what to dictate to you. We propose, but God disposes. It seems evident that I have come down here to die; I think I am ready, and feel willing to go whenever God shall see fit to take me." To another she says: "I am passing away; don't feel that I shall be long here. My trust is in Christ alone. He has been with me, and will be with me to the end." When three short letters were written to different friends, I proposed still to write to others; but she was weary, and said until to-morrow.

Speaking some time during the day of her departure, she said to me, "If it could be so—If it is the Lord's will, when I do go, I should like to go quickly," and it would seem that in this her desire was realized. In the latter part of the night, a little after two o'clock, the messenger came. There was a paroxysm of pain of a few moments duration, after which she seemed to be sinking into a quiet sleep, and though anxiously watching at the very time, almost before I could realize it, life was gone! "I die peacefully, say that;" the word was well chosen—"peacefully" she died—sweetly she sleeps.

P. M. GOODWYN.

BYNUM GLASS, son of James and Juliet Glass, was born October 2nd, 1842, and died of consumption in Warren County, Mississippi, 17th Feb., 1860. He was an interesting young man, of a well cultivated and superior mind. He was the light and joy of the home circle, and much esteemed by all who knew him. A large number of friends and acquaintances followed his remains to the Methodist E. Church (Bethel), where the writer addressed them.

He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, several years; but never obtained religion until some five weeks before his death. Before that he seemed to be under a cloud; but from the moment of that happy change, he became cheerful, and expressed great fondness for the society of christians. Before his death, when his friends thought him dying, his father said to him, "Farewell, my son." He calmly responded, "Farewell, Pa!" After he revived, he exclaimed, "Oh, why?" then added, "it may be that the good Lord sees I am not prepared." A sister remarked, God had some wise purpose to serve in allowing him to return to consciousness. He then asked them to let him remain quiet, and give him nothing to prolong his stay. He said to his friends that he thought he would have been in Heaven before now. "I shall be gone by five o'clock," said he. Within a few minutes of five o'clock, he left the shores of time. He leaves an affectionate father and mother, brothers and sisters, and many kind friends, to mourn their loss. His dying request was, "Ma, I don't wish you to weep for me when I am gone."

G. F. THOMPSON.

Mount Albon, Feb. 22, 1860.

MISS SUSAN FORD, daughter of Rev. Washington Ford, late of the Mississippi Conference, was born in Madison Co., Miss., June 27th, 1838, and died in Sharon, Miss., Feb. 14, 1860. She was educated, principally, at Sharon Female College, and was engaged in teaching part of two years near her father's residence, with success. At a meeting held at Sulphur Springs, second Sabbath in September, 1854, she joined the church, and professed conversion the same night, though she was not filled with joy till 1856. From that date her mind was freed from doubt; her peace and joy almost without interruption.

In December, 1858, she visited her friends in Western Louisiana, and while there was severely attacked with pneumonia, from which she never fully recovered. The pain and cough baffled all skill, and death was the victor. But Jesus died and rose again, and those who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. Death had no terrors for our sister. It was her desire to die and be buried in Sharon. May the blood and Holy One let his Spirit and grace rest with her father! Only three months had elapsed since he was called to part with his beloved wife.

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

MARY, wife of Joseph Hardgrove, died in Jackson, Miss., July 15th, in the forty-seventh year of her age. When quite young she was called to part with her beloved parents, and to take charge of four sisters and two brothers, who still survive her. Well and faithfully did she perform her arduous duties.—By the Divine blessing, she was the remote means of leading them all to the Cross. In her twentieth year she was converted to God, after a long and dreary season of penitence. Soon after her conversion she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she continued a steadfast member till death. Throughout her afflictions our departed sister had strong consolation, and as she drew near the end of her pilgrimage her assurance of eternal glory increased, so that she longed to depart and be at rest. She often expressed herself as anxious for her eternal home. No fears of death disturbed her last moments; her soul was kept in peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. Her death was eminently triumphant, and her life a beautiful comment on the power and grace of the Gospel.

J. L. FORSYTHE.

[The above should have been published some time since, but was mislaid.—ED. ADVOCATE.]

MR. HUGH DuTATE died at Covington, La., Feb. 4, 1860, of cancer. He was born in Clarksburg, Virginia, in 1811; embraced religion, and joined the Methodist Church, at a camp-meeting in Washington Parish, La., in 1849, and continued faithful unto death. His conversion was clear; but his christian course was marked more by solemnity than joy, and in supporting the Gospel both by his means and a well ordered life, than a mere profession of friendship. I visited him several times the last few weeks of his life, and I never have witnessed so much suffering and christian fortitude. He had been afflicted many years, yet his confidence in God remained firm.—He frequently repeated the language of Job, "Although he slay me, yet will I trust in him." A few days before his departure he shouted the praises of God even in the midst of very great suffering.

J. ENGLISH.

JOHN HUNNICUTT was born in North Carolina, October 10th, 1781, and died in Calhoun County, Ala., February 7, 1860. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Church for over fifty years, and possessed all those virtues and graces which adorn the lives of men. He was not, however, permitted to testify to the grace of God in his last moments, his disease being apoplexy. Yet he has doubtless reached the goal. Bro. Hunnicutt's was an eventful life. But now his eyes weep not; the heart heaves not; an aching head, no anxious breast. The wilderness is traversed—the city reached. He has left quite a number of children and an aged companion to mourn his death. May they follow his godly example, and at last meet him in Heaven.

J. N. DUPREE.

☞ S. C. Advocate please copy.

LOU JOHNSON, wife of Woodson Johnson, and daughter of Edwin C. and Nancy N. Farry, was born October 5th, 1835, in Tuscumbia County, Va., and died Feb. 6th, 1860, in Macon, Miss. Sister Johnson was raised by religious parents, and she gave evidence in childhood, by obedience and amiableness, that the plain culture was not in vain. She professed religion and joined the church in her twelfth or thirteenth year, and continued faithful until death, and in death was triumphant.

D. CARMICHAEL.

Otiville, Ala., Feb. 14, 1860.

PROFESSIONAL.

JAS. J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Livingston, Alabama.
[au24] ☞ Will Practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties.

DR. E. D. BEACH, HAVING RESUMED the practice of Medicine, offers his Professional services to the citizens of New Orleans.
N. B.—Special attention paid to diseases of the RECTUM, PILES, FISTULA IN ANO, ETC.—Fistula in ano permanently cured without the use of the knife, cautery, pain, or confinement whatever. Office No. 5, Baronne street near Canal. ap27.

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY AT LAW, BATON Rouge.
REFERENCES—Henderson & Gaines and Chlen & Bolton, New Orleans; W. S. Pike and A. Matta, ... Baton Rouge.

B. D. & A. W. ROBERTS, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Floyd, Carroll Parish, Louisiana.
ja19

J. G. FUQUA. J. G. KILBOURNE.
FUQUA & KILBOURNE, ATTORNEYS AT LAW, CLINTON, LOUISIANA,
PRACTICE in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana, East Baton Rouge and St. Helena, and in the Supreme Court at New Orleans.
References—Payne & Harrison, Byrne, Vance & Co., Broadwell & Payne, Pritchard & Flower, Edw. Nalle & Co., Rev. H. N. McTyeire, New Orleans. mar 20-1y

W. P. WINANS. J. V. HEATH
WINANS & HEATH, Attorneys and Counsellors at Law, SHREVEPORT, LA.,
Office—Market Street.
Will practice in the courts of Caddo, De Soto, Bossier, Claiborne, and Bienville.

G. SPENCER MAYO, Attorney at Law, HARRISONBURG, LA.,
Will practice in the Courts of Catahoula, Concordia, Caldwell and Franklin Parishes.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

W. A. BROADWELL. A. F. HAYNES.
BROADWELL & HAYNES, (Formerly BROADWELL & PAYNE)
COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 40 UNION STREET, N. O.

HAVING RETIRED FROM BUSINESS, I TAKE PLEASURE in soliciting for my former Partners, BROADWELL & HAYNES, the patronage and confidence of my friends, believing their experience, capacity and means, will merit its continuance, and cordially them to give general satisfaction. [jel] M. U. PAYNE.

W. R. STUART DR. O. A. JAMES, New Orleans. Madison Parish, La.
STUART & JAMES, No. 42 Union street New Orleans,
HAVE ASSOCIATED THEMSELVES TOGETHER for the purpose of conducting a COTTON FACTORAGE and GENERAL COMMISSION BUSINESS; are prepared to make the usual Advances to planters, in the way of supplies, etc., and respectfully solicit patronage

B. M. LOWE & CO., COTTON FACTORS, AND General Commission Merchants, No. 97 GRAVIER STREET, New Orleans.
ap6

PILCHER, GOODRICH & CO., COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS and Commission Merchants, No. 47 Carondelet, corner Union street, New Orleans. jy11-1y

A. H. May & Co., COTTON FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION Merchants, No 94 Gravier street New Orleans. an2 1y

J. O. PAYNE. J. F. HARRISON.
G. W. SUTHERLOR. WM H. CAMERON
Payne & Harrison. COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 51 Union street, New Orleans. dec7-1y

S. L. WALKER, New Orleans. ROBT. G. HUTCHINSON Caddo Parish, La.
Walker & Hutchinson, COTTON FACTORS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 87 Carondelet street, New Orleans. je23

J. BOYD & Co., Cotton Factors, Receiving & Forwarding Merchants, No 4 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.
apr 17-1y

LEONARD FASH. F. H. LAURENS.
LEONARD FASH & Co., COMMISSION MERCHANTS, And Dealers in Western Produce, 61 MAGAZINE STREET, NEW ORLEANS
Oct 24.

LANE, SALTER & CO., (Successors to LANE, MAYFIELD & Co.) COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 79 St. Charles street, New Orleans. jy5-1y

JOHN F WYCHE & Co., COTTON FACTORS and COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No 119 Common street, New Orleans. my2-1y

FALL AND WINTER OF 1859.
SOUTHERN CLOTHING ESTABLISHMENT, 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles Street, CORNER OF COMMON.
CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
Just received, per late steamers, one of the largest and most magnificent Stocks of Fashionable Fall and Winter Clothing Ever Brought to the South;
Which, for Style, Material, Workmanship and Cheapness, is not surpassed. Goods are divided into Three Departments, but all under one general view.
Store No. 28 St. Charles street, for Boys' Clothing:
Store No. 28 St. Charles street, for Mens Clothing:
Store No. 30 St. Charles street, for Furnishing Goods and Shirts:
L. W. LYONS,
Nos. 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles street, corner Common st.
Salesmen speak French, Spanish and English. [ac12

BOYS' CLOTHING EMPORIUM: 26.....St. Charles Street.....26
Between Canal and Common Streets.
This Store is exclusively for
YOUTHS', BOYS' AND CHILDREN'S CLOTHING; SHIRTS AND FURNISHING GOODS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
Just opened a large and excellent
Stock of Fall and Winter Dress and School Clothing; READ THIS
Every style and quality. All of which will be sold at VERY REASONABLE PRICES
☞ Salesmen speak French, Spanish and English.
L. W. LYONS,
oc12 Nos. 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles street, corner Common st.

Trunks, Traveling-Bags and Valises, UMBRELLAS, AND WATER-PROOF CLOTHING
Of the best styles and qualities, made to order and warranted.
L. W. LYONS,
oc12 Nos. 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles street, corner Common st.

TEXAS LAND AND STOCK FOR SALE.
FOR SALE a tract of land situated in San Patricio County, within a few miles of the coast, containing about 4 500 acres, well timbered with musqueet, oak, pecan, &c., and having near its centre a never-failing lake of clear, fresh water.
To parties desirous of emigrating to Texas either for farming or stock-raising purposes, this land offers inducements unsurpassed by any location in the State.
ALSO,
One tract containing about 2,500 acres, situated on the Santa Creek, in Refugio County, within five miles of saltwater, and about the same distance from the town of St. Mary's, the terminus of the proposed Arkansas and San Diego Railroad.
Titles to both the above tracts perfect.
A Stock of Cattle will be sold with either of the above tracts, if desired.
For terms and further particulars address the undersigned, at New Orleans, La.
dec2t 3m P. R. BYRNE, 41 Magazine street.

EDUCATIONAL.

DOLBEAR'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, OF THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS,
Founded in 1832—Chartered by the Legislature of Louisiana, with Agricultural and Mechanical Departments—
Capital Stock, $250,000.
In the new and spacious Iron edifice, known as
STORY BUILDING, South-east corner of Camp and Common Streets,
ENTRANCE ON BOTH STREETS, OPEN DAY AND EVENING.

FACULTY:
RUFUS DOLBEAR, President.
MATHEMATICAL DEPARTMENT.
GEO. E. BECKETT, Professor.
BOOK-KEEPING DEPARTMENT.
RUFUS DOLBEAR, Lecturer.
J. W. BLACKMAN, Professor.
ENGLISH DEPARTMENT.
HON. J. N. CARRIGAN, A.M., late Sup't Education, La; Prof. and Lecturer on Commercial Law, etc and M. H. M'CARTHET, Professor.
FRENCH DEPARTMENT.
MARC. RUFX, Professor.
DEPARTMENT FOR PENMANSHIP.
RUFUS DOLBEAR, Lecturer
J. B. GRIFFITH, Professor.
SPANISH DEPARTMENT.
MANUEL MARINO, Professor.
GERMAN DEPARTMENT.
GEO. GESSNER, Professor.
LATIN AND GREEK DEPARTMENT.
M. MARINO and G. GESSNER, Professors.
ITALIAN DEPARTMENT.
RHETORIC, LOGIC, AND ELOCUTION.
This is the only chartered Commercial College in the South-West, and the oldest in the United States, and has stood for
FOR MORE THAN A QUARTER OF A CENTURY
On its own merits alone.
Persons from 12 to 60 years of age, can attend to any branch they may wish.
Board can be had with the Professor, or other good families speaking English, French, Spanish or German, from $5 to $6 per week.
Catalogues with terms, opinions of the press and leading men of the nation, etc., sent to all who desire them.
N.B.—To prevent mistakes or impositions, Students intended for this College should bring this advertisement as special directions, as there are every winter temporary rooms upon for a few months, all of course making wonderful prizes and promises, and posting flaming placards to enlighten the people of New Orleans and of the South! When three or more form Clubs and enter at the same time, ten per cent will be deducted from tuition.
☞ Citizens and strangers are invited to visit.
febl 1y RUFUS DOLBEAR, President.

BOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, Corner of Camp and Common Streets,
ENTRANCE NO. 80 COMMON STREET.
[Established in 1856.]
OPEN DAY AND EVENING THE ENTIRE YEAR.
A full course of instruction in this institution embraces Double Entry Book-keeping, Commercial Calculation, Commercial Law, and Penmanship. Gentlemen can enter the center for the full course, or any branch they desire, and at any time, as there is no class system, no copying from books, and no memorizing of arbitrary rules.
FACULTY:
GEO. SOULE M.A., Principal and Professor of the Theory and Practice of Double Entry Book-keeping, Lecturer on the Science of Accounts, Exchange, Commercial Correspondence, etc., etc.
W. J. KENNON, Practical Accountant, Associate Professor in Book-keeping Department.
J. M. DIRELHAMMER, Esq., Lecturer on Commercial Law.
H. C. SPENCER, Professor of Plain, Ornamental, and Epistolary Penmanship.
GEO. SOULE, Teacher and Lecturer on Commercial Calculations.
J. B. ANDERSON, Esq., Special Lecturer on Exchange, Business Customs, Commercial Ethics, etc., etc.
LEON LAUURIN, Professor of Languages.
This is the only Commercial School in the city where Double Entry Book-keeping is taught practically, and as practiced in the New Orleans business houses.
Each of our young gentlemen has his respective desk, and proceeds in the operating, conducting, and closing of books, under all the variety of circumstances that can possibly occur in the various departments of business.
Merchants, Book keepers, and young gentlemen wishing instruction, are respectfully requested to call and examine our practical forms and peculiar manner of teaching.
For catalogues containing full information, and Balance-sheet Circulars, the most magnificent work of the kind ever executed in the United States, address, GEO. SOULE, New Orleans.

FELICIANA FEMALE INSTITUTE, JACKSON, LA.
THE exercises of the second term of this school will commence on the first of March. Pupils entered at any time, and charged from the time of entrance.
Extensive grounds and houses have been added to the premises.
A good library, a new and complete apparatus, a full and competent corps of teachers, comfortable and newly-furnished apartments, afford the best facilities for a thorough education.
BOARD OF TRUSTEES:
WM. H. WATKINS, D.D., President.
J. N. EVANS, Secretary.
Prof. W. H. N. MAGRUDER, WM. LIPSCOMB,
JOHN W. BURRUS, Esq., Col. S. M. BRYAN.
F. V. D. HAGAMAN, Esq. Rev. A. G. MILLER
Rev. JOHN C. MILLER, JOHN McKOWEN, Esq
Hon. JOHN McVEA.
6m THOS W. BROWN, Principal.

KENNER ACADEMY:
A Boarding and Day School, for Boys and Young Men.
VICTOR SCHELIHA, PRINCIPAL.
THIS Institution is located in the town of Kenner, Jefferson Parish, La., ten miles from New Orleans by Railroad, and sixteen miles by river. The location is extremely delightful and pleasant. The health of the place is unsurpassed during the whole year.
The course of study is thorough, embracing the English, French, Spanish, German, Latin, and Greek languages. Students can be prepared for any class in college, or for business pursuits.
The Academy Year is divided into Two Sessions of Five Months each, commencing on the First of October and March, respectively. Scholars will be received at any time during the year; none for less time than one session.
For further particulars see circulars, or address Principal.

Huntsville Female College.
THE undersigned, by direction of the Board of Trustees of the HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE, take great pleasure in announcing to its patrons, and the public generally, that they have elected the Rev. JOHN G. WILSON, of Limestone County, Ala., to the Presidency of said College, rendered vacant by the death of the lamented Erwin. Mr. Wilson is favorably known as an eloquent Minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is a native of Tennessee, and graduated, with distinction, at a Southern University. His great purity of character, his long experience as a successful teacher of youth, his ripe scholarship, prudent discipline, and gentlemanly manners, afford ample guaranty to parents and guardians, that they may safely entrust the education of their daughters and wards to the Institution over which he has been called to preside. Mr. Wilson, with his lady, will reside in the College Building, after the 30th inst.; at which time, he will enter upon the discharge of his official duties, assisted by the efficient corps of teachers at present employed in the Institution.
WM. ACKLEN, President of the Board of Trustees.
JAMES H. SCRUGGS, Secretary.
Huntsville, Alabama, Jan. 21st, 1860.

Homer College, Homer, La.
FACULTY:
Rev. B. CLEGG, President, and Professor of Moral, Mental, and Natural Science.
J. W. STACY, Professor of Ancient Languages and Literature.
J. B. GRATHE, Professor of Mathematics and Modern Languages.
WILLIAM CLEGG, Tutor, Preparatory Department.
TERMS FOR SESSION—Preparatory Department, First Division, $15; Second, $20. Collegiate Department, $25. Contingent Fee, $1. Matriculation Fee, $5.
Second Session will open 1st February, 1860.
Board, Lodging, &c., $60.
J. C. BLACKMAN, Pres. H. T.
J. M. THARASSON, Sec.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy.
FOR YOUNG LADIES,
RESUMED its Exercises on the First Monday in October last. A well chosen Faculty will spare no pains or care to make this Institution a pleasant and profitable place for young Lady students.
The buildings are large, well-ventilated, and well furnished. The grounds ample and beautiful.
For information and Circulars, apply to,
Rev. H. JONES, Port Gibson, Miss.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.
SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.
SAVE THE PIECES!
ECONOMY! DISPATCH!
☞ "A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE."
As accidents will happen, even in well-regulated families, it is very desirable to have some cheap and convenient way for repairing Furniture, Toys, Crockery, &c.
SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE
meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. It is always ready, and up to the sticking point. There is no longer a necessity for binding chairs, splintered veneers, headless dolls, and broken cradles. It is just the article for cane, shell, and other ornamental work, so popular with ladies of refinement and taste.
This admirable preparation is used cold, being chemically held in solution, and possessing all the valuable qualities of the best cabinet-makers' Glue. It may be used in the place of ordinary mucilage, being vastly more adhesive.
"USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE."
N.B.—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cents.
Wholesale Depot, 48 Cedar-street, New York.
Address HENRY C. SPALDING & Co. Box No. 3,600, New York.
Put up for Dealers in Cases containing four, eight, and twelve dozen—a beautiful Lithographic Show-Card accompanying each package.
☞ A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times its cost annually to every household.
Sold by all prominent Stationers, Druggists, Hardware and Furniture Dealers, Grocers, and Fancy Stores
Country merchants should make a note of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE, when making up their list. It will stand any climate.
Jan 25 1y

NO. 3 CAMP STREET. EUREKA!
SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES!
For Plantation, Family, and Manufacturers' use
Prices—$65, $80, $100, $115, $125.
These Machines have no equal; they possess all the latest improvements, the last being November 10th, 1859. Their mechanism is so simple and durable that a child can easily understand and operate them. They work with two threads, using Howe's patent shuttle, making the lock stitch, and presenting the same stitch on both sides of the fabric sewn.—They all run, stitch, hem, fell, bind and gather.
☞ ALL MACHINES WARRANTED.
Every variety of Thread, Silk, Needles, and other findings for sale.
Principal Southern Salesroom, No. 3 Camp st.
E. L. NIMMO, Agent

WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE.
A Certain Remedy for Worms.
Physicians generally now use WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE, this medicine is a simple vegetable preparation and can always be administered with perfect safety and confidence as to the result, as it will always destroy Worms and restore the patient to health.
Over one thousand certificates have been sent to Agents from planters, merchants and physicians, bearing testimony to the efficacy of this infallible remedy. Warranted in all cases.
For sale in New Orleans, wholesale and retail, by
J. WRIGHT & CO., 21 and 151 Chartres street, Sole Proprietors.
Medical Evidence.
We, the undersigned, having frequently administered WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE, and being fully satisfied with its efficacy, confidently recommend it as a safe and efficient remedy for the expulsion of Worms from the intestinal canal.
G. O'REILLY, Licentiate of the R. C. of Surgeons in Ireland, etc.
G. W. DICKINSON, Member of the R. C. of Surgeons in London, etc.
☞ PHYSICIANS, CHEMISTS and DRUGGISTS praise it.
TESTIMONY OF NEW ORLEANS DOCTORS AND DRUGGISTS:
We, the undersigned, Druggists of the City of New Orleans, have sold in our trade WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE for over ten years past; and since its introduction into this section of the country, it has given such satisfaction to our customers, that we feel justified in saying that is one of the best remedies for Worms we have any knowledge of.

Hy. Kennedy,	James Syme,
Weedman & Bement,	Robert H. Read & Co.
P. Casachs, Bro. & Co.,	F. Fredericksen.
E. B. Wheelock & Co.,	B. Abrams.
F. D. Conge.	(Leroy.
J. De Boeneville,	Jules A. Florat.
R. Turney,	Dr. O. Arroux,
John H. Pope,	Edward Alein,
John A. Somers,	A. A. Pechand,
Henry Goldmen,	C. Espinois,
M. Martin,	E. Macpherson,
M. Lourdao,	F. E. Mongle,
F. F. Henriquez,	J. Llado,
G. N. Morisee & Co	F. Chavel,
Louis Castel.

TRUTH OMNIPOTENT.—We give to our readers and the public generally the following copy of a letter received by us from J. W. Veasey, Esq., of the Aberdeen Conservative, enclosing at the same time a communication to that paper from Colonel Vasser, of North Mississippi, and who was formerly associate editor of the Conservative. The subject of the letter and communication we do not feel it necessary to comment on—they tell the whole story, one that ought to go home to those in whose hands the rising generation of children are placed for nurture and for care. All we ask of our readers is a careful perusal of the documents.
CONSERVATIVE OFFICE,
Aberdeen, Miss., August 23d, 1858.
Messrs. Wright & Co.—As any testimonial in reference to your preparations may prove beneficial to you, I en

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 10.
WHOLE NUMBER 478.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7, 1860.

$2 00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE
OFFICE—112 CAMP ST.

INTRODUCTION OF PROTESTANTISM INTO MISSISSIPPI.—NO. III.

Original Baptist Church.

Ma. Editor: After the deburkntion of our emigrant connection, the most of them settled on and contiguous to the southern fork of Cole's creek, within ten or fifteen miles of the Mississippi river. They had to endure many privations and hardships incident to a new country but poorly supplied with even the necessaries of life; and for several years they had to watch with vigilance the repeated incursions of hostile Indians. John Jones, who had ventured to settle on the east side of Cole's creek, just opposite the old village of Union Town, came near being overtaken by a band of these lawless marauders. Having evidence of the presence of Indians in the neighborhood, and not knowing at what moment they might make their attack, he requested his wife to take the children and hide among the spurs of the cane ridges until he could get the horses ready for their escape to Natchez. A few moments seemed like hours to Mrs. Jones in her lonely retreat, and, requesting the children to be quiet, she ventured back in sight of the house to ascertain whether the Indians had not already captured her husband. Seeing that he was in the act of starting, she hastily turned to get the children ready, but in her excitement she missed her course, and was quite put to it to find her "hid treasures." They made good their retreat to Natchez that night, and early next morning Mr. Jones and John Courtency, his brother-in-law, returned as spies to reconoiter. When they got near his improvement they saw that the Indians had already destroyed his corn, which was just getting into roasting ears, killed his only milch cow, and venturing a little nearer, saw them in the act of emptying the feathers out of the beds to avail themselves of the cases. Seeing they were too far outnumbered to risk an attack, they retreated. Mr. Jones immediately abandoned this border settlement, and removed to Fairchild's creek, near the Mississippi, where he built a water-mill, and did the grinding for the community many years. But as these incidents are foreign to my main object, I will pass them over without further detail. I have already stated that most of the prominent members of this emigrant connection were members of the Baptist Church before leaving South Carolina, and judging from the unwavering fidelity and zeal which they manifested in all their wanderings and privations, their religion was that of the heart. They were regular in their family devotions from their first settlement in the country, but the Natchez District having lately fallen noder Spanish rule, which only recognized the Roman Catholic form of worship, and opposed all others, they scarcely knew what to do in regard to public worship. After mutual consultation they agreed to meet together in their private dwellings, at set times, for the purpose of reading and expounding the scriptures, exhortation and prayer, hoping in this way to keep the members united and alive to their spiritual interests. These meetings which were found to be so profitable to the members of the church, soon attracted the attention of the American portion of the population, many of whom desired to be present, and enjoy once more the beneficial influence of Protestant worship. Thus things went on through a series of years without exciting much open opposition from the Catholic authorities. In the meantime Richard Curtis, senior, had died on the 10th of November, 1784, and his son Richard had become quite a preacher. John Stampley, his brother-in-law, was also quite gifted in exhortation, as was also his brother, Jacob Stampley, both of whom afterwards became Baptist preachers. William Curtis, an elder brother of Richard, was gifted in extemporaneous prayer, as was also John Jones and several others. By 1790 other American settlements desired to be visited by Mr. Curtis and his lay assistants, and their labors were soon blessed in the manifest awakening and conversion of souls. Among the young converts was a prominent citizen by the name of William Hamberlin, and a Spaniard by the name of Stephen de Alvo, both of whom desired admission into the Church. These pioneer workmen in the Lord's vineyard now found themselves in straitened circumstances. Mr. Curtis was only a licentiate, and no one in the country was authorized according to the rules of the church to administer baptism, and yet here were people desiring it who exhibited all the usual marks of true conversion. They prudently postponed the matter until they could correspond with the parent church in South Carolina, from which they came. The church, after taking the matter under advisement, returned as their answer, "that there is no law against necessity, and under the present stress of circumstances, the members ought to assemble, and formally appoint one of their number by election, to baptize the new converts." This advice was promptly acted on, and Richard Curtis was appointed to administer the ordinance, which he accordingly did. Opposition from the Catholic authorities had been on the increase for some time, but now it suddenly broke out in a blaze of persecution, and the little pioneer band of Protestants were peremptorily ordered to desist from all their heretical psalm singing, praying, and preaching in public, or they would be subjected to sundry pains and penalties. For a time Mr. Curtis and his adherents thought the American feeling was strong enough to sustain them; and, moreover, believing their cause was the cause of God, and that truth would ultimately triumph over error, bid their opponents defiance, and even went so far as to have their places of worship guarded by armed men, while they denounced in no very modest terms, the "image worship," and other anscriptural doctrines and ceremonies of the Catholic church. I do not pretend to say their zeal was always according to knowledge. In common parlance, they were ungedueated men, plain both in language and manners, and I have no doubt but they sometimes imprudently provoked the ire of their enemies.

Several circumstances had transpired to stir up the wrath of the Catholics against this little band of primitive Baptists. Not only had William Hamberlin, and other prominent citizens joined their church, but Stephen de Alvo, a Spaniard, and a Catholic by birth and education, had renounced the faith of his ancestors, and gone over to these heretics, as they called the Baptists. This could not be endured! The Spanish Commandant at Natchez, Don Manuel Gayosa de Lemos, wrote an expostulatory letter to Mr. Curtis, urging him to desist from what was considered violative of the laws of the Province, and against the peace and safety of the country. Mr. Curtis replied, with characteristic bluntness and severity, giving him to understand that in God's name and strength he was determined to persevere.

His immediate arrest was now ordered, and on the 6th of April, 1795, he stood a prisoner before Governor Gayoso. At the close of the investigation he was assured if he did not unequivocally promise to desist from all public preaching, he would be sent, with several of his adherents, especially Hamberlin and De Alvo, to work in the silver mines of Mexico. Whether this hitherto indomitable spirit of Curtis quailed under the menaces of Gayoso, or whether, upon a view of the whole matter, he thought it would be more Christian-like to submit "to the powers that be," I am not prepared to say. Be this as it may, he did promise to refrain thereafter from what was offensive to the Government. An edict was also issued by Gayoso, "that if nine persons were found worshipping together they should suffer imprisonment." Mr. Curtis being discharged, returned thoughtfully and prayerfully to his home on the south fork of Cole's creek.

Things went on quietly for a while, but the American population had increased, and they were becoming more clamorous for religious, as well as civil liberty. The church held a consultation, and the conclusion was, that it would not do to give up their meetings. It was true Mr. Curtis had promised to abstain from public preaching, but still he might hold meetings with such as would not betray him. Accordingly they agreed to hold their meetings as secretly as possible, and conduct all their religious exercises in a low tone of voice; and in order to make things doubly secure, they appointed reliable men as sentinels on all the roads leading to their places of worship, whose duty it was to come in at any stage of the meeting, and report the appearance of any suspicious persons in the distance, which should be considered the signal for an informal and immediate dismissal and dispersion. Thus things were successfully managed for a few months; but an additional circumstance had transpired, characteristic of the times, which, when known, greatly enraged the priesthood and Spanish officers. David Greenleaf, an accomplished young gentleman from the North, had gained the heart and hand of Miss Phebe Jones, daughter of John Jones; but such was their sense of the wrongs inflicted on the connection by the Catholics, that they resolved not to be married by either priest or Spanish officer. They, moreover, believed that the uncle of Miss Jones, being a preacher of the gospel, was as duly authorized in the sight of God to solemnize the rites of matrimony as any one else, and made application to him accordingly. Hut no one, not even the parents of Miss Jones, were willing to risk the consequences of having the marriage performed in their house. So arrangements were made for Mr. Greenleaf to go, on the 24th of May, 1795, with a few select young gentlemen, to the village of Gayoso, which was situated on the bluff, about eighteen miles above Natchez, and procure the license from the proper officer. Then, considerably after nightfall, he was to be found on the road, two or three miles south of Greenville, going in the direction of Natchez. In the meantime the bridal party, including Mr. Curtis, were to be taking an evening ride in the opposite direction, and lest some traitorous person might accidentally fall in with either party, they agreed upon a sign and a countersign, the bridal party giving the sign when they met in the darkness of night, and the other party returning the countersign in case all was well, but if any suspicious person had fallen into either party, they were to pass in silence. At the appointed time and place the parties met. Young people, however, must have their fun—something to laugh about afterwards. On meeting, the bridal party announced the mysterious word, but there was no response, and they passed without recognition. "Who on earth can they be?" inquired one in a suppressed tone. "It's them," said another, "and something has happened!" A settled gloom was coming down on that lovely bride and her party, when the young men suddenly wheeled about and gave the counter-sign. The parties alighted near the residence of William Stampley, on what is still known as "Stampley's Hill," and by torchlight, under the wide spread boughs of an ancient oak, the marriage ceremony was duly performed, and Mr. Curtis concluded by a most impressive prayer, long talked of by those who were present. The parties re-mounted, the light was extinguished, and each sought concealment in the privacy of home. A numerous, intelligent, and pious posterity is the result of that remarkable wedding. Whether Mr. Curtis's participation in this affair, or the floating rumors that he had violated his pledge to quit preaching, and was actually holding secret meetings with his people, re-aroused the fury of the Catholics, I am not prepared to say. Be this as it may, orders were secretly issued, about the 23d of August, 1795, for the arrest of Messrs. Curtis, Hamberlin, and De Alvo. Another quiet Sabbath had come with all its holy associations, and the little persecuted fraternity of Baptists, were, in subdued tones, conducting their worship in a private house, in what was then, and is still known as "Stampley's Settlement," on the south fork of Cole's creek, when the sentinel on the Natchez road came hastily in, and announced the appearance of five men, which he took to be a Spanish officer and his posse. The exercises hastily closed, and Curtis, Hamberlin, and De Alvo hastened to a neighboring thicket to conceal themselves, knowing that they were peculiarly obnoxious to the hierarchy at Natchez. The others adjusted themselves with apparent carelessness about the house and yard. The unwelcome visitors rode up, and with characteristic self-importance, inquired "what they were doing there?" They replied, "that they were doing no harm to anybody, that they did not work on the Sabbath, and preferred spending the day to their own liking." "Where then is Dick Curtis, Bill Hamberlin, and Steve De Alve?" authoritatively inquired this embodiment of Roman Catholic intolerance; to which an evasive answer was given; such as, "we don't exactly know, somewhere in the neighborhood, we suppose." The officer then announced the fact that he had come with authority, and with a determination to take those rebels that they might be sent to the silver mines in Mexico for the remainder of their lives, and if any man should be found aiding and abetting either their concealment or escape, he should suffer the like penalty. The officer and his posse immediately set out on a diligent search for the fugitives, and, in the language of my venerable friend, Mrs. Elizabeth Armstrong, who well recollects the search for Curtis and his two companions, "for a number of days they were like children playing hide and seek," such was the activity and minuteness of the search. It now became the settled conviction of the most reliable men in the community, that it was worse than useless for Mr. Curtis and his two faithful adherents, Hamberlin and De Alvo, to think of breasting this storm any further; that their only safety was in a precipitate flight from the country, and, consequently, from all that was dear to them on earth. Accordingly, amidst the tears of wives and children, and weeping relatives, as soon as suitable horses could be procured, they clandestinely left the settlement, with the understanding that they were to conceal themselves in the house of a friend on Little Bayou Pierre, near where Port Gibson now stands, until they could be supplied with suitable provisions, in food and money, for their journey through the wilderness to South Carolina, the former home of Mr. Curtis.

In my next I shall relate the principal incidents in their flight and return.

A. G. Jones.

NOTES WHILE ON A FURLOUGH.—NO. IV.

SAN JOSE, COSTA RICA.

The last day I spent in Panama, I dined by invitation, on board the U. S. steam frigate, Lancaster, flag ship of the Pacific squadron, with the captain of the ship, and the flag officer of the squadron. My intercourse with these gentlemen, and the information I derived from them, has left a pleasant impression upon my mind in regard to the gentlemen of the Navy. The Lancaster is a new ship, and a model of its class, and in the neatness and order that prevail on board. It mounts 32 guns of heavy calibre on the gun deck, and two enormous ones upon the upper deck, and is capable of destroying the largest ship with a few broadsides. There is no chaplain to this squadron at present, but the officers are anxious to receive one, as they attach great importance to his presence and labors among the crews. Commodore Montgomery is a devout Christian—a member of the Presbyterian Church. Towards night they sent me on board the Guatamala, and the next morning we sailed for Punta Arenas, in Costa Rica. The steamer proved to be a very pleasant and well managed one, the company was agreeable, the weather fine, and we had a pleasant trip. The ship is seldom out of sight of land in making this trip, for the mountain ranges of Central America can be seen far at sea. You see no town in the distance of some 480 miles. The only incident that occurred, worth mentioning, was the fact that we passed near a school of whales, who were showing their huge hulks at the surface, and spouting water to a great hight in the air. Among the passengers was Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish patriot, and lady, bound, like myself, to San Jose. Mr. M. is an accomplished gentleman, and I have to acknowledge many acts of kindness at his hands. Also, ex-President Mora, who was overthrown by a sudden revolution in August last, and exiled from Costa Rica. He had come up from Panama to see if there was any chance for him to land, join his partizans and be reinstated in power. But his enemies were on the alert, and no sooner had our ship come to anchor, than off came their boats, filled with soldiers and bristling with bayonets, and lay around us, watching for him; and prevented any one landing from the ship for some hours. The soldiers were all shades of color, barefooted and dirty, and presented such a spectacle as provoked the jeers and ridicule of the under officers and crew of the steamer. The Governor of the town came on board, and, after a remonstrance from the captain for the delay, all the passengers who wished to do so, except Mora, and one of his officers, went on shore. We there learned that the Ex-President's lady had come down from San Jose to join him, that the authorities had ordered her back to the interior, and that she had fled to the British Consul's office, and found protection.

Punta Arenas is the only seaport of any importance, perhaps the only one that is open, in the Republic of Costa Rica. It is situated on the gulf of Nicoya, near the northern extremity of the coast. The town is built upon a tongue of land extending into the gulf, and has a population of some 3000. The streets are regularly laid out, but they are mostly beds of sand; and the buildings, except upon the main street, are miserable shanties, constructed of cane and thatch. The population have a large mixture of Indian blood. There are but few foreigners in the place, and not more than three or four Americans. There is a church, but whether there is a resident priest I did not learn. In intelligence, morals, and social condition, the population is of the lowest order.

Finding no reason for remaining here, I made arrangements to start for the capital, San Jose, a distance of some seventy miles, nearly east. This journey can be accomplished in but one way—on mule or horseback—for there is no road to the interior travelled by any vehicle, but the rude cart on which coffee is brought from the interior to Punta Arenas for shipment; and the most daring wagoners in our country would be appalled at the idea of hauling loads over such a road as this. Thus hard working people do it constantly, but their oxen suffer; we passed a number dead by the roadside. This road is quite impassible for their carts in the rainy season. But, to the trip. I procured a mule for myself, another for my baggage, and a half-breed Indian to take charge of it, as I expected to go in company with two young men of the country, and to travel faster than my ladened mule could. Early Tuesday morning we started, I upon my mule, and my travelling companions in a horse-car—for Costa Rica has a Railroad 8 miles long, though not travelled by steam. At the end of the Railroad, we met, and I then found that my companions were much better mounted than I was—they had their own beasts, and I had a hired one—and were expert riders withal; and the Central Americans believe that horses are made to go fast, if they are small. But the trip was to be made, so off we started. Then, I found the misfortune of not being "Circuit Rider;" but I did my best under the circumstances; I will only add an N. B. If any of my readers have a similar trip to take, let them not attempt it with Central Americans, unless they are well mounted, and fresh from a very large Circuit.

I was anxious for time to examine the objects of interest, both from the animal and vegetable kingdom, but could not take it. There were strange birds, with bodies of singular shape, and brilliant plumage. Lizards, twenty inches long, that made as much noise as coons would, in ascending trees. A wonderful vegetation, of new, unusual forms to me—trees, twelve feet in diameter near the ground, and ten feet two-thirds of the distance to the top, and others whose branches extended over a hundred and fifty feet from tip to tip; and others still, that bore pods as large as cucumbers, the contents of which leaves the natives eating; and some seemed to be growing top downward, at least the body was divided into fifteen or twenty parts near the ground. There was, too, the banyan tree, or one that greatly resembled it, that had sent down its tendrils twenty or thirty feet from the ground, which had taken root and grown to a respectable size, thus giving the tree a dozen different connections with the ground. Everything seemed to be in excess; but I had no time for examination, for I had to "keep up."

As this is the dry season, some of the streams were entirely dried up. Twelve miles on our way, we forded a rapid one, perhaps the Rio Grand, a thing which would be impossible in the rainy season; and after rising a thousand or fifteen hundred feet, two miles from them, we came to the ancient town of Espnra. This is the oldest town in Costa Rica; but like many others on the coast, it was plundered and nearly ruined by the Buccaneers. The inhabitants then deserted it, and built Curtago, twelve miles east of the present Capital. In 1723 that was destroyed by an earthquake, when the inhabitants again abandoned their homes and founded San Jose. Espnra is finally located, in a beautiful country, reminding me of the finest farming regions of the United States. The grass lands here, as well as in most parts of the country, are excellent, and here there is an abundance of fine cattle, particularly of oxen. Here we found six hundred more troops prepared to resist Mora. They presented much the same appearance as those that we saw at Punta Arenas. The commissary department seemed to be quite neglected, and the poor fellows left to shift for themselves, and they were lying about by the road side and under trees, but were in good spirits, and insisted that Mora's property must bear the expense of the campaign. Some of them had been exiled by him, and it gave them particular satisfaction to have a hand in "turning the tables."

The road took us through a very broken, well-watered country, mountains being at hand in every direction. When we stopped at night, my companions reported me to the family as a minister, in exactly what terms I do not know; but as the ideas of the country people generally do not extend beyond a Padre, they did their best for my accommodation, while my Costa Rican friends had their fun over it. The charges were very moderate; I expect they paid less because in company with the Padre.

Though often deceived by unexpected turns in the road, yet it was evident soon after we started in the morning that we could not avoid climbing a mountain long. Less than an hour's ride brought us to the foot of the Aunpeate, the ascent of which we commenced by the most remarkable zig-zag road I ever saw. The reader can form some idea of it from the fact that we ascended some 4000 feet in the horizontal distance of a mile; gaining the summit we were 6000; but above Punta Arenas, and turning around, there lay the whole route we had come, some 30 miles, with all its hills, valleys, and ravines reduced to a smooth plain by our elevation; the Bay of Nicaya and the ocean stretching away beyond. It was a grand sight; on the other hand was a view equally fine. There lay the valley of San Jose, stretching away some 35 miles to the east, and some 15 to 20 miles wide. The morning we saw it must have been particularly favorable, for every farm and lot, with the fences dividing them, could be seen for thirty miles. And though portions, especially high up the mountains, showed the effects of drouth, yet for the most part the whole valley looked fresh and green. One would fain linger and enjoy the scene for hours, but natives of the country could see no occasion for this, so we immediately commenced the descent, and some 2000 feet in the course of five miles brought us to Atenas, and four or five more to the Rio Grande, which runs along a channel at least 1500 feet deep, and to this we have to descend in the distance, horizontally, of a fourth of a mile. The engineering necessary to effect this, with a road over which loads could be hauled, is wonderful. Crossing the river we came to the Carreta, or Custom House, forty miles inland, and the third river landing, at P. Arinas. And to insure a passage by this route, it is made a crime punishable with death to cross the river at any other point. But I think the man would deserve a reward who could cross it at any other point in this vicinity. On gaining the top of the bluff on the opposite side we passed through a fort swarming with soldiers. They seemed to be in the same condition as those we had seen before. While we halted they were receiving their rations for the day, and each one as his name was called, came forward and received his portion of meat and bread in his hat, and went his way. Leaving this, and passing the plains of Carrain, devoted almost entirely to pasturage, eight miles from the city, we strike the Coffee plantations. The soil is of wonderful fertility, and in a very high state of cultivation. Sugar Cane, Coffee, Corn, and the various fruits, and productions peculiar to the latitude, abound.

The road improves, the population becomes more dense, cultivation more careful, We cross a small river make one more turn, and are in the capital—at the Hotel de San Jose.

J. H.

LETTER FROM BISHOP ANDREW.

We have among us a peculiar race of people who seem best adapted to servile relations, and in that relation we employ them; they are exceedingly numerous, and demand special care and attention in their treatment and management. We appeal to the Scriptures for justification of the relation itself, and of course we cannot stop there. That same authoritative book which justifies us in holding them as slaves, and availing ourselves of their labors for our profit, has also very distinctively defined our duty towards them, and the prescriptions of duty are as authoritative as the justification of the institution itself, and demands from slaveowners a respect and defience, and a careful attention to its requirements; we may not justly the ownership from God's book, and then go our ways and straightway forget the obligations which God lays upon us with reference to these slaves. I am to feed and clothe my negroes well; that is, I am to give them plenty of good wholesome food and comfortable clothing; of course, all this your own interest, properly understood, demands, for it is always to your interest that your negroes be healthy and vigorous to labor for your benefit, and in order to this, it is desirable that they should be well cared for. The increase of your negro property, both in number and value, is greatly affected by the manner in which the mothers and the children are cared for; for want of proper attention to this matter a good many planters leave but little improvement in this department of their property. It is also the interest of the master, as well as the slave, that the right sort of a man be employed as overseer: to carry a large whip, to whip without judgment or mercy, just because he has the power; to swear, and by precept or example, to corrupt the morals of the negro,—these are not, I should judge, the appropriate qualifications for the man to whom, for much or the year, the sole management of my negroes is committed; no, not even though he should so manage as to make more bags of cotton to the hand than anybody in the neighborhood. These negroes are immortal beings, and your relation to them involves responsibilities which you cannot ignore; do as you will they are fixed upon you along with your ownership, and whatever you or your neighbors may think, God will require a prompt and full obedience at your hands. Your negroes have souls, and they must be taught the great truths by which their souls are to be saved; this sun only be properly done by preaching to them the gospel of their salvation; proper Christian teachers must be employed, and this necessity requires an outlay of money. A preacher must be employed, and if he gives himself wholly to this work his family must be supported, and this support must come either from the masters whose slaves are served, or from the negroes or friends of the churches by whom they are served. Now, the first would seem to us to be the proper source whence supplies are to be obtained, and in many instances the masters respond to the call, and acknowledge the obligation. But many wealthy planters reject the whole matter, and either refuse all applications for permission to teach their negroes, or else, if they graciously consent, it is regarded as a very special favor conferred upon you by them, and you need expect no further favors by way of remuneration for services rendered. As a matter of grace you may preach to their slaves, and if the church will pay you, very well; but if not, you can preach to them for nothing, or quit."

What an exhibition of character is here presented to us; a man who perhaps owns two, or three, or four hundred negroes, and makes a crop of several hundred bales of cotton, who occupies a painful residence, with appropriate furniture and surroundings, yet cannot afford to pay a few hundred dollars to have these negroes, who labor for him day and night, taught the way to live right and die right. God help such men, they are in God's hands and cannot escape their final great account.

But my main object in writing these lines was to urge the importance of taking the proper steps for securing to our colored missions suitable houses of worship; we can hardly hope that the mission in a neighborhood is firmly established without there is a suitable house of worship for them. On many of the missions this necessity seems to be felt, and in some places snug chapels have been built; this is encouraging, but the influence of this conviction is not sufficiently extensive in many places; the negroes meet for worship in barns or old out-houses, or under sheds, or even under the spreading shade of some large oak. One reason for this is, perhaps, that the planters do not wish their servants to visit other plantations, but each planter must have the missionary preach to his own people on his own premises. Now, it strikes us that the disadvantages of such a course are manifold and obvious. First, it will require a much greater outlay of men and means than the church can furnish to occupy half our present mission field, without taking into the account the constantly increasing field which annually invites our attention; but even if we had an ample supply of men and means to give to every planter a preacher for his own plantation, so that his negroes should never go from home at all to hear preaching, it would not be wise to attempt that sort of operation. It is presumed that if you have your slaves preached to at all, the object is to profit as many of them as you can, and in order to do this it is desirable to get as many hearers as possible; now the negro is, as we all know, an eminently social being, and he is a good deal like his white neighbors, he likes when he goes to church of a Sunday to see somebody else besides home folks; this feeling belongs to our nature, and in every attempt to improve the condition of man, we must regard him in his social dispositions and relations, if we would labor successfully for his improvement. The true policy, it seems to me, is for a few neighboring planters to consult together, and choose a suitable site, any convenient to the largest number of neighboring plantations, there build a suitable house of worship, and make it neat and comfortable; there let the negroes from their several plantations meet and worship. Procure a suitable preacher as their pastor, and yours too, if you choose. This plan will save an unnecessary outlay of ministerial labor and money, besides encouraging the preacher with a good congregation instead of a handful, at the same time that the presence of a large congregation encourages the blacks to come out more numerously and cheerfully, and it will require no more plantation police than was previously required.

I have thus thrown out a few suggestions on a subject which I deem important. I beg that missionaries and planters would consider it carefully.

James O. Andrew.

Summerfield, Ala., Feb. 22d, 1860.

THE DEAR OLD LADY, OR A LITTLE PEBBLE.

Across our little common, do you see that small house, where a faint light shews itself, litfully? Now it gleams more brightly, and an old lady draws herself up from it, painfully, as it seems, and sinks down into a one-arm chair. She sits quiet, but a moment, takes out her glasses and adjusts them over her thin, but well-shaped nose, and, by the light of the fire, picks up a stitch dropped in her knitting. Now her fingers throw off the yarn, deftly. The old lady has done knitting ere now.

Sitting, as she does, in that little room, which, as you perceive, by the table against the wall, and the cloth spread over its dishes, and by the shadow of a bedstead, does duty as both dining and sleeping room, you look surprised that I style her as old lady. A lady, you think, should have choicer surroundings. Permit me to tell you a little about her, for I am honored with her acquaintance. You glance at me, inquiringly. She is not, I assure you, a princess in disguise, and she is not a lady who has known better circumstances. No, no! She is something more. I wish I could recall her own quaint, expressive language. "Mor'n forty years ago," she told me, as she sat in the easy chair, by our parlor fire, knitting in hand, with the disengaged needle in the right hand striking the fore finger of the left, as if counting off the years thereon, "mor'n forty years ago, I came to Louisiana with my husband, all the way from Kaintucky." And if you did not regard her with as much reverence as I do, you might have smiled whenever she pronounced that word—K-a-i-n-tucky, with the accent on the first syllable, and a rising inflection on the last, and lingering over the whole, because she loved it. They bought a few acres, raised corn, vegetables, poultry, sheep, cows, &c., and nine children, "all darters." At length, the good man died. She never says so, or hints it, but I cannot help believing that she was, in reality, not in rule, the "better man of the twain." "A widder with nine gals all grown up round me, and wantin' more'n more every year."

What does the widow do? She brings up all her girls to habits of industry, and labors for them right bravely, with Mrs. Ellen Key Blunt's new song in her heart, at least—

"I have a little boat to sail upon the tide,
In it nine little children are working side by side,
And I work, because these children are working side by side."

And with many a struggle of true womanly delicacy she resolved—

"That the power of human prejudice and the strength of human pride,
Should not wreck her little boat, with the children side by side."

She oversaw the little farm, and the negro man and woman looked after the stock, and she knew that her daughters took good care of the poultry and eggs. She labored diligently with her hands; aided by her eldest daughters, she spun and wove their own clothing, and sold blankets for $30 a pair, as she told me, with an honest glow of pride.

As the girls grew up to womanhood, "and fine gals they was," they felt a woman's necessity for beautiful and appropriate attire, and the sympathizing, considerate mother was often "put to her straits," to find the means for these growing expenses. Her warm, true heart was unchanged by years of labor and care, and sorrow, and she had, too, no doubt, a mother's pride and ambition, and wished to see them all well settled in life. So she struggled with her pride and fear of human prejudice, and took her corn to the mill to be ground, on the horse behind her, and a bucket of butter to be sold in town hanging on the horn of the saddle. This she told me, not boastingly, as if she had found a new pride in overcoming womanly sensitiveness, not humbly, or shamefacedly, but frankly, with an honest heart and honest tongue, that feared not to shew her deeds to the world stamped with their true name.

The daughters were all married, most of them well. One is dead, and one is a widow, came back to the parent bird, with her three little ones, for shelter. Sally's husband, somehow, seems always unfortunate. He failed in business, and just as he got fairly started again, his house was burned with all the furniture and clothing. He had to begin the world anew, "and he continues doing so."

Thus the old lady's sympathy and purse are still taxed, but whatever she renders is given with hearty good will. She sold her little farm a few years since, not for $7000 or $8000, as her friends assured her was its market value. She "thought she could afford to sell it for $6000," and by the aid of economy and her knitting, buy a little dwelling in town, and live on the interest of the remainder. She never took advantage of times or circumstances, to exact exorbitant prices. No, no, "I tried to do as I'd like to be done by." She still knits socks for forty cents a pair, her employers finding the yarn.

The other day she came in with a story about another widow, also from Kentucky. She had been to visit her and found her nearly destitute. So what does the kind soul do? She came in, not to ask for assistance for this poor widow, but to beg that the stockings she had engaged to knit for the family might be transferred to this stranger. "For I seen her knit, and from what I kin judge, she kin knit faster an' as well, if not better, nor I kin. And I kin live without knittin, and as I thought, if you was willin', I'd just like to throw so much into her hands, for she is needy, I can tell you, and winter is just comin' in." "Has she children?" "One darter, nigh about grown, but she can't help much, with nuthin' to do." The dear old heart, kind as it is honest.

A little, thin figure, clothed in plain black, not untidy, and by no means precise or prim, it comes quickly in, with an energetic, yet not noisy step, and with a cheery voice and smile, as she lifts her head to look at you through her glasses. A quiet energy, without a token of fussiness, marks all her doings.

My heart glows with enthusiasm when I think of this old lady, with her honest thoughts, that hide not when you look into her eyes; with honest heart and hands of cotton, who occupies a painful residence, with appropriate furniture and surroundings, yet cannot afford to pay a few hundred dollars to have these negroes, who labor for him day and night, taught the way to live right and die right. God help such men, they are in God's hands and cannot escape their final great account.

But my main object in writing these lines was to urge the importance of taking the proper steps for securing to our colored missions suitable houses of worship; we can hardly hope that the mission in a neighborhood is firmly established without there is a suitable house of worship for them. On many of the missions this necessity seems to be felt, and in some places snug chapels have been built; this is encouraging, but the influence of this conviction is not sufficiently extensive in many places; the negroes meet for worship in barns or old out-houses, or under sheds, or even under the spreading shade of some large oak. One reason for this is, perhaps, that the planters do not wish their servants to visit other plantations, but each planter must have the missionary preach to his own people on his own premises. Now, it strikes us that the disadvantages of such a course are manifold and obvious. First, it will require a much greater outlay of men and means than the church can furnish to occupy half our present mission field, without taking into the account the constantly increasing field which annually invites our attention; but even if we had an ample supply of men and means to give to every planter a preacher for his own plantation, so that his negroes should never go from home at all to hear preaching, it would not be wise to attempt that sort of operation. It is presumed that if you have your slaves preached to at all, the object is to profit as many of them as you can, and in order to do this it is desirable to get as many hearers as possible; now the negro is, as we all know, an eminently social being, and he is a good deal like his white neighbors, he likes when he goes to church of a Sunday to see somebody else besides home folks; this feeling belongs to our nature, and in every attempt to improve the condition of man, we must regard him in his social dispositions and relations, if we would labor successfully for his improvement. The true policy, it seems to me, is for a few neighboring planters to consult together, and choose a suitable site, any convenient to the largest number of neighboring plantations, there build a suitable house of worship, and make it neat and comfortable; there let the negroes from their several plantations meet and worship. Procure a suitable preacher as their pastor, and yours too, if you choose. This plan will save an unnecessary outlay of ministerial labor and money, besides encouraging the preacher with a good congregation instead of a handful, at the same time that the presence of a large congregation encourages the blacks to come out more numerously and cheerfully, and it will require no more plantation police than was previously required.

I have thus thrown out a few suggestions on a subject which I deem important. I beg that missionaries and planters would consider it carefully.

James O. Andrew.

Summerfield, Ala., Feb. 22d, 1860.

THE DEAR OLD LADY, OR A LITTLE PEBBLE.

Across our little common, do you see that small house, where a faint light shews itself, litfully? Now it gleams more brightly, and an old lady draws herself up from it, painfully, as it seems, and sinks down into a one-arm chair. She sits quiet, but a moment, takes out her glasses and adjusts them over her thin, but well-shaped nose, and, by the light of the fire, picks up a stitch dropped in her knitting. Now her fingers throw off the yarn, deftly. The old lady has done knitting ere now.

Sitting, as she does, in that little room, which, as you perceive, by the table against the wall, and the cloth spread over its dishes, and by the shadow of a bedstead, does duty as both dining and sleeping room, you look surprised that I style her as old lady. A lady, you think, should have choicer surroundings. Permit me to tell you a little about her, for I am honored with her acquaintance. You glance at me, inquiringly. She is not, I assure you, a princess in disguise, and she is not a lady who has known better circumstances. No, no! She is something more. I wish I could recall her own quaint, expressive language. "Mor'n forty years ago," she told me, as she sat in the easy chair, by our parlor fire, knitting in hand, with the disengaged needle in the right hand striking the fore finger of the left, as if counting off the years thereon, "mor'n forty years ago, I came to Louisiana with my husband, all the way from Kaintucky." And if you did not regard her with as much reverence as I do, you might have smiled whenever she pronounced that word—K-a-i-n-tucky, with the accent on the first syllable, and a rising inflection on the last, and lingering over the whole, because she loved it. They bought a few acres, raised corn, vegetables, poultry, sheep, cows, &c., and nine children, "all darters." At length, the good man died. She never says so, or hints it, but I cannot help believing that she was, in reality, not in rule, the "better man of the twain." "A widder with nine gals all grown up round me, and wantin' more'n more every year."

What does the widow do? She brings up all her girls to habits of industry, and labors for them right bravely, with Mrs. Ellen Key Blunt's new song in her heart, at least—

"I have a little boat to sail upon the tide,
In it nine little children are working side by side,
And I work, because these children are working side by side."

And with many a struggle of true womanly delicacy she resolved—

"That the power of human prejudice and the strength of human pride,
Should not wreck her little boat, with the children side by side."

She oversaw the little farm, and the negro man and woman looked after the stock, and she knew that her daughters took good care of the poultry and eggs. She labored diligently with her hands; aided by her eldest daughters, she spun and wove their own clothing, and sold blankets for $30 a pair, as she told me, with an honest glow of pride.

As the girls grew up to womanhood, "and fine gals they was," they felt a woman's necessity for beautiful and appropriate attire, and the sympathizing, considerate mother was often "put to her straits," to find the means for these growing expenses. Her warm, true heart was unchanged by years of labor and care, and sorrow, and she had, too, no doubt, a mother's pride and ambition, and wished to see them all well settled in life. So she struggled with her pride and fear of human prejudice, and took her corn to the mill to be ground, on the horse behind her, and a bucket of butter to be sold in town hanging on the horn of the saddle. This she told me, not boastingly, as if she had found a new pride in overcoming womanly sensitiveness, not humbly, or shamefacedly, but frankly, with an honest heart and honest tongue, that feared not to shew her deeds to the world stamped with their true name.

The daughters were all married, most of them well. One is dead, and one is a widow, came back to the parent bird, with her three little ones, for shelter. Sally's husband, somehow, seems always unfortunate. He failed in business, and just as he got fairly started again, his house was burned with all the furniture and clothing. He had to begin the world anew, "and he continues doing so."

Thus the old lady's sympathy and purse are still taxed, but whatever she renders is given with hearty good will. She sold her little farm a few years since, not for $7000 or $8000, as her friends assured her was its market value. She "thought she could afford to sell it for $6000," and by the aid of economy and her knitting, buy a little dwelling in town, and live on the interest of the remainder. She never took advantage of times or circumstances, to exact exorbitant prices. No, no, "I tried to do as I'd like to be done by." She still knits socks for forty cents a pair, her employers finding the yarn.

The other day she came in with a story about another widow, also from Kentucky. She had been to visit her and found her nearly destitute. So what does the kind soul do? She came in, not to ask for assistance for this poor widow, but to beg that the stockings she had engaged to knit for the family might be transferred to this stranger. "For I seen her knit, and from what I kin judge, she kin knit faster an' as well, if not better, nor I kin. And I kin live without knittin, and as I thought, if you was willin', I'd just like to throw so much into her hands, for she is needy, I can tell you, and winter is just comin' in." "Has she children?" "One darter, nigh about grown, but she can't help much, with nuthin' to do." The dear old heart, kind as it is honest.

A little, thin figure, clothed in plain black, not untidy, and by no means precise or prim, it comes quickly in, with an energetic, yet not noisy step, and with a cheery voice and smile, as she lifts her head to look at you through her glasses. A quiet energy, without a token of fussiness, marks all her doings.

My heart glows with enthusiasm when I think of this old lady, with her honest thoughts, that hide not when you look into her eyes; with honest heart and hands of cotton, who occupies a painful residence, with appropriate furniture and surroundings, yet cannot afford to pay a few hundred dollars to have these negroes, who labor for him day and night, taught the way to live right and die right. God help such men, they are in God's hands and cannot escape their final great account.

But my main object in writing these lines was to urge the importance of taking the proper steps for securing to our colored missions suitable houses of worship; we can hardly hope that the mission in a neighborhood is firmly established without there is a suitable house of worship for them. On many of the missions this necessity seems to be felt, and in some places snug chapels have been built; this is encouraging, but the influence of this conviction is not sufficiently extensive in many places; the negroes meet for worship in barns or old out-houses, or under sheds, or even under the spreading shade of some large oak. One reason for this is, perhaps, that the planters do not wish their servants to visit other plantations, but each planter must have the missionary preach to his own people on his own premises. Now, it strikes us that the disadvantages of such a course are manifold and obvious. First, it will require a much greater outlay of men and means than the church can furnish to occupy half our present mission field, without taking into the account the constantly increasing field which annually invites our attention; but even if we had an ample supply of men and means to give to every planter a preacher for his own plantation, so that his negroes should never go from home at all to hear preaching, it would not be wise to attempt that sort of operation.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7, 1860.

$1 75 to 1861.—With this number of the Advocate we have increased the edition, to supply future new subscribers.—Is our agents and friends are that we suffer no loss by this accommodation? Send hundreds of new subscribers immediately—at $1 75 to 1861. All new Subscribers will be charged, if the money is not sent, $1 75 to 1861; if the money is sent, they will be credited only to 1861. Let all take notice. The rule is inexorable.

THE WARFARE OF MODERN THOUGHT.

The deep meaning of civilization is never felt until we undertake to measure the sufferings which its blessings have cost. Every acre of land redeemed from the forest, every highway of travel, the iron, coal and granite dug from the earth, and still more emphatically, the institutions of government and social life, are monuments in a greater or less degree of human agony. The shrunken muscle, the exhausted nerve, the worn-out heart, have paid the purchase-money for all we enjoy, and at this hour, rejoicing in the large inheritance of free mind and unfettered action, we are the debtors of generations now gone. There is something intensely sad in the reflection that the pleasures of this age were bought by the pains of the ages past, and that even the opportunities of manhood, its privileges of growth and expansion, its widening sphere of activity and its brightening hopes of yet further progress, are mainly due to the sorrows and sacrifices of our forefathers. The most of men never think of these obligations. The memories of the dead, like their bones, are beneath our feet, and their virtues with their dust are buried out of sight. No wonder; if men can forget God, the great and good giver, it requires much less heart to forget their earthly benefactors.

But there is another aspect to this thought. If we are thus indebted to our predecessors, the same law of suffering for the human race exacts our obedience, and whether we will or not, there are pangs to be endured, ills to be experienced, and silent martyrdoms to be undergone, in fulfillment of the divine plans. These very hearts of ours must contribute their share to the world's practical regeneration. In loneliness, in sense of desertion, often in scorn and derision, without sympathy or succor, we are called to part with some portion of our ease, our satisfaction, our peace, for the welfare of coming generations. No law is harder to escape. We may refuse to suffer for our own good, but no man that lives can lay off the burden which the necessities of humanity in its future weal impose on his heart. To participate in the struggles of the age is our inevitable destiny. Go where we may, the problems of the times follow us and demand a calm and earnest consideration. Creed against creed, brother against brother, church against church; doubt and dogmatism, infidelity and licentiousness, pharisaism and partisanship; these are some of those multitudinous shapes that make the world a terrible arena of strife, and dismiss the beautiful images of rest and tranquil hope from the fireside and the altar to hover over the green graves in the church-yard. Sad days have befallen us. Disguise it as we may, men's hearts are smitten with mournfulness, and amid all our show of joy and exultation there is a deep undertone of grief. Our civilization is more of a body than a spirit. Our country, lifted to eminence and glory, trembles on her dizzy height, and even our religion, ordained and consecrated to the rightful sovereignty of the world, is half shorn of its strength, and holds its jubilant honors in the visions of prophecy. Like all the deepest feelings of our nature—feelings that are below the common sensibilities acting between man and man in the intercourse of life—these emotions are not precisely definable in words, nor indeed do they shape themselves in clear forms to our own consciousness. But they have a real existence, and withal a significance that indicates an impressive bearing on the evolving fortunes of the day.

The greatest fact of the times is this struggle of modern thought with the problems which it is endeavoring to solve. On the one hand, materialism is aiming to enclose all things, whether animate or inanimate, whether dead or alive, in its formulas, so that it may proclaim the reign of its tyrannic uniformity, and enjoy the fancied bliss of universal antecedents and consequents. To this ambitious end, it condenses its withering creed into the one word—LAW, and predicates of it the same authority, no matter if it is directed to the flow of water, or the flow of impulse, to the light of stars, or that other light, which, as the poet says, was "he'er on sea or shore." It proposes to count volitions as it counts the pulses in a man's arm, and to interpret his conduct just as it would explain the revolutions of day and night. On the other hand, an equally absurd spiritualism gives the physical universe a soul, or manipulates it at will in table legs. And outside, or rather inside, of these enormities, the minor shapes of unbelief array their legionary charms, and ask for shrines that would employ the workmen of a new Ephesus. Heathenism multiplied its petty deities for every fountain, and waterfall, and grove; but our age, reversing the intenser faith of those ancient dreams, exhausts its creative skill in fabricating the ugly images of unbelief, that may be set up at every angle of the street, and over every door-way. Fantastic isms clamor for acceptance. Crotchets and quips besiege the ear. Intuition and impulses write apostolical epistles; and our beliefs, like certain plants and animals, the more degenerate they become the more prolific their offspring, labor to atone for their ignorance and nothingness by their numerical captivations.

There is a ready explanation of all these great and growing evils. Modern thought, in its power and scope, is the fruit of Christianity, but its begotten strength is madly turned against its own parentage, and the unnatural treachery smites its brain with the ravings of delusion. The inspiration of Christianity gave it freedom—gave it the very language in which it blasphemes Christ—gave it dominion over the material world, and the magnificence of civilization; and yet, like the rebellious and ungrateful prodigal, it has taken the portion of goods falling to its share, and strayed into a far country. Proud of its strength, and boastful of its progress, exulting in its encircling honors, as though born of its own might, it arrays its mock majesty against the supreme dignity of heaven, and welcomes the worship of the world, as if it were the best benefactor. The spirit of childhood that Jesus taught, and which all philosophy sees is the only true spirit of intellect, is utterly alien to all its tastes and aims. It arrogantly claims the wonders of civilization, boasts its triumphs in all social order and enterprise, lands, inventions and institutions, as the outgrowth of its own brain, and scorns Christianity, as a mythical romance worthy to keep company with the ballads and fictions of a rude age. Against this fool-hearted presumption, God plants the standard of the cross, and hence the stern conflict. The doctrine of the cross of Christ teaches that society is a redeemed institution, that its life and hopes are from above, that all its agencies of skill, industry, trade, commerce, statesmanship, are amenable to truth and right-eousness, and exist for divine ends; but modern thought throws off the allegiance, and glorifies its own activity as the Savior of the world. Out of this spirit come the thousand shapes of pharasaic self-sufficiency that refuses to accept Christ, because Christ requires humility and reverence. Out of this spirit comes that rashness of speculation which converts so much of our science into a deistical or pantheistic creed, that is fast organizing the literary class against ministers of the gospel and the pulpit, that profanes the daily newspaper press, and even infuses its venom into statesmanship and legislation.

It is all a vain warfare—vain because wicked. The pride of Intellect, holding aloft its peacock plumes, and insanely striving to create a fierce battle between Christianity and modern civilization, is doomed to have a signal fall. The kingdom of Christ is not built on science and earthly wisdom, and other garlands wreathe its banners than such as poetry and art gather. Its arguments are not in the rocks of geology, in the stars of astronomy, in the coins, or monuments, or data of history. Above all these stand its simple attestations, its manger in Bethlehem, its majestic tenderness at the grave of Lazarus, its divine offering on the cross of Calvary. And beneath these the intellectual worldliness of the age, the scoffing science and literature of the day, must bow down and be thankfully happy, to live just where the lowly plant and the towering oak live where the cattle find their bread, and men their nourishment, in the dust of the earth, prostrate on God's great footstool.

ART AND ITS PURSUIT.

A SKETCH of a lecture delivered by the Rev. Dr. Samson, President of Columbia College, Washington, D.C., appears in the National Intelligencer. The address was on the occasion of the opening of the Washington City Art-Association, for the present season. We publish an outline of it below, and we hope that our readers, and more especially those engaged in the work of education, will carefully read it.

The deep interest now beginning to be felt in Art-culture is one of the signs of the times, a most beautiful and promising sign, too, and worthy to be hailed with gratulation by all who take pleasure in the growth and progress of humanity. Why this study should have been so lightly treated, and why good people are sometimes so indifferent to its immense value, are among those inexplicable facts that belong to the shady side of human nature. Every man, every woman, ought to have an Art-education sufficient to appreciate the beauties of nature, to enter into the meaning of God's works, to call forth taste and sensibility, in fulness of vigor and breadth of reach, and so be able to give some account of the soul and its relations to the magnificence of the objects around it. Whether or not persons become Artists, in the professional sense, is not the question. Each may determine this for himself. But certainly every soul that is unwilling to wear the shroud of death around it, and inhabit the dull body as a grave, ought to be eager, joyously eager, to acquire that knowledge of God's works which Art only supplies.

The value of Art as a means of mental cultivation is not over-estimated by those critics who assert that it is one of the best and readiest ways to expand the intellect, to improve the accuracy of the external senses, and to afford pleasures of a most salutary and invigorating nature. Outside of these considerations it has a practical utility not to be exaggerated. Taking Art in its broad range, what a vast increase of comfort and convenience might we have in our domestic buildings, our churches, and our public edifices; what a genuine luxury, healthful and ennobling, in all the pictorial representations in our school-books, our magazines, and our articles of daily use, if this branch of study were generally taught! But owing to our neglect of this thing, there is scarcely a single person in most of our congregations who is at all competent to judge of an architect's plan, when submitted for a church structure. Our preachers are so generally indifferent to its merits that they could hardly tell a pulpit on paper from a dry-goods box, and, as a necessary result, our church-buildings are often spoiled, our educational architecture is poor and meagre, and our money is wasted because of our ignorance. Rev. C. K. Marshall, D.D., has heretofore made some suggestions to our Book Agent about a book of plans for all sorts of churches, which is eminently worthy of attention.

One of our leading Institutions—the Tuskegee Female College, of Alabama—has already moved in advance of public sentiment, and done a work of significant mark in this department. We trust others will follow. Indeed, others are following. If we carry out our extreme plans for the Publishing House, at Nashville, one of our first necessities will be to provide for literary and Art-culture; and, therefore, we again urge the general attention of our friends to this interesting subject:

The speaker alluded, before proceeding to read his lecture, to the hesitation of every public speaker to address an Art Association: arising from the distrust which every uneducated man has to speak on a subject upon which he has had no early training; for in the department of Art none of our educated men have any early training. The fact was mentioned that artists themselves will not fill this void, and themselves hesitate to speak upon their art; and this again was referred to the fact that, while men will speak upon any other subject have appreciative because educated hearers, the artist expects none in his audience to be in true sympathy with him, because none are educated in art as they are in other departments of human knowledge. As illustrative of this general want of information as to the simplest principles of art, the following violations of a single law were noticed: The position of Houdon's statue of Washington at the capital of Virginia, on a level with the observer, instead of upon a pedestal, as the artist had designed it; the act of an entire Congress cutting down by about one-half the pedestal of a great statue, without thought that it would destroy the proportions of the artist's work; and the universal condemnation of Power's statue of Webster the last summer in the Athens of America as too tank, while the spectators were viewing it standing upon their level, and not at the elevation for which its proportions were calculated.

The speaker announced as a theme apparently appropriate from these considerations, Art Education, or the Place which the Plastic Arts should have in our system of Popular Education. After alluding to the fact that God's will in this respect was indicated by the fact that he made every thing in Eden "first pleasant to the eyes," thus intimating that man is affected first and most deeply by forms of beauty, the Greeks were singled out as the people that had proved most true to this Divine intimation as to the moulding power of art in plastic forms.

The speaker then introduced the Muses as the art teachers of the Grecian people. Pythagoras, though especially a mathematician, made art the first study in his school. A century before Socrates and Plato both the principles of art criticism and the manipulations of art, execution, in drawing, painting, modelling, and carving, were introduced into the common schools of Greece by Eumolpus of Sicyon. The influence of this teaching in giving finish of culture and correspondent energy and endurance in every thing valuable in Athenian society was traced; and it was urged that the educated among the public men of our country lack that elaborate polish which is just as indispensible as massive strength in securing a safely and surely working mind. The objections that art education is not sufficiently practical for Americans, and that it is counter to the spirit of an enlightened Christianity, were severally met; the Muses, as sister teachers, being allowed by the speaker to plead their own cause.

In conclusion, they were made to urge that, in a land like ours, an art-adorned capital and a class of men moulded by a thorough early art culture were more needed than in any nation that has ever existed. Nothing but an early and continued school training can lay the foundation of such a culture.

CULTIVATING THE ART OF THOUGHT.

There is nothing that differences men more than power of clear, penetrative, sustained thought. No doubt that in this respect original differences exist in the structure of men themselves; but every day's observation convinces us that if men were more attentive to their personal culture, these differences would be greatly diminished. Each one of the mental faculties has its particular laws, and hence, if we would develop these faculties, the laws that govern their action must be carefully studied and rigidly observed. Indeed, the art of culture chiefly consists in knowing these laws and applying them. Thus, the reason is mainly exercised by means of analogy, the imagination by means of resemblance, and therefore the scientific method of cultivation in the one case differs widely from the other. A man must perceive these distinct offices of distinct faculties, comprehend the distinct laws through which their offices are discharged, and avail himself of their instrumentality, before he can have any marked success in his personal improvement. Whether he studies intellectual philosophy in text-books or not, it is quite certain that he must be an intellectual philosopher in some degree, know the organization of his own mind, know how it moves, whence come its impulses, whither tend its activities, before he can work efficiently and wisely in its behalf. Had not Watt first investigated the laws of steam, he could never have invented the steam-engine. So of Daguerre and the laws of light. So of Adam Smith and the laws of political economy. All power begins in a knowledge of law. Moreover, the higher the sphere of action, the more necessary a comprehension of law.

The laws of thought are subtle, oftentimes apparently confused, always more or less hidden. But this fact lies at the root of mental culture, for much of that culture consists in unfolding these recondite laws, in lifting them from obscureness into light, in shaping and moulding consciousness so as to grasp them forcibly and fully. Nature is wise in that arrangement by which these laws are not exposed on the surface. The trial of our energy begins at this point, and what is far more important, the keen perception and the vigorous judgment, the easy facility in classifying facts, and the soldier-like command of their bearings, which constitute a really cultivated intellect in its relations to external things, are mainly acquired in those previous processes by which perception, and judgment, and orderly skill, are called forth in the introspective exercises of the mind. No man can long watch the manner in which one thought gives birth to another thought without learning something of the art of suggestion. This suggestive action is the secret of mental power. Get a knowledge of this, and the key to progressive thought is in your hand. Each thought has a germ for another, or for many other ideas. Find out this germ, seize it with your awakened force, stimulate its struggling life, and help it forth into sunshine; and when that has been done, repeat the process on the perfected thought, ascertain its associations, arrange them, and other sentiments and images will spring up into your consciousness. All our thinking is a beautiful law of evolving one thing out of another, and, in a great degree, this habit is acquirable. Direct your consciousness to discern what element of thought carries a link in it, and when this is found, proceed with your task.

A SABBATH IN NEW ORLEANS.

ON last Sabbath a stranger in New Orleans would have found it difficult to determine the character of our population. It was a beautiful spring day: the weather was delightful, the sun was unclouded, the sky was clear and smiling, and the young leaves and flowers gave token of the glory of later spring. Sunday School children beautified the streets, going or returning, and the churches were filled with christian worshippers. But, at the same time, the city was full of the sights and sounds of the annual firemen's celebration. A procession, with banners, bands of music, engines, carriages, tramping companies, and galloping officers, headed by Mayor Stith, and Postmaster Marks—the whole of which took an hour or more to pass—was in strange contrast with the traditional sanctity and christian services of the holy day. Prince Alfred, the eldest son of Queen Victoria, was lately at the classic city of Athens. The celebration of the Olympic Games (revived in December last, for the first time since the days of their suppression through the influence of Christianity) happened to be under way at the very moment when the Prince reached Athens. Hearing of his expected arrival, the committee of management deferred the horse-race in the hippodrome—one of the most important parts of the festive occasion—from Monday until the succeeding Sunday, so that he might grace it with his presence. "But the son of the Queen of England had received a different education from the gentlemen of the committee, and answered positively and emphatically that 'he could not be present at the race on the holy day of the Lord,' and the committee postponed it anew until the next Tuesday, when it took place."

Nothing of the kind has been more surprising and mortifying than the recent anniversary celebrations, on the Sabbath, in this city—first, that of the battle of New Orleans, and last Sunday, that of the firemen. It is to the last degree discouraging to those who, in the largest and best sense, have an interest in the prosperity of the city. The papers, and the mouths of the people, are full of complaints of the prevalent lawlessness and crime. It is their own fault. They countenance a godlessness that never fails to bear such fruit. They complain of corruption and mismanagement in the city administration. It can never be otherwise, while God-defying and Sabbath-breaking men bear rule. They complain that good citizens will not go to the polls to vote. They have nobody to vote for who is worthy, if the dignitaries who led in the desecration of last Sabbath are examples. We advise all good men to keep away from the polls, while such men are candidates. Some of them may desire the votes of the people of the State after awhile. Their last Sabbath's services should certainly recommend them. New Orleans is injured commercially, and every other way, by such shameful spectacles. Christian people in all parts of the Union are ashamed of us. They will not, many of them, come to reside among us. They will not raise their children among us.

NEW ORLEANS AND EUROPEAN STEAMSHIP ENTERPRISE.

A few weeks since we noticed the movement to establish a line of six screw steamers between New Orleans and Liverpool, upon a basis of $1,000,000, $500,000 to be subscribed here, and $500,000 in England. We learn that the prospects for its success are encouraging. If there ever was a favorable time for the success of an enterprise of which the whole South has been talking, making speeches, and passing resolutions, for a score of years, now is the time. It is estimated that the cotton crop this year will be about 4,500,000 bales, and that half of it will be shipped from this port; to say nothing of sugar, tobacco, and provisions. At the present ratio of the increase of the cotton crop, it will not be many years before New Orleans alone will receive annually as much cotton as the present entire crop. Native coals can be supplied cheaply at New Orleans, so that the cost of fuel on the voyage will be more than half saved by the saving of the charges of towing up and down the rivers on both sides of the Atlantic. On the voyage from Europe it is proposed to call at some suitable port in Ireland, to receive French and continental goods, passengers, and mails, and also to call at Havana. Both importers and exporters are ready to give active support to this project, at rates of freight which will compensate the shareholders, inasmuch as they perceive the various advantages arising from saving of time, insurance, interest of money, and the more important item of having their goods to reach their destination within a short and certain desirable time, and in the best condition. It is generally conceded that the course of business has a tendency to supersede sails by steam, and it is believed that the Atlantic routes will shortly be occupied almost wholly by Screw Steamers. Already nearly all articles of commerce, except cotton, are conveyed by Screw Steamers to and from Europe and the Northern States of America. The time has now arrived when the Southern States will import direct from Europe, and will export the great staples, cotton, tobacco, provisions, etc., successfully and profitably by Screw Steamers to Europe. From the estimates made, the investments in this enterprise will pay fifteen per cent. per annum. Subscription lists are open at the offices of—

Messrs. A. Gordon Bakewell, of Hermann, Power, and Co., 90 Common-street; S. H. Kennedy, of S. H. Kennedy and Co., 34 & 36 Poydras-street; Cornelius Fellowes, of Fellowes and Co., 149 Common-street; T. L. Wiltray, 212 Camp-street; Benjamin Florance, 43, Carondelet-street; J. G. Gaines, of Henderson and Gaines, 100 Canal-street; David Jamison, of Giquel and Jamison, 16 and 18 Chartres-street.

WITHDRAWING FROM LIBERIA.—The Maryland House of Delegates on the 15th inst., cut off from the Colonization Society the annual appropriation of $5000 by a decided vote, and left only the clause of the code giving $70 per capita for each free negro that may be taken from the State. This is another sign of the effects of the abolition crusade of the Northern fanatics.

"THE DEW OF THY YOUTH."

OUR readers will recollect the account of the schoolboys' prayer-meeting, at Cokesbury in 1837, published in last week's Advocate. Many such histories, illustrating the prevalent scepticism as to the capacity of children for conversion and a Christian life, might be published. The Church is far behind the truth on this subject. We need another Wesleyan revival, on this subject, and a Wesley to inaugurate it. In one of the Churches in this city, of late, we have been struck and gratified by the number of children who have, unexpectedly to pastor and parents, commenced praying, and joined the Church. A young peoples' prayer-meeting, also, is in successful operation, at which the children delight to attend. The Sunday-schools, and the churches controlling them, should be aroused to seek the conversion of the children. All teachers, secular as well as Sunday-school teachers, also, should be christian teachers, and keep the same blessed object steadily in view. For "education is a divine work."

For the encouragement of all thus engaged, we publish something of history about childrens' prayer-meetings in the "olden time."

Silesia about the end of the seventeenth century, came, by the extinction of the Protestant family, into the possession of the Hapsburgs, who, as was their wont, let loose their Jesuit brigands upon it, and without regard to treaties, and even rights, took away all the churches and schools of the Protestants. About the year 1707, Charles XII. of Sweden, to whom the Protestants of Silesia made their hard case known, held up his mailed hand to the Austrian Emperor, and by that means alone got more than a hundred churches restored to his co-religionists. About this time the singular phenomenon occurred which put the whole religious world at the time in amaze, and excited the attention of all the Universities of the continent. In every village and town of Silesia the children, from four to fourteen years of age, began to meet for prayer three times a day, in bands of two hundred up to three thousand, according to the size of the place. They met morning, noon, and night; chose one to preside; sang a hymn, and prayed with unction and fervour, such as astonished all spectators. When questioned what induced them to this, they said they were driven by an inward impulse to pray to God for schools and churches, and for peace.

It was general at one time throughout the country, so that a bird in flight could not have carried the news of what had happened at one place to the other. Nothing could keep back the children from their prayer-meetings; they endured cold, and hunger, and hardship on account of them. They were taken up examined by the Town Council, and by ministers. The latter preached furiously against them from their pulpits. Parents tried to keep back their children, but some fell into a fever from anguish. They were driven out of the market places, but escaped to hills in the neighborhood, and prayed. People noticed what good effect it had upon their conduct; they were changed. No one of the ministers understood the matter, except Freilinghausen, Franke's son-in-law, who wrote in their defence. This lasted four months. But mark one fact, these children were the generation that, under Frederic the Great, (1742,) saw their country delivered finally from the yoke of Austria and of the Jesuits.

"METHODIST PROGRESS TOWARD PRESBYTERIANISM."

THE TRUE WITNESS, alluding to the advocacy of lay-representation by Dr. Stevens of the Northern Methodist Church, calls the movement "Methodist progress toward Presbyterianism." If the Witness had said "toward Episcopalianism," it would have been equally as true. Presbyterianism is presbyterial, as contradistinguished from episcopal Church government. There has been no "Methodist progress" in that direction; consequently, the Witness is in error. Candor, and a too exclusive denominational feeling, like oil and water, do not mix well. Methodist polity is not a stereotyped system of details. Consequently Methodist development is not Methodist change. It is simply an earnest Christianity as adapted to the wants of different countries and times. Its present form has proved itself best so far. If a modification of form be thought best in future, it will be adopted, just as it would have been in the first instance had it been thought best. "Concession" of principle, or "preference" for other systems, have had, and will have nothing to do in the matter. Methodism has always been surrounded with these other systems. And should these be changed, Arminianism allows of choice; Calvinism does not, theoretically, though, by a happy inconsistency it does practically, as its modern Arminian pulpit presentation demonstrates. Neither Methodism nor Presbyterianism needs such partizan statements as that made by the Witness. Both are respectable and useful, and can afford to be modest.

THE ADVOCATE IN OUR SCHOOLS.

THE erroneous opinion which has long prevailed, that miscellaneous reading should not be allowed among the students at our educational institutions, is beginning to pass away, as dead leaves are hid by the rising greenness of spring. Scholastic study and discipline, and literary aliment for the mind, are analogous to muscular exercise, and appropriate food, for the body. Every boy and girl, and every young gentleman and lady, in our numerous schools, should take a good newspaper. Many parents upon sending their sons and daughters to school, have had the Advocate sent to them. This practice should become general. Both parents and teachers should promote it. Let them have the news, and current literature, and keep themselves in sympathy with the life of the times, and especially with its religious life.

"FRATERNAL SALUTATIONS."—Before our new missionaries to China sailed from New York, they had a farewell missionary meeting in St. Paul's Church, at which Dr. Bangs presided, and Drs. Durbin, McClintock, Sehon and Bishop Janes, assisted. Some abolitionists have complained of this fellowshiping slaveholders. Dr. Durbin publishes an apologetic explanation; whereupon the Southern Advocate is offended, and is sorry Dr. Sehon asked for the Church. It is a little mortifying—not much however. All concerned meant well, we think. They cannot help abolition clamor. The Christian Advocate and Journal spoke of it heartily. Dr. Durbin should have been silent, however.

THE DUKE—THE MADIAI.—A few years ago, Leopold, Duke of Tuscany, imprisoned the Madiai for circulating a few copies of the Word of God. To-day, the Duke is a fugitive from his kingdom, and the Madiai are busily engaged in circulating the Scriptures; the Provisional Government of Tuscany having proclaimed freedom of conscience and full religious liberty. This remarkable change in the relative positions of the Duke and Madiai has not been effected by chance. The invisible, forgotten hand of God is still directing the affairs of men on earth according to the counsel of His own will.

THE RIGHT BASIS.—We rejoice to see that our Presbyterian brethren are taking steps to build a Presbyterian Seamen's Chapel. It is not an "American Society" affair. It belongs to the Christian Church, by belonging to one of its branches. God speed it. It is a good beginning. We hope other Churches will take steps to do something for the fifty thousand sailors that visit this port annually—fifteen thousand of whom are constantly here. The Alabama Conference has a pastor in the Bethel ship in Mobile Bay, Rev. Dr. Spilman.

BURNING OF BIBLES AT BOGOTA, SOUTH AMERICA.—It is stated in late advices from South America, that the Cathedral clergy of Bogota had collected all the Bibles distributed by the London Bible Society, and burnt them in the public square. The British minister strongly protested against the act. It was stated that the American minister was a spectator of the scene, but did not join in the protest. A full statement of the whole affair has been sent to the Government at Washington.

There are three hundred and ten churches in Philadelphia, of which nineteen are for colored people. The Episcopalians have the largest number, fifty-one; the Methodists next forty-one; there is no Orthodox Congregational Church, and but one Unitarian; the various kinds of Presbyterians have sixty-seven churches.

MY FIRST ROUND ON MY FIRST CIRCUIT.

My name had been sent to the Annual Conference as a suitable person to be received into the traveling connection. I was admitted. I heard where my circuit was, not far from my house. The morning for leaving home had arrived. Neatly and comfortably furnished, and well mounted, I bid adieu to my home, as home forever—I would be there often again, but be there as a visitor, and never as a settled member of that loved circle. My heart was full, my eyes were full; I had no words, my emotions were too big for utterance. How unutterably strange I felt. All the common business of life given up, and forever resigned, with all its worldly hopes and ambitions. A new and untried life was before. One must pass through such an experience to realize it.

Though raised by pious parents, (now among the blest), I had been a professed Christian only a little more than a year. I had tried to preach but once, had never led a class, or prayed in public but two or three times. I had a tolerable English education, had read history, romance, poetry, and politics; but had never read the Bible a great deal, and knew nothing of theology as a science. One could scarcely have been more poorly furnished for the work; and yet I was on my way to assume the office of a teacher and a pastor. As I rode away from my home, I felt indescribably lonely and sad; but the voice of duty bade me go, and through in tears I went.

I left home on Saturday morning; by eleven o'clock on Sunday, I reached an appointment on the circuit. It was a small log house on the hill-side, in the lonely woods. Quite a number of people had assembled, horses were hitched all about; ladies were riding up to the horse-blocks, and gentlemen were displaying their gallantry in assisting them to alight. With what strange feelings I returned into that crowd, among them my senior and colleague, a short red-haired, presentable looking man, of twenty-five summers. He had had no early advantages, had no taste for books, and was sadly limited in the range of his ideas; but a man who meant well, and has long since passed to his reward.

Through courtesy, or curiosity, or both, he requested and urged me to preach; with extreme reluctance I yielded, but through want of matter and confidence I failed; but it was the fashion in these days to exhort, my colleague could do something of that sort, so that the fortunes of the day were in some measure redeemed.

I spent the evening and the night with him. After retirement, when we were alone, I said, "Brother L., I don't know how to preach, how to get up a sermon; tell me something about it." In a slow and measured way he proceeded to say, "Select your text, arrange your matter; in the pulpit begin in a moderate manner, and grow more animated as you proceed to the close," and added no more. About as satisfactory as if he had said, select your canvass, and brushes, arrange your colors, and proceed to paint landscapes and portraits. This was all I ever gleaned from him on sermon making.

Next morning we separated, he to conclude the first round on the circuit, (his fifth) and I to begin my first round. A journey of some sixty or seventy miles lay before me. The circuit was some two hundred miles around, twenty-four appointments in twenty-eight days, the four rest days were mostly spent in the saddle doing long rides.

I reached my first appointment a gloomy, gusty, rainy morning, late in October. The little old log church was in the midst of a dilapidated camp-ground; the congregation consisting of some seven or eight persons, most of them old church members. I was only nineteen, and only a year past a professed Christian. This was most embarrassing; I could not teach these old Christians. I failed miserably, and was profoundly mortified.

The next appointment was some fourteen miles distant, the country rough and sparsely settled, without a guide I lost my road among the by-ways. About two o'clock I was in the neighborhood of the appointment, and overtook a raw, gawky youngster in his shirt sleeves, rough and dirty. Said I, "can you direct me the way to Mr. G.'s?" "Oh, yes, I am going right by there." After eyeing me a few minutes, he said, "stranger, I suppose you are going to buy old Mr. G.'s land, he wants to sell it?" "No, I don't wish to buy land." Presently he resumed, "I reckon you are a relation of the family?" "No, I am no relation." He was silent a few moments; then another solution of my business occurred to him. "Oh, I reckon you are going to see the old man's gals, he has some mighty perty ones?" "No sir, I am not courting." He seemed for a little while to have exhausted his resources of possible solutions; but no, he soon added, "I suppose you are just an acquaintance, and only calling to see them?" "No, I don't know any of the family." I thought surely he is through now; but no, my numerous negatives had only whetted the edge of his curiosity, and made him desperate; so he cut right through the knot, and said, "stranger, what are you going there for anyhow?" I told him, and his "Oh!" was a genuine exclamation of surprise.

These days, as I went from appointment to appointment were sad, days; I went to the pulpit each day with something like the reluctance a criminal might be supposed to go to the stocks, shrinking and dreading the mortification of a failure. For days together I was depressed; but a few days after meeting with my inquisitive road acquaintance, a little incident occurred to rouse me. I was accustomed to the sympathy of kind words, but the sympathy so like pity, that it mortified and depressed me yet more than I was before, but I was now to hear something a little different. On the banks of a certain creek, I came to a little log-cabin meeting house, without shutters to the doors, no windows, no pulpit, no table, no chairs, only a few low benches, and a matter of a dozen rustics. I tried to preach, but as usual in those days failed. After class-meeting, (I attended to that) I went home with a good but most unsophisticated brother. My heart was full of my mortifying failure—I must speak—I said, "my brother, I cannot preach as you plainly see; but I will do the best I can, and you must bear with me, and pray for me."

He had heard my colleague, and had now heard me; he saw I was discouraged and sad. He wished to encourage and cheer me. So he said, "brother, don't be discouraged, don't blame yourself; we have had mighty good and faithful preachers, and we have not improved under their labors as we ought to have done, and I think it is a judgment the Lord has sent on us this year." This was so supremely ridiculous an attempt at sympathy, that it was with extreme difficulty that I restrained myself from laughing in his face. Soon after I left, and as I rode along, I shouted with laughter as I remembered the brother's grave, kind face, and ridiculous attempt at sympathy. I experienced a most delightful revulsion in my feelings; I was roused, cheered, and cheerful. That good brother has never known how much good he did me.

Some ten days after, this last passage, (still on my first round,) seeing I failed so often, and so sadly, I prepared a few pencil notes and put them in my little Bible, (I have it yet). When I reached the church on a gloomy November day, I found that there were no windows in the house, and the deep shade of the room hid my pencil notes. I was confused; my mind, like the house, was dark, I blundered on a little way, and gave it up in despair, and called on an aged brother to pray; he did so with great unction, and among other pressing necessities he brought before the mercy seat, he presented my case and said, "Lord, help this young brother, and strengthen him, for he seems very weak." To which I most heartily responded, Amen.

Such were some of my experiences, on my first round, on my first circuit.

ITINERANT.

LETTER FROM DR. DRAKE.

MR. EDITOR: If one of the recent numbers of your paper I saw an article on the present state of Methodism in New Iberia, La. It is from the pen of brother White. As that was one of the scenes of my former labors I was interested in the article, and much rejoiced to learn that my favorite form of Christianity is doing well in that beautiful town. Brother White will excuse me for correcting one single item in the article. Doubtless, he gave the fact as he had heard it from what he considered authentic sources, and is therefore not to be blamed. It is, that "the gospel has been preached in that place about twenty-five years." There are two living men in Mississippi who preached there as early as 1818, or 1819. I allude to Rev. Thomas Nixon, and Rev. Thomas Owens. The district of country has been regularly supplied with Methodist preaching since 1806, or 1807. Elisha Bowman probably preached in New Iberia after he abandoned New Orleans as a hopeless place. That was in 1806. In 1807, Thomas Lashley labored in that country. As early as 1811 the shrill, sweet, melodious voice of the eloquent Miles Harper, was heard in almost every part of Attakapas. In 1815 the saintly Nally was there. I have an interesting anecdote of his adventures in New Iberia.

So far as I know, there was no organized Society in the place up to 1823. That year I labored there in association with Rev. Thomas Clinton. We had no house of worship in the place, and a public room that had been used for preaching was, for some reason, I forget what, closed against us. Early in January I made my first visit to the place, in company with Rev. Daniel DeVinnie, who had been there the year previous, and was acquainted with some of the inhabitants, and had often preached there. After diligently canvassing the village from end to end, we could find no house in which we could preach. It did not appear to be from opposition, but from thorough indifference. Brother DeVinnie had evidently made a favorable impression on the individuals with whom he had formed acquaintance, for they greeted with cordiality, but no one seemed willing to move a hand to obtain a place for preaching. Disheartened, we were ready to leave the place, and if we were not inclined to shake the dust from our feet, we certainly thought of that passage. We were only detained a moment to satisfy my curiosity. I was a thorough landsman; up to that date I had never seen the ocean, or a sailing craft. There lay in the Teche, opposite the town, a pretty little New England brig, trading in Yankee Notions. It was a show to me, and I desired to go on board. A little difficulty of climbing up the side of the vessel, (for there was no regular staging) placed us on the deck. We were furnished, as most Methodist preachers of that day were, with some religious tracts. I thought we had got to the very place for distribution, so we commenced handing them out. The polite mate of the vessel at once asked us if we were ministers of the gospel, and of what sect. The information caused a visible gleam of pleasure in his countenance, and we were invited into the cabin. Said the delighted officer, "I had not expected to meet a Methodist in these parts; we are all Methodists on this ship, but the Captain is a whole-souled Methodist, and will be delighted to see you." So we found it.

In a few short minutes the burley, kind-faced old gentleman was with us. The affectionate and long-continued shake of the hand, almost amounted to an embrace. He expressed his surprise and gratification in no measured or affected terms. A prompt order to the mate summoned the whole crew to the cabin, all were introduced, and gave a hearty shake of the hand. The ceremony was scarcely over, before the captain struck up, with a stentorian voice on a high key, the delightful old song, commencing,

Whither goest thou, pilgrim stranger,

Every voice joined the music, and when the chorus struck—

I am bound for the kingdom, will you go to glory with me, the welkin rang as it never did before in those parts, not a few of the natives on the adjacent shore were astonished. The song closed, brother DeVinnie or myself prayed, and then the captain. We rose from our knees united Christian friends, which friendship I trust will be consummated in heaven. The captain said at once, we must have preaching to-night, to which we replied we could find no place to preach. You shall preach on board the brig, was the prompt reply, "I will ship a stage at once, and the ladies can come on board quite easily." Scarcely waiting for our reply, he said he would go out and circulate the appointment. In a few minutes he returned, with a venerable looking old gentleman with him—M. S.—whose influence had, probably, closed the avenues to a preaching place in the town. He was considered an unbeliever and opposer. He was introduced to us, and immediately said the preaching must be on land, for the ladies would not like to come on board the brig. "There, said he, is the house of my son-in-law, Mr. French, it is quite large and commodious, and is at your service. It was accepted with much pleasure, and in a very short time Capt. Gladding had made the appointment known to the entire village. The captain had been trading there for several weeks, and had by his kindness and honesty conciliated the entire population, and especially the unbeliever, Mr. S. His influence brought the whole village out to service, and Mr. F.'s large parlor was crowded. The sailors gave a specimen of Methodist singing that had not been heard in those parts before. This gave me an abundant entrance to the place. Mr. French's house was permanently opened for service, and to entertain the preachers. Sometime in the course of the spring, God graciously helped brother Clinton and myself, and we had a gracious revival. Several were converted, and some nine or ten joined the Church; among them was our hostess, Mrs. F., her mother, brother and sister. So far as I am informed, the organization then commenced has never been entirely given up. Trouble came afterward, and one or more of our members made shipwreck of faith, but others died triumphantly; and it may be that some still survive. I hope brother White will make inquiry, and if he finds any of that original Society give them my love.

I afterwards frequently met Capt. Gladding in New Orleans, and there he lent his aid in establishing Methodism. About that you may hear from me again. The good captain has long since gone to his reward in heaven. He was of Providence, Rhode Island.

H. M. DRAKE.

WHAT OF IT?

Lord Palmerston has just appointed a Methodist, the son of a Methodist preacher, to the responsible office of Solicitor-General of England, the first dissenter placed in judicial office since the time of Cromwell. This is heralded in the English Methodist papers, and by English correspondents of Northern Methodist papers, as something like a great triumph. In this country, where Methodists, like their brethren of other churches, have filled every office in the Government, from the Presidency down, it is a matter of no moment whatever. Our English brethren, however, do not look at these things as Southern Methodists do. Nor does it seem that Northern Methodists can afford to do so. The wealth and highest society of the South are in our Churches, furnishing many of our most devoted members.

AN IMPORTANT ENTERPRISE.—We learn that Rev. V. C. Cannon, the pastor, is earnestly endeavoring to build a Methodist Church at the growing town of Orange, Texas, on the Sabine river, which is the line between Louisiana and Texas. The railroad from New Orleans to Houston is to run through Orange. We once visited the place and preached there, and know the importance of the place; we sincerely h

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

MARCH 7, 1860.

LETTER FROM NEW YORK CITY.

DR. BANGS.

This venerable patriarch of the Methodist Church still lives in the enjoyment of good health, in the midst of an interesting group of grand-children, as useful and influential in his declining years as in earlier life. The beauty of holiness shines with its own latrinsic beauty, and sheds its light around our pathway; goodness is not lost nor lessened by declining years, but increasing in value by its hallowed influence, which is everywhere felt, although the voice may be feeble, the elastic step gone, and the eye grows dim, yet the power of goodness strikes every chord of the human heart by its mellowing notes of human sympathy. It exalts the soul with its divine benevolence, and grasps the whole human family in its tender sympathies.

On Sunday we heard an excellent sermon from Dr. M'Clintock, in St. Paul's Church, to a crowded audience. His eloquence is calculated to improve the heart, as well as the head. The music in that church is grand. A blessing, at the close of the service, by Dr. Bangs, blended with its harmonies. His venerable form, with the snows of eighty winters wreathing his commanding brow, added dignity and grace to the hour of worship, for angel divines are "Like living, breathing Bibles!—Tables where Both covenants at large engraven were;

Gospel, and law, on heart, had each its column—
Their heads an index to the sacred volume;
Their very names a title-page,—next
Their lives a commentary on the text."

What legacy can be given to posterity better than the life of a good man? The millionaire may leave his thousands to spoil and ruin the young who, by indolence and extravagance, scatter it to the winds; when the great and good leave, by their example, treasures which never are wasted; and when their spirits have left us for a more genial clime, their light still shines like a lost Pleiad in the path of heaven, from his own orbit, whose light is seen years afterwards.

Dr. M'Clintock is soon to leave our country, being called to preside over the American Church in Paris, France. A more suitable person could not have been chosen, whose learning, talents, eloquence, and true zeal for the cause of Christ, as well as extensive knowledge of men and things, fits him well for that responsible position. We heard him say that he felt that God had, by his providence, called him to that post. Bland in his manners, of easy access; most eminently qualify him as a representative of our Church in America. We attended a morning prayer-meeting in the chapel where he presided, and met the widow of Dr. Olin, who is herself a class-leader, and has a weekly charge of young ladies attached to that church, and is engaged also in other benevolent works. How worthy the wife of such a man! We met in her company Miss Garretson, the only child of that father in Israel of holy memory, who has devoted his time, talents and wealth, for a half century, to educating the poor and doing good, on the most benevolent plans, to benefit the world. She gave me some encouragement that the life of her venerable mother would yet be published—the daughter of old Chancellor Livingstone, one of the earliest converts of Methodism in New York, who for the period of ninety-six years adorned the Gospel of our Savior in the higher walks of life, with the purity of the saints of old, and died at his beautiful residence on the banks of the Hudson, leaving to posterity a name more valuable than rubies. Mrs. Olin is a descendant of the same Livingstone family. The widow of the Hon. Edward Livingstone, of Louisiana, is still living in this city, we were told, and is a member of the Methodist Church. I do not think there is to be found in the wide world a more active and benevolent set of ladies than in the city of New York.

COOPER INSTITUTE.

This noble institution, like that of the Smithsonian in Washington City, is a public benefit—a legacy for the people worthy of its founder, and a monument to perpetuate his memory.—Imperishable! where the light of intelligence is to radiate from rich intellectual resources to enlighten the people. In company with my venerable friend, Dr. Raegs, we attended the closing lecture of the Rev. Dr. Scudder, a missionary from India, whose sublime and masterly strokes of the overpowering eloquence of a Demosthenes, and the smooth, polished periods of a Cicero, yet with the tongue of fire which moved St. Paul on Mar's Hill. He was one of five brothers, all missionaries, sons of a missionary; born in India, but educated in America, with an American heart and a missionary's zeal. He was at the insurrection of Delhi and Lucknow, and gave some thrilling incidents of that horrible massacre; when hordes of barbarians came rushing down from their mountain lastnesses, without mercy butchering all that came in their way. A father, who had a noble and beautiful daughter, saw her destiny, and gave her a weapon of defense to preserve her innocence from vile hands; she fought nobly, and laid several dead at her feet; at last she was literally hacked to pieces, and lay weltering in her blood on the ground. The British soldiers at last came to their aid, and each one took a hair from her head, and swore to revenge her cause—a life for each hair of that beautiful, heroic girl—and well did they keep their oath, for Delhi and Lucknow have both been recaptured. He did justice to the English government, and the base cupidity of the East India Company. He had the knowledge of a statesman, and traced the causes of those anathies to their true sources. His descriptive powers were magnificent; and so graphic that the beautiful scenery was presented to the eye like a glowing picture fresh from the pencil of an accomplished artist. He described a temple which he had visited, situated upon a "tarpelan rock" of vast perpendicular height, standing over a deep ravine below, where the English victims were hurled headlong from its top, with the last death-shriek echoing back upon the undulating air. His flashes of wit were like the lightning playing upon the summer cloud, dazzling without fear—rays piquant and charming. The crowded hall of Cooper's Institute rang with applause. But the climax was periect. The missionary fire was kindled upon the altar of his heart from the throne of God. India must be converted to God, and its air, perfumed by groves of spices, was free for the missionary to inhale; and the English government had offered to support, at their own expense, six missionaries from America, if they would send them; and that he and the little band he had left, of different denominations, had bound themselves under a solemn oath of consecration to rest not until their temples of idolatry were overthrown, and their "righteousness should go forth as brightness, and salvation as a lamp that burneth." Never did we listen to such spirit-stirring eloquence as his, where all the sympathies of the heart were enlisted for the heathen world lying in darkness. The spirit of God was there, giving life, energy and power, to language sealed by the impress of eternal truth from the word of God.

THE SURPRISE PARTY.

There was something new in this method of association, having never attended one before. One hundred and thirty guests assembled at the house of Mrs. Beuel, a noble lady, one of the managers of the Five Points Mission, whose soul is engaged in that important work of charity, and whose wealth is made tributary to the best of purposes. The party was a splendid affair, graced by the presence of Dr. Bangs, Dr. M'Clintock, Bishop Janes, Francis Hall, Esq., and other dignitaries. For social gatherings, this method appears to be calculated to threw the old and young together, to share the benefit of the wisdom of age and the vivacity of youth, without the formality and stiffness of set parties.

REV. DR. STEVENS.

An interview with this accomplished historian of Methodism was one of unusual interest. This gifted author is as eloquent in his flow of language in social intercourse, as with his pen.—Easy, affable, and full of sparkling thoughts suggestive of noble pians to enlighten the world, he shines as a star of the first magnitude in our intellectual horizon. The sweet spirit of the Gospel adorns the man, while his eye flashes with the hidden fires of intellect, which enlivens his conversation, and gives a charm to his society which few possess.

S. B. THOMAS.

LETTER FROM COLUMBUS, MISS.

Methodism, under Providence, is a flourishing plant in Columbus. If its vital fluid, "holiness to the Lord," circulated a little more freely through all its body and members it would be a glorious plant. Thank God, He is just now watering it with some most refreshing showers of mercy and blessings. Rev. R. K. Hargrove, our young Preacher, entered at once into the harvest of souls, and is proving himself a workman favored of God, and accompanied by the power of the Holy Ghost. We have had numerous conversions during the past three weeks, and many additions to the Church. The work is still progressing, with the prospect of much larger results than have yet been attained.

The question of a new Church has been a vexed and trouble some one with us. About six months ago we had $25,000, in as good notes as ever were put upon paper, all in the hands of a building committee, with instructions to go ahead. But a difference of opinion sprung up among the members about location, and, to make a long matter short, it resulted in the complete overthrow of the whole project, and the returning of the $25,000 to those who had subscribed it. Recently, however, the subject has been revived. The congregation had so largely outgrown the church accommodation, and the interests of our noble cause were so terribly suffering, that every one felt like merging his individual preferences in the one great desire for a commodious church-edifice—such a one as would not only relieve our imminent necessities as a worshiping assembly, but furnish ample room for future expansion by encroachment upon the kingdom of Satan. The subscription was opened, the amount raised, the building committee appointed, the plans agreed upon and put into the hands of builders, and very soon we expect to see the temple rising. It will, probably, be the noblest structure of the kind in the Alabama Conference, and I hope and trust will be brought to God as an offering, by a united Church, in the true spirit of humble and fervent piety.

Immediately after the successful issue of this business, our revival commenced—a very natural sequence, certainly. We are now having preaching every night, and prayer-meetings every morning. The interest seems on the increase.

Rev. Dr. Marrah, from Summerfield, has been with us a day or two; he preached a good sermon for us on Sunday morning, and labored affectionately with us at night, and left us, carrying with him some grains in addition to the previously abundant measure of our Christian regard for him.

Speaking of Summerfield, I am reminded of the recent proposition, submitted in your paper, to endow the Female College there. It was a noble proposition, characteristic of its author. The true friends of that institution have long cherished the hope of its ultimate elevation to the high ground that such a school should occupy, by its ample endowment. And while I sympathize to the fullest extent with the grand project of endowing the Southern University, at Greensboro', with half a million of dollars, I can not find any justification, or even excuse, for our wretched impolicy, both as a Church and as a people, in permitting our Female Colleges to haunt away a kind of butterfly existence without any endowment, and without anything more substantial and enduring than popular favor, upon which to rely for perpetuity and greatness. Nothing is more simple than for the Church or the world to dream of a noble civilization or a great country, with shallow women for a basis. Shallow systems of education will make shallow women, with rare exceptions. Dependence upon popular favor will always make comparatively shallow systems of education. You perceive the inference; it is not very flattering to our present race of women, nor to the schools in which they are educated; yet it is equally so to them all; and is unjust to none. It will odd, however, as palliative of its seeming severity, that the degree of vigor and excellence, which some of the schools, and many of the women, have attained, is matter of astonishment, in view of the disadvantages under which they have risen. It proves that there have been, and are, some great minds and earnest minds at work in this department of education, and that the gentler sex more readily and aptly absorb the benefits of any system of culture than their rougher complement. But, O how sadly short of their true end do the very best of our female colleges fall. None deplore their imperfections more than those intelligent and honest teachers who are working in them for their elevation and improvement. But all efforts will prove unavailing without endowments. To my mind this is so potent, that I have no patience to go into an argument to prove it. In fact, if there is any difference between the necessities of male and female colleges on this point, I think female colleges require to be more richly endowed of the two. The first expenditure, for buildings, furniture, grounds, etc., ought to be more than double, and the annual outlay to keep them good will bear a similar proportion. A still more important fact is, that female colleges have but a short time in which to accomplish their work. They must fulfil the offices of the primary school, the academy, and the college, and graduate their pupils at seventeen or eighteen years of age. Boys can be kept until the age of twenty-one or twenty-two, without detriment to any interest whatever; but on many accounts it is desirable to send out the girls at an earlier age. To effect this end, the most potent and polished instrumentalities, that mind and money can bring together, should be furnished them. The richest university in the land has not too large a fund for such a purpose.

Then, let Mr. B.'s proposition be responded to, and enlarged upon. Why not make Centenary institute the twin sister of the Southern University? A Methodist Female College, in middle Alabama, with a fund of half a million of dollars, would do more for the State, and for the Church, and for the general cause of civilization and progress, than any other agency that could be devised. To educate, gratuitously, the daughters of all our ministers is truly a noble and beneficent object; but when you add to this the grander and more far-reaching benefits to society at large, which would result from this project, there is enough in it to fill and satisfy the most generous philanthropy.

The sum named is a large one, but it could be raised if the proper steps are taken. A hundred men giving five thousand dollers each would make up the amount. I have a neighbor—a most excellent and pious member of the Methodist Church—who might take half the entire sum, and be a very rich man then.

While on the subject of female schools, let me say that one of the most vigorous and flourishing of them all, is right in this place—the Columbus Female Institute. In some respects it takes the lead. In the matter of school-furniture, chemical and philosophical apparatus, and geological and botanical collections, it stands, I presume, unrivalled. In numbers, too, I believe it bears off the palm, having at this time two hundred and forty young ladies. Additional buildings are about to be erected, to accommodate the increasing patronage, and the prospects of the school are indeed brilliant.

A METHODIST.

COLUMBUS, Miss., Feb. 20th, 1860.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

PIKEVILLE MISSION.—Rev. Samuel Briggs writes: I arrived on the last day of the past year, and began my labors the first day of January, by filling two appointments. I have completed my first round, having filled every appointment. Our first quarterly meeting embraced the fourth Sabbath in January.—Bro. Powers, our presiding elder, was at the meeting in due time. He preached with great acceptability to the people; they love him very much, and say they will be sorry when his time as elder on this district expires. We had an interesting meeting. The good people of New Prospect church, where we met, subscribed $25 for the support of the preacher. Well done, New Prospect; may other churches go and do likewise. Then our mission may get on the list of self-sustaining appointments, and take the name of Pikeville Circuit. That the mission may do this, if the people have a mind to work on it, I have no sort of doubt. The Pikeville mission is fully able to support a single man. We have here many pious people, whose hearts seem to beat in harmony with the interests of our beloved Methodism. Not a few meet their preacher with the warmest greetings, and bid him make their house his home. More than one has pressed him to spend his rest days with them. They seem never to weary of trying to make his stay with them pleasant, and only regret that he cannot stay longer with them. I love such a warm-hearted hospitality as I find here. And as my people seem disposed to do the best they can for me, I feel anxious to do the best I can for them. This mission is in a well-watered, healthy country. No county, perhaps, surpasses Marion in point of health. Already I am beginning to feel a new vigor. I am willing to work hard to serve such as we have here. I would not volunteer to exchange appointments with any minister in the Alabama Conference. The time is not distant when it may be truly said, "happy shall he be who is appointed to the Pikeville Circuit." I preached sixteen times in January. Expect to begin my second round in a few days.—There was a death among our members immediately after my arrival. I refer to young Bro. J. T. Mills.—He died in the triumphs of faith.

SUGAR CREEK MISSION.—Rev. James M. Isbell writes: I reached my work the 24th day of December; preached at my first appointment the 25th; had a large audience, considering the inclemency of the weather. I had my first quarterly meeting the 11th and 12th; there was a very good turn-out, and all appeared to take an interest in the meeting. There were several penitents seeking their souls' salvation. I have received nine by letter, three into full connection, and five on probation.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MONROE AND TRENTON CIRCUIT.—I see from the Minutes of the last Conference, that this circuit is not reported. Please, therefore, publish the following report of the Monroe and Trenton Circuit:

Money collected to build churches,	$2000 00
" " for support of preacher,	662 00

Raised for missions—

Mrs. Jane A. Faulk, $5; Mrs. Phelia Williams, $5; Mrs. Margaret Faulk, $5; Mrs. Susan M. Faulk, $5,—to make Mr. J. T. Faulk a life member of Parent Society. Mr. John T. Faulk, $5; Mrs. Catharine H. Sandford, $5; Mrs. H. L. Stuart, $5; Mr. Joseph B. Rutlin, $2 50; Mr. D. B. Sandford, $2 50; from other sources, $10,—to make Mr. James L. Sandford a life member, ... 50 00

A. W. SMITH.

SICILY ISLAND AND HARRISBURG.—Rev. S. A. Reed, our P. E., held our first Quarterly meeting for the Sicily Island and Harrisburg charge, 28th and 29th of January last; and, as this is a new work, organized the same. We think we have cause to hope for an abundant harvest during the year. At our quarterly meeting eight persons joined the church, and a feeling of general religious interest was manifested.

V. H.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

COLUMBIA CIRCUIT.—Rev. N. B. Young writes: We closed a two days' meeting, at Bethesda Church, yesterday evening, which resulted in the conversion of one soul, who had long been a constant seeker; six accessions, and a general good feeling among the members. Up to this time we have had fourteen accessions on the work.

NO IMPORTANT NEWS.—There being no important news, either foreign or domestic, we have given up the space of our news department to other matter.

LITERARY NOTICES.

THE WHITE HILLS: their Legends and Landscape and Poetry. By Thomas Starr King. With sixty illustrations, engraved by Andrew from drawings by Wheelock. Boston: Crosby, Nichols & Co., 117 Washington street. 1860. For sale in New Orleans by John C. Morgan & Co., Exchange Place.

This is an artist's book, got up in artist's style. Crimson and gold binding, the perfection of beauty in type, exceedingly rich and smooth cream-colored paper, devoted to the illustration of the beauties of nature in one of the most charming regions in this country—visited by thousands of Southern tourists and pleasure-seekers every summer,—and its contents contributed by such men as King and Tuckerman, it is a gem for the centre table, or for a gift of love. It is useful as well as beautiful—as all really beautiful things are. It is intended to direct attention to the noble landscapes that lie along the routes by which the White Mountains are now approached by tourists; to help persons to appreciate landscape more adequately; and to associate with the principal scenes poetic passages which illustrate them.

MITCHELL'S NEW INTERMEDIATE GEOGRAPHY. The third book of the Series. A System of Modern Geography, designed for the use of Schools and Academies. Illustrated by twenty-three copper-plate maps, drawn and engraved expressly for this work, from the latest Authorities; and embellished with numerous engravings. By S. Augustus Mitchell. Philadelphia: Published by E. H. Butler & Co., and for sale by booksellers throughout the United States. 1860.

This is really a pictorial atlas, very handsomely printed, bound, and engraved. The engravings illustrate the climate, scenery, productions, and historical and geographical characteristics of the different regions of the world. And it is brought down, too, to the latest dates, and corresponds with the most recent knowledge.

All these valuable school-books are laid on our table by Mr. J. R. Tallman, the agent of E. H. Butler & Co., to whom we return our acknowledgments.

GEOLOGY; for Teachers, Classes, and Private Students. By Sanborn Tenney, A. M., Lecturer on Physical Geography and Natural History, to the Massachusetts Teachers Institutes. Illustrated with two hundred wood engravings. Philadelphia: Published by E. Butler & Co. 1860.

For the persons for whom this book is designed, and for all who desire to study the important science of geology, this is a valuable book. It has the highest sanction, too, that of Prof. Agassiz—we are informed.

AN ANCIENT GEOGRAPHY, Classic and Sacred. By S. Augustus Mitchell, author of a series of Geographical Works. An entirely New Edition, drawn from the best Authorities, ancient and modern. Designed for the use of Schools and Colleges. Illustrated with numerous engravings. Philadelphia. Published by E. H. Butler & Co. 1860.

The title of this book, which we give in full, renders it unnecessary that we should speak of it more fully, further than to say that it belongs to Butler's valuable series of school books.

We have also received from E. H. Butler & Co., Bacon's History of Georgia, to be noticed hereafter. All their books are sold in New Orleans by Bloomfield, Steel & Co., —Camp street.

LUCY CROFTON. By the author of "Margaret Maitland," "The Days of my Life," "The Laird of Norlaw," etc. New York: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, Franklin Square. 1860. For sale in New Orleans by Thomas L. Whitr, 105 Canal street. An English story by a well known and popular English writer.

QUINTI HORATII FLACCI OPERA OMNIA, ex Recensione A. J. Macleane. New York: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, Franklin Square. 1860.

ÆSCHILUS ex Novissima Recensione Frederici A. Paley. Accessit Verborum, Quæ Præcipue Notanda Sunt et Nominum Index. New York: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, Franklin square. 1860.

The last two little books belong to Harper's Greek and Latin Texts, and are conveniently portable, and beautifully printed and bound.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE for January. Contents: St. Stephens—part I; Norman Sinclair: an autobiography—part I; Mr. Bull's Song: The Sly Little Man; The Elements of Drawing; The Last French Hero; The Luck of Ladysmede—part XI; The Public Service; Rambles at Random in the Southern States; The Voyage of the Fox in the Arctic Seas.

We have received this number of this old and popular magazine through John C. Morgan & Co., Exchange Place, adjoining the Post-office, New Orleans.

EXPLANATION.

MR. EDITOR.—In the Treasurer's published report of Alabama Conference Missionary Society, I notice the following items, which, it occurs to me, without explanation, no one could possibly understand:

Treasurer to Society,	Dr.
New Lexington Circuit—paid Presiding Elder	$10 00
Subscribed at Mobile Anniversary.....	18 00
	Cr.
By amount paid New Lexington Circuit, to Presiding Elder.....	$10 00

As it is a matter of some interest to those paying money to our preachers, for Missionary purposes, to understand its destination, without undertaking to explain the above account, as stated, I wish to make this simple statement: Miss Mary M'Connell, of New Lexington Circuit, contributed $10 last year to our Missionary cause, which I presented, with some prefatory remarks, at the anniversary of the Parent Society, held in Mobile last May, and laid the donation on the Secretary's table.

J. J. HUTCHINSON.

FOREIGN.

Napoleon and the Pope.

The following is that portion of the Pope's letter to the Emperor Napoleon, in which he retorts upon him his own arguments, at the same time he administers a personal rebuke:

Your Majesty makes the repose of Europe to depend upon the cession by the Pope of the Legislations, which for fifty years have caused so much embarrassment to the Pontifical Government; but, as I promised in the beginning of this letter to speak openly, let me be permitted to return the argument. Who can count the revolutions which have occurred in France during the last sixty-six years? But at the same time who will dare to say to the great French nation that for the repose of Europe it is necessary to restrain the limits of the empire? The argument proves too much; accordingly permit me to reject it. And, moreover, your Majesty is not ignorant by what persons, with what funds, with what support, the late attempts at Bologna, Ravenna, and other cities, have been made.

"I see also this phrase in your Majesty's, that if I had accepted this project, I should have preserved my authority over these provinces—an expression which seems to denote that at the point at which we have arrived they are lost to me forever. Sire, I pray you, in the name of the Church, and also in your own interest, so to act that my apprehension be not justified. Certain memoirs, called secret, tell me that the Emperor Napoleon I. has left to his family warnings worthy of a Christian philosopher, who in adversity found resources and alleviation in religion alone. It is certain that we shall all shortly appear before the Supreme tribunal to render strict account of all our deeds, our works, and our thoughts. Endeavor, then, to appear before this great tribunal of God in such a way as to experience the effects of His pity, and not those of His justice."

The statement that the Papal excommunication was about to be issued against the King of Sardinia, seems to rest on no better foundation than a widely circulated report in political circles.

Reign of Terror in Venice.

Alexander Dumas, now in Milan, writes from that city on the 22d of January:

I have just passed five days in Vienna. This time, the Austrian police, more indulgent to me than in 1835, let me pass.

You cannot form an idea of the gloom of Venice. All the theatres are closed.

At a time when Venice customarily resounds with exultant shouts, when thousands of masks fill the streets, Venice is gloomy and silent as a dying person.

Conceive of the theatres being closed on the 6th of January, at the commencement of the carnival, when they usually overflow with people, and closed through a want of spectators.

The Venetians, without arms, without means of defence, not having even a sword or pair of pistols in their houses, with which to resent or avenge a personal insult, are making war upon the Austrian, after the terrible war of '49, which terminated with the memorable seige which we all know—Venice is making a still more terrible war upon the Austrian. Venice waged this war with an obstinate and determined opposition, against which cannons were unavailing, and trials and imprisonment little more.

Sixty-six thousand Venetians have quitted Venice; the population is so diminished that Austria has passed a decree by which it announces that there will be no conscription this year.

MARRIAGES.

"It is not good for man to be alone."

On Monday, 20th inst., at half past 10 o'clock, in the M. E. Church (Bethel), by Rev. G. F. Thompson, W. H. TURNER, of Warrenton, to Miss J. A. DILLINGHAM, of Warren County, Miss.

☞ Mississippi Baptist please copy.

On the 25th Jan., at the residence of H. W. Drake, in Waterproof, Dr. THOMAS M. NEWELL, to Miss LETTIE A. GORTON, both of Tensas Parish, La.

On the 20th February, by Rev. T. J. Rutledge, Mr. GEORGE W. HEARLY, of Chambers County, Ala., to Miss REBECCA L. GAINES, of Mount Sterling, Choctaw County, Ala.

In St. Landry Parish, La., at the residence of the bride's father, Feb. 23d., by the Rev. D. S. Watkins, Mr. N. VANWART, of South Carolina, to Miss L. A. HEATH.

☞ S. C. Advocate please copy.

On the 20th of February, 1860, by Rev. R. W. Lambuth, Mr. GEORGE W. LIPSCOMB, of Kentucky, to Miss CLEMENTINA L. LUKE, of Yazoo county, Miss.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

ADVERTISING IN THE ADVOCATE.

The business public are slowly learning that the Advocate is THE GREAT ADVERTISING PAPER OF THE SOUTH AND WEST. Advertisements in it are more valuable than in any half dozen other papers.

1.—It has the largest circulation west of Charleston, and South of Cincinnati; larger than any other two weeklies in New Orleans, and is increasing rapidly—will, in a few years, double its present circulation.

2.—Of medium size, and not crowded with advertisements, an advertisement is not lost in it, but can be easily found.

3.—In our "Editorial Notices," which we give to every advertisement, we specify the page and column on which an advertisement may be found. We seek to make every advertisement valuable to the advertiser and to the paper.

4.—The circulation is spread out over Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, principally; Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas, partially.

5.—It is the only weekly of large and widely-spread circulation in the great and growing metropolis of the South.

DR. SPEER'S LETTER about Dr. Mortimore's Remedies, and successful treatment of Chronic Diseases, will be found on this page, fifth column.—It is high testimony.

ACCOUNTS.—They are now going out, both to preachers and subscribers.

RECEIPTS, BY THE POST-OFFICE,

From February 28th to March 6th, 1860.

A—M. S. Andrews, $4.
B—F. L. Briggs, $4. J. Barrenot, $10.
C—J. J. Cassidy, $5. J. Coon, $1. A. J. Coleman, $2. J. B. Cottrell, $5.
D—W. B. Dennis, $26. J. C. Dubose, $2.
E—J. Ercanbrack, $5. W. A. D. Ewing, $11.
F—E. A. Flowers, $5.
G—B. F. Gannell, $2. C. LeGrant, $2 50.
K—S. Kennedy, $1 75.
L—G. Lary, $2.
M—D. McKenzie, $1 15. G. J. Mason, $6. J. W. McNeil, $1 75. A. McBride, $10. L. McKee, $7. N. P. Millard, $2.
N—M. J. Neilson, $2. E. B. Norton, $1 75. E. Nicholson, $1 75.
R—A. J. Reese, 50c. H. D. Redwine, $10.
S—M. R. Sharp, $15 50. F. F. Sheldon, $2 05.
T—P. J. Trannel, $1 65. E. M. C. Turuley, $3 50.
W—G. Watson, Jr., $10. W. B. Watkins, $10. J. A. Wright, $2. M. E. Walmsley, $2. O. V. Westmoreland, $5.
Y—N. B. Young, $10.

THE VALUE OF COTTON SEED.—An exchange thus computes the value of cotton seed as a source of oil, and cattle feed: A crop of 3,000,000 bales of cotton at five hundred pounds to the bale is 1,500,000,000 lbs. of fibre, the cotton seed of which would be 3,000,000,000 pounds, or 1,500,000 tons; 3,000,000,000 pounds of kernel, which will give 87,120,000 gallons of oil, and 762,800 tons of oil cake. Value, 87,120,000 gallons of oil at one dollar per gallon, $87,120,000; 762,800 tons of oil cake, at $25 per ton, $19,050,000. Total, $106,177,000.

COMMERCIAL.

MONDAY EVENING, March 5th, 1860.

We condense the following statement from the New Orleans Price Current of the 3d instant:—

Our market generally has exhibited only a moderate degree of animation during the past week, and Cotton has moved off heavily, at irregular and reduced prices. Sugar and Molasses also have sold at rates in favor of buyers, and in Tobacco the transactions have been confined to a few limited parcels. In Western Produce we have noticed but few variations of importance.

COTTON.—With respect to prices, we have to remark that during the first three days of the week prices were irregular and easier for the medium and lower grades, though we retained previous quotations. Since then the market has worn a still more unsettled appearance, with a continued tendency in favor of buyers, and the business generally has been done at a reduction of ⅛ to ¼c, in the rates for all qualities below strict Middling, while the better grades continue scarce, and have generally brought full prices.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 1,703,279 bales, against 1,422,974 bales to same date last year, and the increase of the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 611,215 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 512,245 bales to Great Britain, and of 93,558 to France, while to other foreign ports there is a decrease of 61,911 bales.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	5 @ 6½	Good Middling.....	11¾@12
Ordinary.....	7¼@ 7¾	Middling Fair.....	12¼@12¾
Good Ordinary.....	8¼@ 8¾	Fair.....	—@—
Low Middling.....	9¼@10	Good Fair.....	—@—
Middling	10¾@11	Good and Fine.....	—@—

SUGAR.—The sales of the week amount to 7500 hhds. We quote for Inferior and Reiining 3 to 4¼; Common to Good Common 5 to 6; Fair to Fully Fair 6¼ to 7; Prime to Choice 7¼ to 8; Centrifugel and Clarified 5½ to 6 cents per pound. The above quotations apply to round lots, but small orders of 5 hhds and under, could not be filled without paying a further advance of ¼ to ½c per pound.

MOLASSES.—Total receipts of the week 10,000 barrels. The prices obtained during the week were: Inferior to Fair, 30 to 35 cents per gallon; and Prime to Choice, 36 to 37 cents; half barrels, 38 to 42 cents per gallon.

FLOUR.—About 12,000 bbls have been sold during the past week, at from $6 40 to $6 55 for superfine, $6 25 to 7 00 for ordinary to good extra, and $6 75 to $7 50 per bbl. for choice extra brands.

GRAIN.—The receipts of Corn continue light. About 47,000 sacks have been sold at from $0 68 to 0 70 for ordinary, and $0 85 for good white. Oats have been in moderate request at 57c to 58c per bushel for good to prime St. Louis. Bran sells at $1 70 to $1 75 for ordinary to choice lots. Wheat sells at $1 15 per bushel for prime red.

PORK.—The principal sales reported through the week were at $17 75 to $18 75 per bbl. for Mess.

BEEF.—We quote Prime Mess at $14 00 per bbl. for extra brands.

BACON.—Shoulders 8 to 8¼; Ribbed Sides 10 to 10½; Clear Sides 11 to 11¼; Sugar-cured Hams 12 to 12½ cents per pound.

LARD.—We quote 10¼ to 10½c for prime to choice prime, in tcs., and 11¼ to 11½c. for kegs.

BUTTER.—Western generally selling at 12 to 10 cents per pound, according to quality; and Cheese 11 to 11½c.

BAGGING AND BALE ROPE.—We quote Kentucky Bagging at 13½ to 14 cents per yard; India Bagging, 12½ to 13¼c; Bale Rope, hand spun, 7½ to 8c, and machine made, 8½ to 9 cents per pound.

GUNNY BAGS.—Limited parcels sell at 10 cents for light and 10½ to 11c. to heavy and extra heavy bags.

COFFEE.—We quote fair at 11½ to 13, and prime at 13½c. per pound.

NAVAL STORES.—A good demand for Spirits Turpentine, mostly on speculation. Sales of some 600 bbls at 45 to 46. Latterly holders have been asking 47½ to 48c per gallon, the market closing at the outside rate. Of Rosin some 3000 bbls have sold at $1 55 to $1 60 for Common and No 2, and $1 72 to $2 per bbl of 280 pounds for Low No. 1. The finer qualities are scarce and in request. Tar dull and nominal. Stock of some 5000 bbls on hand.

LIVE-STOCK.—Beef Cattle—Western, 7 to 9c. per lb. net; Texas—ordinary to fair $15 to 18, and choice $18 to 35 per head.

Hogs, selling at 9 to 10c. per pound net.

Sheep—Selling at $1 00 to $5 50 per head.

Veal Cattle—Selling at $8 00 to $13 00 per head.

Milch Cows—at $30 to $85 per head.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

NOTICE.—Persons having business with the NEW ORLEANS DEPOSITORY, will please direct to KEENER & PARKER.

ALABAMA CONF. MONUMENT COMMITTEE.

By reference to the published minutes of the last session of the Alabama Conference, it will be seen that a Committee was appointed to erect a suitable monument over the grave of the Rev. J. N. Maffit. That Committee consists of the Rev. Messrs. J. T. Heard, A. H. Mitchell, and E. Baldwin. The object of this communication is to call the attention of your readers to this fact, and solicit their contributions for the above purpose. Rev. J. T. Heard resides at Shubuta, Miss., and the other members of the Committee reside in Mobile, to any of whom contributions may be sent.

Let the numerous friends and admirers of Maffit respond to this call.

THE COMMITTEE.

Sunday School Convention of the Mississippi Conference.

The Committee of Conference has fixed upon Wednesday, the 9th of May as the time, and Vicksburg as the place, of meeting.

All Ministers of the Gospel, and all Superintendents and Teachers of Sunday Schools, are invited to attend. Presiding Elders in the bounds of our Conference will please urge each Sunday School in their bounds to send one delegate to the Convention.

B. JONES, Sec. of Committee.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

The new Methodist Episcopal Church, at New Iberia, La., will be dedicated to the service of Almighty God on the third Sunday (18th) in March next.

Dedicatory Sermon by Rev. J. B. Walker, D.D., of New Orleans.

T. H. WHITE, Pastor.

New Iberia, La., Feb. 15, 1860.

SITUATION WANTED.

A YOUNG LADY, a successful and experienced Teacher of Music, French, and the English branches—having taught for years, North and South—desires a situation as Principal of a Female Seminary, or as head of the Music department. Good salary expected. Address Rev. G. C. Gillespie, New Orleans, who will forward communications.

A SOUTHERN LADY, competent to teach the English branches and Music, wants a situation either in a family or a school.—For particulars apply at this office.

ALABAMA DEPOSITORY.

No. 11 Water Street, Mobile, Alabama.

The notes given to the Alabama Book and Tract Society are in my possession; many of them are now due. Shareholders whose notes are due, will confer a great favor by paying the same at once.

Those entitled to the Genealogical Bible can get it an application at the Depository in Mobile. When ordering it by steam boat or railroad, please remit $1 to pay expenses.

JOHN F. EARLY, AGENT.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Greenville Dist.—Second Round Quarterly Meetings.

March—Upper Deer Creek, 4th; Hillhile Deer Creek, 11th; Lower Deer Creek, 17th and 18th; Greenville colored mission, 25th.

April—Tallula, 1st. American Bend, 7th and 8th; Rolliver, 14th and 15th; Greenville 21st and 22d; Duncan Plantations, 28th and 29th.

May—Sunflower, 5th and 6th.

Preachers' Meeting, third Wednesday in March, at Greenville.

WM. H. HINES, P. E.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Greensboro' District—Second Round Quarterly Meetings.

March—Eutaw, 24 and 25; New Prospect, at Wesley Chapel, 31 and April 1.

April—Trinity, Bolligee colored mission, at Trinity, 7 and 8; Brush Creek, at Bethlehem, 14 and 15; Forkland, &c., at Watson's Chapel, 21 and 22; Newbern, &c., at Oak Grove, 28 and 29.

May—Marion and Hamburg, at Marion, 5 and 6; Greensboro' colored mission, Prairie Creek colored mission, Herman Creek colored mission, at Greensboro, 12 and 13.

Address at Greensboro'.

J. J. HUTCHINSON, P. E.

THE MINUTES OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE are now ready at Vicksburg. Members of the Conference will address Rev. Geo. H. Clinton, stating number desired, and how they must be sent.

THE THOMPSON FUND.—Rev. Joshua T. Heard wishes us to say to those interested in the "Thompson Fund," that the last instalment has been paid in, and that he is now ready to pay over the sixteen thousand dollars as directed by the Conference.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

DR. MORTIMORE.—LETTER FROM DR. SPEER.

New Orleans, March, 5th, 1860.

To the Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

DEAR SIR—I feel it due to the afflicted, to say a few words through the columns of your widely circulated paper, in reference to Dr. Mortimore's treatment of Chronic diseases (especially at the present, while Dr. M. is in New Orleans). While in Memphis, in November last, I visited Dr. M. at his rooms, at the Worsham House, where, at the solicitation of friends who knew him, he was induced to remain a few days, enroute for this city. I there saw a number of persons who were extremely afflicted with Chronic Rheumatism, Scirrhus Disease of the Heart, etc., who placed themselves under his treatment, and very recently I have been shown their correspondence, and most of them report themselves cured, and others as greatly improving. I noticed particularly one young man extremely afflicted with Disease of the Heart. On examination, Dr. M. hesitated to undertake the case; but at the earnest solicitation of the young man's friends he consented to prescribe, and the result has been most gratifying; the young man reports not only great improvement, but that he is almost well.

Having suffered for some years with Pericarditis and Dyspepsia, I placed myself under Dr. M.'s treatment, and have already derived very great benefit, indeed I feel almost entirely restored. Being under treatment, I have been in his office frequently, and have had an opportunity of seeing hundreds who have called to consult him, and go under his treatment, and have also read many letters which he has received from persons he is treating by correspondence, and in almost every instance the result has been perfectly satisfactory.

Soon after my first visit to Dr. M., in New Orleans, I saw one gentleman, who had long suffered from Chronic Rheumatism. He had been repeatedly, to the Hot Springs in Arkansas, but stated that he had derived no benefit from them. He was helpless, he could not walk. Dr. M. took him under treatment, and, in eight days he could walk, and in three weeks he was so far restored as to be able to return home to his family. I have read his letters of recent date; he says that he is now in excellent health. I have also seen a number of others who had been long afflicted with Rheumatism, Sciatica PINFEATHERS.—NO. I.

Though not possessed of a keener discrimination than others, we have seen—seen what? "Pinfeathers in the wings of Christianity." Brother A. has just united with the church as a probationer. He has been a lover of her doctrines and her usages ever since he first became acquainted with them, and he has always been a church-going man. He had a temper as mild and sweet as the fragrant breezes of spring; a mind susceptible of feeding on all that is lovely, beautiful, or grand; and a ready will to do whatever may be for the general good. Though Bro. A. has long intended to unite himself with the church, he never did so till a few days ago, when the Rev. Mr. R—— preached in our town as he was passing through on his way to N—, and O, what a sermon! The preacher seemed to be perfectly at home, whether he ran out on the green sward in gleeful play with prattling childhood, or sat in council with sage theologians, guiding the stream of their deliberations through a channel the safest and most secure of all others; or whether he sighed with the winds, groaned with the convulsions of earth, or shouted with the morning stars and proclaimed the coming day, or robed himself in spotless white, and with golden lyre in hand took his place with the redeemed of earth at the last day, and sang a thrilling response to the invitation, "Come, ye blessed of my Father," etc.

Now, all this was too much for Brother A.'s disposition of mind and heart. How delighted he would be to be associated with such imagery and such a people! The fire of the preacher's eloquence burned up his former objections, and he united with the church as a probationer. Never was he so delighted before as while this preacher was standing by the gate of heaven, lifting up this veil; and then that showing scenes almost unlawful for mortality to behold.

Now, Bro. A. joined the church, not so much because he felt himself a condemned sinner in need of the atoning merits of Christ's death, as because he fell in love with the eloquence of Bro. R. An evidence of this is that, after the excitement of the meeting passed away, there was no change in Brother A.'s hopes or desires; he is just the same, with the exception that he is a probationer in the church, and a pinfeather in the wings of the church. Alas, too, he seems contented!

Had he been "born again," or "groaning after" that grace, he would have been fledged, and have added beauty and strength to those triumphant wings; whereas he now takes his place as an unsightly lump. Whatever may be his thoughts on the subject, or however unconcerned about the matter he is, the world is looking on with intense anxiety for his life to answer these questions: "Does Christianity make a man better?—happier?—holier?" Alas, in this situation, Bro. A.'s life answers these questions in the negative! The church flaps by in a crippled condition, carrying a ponderous weight instead of deriving, as it should do, new strength, and the world turns away disappointed and sorrowing.

Where does the wrong exist? Not, surely, in being delighted with the eloquence of Bro. R., or joining the church and associating with God's people at His house. No, no! But in not drinking in Christianity as well as putting it on. He is, or may think himself, honest in his present situation; he hopes he has experienced that change of heart which is necessary to salvation; but still his inclination leads him to drink from the same springs of pleasure at which he used to seek to quench his thirst; he is not quite certain that he ever was converted—sometimes he thinks he is, and then he doubts it again. Reader, do you see your face in this glass? Do you feel yourself a pinfeather in the wings of the church, and would you be fully fledged?"

We must feel that our sins are letting us down, down, until our feet are almost pressing the liquid wave beneath. We must hear the thunder-tones of justice crying, "Cut him down, and appoint him his portion with unbelievers!" While tears roll from their broken-up fountains, the throes of the penitent heart must almost convulse the whole being, and the cries of sorrow and "save, Lord, or I perish!" are thrown out on every passing breath. O, who can forget this hour of sorrow in the experience of those who have passed from death unto life! And equally memorable is the hour of deliverance, when Mercy stood forth as a chaste virgin, pouring forth her entreaties for us; when Christ first unveiled himself to our sorrowing eyes, and laid his scarred hands upon our heads, and said, "he is mine," and sent a river of the water of life gushing through our entire natures, causing us to forget all our sorrows, because we were born of God.

A soul thus converted does not merely "hope" a change has been wrought, but knows it is "born again," and can testify to the truth of that Bible doctrine, "The Direct Witness of the Spirit." A soul thus converted is prepared to act its part in advancing the interests of our holy Christianity, to add beauty, strength, and swiftness to its onward march, as it proposes to speed on till all the earth is shadowed by its holy influences.—Truly, Christianity has nothing to fear from its avowed enemies; but much from many of its pretended friends. Let us show the world a joyous, holy, happy Christianity, and soon the earth will be covered with the knowledge of the Lord.

METHODIST.

BIBLE CAUSE IN EAST MISSISSIPPI.

The Bible cause is slowly moving on. The Directory of the South-Western Bible Society have fallen upon the best mode of fulfilling their mission of supplying the destitute families with the Word of God—throwing upon the Church of Christ, in its several branches, their legitimate duty of visiting those within their several limits, for the above purpose.

Our society has adopted the plan of dividing counties into districts, and requesting church committees to visit all their neighbors, giving them the privileges, and, in fact, requesting them to embrace the opportunity to carry with them, in connection with the Bible, such religious tracts as they may desire to circulate. Many of our district agents have finished their work for the year past, and are now rejoicing in the peace of a good conscience. I must speak a good word for the agents in Scott County. They have almost all done their work, and it may be said to be supplied. The destitution in that county was, as near as we can arrive at the facts, about one hundred families. Mr. John Fears says: "This is what I have long wished to see—the churches engaged as the only medium through which the soul-saving work is done." Messrs. Evans, Denson, Curry, Gardner, Hudson, and others, have done their part, and are worthy of their reward. In Newton County the work is still more thorough, each agent having fully supplied his respective field.—Smith is doing a good work. So are all within my field which are working on the "committee system." Neshoba and Wayne will have to be canvassed by hired colporteurs. I have employed the Rev. Mr. Smith, of Neshoba, to canvass that county; but for Wayne I have not made any engagement.

It has more than once been told me by ministers of the gospel, that if the Bible Society had never existed, there would have been a more general diffusion of Bibles than there now is; that each church would have supplied all within its limits, whereas by the existence of a Bible Society they have resigned to it that special work, they being unable to furnish books so cheap; that it has been an injury to the cause; that the same money which sustains the Bible Society, placed in the control of the different churches, would have enabled them, through their ministry acting as agents, to publish more books and make a more general supply.

Surely the proposition now made is just what our brethren seem to think is their legitimate duty, and to "stir up their pure minds by way of remembrance," is the object of this correspondence. I wish to state, in the first place, what an easy matter it would be for each preacher, both local and itinerant, to make it a special duty to inquire at each coming together of each congregation, if any one is acquainted with any family destitute; and as fast as they are found, how easy to carry or send a Bible to them (furnished by us at a reduced price).

Following this plan closely, it would not be long until there would not be a destitute family in the bounds of christian influence. Now, brethren of the ministry, your own proposition is acceded to—will you stand to it? "Faith without works is dead." It is the economy of the South-Western Bible Society to ask you to do your own work. Many of the itinerant brethren have promised to do this much, and I hope all will feel the same interest in it that their calling presupposes. To give some idea of the destitution in some parts of our field in East Mississippi: I traveled through several of the counties, carrying books to our agents, and as I passed along would supply those living immediately along the road; and one day, in traveling eight miles, I found six families destitute of God's Holy Word. The next day I found four in about the same distance, and five out of the ten families belonged to the Church. I wonder if their ministers knew their situation? In Yazoo county, a brother preacher asked me to go with him to breakfast with a good member of his church, who, the evening before, made many demonstrations of love for the cause of Christ, in the public assembly; when, on going to worship, we found him destitute of a Bible. That Pastor never could conceive the necessity of a Bible Society until then; now he is a zealous advocate for the cause, and will help to supply within his limits.

I will, with your permission, say something now upon another subject. Newton county contains about twelve hundred Indians, of the Choctaw nation, and I am told that they never heard a gospel sermon preached, either through an interpreter or otherwise. These people are naturally intelligent, and some of them would rank with our own race, and yet, none of them know anything of Christ. No effort has been made to enlighten them. Why is this? Why extend our missionary spirit so liberally upon foreign lands while we have the same class of individuals in our own midst and never care for them? This should not be, Brethren of the Mississippi Conference, to you it belongs to provide some means for their enlightenment and salvation. What shall be done for the poor benighted Indians in our own land? Will some philanthropic spirit, who is better acquainted with their necessities, take up their cause, and advocate it through the Advocate, that by the next annual Conference some means may be devised for their tutorage in Christian knowledge?

Children's Column.

BIBLE PICTURES.—NO. IV. BY THE EDITOR.

Creation of all the Green Things.

Our children will recollect that in our last picture we had just got to where God had rolled the waters off the face of the earth into the ocean, to "let the dry land appear." Until this was done, nothing could live or grow on the earth. It must have been a very wet-looking earth just after the waters were driven off—like the ground looks now, after a "wet spell." And what a barren-looking world it was! There was not a green thing upon it—not a sprig of grass, not a shrub, not a leaf, nut a tree, nor a flower, upon the whole earth. But God did not let it remain so long. He had not made it for nothing. He made it for these things to grow upon it, and as soon as it was dry enough he set it to work. He spoke and said: "Let the earth bring forth grass, and the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself upon the earth, and it was so. And the earth brought forth grass, and the herb yielding seed after his kind."

You see, the Lord did not plant the seeds, that they might come up, for there were no seeds to plant. He made all these things just like he made the world, out of nothing; or, rather, he made the earth bring them forth without seeds. But, after he had made them, he intended that each one should bear his own seed, so that they might come up every spring, and so that he would not have to make them over again. When he speaks of fruit-trees, he does not mean only fruit that is good to eat, but the fruit and seed of all kinds of trees—acorns as well as apples and peaches. And when he speaks of grass and herbs, he means all weeds, and vegetables, and shrubs?

What a sudden and beautiful change that was when the cold and wet earth was all at once covered with sweet green grass, and little bushes all covered with green leaves, and millions of flowers laughing everywhere, and tall and grand trees blooming in their green glory. You have seen the face of the earth changed when the beautiful spring-time has followed the cold and solemn winter; but you have never seen it changed so quickly as it was this time. It was all done in one day. And how many blessings we have enjoyed from this creation of the vegetable kingdom. We ought to think of it every time we pluck a sweet flower, or make a beautiful bouquet, or eat any ripe sweet fruit. Whenever we see fat horses or cattle feeding on the grass, or when we see the beautiful fields of corn, cotton, sugar-cane, wheat, oats, rye; barley, or gardens of vegetables or flowers, we should think of this day when God created them all. Good-bye, till next week.

We said "good bye," but we have come back again to tell you a sweet but sorrowful little story about

Singing in the Fire.

Not long ago, at a place called Lawrence, in the State of Massachusetts, there were six hundred people working in one factory building. The shaking of the machinery caused the building to fall suddenly, with all these people in it. A great many were crushed to death at once. Many of them were not hurt, but were fastened up inside of the fallen walls. Their friends were getting them out as fast as possible. But, all at once, somebody dropped a camphene lamp, and the building took fire, and burnt to death all who were alive but fastened up. There was a company of girls in there who were not hurt much, until the fire broke out. They would soon have been rescued if the devouring flames had not shut out every hope from the prison in which they were fastened; but when the fire began to roar around them they, as if by inspiration, joined in singing the hymn

"We're going home to glory."

Their voices rose clear and musical above the crackling of the flames, but they were soon silenced, to be heard no more until they shall sing in heaven. O, what would they have done without the religion of Jesus! Sweet girls! They have gone "home to glory!"

THOUGHTS OF THE BELOVED DEAD.

BY LOUISA.

Winter is gently giving place to spring. How lovely will all things soon appear! 'Tis night, too; not night with her countless stars and innumbered hosts, but black, drizzly night—a fit time for pensive memories. Many scenes have I lived over again to-night, as I sit alone. Our dead are most naturally thought of; and who is there that has not some loved ones in the graveyard? Last spring, like this, was usured in with glory; but not her singing birds, nor babbling brooks, nor her beautiful flowers, brought joy to us; for day after day tidings came to us that a loved friend, W—— W——, was nigh unto death. They said, "he is sinking fast—he is slowly dying," and then at last came the heartrending tidings, "he is dead!" We could have cried, like one of old, "I am distressed for thee, my brother; very pleasant hast thou been unto me." Yes, very pleasant wast thou unto all that knew thee. God took him.—One winter has swept, another spring will soon bloom, over thy grave. Rest in peace—no earthly care can ever disturb thee.

Thy memory had not grown dim when November's cold blast came and withered one of the fairest flowers that ever budded in a mother's heart. But a few times were we permitted to see him—our little Frankie. From his remarkable beauty, I have often thought what sphere God had appointed to him in this world of action. He had large, beautifully mournful eyes, that all loved to gaze upon—always making us think of the angels. The tidings came very unexpectedly, almost crushing our hearts —"Frankie is dead!" Sleep, little one; we do not think of thee as dead, in the grave, but as a bright-winged angel to our Savior's bosom, lisping songs to our Father. We deeply mourn at thy untimely fading, but have found consolation in Him who said, "of such is the kingdom of heaven." And how sweet was the mother's saying: "God has honored as well as grieved me—He has been in my house, and taken away one of my jewels."

LITTLE MELVILLE.

MR. EDITOR: I have just been reading our dear Presiding Elder's short sketch of a little boy whom I only knew by character. Yes, I never saw little Melville, but I have heard from those who knew him well of his sweet disposition and thirst for knowledge. Solomon says, "even a child is known by its ways," and Melville's early piety, his intelligent, and well cultivated mind, his patience during his long and severe illness, and his happy death, are well known, and not forgotten by his friends and little classmates.

I hope Dr. Drake's notice of him will incite all your little readers to a love of the same virtues which make the memory of little Melville so dear. Let them remember that "they too" are known by their ways;" and should they, like him, be called to die young, their actions, good or bad, will be sure to be spoken of when they are gone; or, should they live to be grown men and women, and become eminent by their talents or ambition, their private characters as children will then be published to all the world.

Little Melville was peculiarly blessed in having parents who early taught him the importance of giving his heart to God, and of preparing for a life of usefulness here and of happiness hereafter. From what I have heard, I should judge that it was the delight of his parents, not only to govern and instruct their children, but to make them happy at home. They taught their little ones by example to call the Sabbath a delight, a holy, happy day—a day of religious enjoyment. They considered it no trouble or sacrifice to endeavor, by every effort in their power, so to teach them the word of God as to make it a pleasant book to them; and by innocent amusements to make them fonder of their religious duties on that holy day, than of idle play and vicious company.

Little Melville was not long divided from his precious mother. She, too, has gone to join that blood-washed throng who ever chant their Savior's praise; and louder, sweeter than when on earth, she and her angel-boy now sing—

"O, happy day that fixed my choice,
On thee, my Savior and my God!"

M.

Obituaries.

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

MARY A. D. HAY came to her death by fire, in Winston County, Miss. While seated quietly by the fire, with her little boy by her side, and her little infant on her lap, on the evening of Dec. 9, 1859, she suddenly beheld herself on fire; she hastily laid the babe on the floor, and ran to the kitchen, expecting to find water in the vessels; but finding none, she then ran to the front door of the dwelling-house, where she found water; but, in attempting to throw it on herself, she missed her object; she then made a start to the spring, but recollecting that her husband was at the gin house, she changed her course to go to him; she met him at the gate, screaming all the while. Oh, dear reader, imagine a beautiful, rosy, amiable lady, all robed in flames. The fire caught at four o'clock in the evening, and she died at four o'clock the next morning. She was sensible to the last, and though she suffered severely, yet it was pleasant to hear her talk of Jesus, and heaven, and glory.

She was near twenty-one years old, a daughter of Alexander Avery, of Bibb county, Ala.; and was married to Jackson H. Hay, December 6th, 1855; professed religion, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, about nine years since, of which she lived a consistent member until death. She was a sweet-spirited woman; I never saw her that she was not kind and pleasing. While on her death-bed, said she, "I have no fear of death; I am not afraid to die; I am not afreid to meet my Savior, for I shall meet him in peace."—

LITTLE MARY T. E. RAY, infant daughter of Sister Ray that was buried, died on the 13th Feb., 1860, aged six months. The blessed little babe has gone to meet its mother in heaven!

W. A. RAY.

MRS. CAROLINE F. GILMER, wife of George N. Gilmer, and daughter of Morgan and Sarah O. Smith, was born in Madison county, Ala., January 20th, 1825; and died at Tallassee, Ala., Feb. 19th, 1860. She was the first graduate of the Judson Institute, at Marion, Ala. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, September 30th, 1856. When first converted, we cannot tell. She was remarkable for frankness and candor; dissemble and flatter she would not. While she was careful to have the grace of God in her own heart, she made it a part of her religion to instruct her children and servants. To visit and relieve, with her words and alms, the sorrows and wants of the suffering poor, was the delight of her heart, and a part of her employ. In honoring and blessing the ministers of the gospel, she was second to none. Her house had to be their home. In her death the young have lost a faithful friend. She was always ready to make allowance for their faults, and advise them when they need it. She has left behind a husband, six children, one brother, and a sister, with a large circle of friends, to mourn. She sleeps in Jesus now, and shall awake and arise to hear the welcome sentence, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me." Husband, children, brother, sister, friends, weep not.

ANSON WEST.

SISTER MALISSA J. KNOTT died 13th February, 1860, in her forty-seventh year. She was born in Virginia; during her youth her father moved to Tennessee, where she joined the Baptist Church in her sixteenth year; in 1837, moved to Green county, Ala., where, during the same year, she was married to Bro. Richard F. Knott; she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1844; afterwards moved to Choctaw county, Ala., where she departed this life in the triumphs of a gospel faith.—I am told that Sister Knott, during the whole time of her connection with the Church, was a faithful child of her Heavenly Father. She was the subject of much affliction for the six months previous to her death, but was submissive, and praised God because of his love shed abroad in her heart. When dying, forgetful of her condition, she exclaimed, "I still live!" She leaves a kind husband, several children, and many friends.

T. J. RUTLEDGE.

Nashville Advocate please copy.

JANE, wife of John Price, was born April 16th, 1813; was raised in Covington county, Miss.; married January 8th, 1828; during the last fifteen years lived in Rankin county; and died January 25, 1860. Very early in life she was impressed with the importance of the Christian religion; that if she died in her sins, she would be lost. She attached herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church in her thirteenth year, and professed to know the Lord Jesus Christ in the pardon of her sins about the same time. From the time of her conversion she lived a devoted Christian. About three years ago she was attacked with a cancer in the mouth, which baffled the skill of the physicians. She bore her affliction with patience and christian fortitude; she believed that her affliction would work out for her "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." About the time she was sinking beneath the waves of death, her husband asked her if there was anything in her way. She replied distinctly, "All is well." She exhorted her husband, children, and servants to meet her in heaven. The church has lost one of its brightest jewels. She has left behind her many dear ones to mourn.

W. PRICE.

MRS. MARGARET LEMMONS, wife of Daniel Lemmons, died February 9, 1860, at her residence, near Yazoo City, on Short Creek, aged about eighty years. For fifty-four years she has lived the life of a consistent Christian. By all who knew her, she was regarded as a most devotedly pious "mother in Israel." She joined the church in Tennessee, Bro. Herper being the Presiding Elder on the district in which she lived. She died triumphing ever death, and has gone to dwell among the redeemed who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

R. W. L.

Nashville Advocate please copy.

PROFESSIONAL.

JAS. J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Livingston, Alabama.
[au24] Will practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties.

DR. E. D BEACH, HAVING RESUMED THE practice of Medicine, offers his Professional services to the citizens of New Orleans.
N. B.—Special attention paid to diseases of the RECTUM, PILES, FISTULA IN ANO, ETC.—Fistula in ano permanently cured without the use of the knife, cautery, paste, or confinement whatever. Office No. 6, Baronne street near Canal. ap27.

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY AT LAW, BATON Rouge.
REFERENCES—Henderson & Osmus and Chinn & Bolton, New Orleans; W. S. Pike and A. Hatta.....Baton Rouge.

B. D. & A. W. ROBERTS, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Floyd, Carroll Parish, Louisiana.
ja19

FUQUA AND KILBOURNE, ATTORNEYS AT LAW, CLINTON, LOUISIANA, practice in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana, and East Baton Rouge.
References—Payne & Harrison, Byrne, Vance & Co., W. and C Letchford and Co., Broadwell & Haynes, and Pritchard & Flower, New Orleans. mar 7-1y

W. P. WINANS, J. T. HEATH
WINANS & HEATH, Attorneys and Counsellors at Law, SHREVEPORT, LA.,
Office—Market Street.
Will practice in the courts of Caddo, De Soto, Bossier, Claiborne, and Bienville.

G. SPENCER MAYO, Attorney at Law, HARRISONBURG, LA.,
Will practice in the Courts of Catahoula, Concordia, Caldwell and Franklin Parishes.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

W. A. BROADWELL. A. P. HAYNES.
BROADWELL & HAYNES, (Formerly BROADWELL & PAYNE)
COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 40 UNION STREET, N. O.

HAVING RETIRED FROM BUSINESS, I TAKE PLEASURE IN soliciting for my former Partners, BROADWELL & HAYNES, the patronage and confidence of my friends, believing their experience, capacity and means, will merit its continuance, and enable them to give general satisfaction. [jo1] M. U. PAYNE.

W. R. STUART, New Orleans. DR. W. A. JAMES, Madison Parish, La.
STUART & JAMES, No. 42 Union street, New Orleans,

HAVE ASSOCIATED THEMSELVES TOGETHER for the purpose of conducting a COTTON FACTORAGE and GENERAL COMMISSION BUSINESS; are prepared to make the usual Advances to planters, in the way of supplies, etc., and respectfully solicit patronage

B. M. LOWE & CO., COTTON FACTORS AND General Commission Merchants, No. 97 GRAVIER STREET, New Orleans.
ap6

PILCHR, GOODRICH & CO., COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS and Commission Merchants, No. 47 Carondelet, corner Union street, New Orleans. jy11-1y

A. H. May & Co., COTTON FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION Merchants, No 94 Gravier street New Orleans. au21y

J. W. PAYNE, D. W. HUNTSMAN. J. P. HARRISON, WM. S. HARRISON
Payne & Harrison, COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 51 Union street, New Orleans. dec7-1y

S. L. WALKER, New Orleans. ROBT. O. HUTCHINSON Caddo Parish, La.
Walker & Hutchinson, COTTON FACTORS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 37 Carondelet street, New Orleans. je28

J. BOYD & Co., Cotton Factors, Receiving & Forwarding Merchants, No 4 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.
apr 17-1y

LEONARD FASH. P. S. LACRAIX.
LEONARD FASH & Co., COMMISSION MERCHANTS, And Dealers in Western Produce, 61 MAGAZINE STREET, NEW ORLEANS
Oct 24.

LANE, SALTER & CO., (Successors to LANE, MAYFIELD & Co.) COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 79 St. Charles street, New Orleans. jy5-1y

JOHN F WYCHE & Co., COTTON FACTORS and COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No 119 Common street, New Orleans. my2-1y

TEXAS LAND AND STOCK FOR SALE.

FOR SALE a tract of land situated in San Patricio County, within a few miles of the coast, containing about 4 5/0 acres, well timbered with musquect, oak, pecan, &c., and having near its centre a never-failing lake of clear, fresh water.
To parties desirous of emigrating to Texas either for farming or stock-raising purposes, this land offers inducements unsurpassed by any location in the State,

ALSO,

One tract containing about 2,5/0 acres, situated on the Sans Creek, in Refugio County, within five miles of saltwater, and about the same distance from the town of St. Mary's, the terminus of the proposed Aransas and San Diego Railroad.
Titles to both the above tracts perfect.
A Stock of Cattle will be sold with either of the above tracts, if desired.
For terms and further particulars address the undersigned, at New Orleans, La.
dec27 3m P. R. BYRNE, 41 Magazine street.

TEACHER WANTED.

A LADY, who can come well recommended, as a Teacher of Piano Music; and SINGING, who has also been educated in the last, and though she suffered severely, yet it was pleasant to hear her talk of Jesus, and heaven, and glory.
She was near twenty-one years old, a daughter of Alexander Avery, of Bibb county, Ala.; and was married to Jackson H. Hay, December 6th, 1855; professed religion, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, about nine years since, of which she lived a consistent member until death. She was a sweet-spirited woman; I never saw her that she was not kind and pleasing. While on her death-bed, said she, "I have no

EDUCATIONAL.

DOLBEAR'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, OF THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS,
Founded in 1832—Chartered by the Legislature of Louisiana, with Agricultural and Mechanical Departments—
Capital Stock, $250,000.
In the new and spacious iron edifice, known as
STORY BUILDING,
South-east corner of Camp and Common Streets,
ENTRANCE ON BOTH STREETS, OPEN DAY AND EVENING.

FACULTY:
RUFUS DOLBEAR, PRESIDENT,
MATHEMATICAL DEPARTMENT.
(Bro. E. BRAMETT, Professor.
BOOK KEEPING DEPARTMENT.
RUFUS DOLBEAR, Lecturer.
J. W. BLACKMAN, Professor.
ENGLISH DEPARTMENT.
Hon. J. N. CARRIGAN, A.M., late Sup't Education, La; Professor and Lecturer on Commercial Law, etc. aed M. B. M'CARTHY, Professor.
FRENCH DEPARTMENT.
MARC. ROUX, Professor.
DEPARTMENT FOR PENMANSHIP.
RUFUS DOLBEAR, Lecturer.
J. B. GRIFFITH, Professor.
SPANISH DEPARTMENT.
MANUEL MARINO, Professor.
GERMAN DEPARTMENT.
GEO. GERNES, Professor.
LATIN AND GREEK DEPARTMENT.
M. MARINO and O. GERNES, Professors.
ITALIAN DEPARTMENT.
RHETORIC, LOGIC, AND ELOCUTION.

This is the only chartered Commercial College in the South-West, and the oldest in the United States, and has stood for
FOR MORE THAN A QUARTER OF A CENTURY
On its own merits alone.
Persons from 12 to 60 years of age, can attend to any branch they may wish.
Board can be had with the Professor, or other good families speaking English, French, Spanish or German, from $5 to $6 per week.
Catalogues with terms, opinions of the press and leading men of the nation, etc., sent to all who desire them.
N.B.—To prevent mistakes or impositions, Students intended for this College should bring this advertisement as special directions, as there are every winter temporary rooms open for a few months, all of course making wonderful pretenses and promises, and posting flaming placards to enlighten the people of New Orleans and of the South! When three or more form Clubs and enter at the same time, ten per cent will be deducted from tuition.
Citizens and strangers are invited to visit.
feb1 1y RUFUS DOLBEAR, President.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, Corner of Camp and Common Streets,
ENTRANCE NO. 80 COMMON STREET.
[Established in 1856.]
OPEN DAY AND EVENING THE ENTIRE YEAR.

A full course of instruction in this institution embraces Double Entry Book-keeping, Commercial Calculation, Commercial Law, and Penmanship. Gentlemen can enter for the full course, or any branch they desire, and at any time, as there is no class system, no copying from books, and no memorizing of arbitrary rules.

FACULTY:
GEO. SOULE M.A., Principal and Professor of the Theory and Practice of Double Entry Book-keeping, Lecturer on the Science of Accounts, Exchange, Commercial Correspondence, etc., etc.
W. F. KENNON, Practical Accountant, Associate Professor in Book-keeping Department.
J. M. BRADLAMMER, Esq., Lecturer on Commercial Law.
H. C. SPENCER, Professor of Plain, Ornamental, and Epistolary Penmanship.
GEO SOULE, Teacher and Lecturer on Commercial Calculations.
J. B. ANDERSON, Esq., Special Lecturer on Exchange, Business Customs, Commercial Rules, etc., etc.
LEON LAURIN, Professor of Languages.
This is the only Commercial School in the city where Double Entry Book-keeping is taught practically, and as practiced in the New Orleans business houses.
Each of our young gentlemen has his respective desk, and proceeds in the opening, conducting, and closing of books, under all the variety of circumstances that can possibly occur in the various departments of business.
Merchants, Book keepers, and young gentlemen wishing instruction, are respectfully requested to call and examine our practical forms and peculiar manner of teaching.
For catalogues containing full information, and Balance-sheet Circulars, the most magnificent work of the kind ever executed in the United States, address, GEO. SOULE, New Orleans.

FELICIANA FEMALE INSTITUTE, JACKSON, LA.

THE exercises of the second term of the scholastic year will commence on the first of March. Pupils entered at any time, and charged from the time of entrance.
Extensive grounds and houses have been added to the premises.
A good library, a new and complete apparatus, a full and competent corps of teachers, comfortable and newly-furnished apartments, afford the best facilities for a thorough education.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES:
WM. H. WATKINS, D D, President.
J. N EVANS, Secretary.
Prof. W. H. N. MAGRUDER, WM LIPSCOMB,
JOHN W. BURRUSS, Esq., Col. S. M. BRYAN,
F. V. D. HAGAMAN, Esq., Rev. A. G. MILLER
Rev. JOHN C. MILLER, JOHN MCKOWEN, Esq
Hon. JOHN MCVEA.
6m THOS. W. BROWN, Principal.

KENNER ACADEMY:
A Boarding and Day School, for Boys and Young Men.
VICTOR SCHLEIHA, PRINCIPAL.

THIS Institution is located in the town of Kenner, Jefferson Parish, La., ten miles from New Orleans by railroad, and sixteen miles by river. The location is extremely delightful and pleasant. The health of the place is unsurpassed during the whole year.
The course of study is thorough, embracing the English, French, Spanish, German, Latin, and Greek languages. Students can be prepared for any class in college, or for business pursuits.
The Academy Year is divided into Two Sessions of Five Months each, commencing on the First of October and March, respectively. Scholars will be received at any time during the year; none for less time than one session.
For further particulars see circulars, or address Principal.

Huntsville Female College.

THE undersigned, by direction of the Board of Trustees of the HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE, take great pleasure in announcing to its patrons, and the public generally, that they have elected the Rev. JOHN G. WILSON, of Limestone County, Ala., to the Presidency of said College, rendered vacant by the death of the lamented Erwin. Mr. Wilson is favorably known as an eloquent Minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is a native of Tennessee, and graduated, with distinction, at a southern University. His great purity of character, his long experience as a successful teacher of youth, his ripe scholarship, prudent discipline, and gentlemanly manners, afford ample guaranty to parents and guardians, that they may safely entrust the education of their daughters and wards to the Institution over which he has been called to preside. Mr. Wilson, with his lady, will reside in the College Building, a new and spacious one, and graduated, with distinction, at a southern University. His great purity of character, his long experience as a successful teacher of youth, his ripe scholarship, prudent discipline, and gentlemanly manners, afford ample guaranty to parents and guardians, that they may safely entrust the education of their daughters and wards to the Institution over which he has been called to preside. Mr. Wilson, with his lady, will reside in the College Building, a native of Tennessee, and graduated, with distinction, at a southern University. His great purity of character, his long experience as a successful teacher of youth, his ripe scholarship, prudent discipline, and gentlemanly manners, afford ample guaranty to parents and guardians, that they may safely entrust the education of their daughters and wards to the Institution over which he has been called to preside. Mr. Wilson, with his lady, will reside in the College Building, at which time, he will enter upon the discharge of his official duties, assisted by the efficient corps of teachers at present employed in the Institution.
WM ACKLEN, President of the Board of Trustees.
JAMES H. SCRUGGS, Secretary.
Huntsville, Alabama, Jan. 21st, 1860.

Homer College, Homer, La.

FACULTY:
Rev. B. CLEGG, President, and Professor of Moral, Mental, and Natural Science.
J. W. STACY, Professor of Ancient Languages and Literature.
J. D. ORESTIE, Professor of Mathematics and Modern Languages.
WILLIAM CLEGG, Tutor, Preparatory Department.
TERMS PER SESSION—Preparatory Department, First Division, $15: Second, $20. Collegiate Department, $25. Contingent Fee, $1. Matriculation Fee, $5.
Second Session will open 1st February, 1860.
Board, Looking, &c., $60.
J. C. BLACKMAN, Pres. H. T.
J. M. THOMASON, Sec.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy.
FOR YOUNG LADIES.

RESUMED its Exercises on the First Monday in October last. A well chosen Faculty will spare no pains or care to make this Institution a pleasant and profitable place for young Lady students.
The buildings are large, well-ventilated, and well furnished. The grounds ample and beautiful.
For information and Circulars, apply to,
Rev. B JONES, Port Gibson, Miss.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.
SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.
SAVE THE PIECES!
ECONOMY! DISPATCH!
"A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE"

Accidents will happen, even in well-regulated families, it is very desirable to have some cheap and convenient way for repairing Furniture, Toys, Crockery, &c.
SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE
meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. It is always ready, and up to the sticking point. There is no longer a necessity for limping chairs, splintered veneers, headless dolls, and broken cradles. It is just the article for cane, shell, and other ornamental work, so popular with ladies of refinement and taste.
This admirable preparation is used cold, being chemically held in solution, and possessing all the valuable qualities of the best cabinet makers' glue. It may be used in the place of ordinary mucilage, being vastly more adhesive.
"USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE."
N.B.—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cents.
Wholesale Depot, 48 Cedar-street, New York.
Address HENRY C. SPALDING & Co. Box No. 3,660, New York.
Put up for Dealers in Cases containing four, eight, and twelve dozen—a beautiful Lithographic Show-Card accompanying each package.
A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times its cost annually to every household.
Sold by all prominent Stationers, Druggists, Hardware and Fu ture Dealers, Grocers, and Fancy Stores
Country merchants should make a note of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE, when making up their list. It will stand any climate.
jan 25 1y

NO. 3 CAMP STREET. EUREKA!
SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES!
For Plantation, Family, and Manufacturers' use
Prices—$65, $80, $100, $115, $125.

These Machines have no EQUAL; they possess all the latest improvements, the last being November 19th, 1859. Their mechanism is so simple and durable that a child can easily understand and operate them. They work with two threads, using Howe's patent shuttle, making the lock stitch, and presenting the same stitch on both sides of the fabric sewn—They will run, stitch, hem, fell, bind and gather.
ALL MACHINES WARRANTED
Every variety of Thread, Silk, Needles, and other findings for sale.
Principal Southern Salesroom, No. 3 Camp st.
E. L. NIMMO, Agent

WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE.
A Certain Remedy for Worms.

Physicians generally now use WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE, this medicine is a simple vegetable preparation and can always be administered with perfect safety and confidence as to the result, as it will always destroy Worms and restore the patient to health.
Over one thousand certificates have been sent to Agents from planters, merchants and physicians, bearing testimony to the efficacy of this infallible remedy. Warranted in all cases.
For sale in New Orleans, wholesale and retail, by
J. WRIGHT & CO.,
21 and 151 Chartres street,
Sole Proprietors.

Medical Evidence.

We, the undersigned, having frequently administered WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE, and being fully satisfied with its efficacy, confidently recommend it as a safe and efficient remedy for the expulsion of Worms from the intestinal canal.
G. O'REILLY,
Lieutiate of the R. C. of Surgeons in Ireland, etc.
G. W. DICKINSON,
Member of the R. C. of Surgeons in London, etc.
PHYSICIANS, CHEMISTS and DRUGGISTS praise it.
TESTIMONY OF NEW ORLEANS DOCTORS AND DRUGGISTS:
We, the undersigned, Druggists of the City of New Orleans, have sold in our trade WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE for over ten years past; and since its introduction into this section of the country, it has given such satisfaction to our customers, that we feel justified in saying that is one of the best remedies for Worms we have any knowledge of.

Hn. Kennedy,	James Syme,
Woodman & Bement,	Robert H. Read & Co.
P. Cusachs, Bro. & Co.,	F. Fredericksen.
E. B. Wheelock & Co.,	B. Abrams
F. P. D. Conge,	H Leroy,
J. De Deneville,	Jules A. Florat.
R. Turney,	Dr. O. Anfoux,
John H. Pope,	Edward Alex,
John A. Somers,	A A. Pochaud,
Henry Goldman,	C. Espinoin,
M. Martin,	E. MacPherson,
H. Jourdan,	F E. Mougin,
F. F. Henriquez,	J. Lladd,
G. N. Morison & Co.,	F. Clavel,
Louis Castel.

TRUTH OMNIPOTENT.—We give to our readers and the public generally the following copy of a letter received by us from J. W. Vesey, Esq., of the Aberdeen Conservative, enclosing at the same time a communication to that paper from Colonel Vasser, of North Mississipp

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 11. WHOLE NUMBER 474.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 14, 1860.

$2 00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE. OFFICE—113 CAMP ST.

INTRODUCTION OF PROTESTANTISM INTO MISSISSIPPI.—NO. IV.

Original Baptist Church.

Mr. Editor: Our three refugees all had families, and their forced separation from wives and children, was inexpressibly painful to the hearts of husbands and fathers, but no other alternative promised them any security; and committing their all to the care of God, they bowed to their fate. Travelers bread was somehow prepare by a union of cornmeal and bear-oil, and other articles were added, such as were indispensable on their long and perilous journey through the various Indian tribes inhabiting the vast region between the Natchez country and Georgia.

But an unexpected difficulty sprang up. Not a man could be found willing to risk the penalty of "aiding and abetting" in the escape of the refugees. Their absence from home a single day or night might throw suspicion on them and lead to disastrous consequences; and the question was asked with increasing anxiety, "who will take their supplies to their place of concealment on Bayon Pierre?" The question was answered. There lived in the vicinity a noble hearted and daring woman by the name of Chloe Holt, who acted in the capacity of accoucheress for the settlement, and was every way suitable for such an adventure as was now on foot. She rather tauntingly said, if the men of the neighborhood were so faint-hearted that not one of them could be prevailed upon to take Dick Curtis and his companions in exile their promised supplies, in order to give them a chance to escape from the clutches of their relentless persecutors, if they would furnish her with a good horse, surmounted with a man's saddle, she would go in spite of the Spaniards.

They were glad to avail themselves of her generous offer, and the horse was accordingly brought, and saddled as she desired.

All things being ready, she made her appearance attired as a man, and mounting the horse in keeping with it and her equipment, she boldly dashed off.

The journey was hastily and successfully made. No one molested 'Aunt Chloe,' and that adventure was her boast to the close of her life.

If any one will show me her grave, I will have a monument erected there on to perpetuate her name, and her noble deed, to generations yet unborn.

Whoever may, in future, write the history of the Baptist Church in Mississippi, let them not neglect to make honorable mention of Chloe Holt. "Peace to your ashes" old friend, wherever they rest!

The 23d of August, 1795, the day on which M. Curtis left his home on Cole's creek, was a dark day to the little church in the wilderness. And how dark to those desolate wives and weeping children! And how mysterious did all appear to the exiled refugees! But the hand of God was in all this, as we shall presently see.

Onward the exiles journeyed, fording or swimming the smaller streams, and making rafts of logs to ferry themselves over the larger rivers—until they arrived in the white settlements north east of the Indian country. In process of time they got to the former home of Mr. Curtis, on Great Pee Dee, in South Carolina, where they remained over two years.

Here their religious privileges were unrestricted, and in spiritual matters they passed off the time profitably to themselves and others. While there, Mr. Curtis was regularly ordained by Elders Benjamin Mosely and Matthew McCulloun; and was duly empowered, when he should return to the Natchez country, to constitute a Baptist Church according to the 'faith and order' of that denomination.

In the meantime the Natchez district was claimed as belonging to the United States, and Col. Elliott had been sent on by the General Government to enforce our claim, by negotiation if possible—if not, by arms.

After many vexatious delays, he had to assume a belligerent attitude before the Spanish Commandant would yield. But early on the morning of the 30th of March, 1798, the Fort at Natchez was evacuated, and some day the Americans took possession of the works.

While this much desired event was verging to maturity, our Baptist friends were not idle spectators. They had recommenced their meetings under the lead of John and Jacob Stampley, Harigail and others. They had written to the exiles in South Carolina to come home; and expectation was on tip-toe to hail their arrival. A rude church had already been erected in Stampley's Settlement, and furnished with pulpits and seats. It was Saturday night, and Messrs. Curtis, Humberlin and De Alva were within half a day's ride of home. At early dawn they resumed their journey, thinking it no harm to travel a little on Sunday under such circumstances. Mr. Curtis had not got home before he fell in with cheerful companies of former acquaintances on their way to the "house of prayer." They assured him that he would not find his wife and children at home, for they were then on their way to church, so he turned with the company to the place of worship.

When they arrived at the church, Pattie, as he called Mrs. Curtis, had not yet come, but he was assured that all were well, and as the hour for preaching had come, they requested him to go immediately into the pulpit and preach them a sermon. While he was tarning to his hymn and text behind the hook-board, his wife came in, unobserved by him. The inconsiderate people had given her no intimation of the presence of her long exiled husband. When he rose up, she glanced at the palpit to see who was going to officiate, and seeing, it was her own beloved, long lost, but now restored husband, it was more than her womanly heart could endure in silence. She shrieked and swooned away and was borne from the house in an unconscious state. Cold ablutions were resorted to, but the warm embrace, and soothing voice of her husband soon quieted her nerves. All returned to the church, and Elder Curtis, as we shall henceforth call him, preached an appropriate and feeling sermon. The dark and menacing clouds of persecution had now passed away. All was light, and love, and joy in that little Protestant brotherhood.

On the return of Elder Curtis to his home in Mississippi, the voice of the oppressor had ceased in the land. The stars and stripes had been thrown upon the balmy winds of the Natchez country, and liberty of conscience was proclaimed to all. Our hitherto oppressed and downtrodden Baptist community met in Conference, and under the superintendence of their beloved Elder Curtis, who presided as Moderator, organized themselves "in due and ancient form" into a regular Baptist Church. Their first Church was called Salem, and stood among the sources of the south fork of Cole's creek, in Jefferson county.

Arrangements were already in progress for the establishment of a Territorial government in Mississippi, which was soon matured, and from thenceforth the church had peace and protection from Papal oppression.

I did not, however, set out to write a history of the Baptist Church in Mississippi, but only to show its origin. I have felt it due to the general cause of truth, as well as the fair fame of worthy ancestors, who were the principal actors in the scenes I have described, to correct errors already extant, and to rescue from oblivion interesting facts which should be known to posterity. If ever the history of this branch of the general Church in Mississippi is correctly written, honorable mention will be made of Elder Curtis and his worthy coadjutors, who breasted the opposition and persecution of the Papal Hierarchy for nearly eighteen years. With many of them I was well acquainted in my boyhood; and I then had, and yet have the most exalted opinion of the depth and uniformity of their personal piety, which had been nurtured in storms, and stood as firm as the mountain oak. So far as I know, they almost universally prayed with their families evening and morning. My own mother, who at an early date became a member of Salem church, kept up prayer in her family for near twenty years previous to her death. Early in the present century Elder Curtis died at the house of a friend on Beaver creek, in Amite county, where he had gone to seek relief from a cancer that occasioned his death, Oct. 28th, 1811. His grave is unknown to his relatives.

"His ashes lie, no marble tells us where;
With his no bard embalms or sanctifies his song."

But his record is on high! He was a plain, blunt man; but his roughness suited the rough work he had to do.

His wife, "Aunt Pattie," as she was familiarly called by the connection, survived, as a hale old lady, until about 1818, or 1819. She died in Jefferson county, and is buried on the plantation of Samuel Bowles, two miles east of Fayette.

The elder Stampleys, so far as I know, are all buried in the neighborhood of the old Salem church.

My venerable grandfather, John Jones, fought many hard battles for his country and his church. He survived most of his companions in tribulation. He always prayed in his family evening and morning, and had an extra family service on the Sabbath, when the country was destitute of regular preaching. I remember him well, up to the seventeenth year of my age, as one of the most meek, exemplary, and deeply pious men I have ever known. He died on his little farm near Union Town in Jefferson county, upon which some of his descendants yet live, on the 10th of September, 1821, in the 77th year of his age. There he quietly sleeps beside the wife of his youth and mother of his ten children, awaiting "the resurrection of the just." These and many more of the original Church, "all died in faith."

And though I believe Infinite Wisdom directed my youthful feet into another branch of the general Church, where I have been more useful to my generation than I could have been anywhere else, I shall always feel grateful to these primitive Baptists for the early and safe religious training I received through their instrumentality.

My next will refer to the origin of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Mississippi.

J. G. JONES

NOTES FROM ONE ON A FURLOUGH—No. V.

Panama, Jan. 20, 1860.

The trip across the Isthmus is full of interest to those making it for the first time. The traveller passes now with ease and comfort over a road, where thousands in former days struggled with difficulties and hardships, which tried men's souls and muscles both. What is accomplished now in two or three hours, required ten days, ten years ago, eight or nine days being consumed in polling up the Chagres river some sixty miles, and the rest of the journey was accomplished on mules, along a narrow bridle path. The men who passed through and survived those scenes speak of them with emphasis and caution yet.

The Railroad is a very good one, having no heavy grade until it reaches the western slope, within some ten miles of the terminus, when there is a grade of about 60 feet to the mile. The scenery along the rout is various; on the first part of the way it is rather level and monotonous, though frequently beautiful; on the latter part it is often wild and grand in the extreme. At the various stopping places the natives are anxious to sell travellers refreshments, fruits, &c.; boiled green corn is among the luxuries they offer, and it finds a ready sale, as they furnish salt to season it with. Before leaving Aspinwall, I had the good fortune to meet A. B. Corwine, Esq., our kind and hospitable Consul at Panama, who insisted that I should make his house my home, during my stay in that city, and to him and his accomplished lady I am indebted for a courteous kindness which made my sojourn there exceedingly agreeable.

The city of Panama is located upon a point of land which projects out eastwardly from the main land into the bay. It was built after the pillage and destruction of old Panama, which was located several miles farther down the coast, by the buccaneers; and to guard against the recurrence of such a disaster, it was walled in and strongly fortified. Old Spain bore the expense, which amounted to several millions. Upon a separation from the mother country, and the withdrawal of its patronage and wealth, the city commenced to decline rapidly, which has gone steadily on, until it presents a sad spectacle of decay, a mere ruin; the ruins of deserted and decaying buildings are seen on all sides; nor will it ever be otherwise while its destinies are controlled by the present race. The space included within the walls could not have accommodated more than six thousand persons in its palmiest days, and the whole number within and outside of the walls cannot be more than that number at present. In its best days, the city, including its suburbs, may have had from 12,000 to 15,000 inhabitants. The present population may be classed as follows: 80 to 100 Americans and Englishmen, eight or ten Spanish and French families; all the rest are more or less mixed. Among this class the Indian element decidedly preponderates over the African, especially with the females. Many of this class have but a slight infusion of either, and have a good degree of civilization and intelligence. But about four-fifths of all the persons you meet in the streets are strongly marked. In the days of its prosperity, Panama was well supplied with churches, having no less than twelve. But religion and the church shared in the political and commercial fortunes of the country, and several of them are in ruins or shut up; and the large Convent, of St. Francis, I think, is a deserted ruin. Even the Cathedral feels and shows the change strongly, and both outside and in, looks neglected; every thing about the interior has the appearance of the "shabby genteel." All the carpenter's work and painting are of the coarsest character. I was attracted to it one morning by the music; I found three priests, aided by a novice, and a boy or two, working the altar service; and a dark colored fellow that I took for a mulatto, aided by a negro, at the bellows, conducting, or rather doing the music, for he alone comprised the choir; they were a sorry looking set, evidently from a plebeian stock; their faces had neither intelligence nor animation. There were about twenty-five persons kneeling in different parts of the building, and contemplating the images at and around the altar, four-fifths of whom were colored. A very black negro seemed the very perfection of serene contemplation; his appearance seemed to say, it is this or work, and I prefer this. One woman seemed as much bent on success as she who, whilome, figured upon the cover of the "Home Circle;" her arms were extended, and held aloft. The priests of this city have the reputation with all classes, as I happened to learn, of being an immoral and unworthy set; being the most clamorous betters at the Sunday cock-fightings and other sports. A lady of undoubted veracity informed me that she had seen three fighting cocks in the church, behind the altar, on the Sabbath, and fed and cared for by a priest not on duty. Some of them notoriously have large families, and live with them, and public report does not even spare the Bishop. His reverence lived just opposite the house in which I stopped, and I frequently saw him busy in spending his time in indolent dignity. Sabbath bull-baiting usually takes place under his window, that he may enjoy the sight without going abroad. The morals of the people generally may be a degree or two above those of Aspinwall, but with the example and influence of such religious teachers among them, what could be expected but that they would be both ignorant and debased. A young Costa Rican, with whom I conversed, and who was himself of the Romish Church, dwelt upon the character of the priests and condition of the people, with great emphasis. The whole structure of society, and all its constituent elements, as found here, are so widely variant from the type and style proposed by Christianity, that their contemplation becomes a strong test of one's faith, and we are led to exclaim "can these dry bones live?"

The American and English population are entirely without the ministry of the word, and all means of grace, except that a gentleman reads the service of the Episcopal Church, on the Sabbath, to the few who can be drawn together by it. They are very anxious to secure a minister, and would support one handsomely. The naval station, too, is without a chaplain at this time, so that a minister would find enough to do in serving both these departments; there are Christian gentlemen in both, who would give their money and all the aid in their power to a minister who should come among them and labor in the proper spirit. I preached for them on a short notice, and had a very respectable, intelligent congregation. I shall remember with pleasure the acquaintances I made here.

The country around Panama furnishes some fine views, especially the mountain range on the north east. I rode out in this direction upon the only road for a carriage which this portion of the country affords, in the course of a mile or so, we came to a beautiful roling savana, which only required cultivation to make it produce abundant crops. The soil has much of the appearance of the Prairie lands of Alabama and Mississippi, it is used only for the pasturage of cattle. The people of this country are entirely destitute of productive industry, and will only exert themselves so far as is necessary to meet their daily wants, and these are few and simple. In proof of this, Panama, with all its advantages of climate, location and so forth, exports not a dollars worth of anything. Yet it has quite a trade, both coastwise and with the interior. I noticed a number of wholesale stores. Palm oil, indigo, cocoanuts, chocolate, &c. might be produced extensively.

Of schools, Panama is almost entirely destitute. I saw two primary schools, where boys are taught the simplest rudiments, and a lawyer, a native of the place told me that there, with a few students whom the Bishop has, were all the facilities for education which the city has. This same gentleman expressed a desire that Protestantism might be introduced into the Republic, as it would bring with it new ideas, and secure the prosperity of the country. In this wish I most heartily join him.

J. H.

MORE PREACHERS WANTED.

In view of the fact that about forty more preachers could have been stationed at the last session of Mississippi Conference than were at our command, a resolution was adopted, requesting the Presiding Elders to preach on a Dying call to the Christian Ministry in each charge; also, the membership to unite with us in praying the Lord of the harvest to call and send forth more men to preach the gospel; that the first Friday in May next be observed as a day of fasting and prayer for this purpose, and that we request that services be held in each Church on that day.

Now, brethren, let us not forget this resolution. Let us pray every day for more to be converted and sent forth to preach by the Lord of the vineyard. Let us be sure to have service on that day, and urge all the people to unite with us in prayer for this object. Think of it; that we have about 18,000 white members, and nearly 16,000 colored! and that if we do our duty there will be nearly 34,000 prayers offered per day, to the Lord of Hosts and God of all grace for this one object! May our faith be increased while we pray. All things whatever you ask the Father in the name of Jesus, believing, ye shall receive! Let us be encouraged to enter heartily into this work.

And if the Lord selects you, or your son, or your brother, or your husband, don't hinder him, but encourage him to go in the name of the Lord.

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH.

We have before us a copy of the Report of the Committee of the Board of Trustees of the University of the South, appointed to prepare the draft of a Constitution and Code of Statutes, which was adopted at the meeting held in New Orleans in February last, and laid over for final consideration to the next meeting of the Board. This committee was composed of eminent gentlemen, clerical and lay, of Louisiana, Georgia, Florida, Arkansas, and Tennessee; and a perusal of the report will give an idea of the magnificent plan and scale on which the great University of the South is to be established and organized.

In drafting the plan of organization, the committee were guided by the system of no particular institution in existence, but made it eclectic, selecting such features as they deemed best from the systems of all distinguished universities in Europe, and embracing and combining them harmoniously, in framing the system of the University of the South. The Constitution and statutes drafted provide for the regulation of the affairs and general government of the university in their various details, defining the offices and the duties of their incumbents. The plan of education is to be by separate Schools for each branch of knowledge, each School complete in itself, independent of all others, and devoted to imparting instruction in everything belonging to its department. The following are to be the Schools founded by the University, to be increased as expediency and the progress of letters, science and art shall suggest:

1. School of Greek Language and Literature.
2. School of Latin Language and Literature.
3. School of Mathematics.
4. School of Physics.
5. School of Metaphysics.
6. School of History and Archæology.
7. School of Natural Sciences, with Cabinets and Garden of Plants attached.
8. School of Geology, Mineralogy and Paleontology.
9. School of Civil Engineering, Construction, Architecture and Drawing.
10. School of Theoretical and Experimental Chemistry.
11. School of Chemistry, applied to Agriculture and the Arts.
12. School of the Theory and Practice of Agriculture with Farm attached.
13. School of Moral Science and the Evidences of the Christian Religion.
14. School of English Language and Literature.
15. School of French Language and Literature.
16. School of German Language and Literature.
17. School of Spanish Language and Literature.
18. School of Italian Language and Literature.
19. School of the Philosophy of Language.
20. School of Rhetoric, Criticism, Elocution, and Composition.
21. School of American History and Antiquities.
22. School of Ethnology and Universal Geography.
23. School of Astronomy (with Observatory) and Physical Geography.
24. School of Political Science, Political Economy, Statistics, Laws of Nations, Spirit of Laws, General Principles of Government, and Constitution of the United States.
25. School of Commerce and Trade, including the History and Laws of Banking, Exchange, Insurance, Brokerage and Book-keeping.
26. School of Theology.
27. School of Law.
28. School of Medicine.
29. School of Mines and Mining.
30. School of Fine Arts.

The student may enter and pursue the course of studies of any of these Schools which he may select, but must matriculate in at least three, one of them to be that of Moral Science, and must pass a graduating examination in at least six, which are specified, to entitle him to either the honorary degree of A. B., or A. M.—For specified proficiency in attainments, Fellowships may be conferred on Masters of Arts, three to be elected every year, and each Fellow will have a suite of rooms free of rent, and $500 per year from the University for five years. At the head of each School, save those of Theology, Law and Medicine, there will be a Professor, to be elected by the Board of Trustees, and to receive $3000 per year, with the privilege of increasing it to $5000 from revenues of school tickets. Each Professor is to be assisted by such number of Assistant Professors as may be necessary to the proper discharge of the business of the School under his superintendence.

The University will have a Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor, Professors, Lecturers, Chaplain, Librarian, Proctor and Assistants; Registrar, Treasurer, Auditor, Comptroller, Commissioner of Buildings and Grounds, Curators of Cabinets, etc. The students will be boarded and lodged in houses to which licenses will be annually issued by the Vice-Chancellor, or revoked at will; no house to accommodate more than twelve students, and all of the houses to be under the strict surveillance of the government of the University, which will regulate the prices of board and lodging.—Crescent.

THE FIRE ALARM TELEGRAPH.

The contractors for the erection of the fire alarm and police telegraph have prosecuted the work with energy, and it is now nearly brought to a conclusion. The extent of the apparatus and machinery, and the amount of labor required to put it into effectual operation, is much greater than is generally supposed.

The first step of progress was putting up the wire. The wire used is a No. 9, iron wire, boiled in oil, to prevent oxydization by exposure to the atmosphere and storms. This is stretched along from station to station, attached to the chimneys or the roofs of the houses lying on the line of direction taken.

The contractors have found little or no opposition from the owners of private property to this use of their dwellings, but have rather received every possible aid for the rapid completion of the work.

The manner in which the wire is put up prevents injury to the property with which it is connected, and adds no unsightly attachment. When attached to the chimney, it is supported by an iron clamp, nailed to two of its sides, the wire passing through an insulator at the apex of the clamp. But when following the roofs of houses it is supported on an iron stand nailed to the roof, a piece of sheet lead under its feet, the nails having been dipped in a preparation of white lead.

All the wires concentrate in the central office—to be established in the Municipal Hall—and from circuits connecting every signal station, bell-tower and police-station, with the bell on the desk of the chief engineer and operator. There, and at the signal station, stands a lightning-arrester to discharge from the wires any surplus of electricity, each arrester having attached to it ground wires penetrating the earth several feet.

The city is divided into nine fire districts. All throughout these districts, at convenient places, are distributed sixty-three signal stations.

A signal station consists of an iron box attached to the street wall of a house. Directions for the key and use of the apparatus are found below the station-box. If a fire occurs in the neighborhood, this signal station box is opened, and a crank within is rapidly turned. Whether it be moved backward or forward, slowly or rapidly, with one revolution or fifty, it immediately gives the alarm in the central office, by ringing and continuing to ring the number of the station.

In possession of the locality of the fire, the engineer in chief, immediately by touching the proper keys of his office instruments, rings in each engine house of the city the district and station where help is needed. The alarm is given in each engine house by the ringing of a gong, which can be heard at least a square, while the twelve bells in the different bell towers of the city sound out the district and the station in danger. Not more than one minute can elapse from the first motion of the crank in the signal station box before the alarm is communicated throughout the whole city, and every citizen is informed of the locality of the fire.

In the bell-towers the machinery used is very ingenious. On one side of the lower rim of the bell a large hammer is stationed. This is held in its position by the support of a large weight enclosed in a hollow shaft. The weight is held firm until an electric current, passing over the armature of the instrument, releases it, when it rapidly falls, and the hammer, put in motion, strikes the bell, giving a note of alarm. Every new current of electricity sent over the wires utters a new blow on the bell; so that the strokes are entirely under the control of the operator.

This machinery, and, indeed, every portion of the apparatus used in the fire alarm telegraph is remarkable for the durable manner in which it is constructed, and the fineness of its finish. We are assured, and we have reason to trust the assertion, that this city will possess the finest fire alarm apparatus in use in the United States.

The liberality of the contractors, Messrs. Campwell and Co., is also evinced in this, that they have furnished seven signal station boxes, and two police instruments more than the contract calls for.

The police instrument is a circular brass box, having a glass face, somewhat like a large mariner's compass, having the letters of the alphabet on its face instead of the points of the compass, and a key in the side opposite each letter, with a needle freely moving within the box. When a message is to be communicated, the signal having been given and answered, the words are spelled out by pressing alternately the keys opposite the necessary letters. A message of some length can thus be communicated in a few seconds.

The wire will all be in situ the present week. The instruments will be in position, and the entire apparatus in good working order by the 1st of April.

This important addition to the means of the safety of the property of the city, reducing the risks of underwriters, and consequently enhancing their profits, calls for a liberal contribution on their part towards the expense of its erection. The work is one that must have been done by the city, but the great benefit of the new power given to the fire department will be reaped by the insurance companies of New Orleans. We much mistake their sense of justice—their known liberality—their appreciation of their own interest, if they do not relieve the corporation of a large amount of the payment for the contract by a munificent donation for that purpose.—Picayune.

RIGHTS OF THE STATES AND TERRITORIES.

The following are the resolutions introduced into the Senate by Mr. Davis, of Mississippi, which the telegraphic dispatch says had been carried by the Democratic members in caucus, "without a division." The dispatch adds that "there is little doubt they will command all the Northern and Southern Democratic votes, except those of Senators Douglas and Pugh." They may therefore be considered as the sense of a large majority of the Senate:

Resolved, That, in the adoption of the Federal constitution, the States adopting the same acted severally as free and independent sovereigties, delegating a portion of their powers to be exercised by the Federal Government for the increased security of each against dangers, domestic as well as foreign; and that any interneddling by any one or more States, or by a combination of their citizens, with the domestic institutions of the others, on any pretext, whether political, moral, or religious, with the view to their disturbance or subversion, is in violation of the constitution, insulting to the States so interfered with, endangers their domestic peace and tranquility—objects for which the constitution was formed—and, by necessary consequence, serves to weaken and destroy the Union itself.

Resolved, That negro slavery, as it exists in fifteen States of this Union, composes an important portion of their domestic institutions, inherited from their ancestors and existing at the adoption of the constitution, by which it is recognized as constituting an important element of the apportionment of powers among the States; and that no change of opinion or feeling on the part of the non-slaveholding States of the Union, in relation to this institution, can justify them or their citizens in open and systematic attacks thereon, with a view to its overthrow, and that all such attacks are in manifest violation of the mutual and solemn pledges to protect and defend each other, given by the States respectively on entering into the constitutional compact which formed the Union, and are a manifest breach of faith and a violation of the most solemn obligations.

Resolved, That the Union of these States rests on the equality of rights and privileges among its members, and that it is especially the duty of the Senate, which represents the States in their sovereign capacity, to resist all attempts to discriminate, either in relation to person or property, so as, in the Territories—which are the common possessions of the United States—to give advantages to the citizens of one State which are not equally secured to those of every other State.

Resolved, That neither Congress nor a Territorial Legislature, whether by direct legislation or legislation of an indirect and unfriendly nature, possesses the power to annul or impair the constitutional right of any citizen of the United States to take his slave property into the common Territories; but it is the duty of the Federal Government there to afford for that as for other species of property the needful protection; and if experience should at any time prove that the judiciary does not possess power to insure adequate protection, it will then become the duty of Congress to supply such deficiency.

Resolved, That the inhabitants of an organized Territory of the United States, when they rightfully form a constitution to be admitted as a State into the Union, may then, for the first time—like the people of a State when forming a new constitution—decide for themselves whether slavery, as a domestic institution, shall be maintained or prohibited within their jurisdiction; and if Congress shall admit them as a State, "they shall be received into the Union with or without slavery, as their constitution may prescribe at the time of their admission."

Resolved, That the provision of the constitution for the rendition of fugitives from service or labor, "without the adoption of which the Union could not have been formed," and the laws of 1793 and 1850, which were enacted to secure its execution, and the main features of which being similar, bear the impress of nearly seventy years of sanction by the highest judicial authority, have unquestionable claim to the respect and observance of all who enjoy the benefits of our compact of Union; and that the acts of State legislatures to defeat the purpose or nullify the requirements of that provision, and the laws made in pursuance of it, are hostile in character, subversive of the constitution, revolutionary in their effect, and, if persisted in, must, sooner or later, lead the States injured by such breach of the compact to exercise their judgment as to the proper mode and measure of redress.

MEDICAL SCHOOLS OF LOUISIANA.

The Board of Trustees of the New Orleans School of Medicine have addressed a memorial to the Legislature, seconding the application of the Faculty for an appropriation of $50,000 from the State.

This school was established about four years ago, with the design of giving a new impulse to medical education in the State. It is the competitor of the Medical Department of the University of Louisiana, which was established in 1835, and has been extensively aided by the State, in the free use of the buildings of the State and considerable grants of money. The new school had a small appropriation from the State, but principally by private means has purchased buildings, reared buildings, made the nucleus of a museum, library and apparatus, and created an institution, which is already prosperous, and which has added largely to the means of education and drawn to the city of New Orleans a number of students—three times as great as that which attended lectures when there was but one school.

The claim of the school upon the State is that this is one of those public objects in which the whole State, and, indeed, the whole Southwest, has a direct interest, that every man in every part of the State has a personal interest in the increase of the means by which diseases is to be overcome and life preserved and lengthened, and that institutions of a high cast for these purposes are not private enterprises within the reach of individual capital, seeking investment for profit, but should take their places among works of public spirit, upheld and carried forward by the aid of the State. There is a subsidiary but highly important interest which the public has in the gratuitous public services of which a large class falls upon this school, in the operations of the Free Dispensary, which administers to the poor without fee, and thus saves the public largely in the expenses of the Charity Hospital; in the gratuitous lectures it gives to State pupils, and the gratuitous care of the Charity Hospital patients. These colleges also bring a great amount of foreign money into the State for the support of the hundreds of students who come here annually, of which amount but a small sum goes to the Faculty for their services, but is circulated through all the avenues of trade.

Another public inducement is urged, in the growing desire springing out of the recent unhappy relations of the two sections of the country towards each other, that the Southern States should plant and encourage among themselves institutions for the education of their own youth within their own territories. The stimulus given to this desire leads to the belief that the number of applications at the next term will be very large, and that there will be a want of accommodation for them which ought to be supplied, and which can only be supplied by the liberality of the State—looking to the wants of the whole State, and of the Southwest, no less than to the benefits which will follow to this city.

The memorial is drawn up with care, and contains, in the form of an appendix, a history of the origin and progress of medical schools in the State of Louisiana, and "their relation to the Government, to the people and to each other," which may be read with much instruction, and which makes out a highly reasonable case of merit in this school, for all the aid which the State can afford to give.—Picayune.

EDITORIAL.

The trials of a magazine editor have not been sufficiently considered by the public. But they are many and severe; the chief of all being the necessity of refusing the contributions of his friends. Often enough he may unjustly refuse them. Man is mortal, and editors are but men. But the secret of such a refusal is his friendship; for the editor suspects himself of partiality, and the sonnet that would be a good enough sonnet if it were Jones's unknown to the editor, is condemned because it is Jenkins's, his bosom friend.

Besides, let all friends of the editor consider what his position really is. He is a captain of a ship, which he sails not for his own pleasure, but for the profit of the owners and his own honor and emolument. He can not give away passages. He can not stop and have a spree at the Azores when he is heading for Ceylon. He may infinitely prefer to please his friend by taking a glass, but it is understood that while he commands he shall not drink. The editor is that captain. He is sailing a ship which belongs to other people, and his port is public favor. It is his duty to make the most prosperous voyage—that is, the best and most saleable magazine he can; of course, if he cannot do it without prostitution of his mind or character, he will throw up his command. But it is no prostitution of his power, it is only a pain to his feelings, to say, "Friend, I cannot take you, for I have no right to indulge my private partiality at the expense of the concern. I would willingly lose, to gratify my friendship, but I have no right to make other people lose for my gratification."

Apollodorus sends us his last poem in ten mortal cantos; "good for ten months," he says kindly in his note. It is not very good. It would sink the magazine. What shall the editor do? What can he do? What ought he to do?

Now if he does it, how hardly Apollidorus will feel toward that editor! How he will criticise the poetry that does appear! How grieved and hurt and mortified he will be! Oh, sweetly singing Apollidorus, the editor is not there to please himself altogether, nor you, but the average public taste. He knows what ought to go into the magazine, because he knows what people like; his people, the readers of his magazine. Perhaps he may think they ought to like your poetry. Undoubtedly the world owes you as much as that. But if it won't pay? That is always the rub. If people won't like your poetry, and won't pay for it, and think it a bore, and swear at it (far the world is dreadfully profane with poetry it does not like), why should you make the editor your scape-grace? Do you suppose he has not vexation of soul enough already?

Remember that every month, or every week, he has to prepare a feast, the same yet different. He must have articles neither too short nor too long, nor too monotonous, nor too much "to be continued." He must have poetry and humor, and pathos, and love, and adventure. And he must have all these in such combinations, and of such quality, as he can not explain nor describe, but which he recognizes instinctively. The only answer he can make is, "Respectfully declined." If you insist upon knowing why, he can merely reply, "Because it is not magazinish." If you say, "I don't know what that is." He must answer, "I do." And that must settle it. And if you are the poet and the gentleman he believes you to be, you will not scowl, and say that you really had supposed your poetry was as good as what is generally published, but you will shake his hand heartily, and say, "Never mind, my dear fellow, I forgive, pity, and thank you."—Harper's Weekly.

SPIRITS.

The Rev. Mr. Harris, who has been long what is called a "Spiritualist," is reported to have recently deserted that body of believers, or rather to have declared that he has no faith in the goodness or intelligence of such spirits as he has been in the habit of dealing with.

Now there seems to be no reason for calling those whose faith in spiritual things would seem to rest upon gross material phenomena, "Spiritualists." That name, certainly, one would say, should be reserved for those who believe without assistance from chairs or tables.

Yet every man must confess that a sneer or a shrug does not dispose of that singular testimony of the mystery of unseen things which lingers in tradition from age to age, and constantly re-appears in literature. The work of Robert Dale Owen—"Footfalls on the Boundary of another World"—is the latest collection of this curious evidence, stated in a most admirable spirit. It has not the transparent credulity of old Increase Mather, in his "Remarkable Providences;" but it has one fault which should have been instinctively avoided in so judicious a work of the kind. There is no mention made of the incidents, equally remarkable with those he cites, which have been explained by purely natural and intelligible causes, thereby creating an analogical inference in regard to those which are not yet explained.

A few weeks since a party of Loungers were discussing this book and its class, when one of them read from old Mather's "Providences" the case of the Newburyport family who suffered so sadly from devilish interferences, until one day a sailor came from sea, and after witnessing the diabolical phenomena said that he thought, if he could have the cure for a day of a young boy who dwelt in the afflicted family, there would be a cessation of the dreadful phenomena. So for a day he reasoned with Satan, hidden in the youth. In fact, he gave Satan a good deal better than he sent, in the shape of thwacks and flagellations, and the happy result was an end of the infernal antics. Mather tells the whole story as seriously as if it really were the devil, and not the boy, who had afflicted the family.

There is a vast collection of ghost stories, of traditions of supernatural appearance, of inexplicable sounds, etc, which can hardly be dismissed as old women's fables and nursery tales. No men can tell when, or how, or where we strike suddenly upon the line that separates the visible from the invisible, and what we call natural from the preternatural. The true distinction would be—usual and unusual. We make our human experiences the standard of nature, whereas nature is the divine method. But still, a faith in spiritual things which is developed or chiefly cultivated by the extraordinary phenomena, and not by the ordinary processes of nature, is likely to be as uncertain in duration as it is questionable in quality. Men differ in their susceptibility and organization; but a man who is persuaded of immortality by three knocks upon the floor, is certainly no more distinctively a "Spiritualist" than he who has never doubted it, and to whose mind the song of every bird and the beauty of every flower certifies it.—Harper's Weekly.

WHAT DIVERS MEET WITH UNDER WATER.

When the vessel has settled down in a sandy bottom, it is preserved for many months from breaking up; and its position may be much the same as it would be when floating in calm water, if it be not tilted over by any under-current drifts. The light, of course, depends a good deal upon the depth, and upon the nature of the bottom; but where there is no chalk, to give a milky thickness to the water, the diver pursues his work in a kind of gloomy twilight. By the aid of this he can see and feel his way round the ship, but when he ascends to the deck, and winds down into the principal cabins, he finds everything pitch dark, and has nothing to guide him but his hands. This is the most difficult, and yet the most frequent labor he has to encounter; the danger being that in a large vessel, where the cabin stairs are deep, and the cabins are long and broad, he may get his air tube twisted round some unfamiliar projections, and so squeeze off his supply of life from above. In positions such as this he requires all his nerve and self-possession, all his power of feeling his way back in the exact road that he came. He may have got the precious casket to which he has been directed in his arms; but what of that if he die before he can reach the stairs? The cold, helpless masses that bump against his helmet, as they float along the low roof over his head, are the decomposed corpses of those who were huddled together in the cabin when the ship went down. A few of these may be on the floor under his feet, but only when pinned down by an overturned table or a fallen chest. Their tendency is ever upward, and the remorseless sea washes away the infant from its dead mother's arms, the dead wife from the dead husband's embrace. If the wreck be in the channel, the small crabs are already beginning to fatten on their prey. The diver disentangles himself from this silent crowd, and ascends the welcome stairs to the deck. The treasure he has rescued is hauled up into the attendant diving boat, and he turns again to renew his work. He seldom meets with an accident under the water; never perhaps with death, and the chief risk he runs is from getting some heavy piece of ship lumber overturned on his long train of air pipe. Even in this case he feels the sudden check and want of air, gropes his way back to the obstruction, removes it, signals to his companions to be raised, and reaches the boat exhausted and alarmed, but not so much so as to give up his place in the trade. His earnings mostly take the form of shares in what he recovers. If fortunate, his gains may be large; if unfortunate, they may be small; but no man can grudge him the highest prizes it is possible for him to win. May Whitstable always have the honor of producing such bold and dexterous men as plentifully as she has hitherto done, and may they have the wisdom to keep what they get.—Dickens's All the Year Round.

RAILROAD FROM WASHINGTON CITY TO NEW ORLEANS.

We presume that no city in the United States, except our own (saya the States and Union of the 23 ult), would have regarded with indifference the construction of more than twelve hundred miles of railroad, connecting it with the Crescent City of the South by a mail time of three and a half days. Yet this grand result has been attained without the contribution of one dollar, either by our city or by the Federal Government for her.

By the completion of this road, the various routes which have heretofore conducted the interconrse between the Empire cities of the North and South, will be superceded by one shorter, safer, and cheaper; and this last route will pour the concentrated tide of travel through the Federal City.

The importance of this rapid communication does not, however, terminate at New Orleans; we are now within a week of Vera Cruz, and only eight days from the city of Mexico. But to the perfect operation of this important improvement there is yet, to our descredit, one thing wanting. We require a close connection at Washington between the roads of the North and South.—Here is the only gap in fifteen hundred miles of railroad. Here, at the Federal capital, is the only impediment to the perfect success of one of the longest lines of railroad in the world.

All the travel, the tons of federal mail, the thousands of passengers, the millions of dollars' worth of express goods to be drayed, carted, and transported in lumbering omnibuses, four or five miles through our spacious city. Yet Washington City has no more right to impose this restriction upon their interconrse, than Knoxville, or Alexandria, or Lynchburg, or any of the numerous towns and cities along the line. Washington should indignantly reject any local exaction which might profit her at the expense of others.

Congress, composed of Representatives from all sections, should provide at once for building a bridge across the Potomac, either at Georgetown, or elsewhere; and it should authorize trains drawn by horses, or at low speed by steam, to pass along the back streets of the city, or around it, so that the reproach of imposing tolls and impediments upon a great thoroughfare, built by others, in great part, for our benefit, may pass away.

We hope our worthy Mayor and our enlightened Council will not neglect the inauguration of this great route, soon, we learn, to be celebrated, and will take occasion to show that they appreciate, and will contribute everything in their power towards completing this great national thoroughfare—so that the mail and travel may pass from New York to New Orleans within seventy-two hours—a result which will be easily attained by a close connection at Washington and some other improvements now in rapid progress at the South.

THE UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI.

The Hon. J. W. Taylor, of Alabama, who possesses literary attainments of the finest character, recently

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 14, 1860.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

On Wednesday last, the annual meeting of the Joint Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate took place. A session was held also on the next day. Present—A. H. Mitchell, D.D., Rev. Joshua T. Heard, and Rev. E. Baldwin, of the Alabama Conference; J. C. Keener, D.D., J. B. Walker, D.D., and Rev L. Parker, of the Louisiana Conference. B. M. Drake, D.D., W. H. Watkins, D.D., and Rev. J. J. Wheat, of the Mississippi Conference, were absent. The session was harmonious and pleasant. The exhibit of the financial condition of the paper was satisfactory and encouraging. Continued adhesion to the formerly expressed purpose of the Committee was resolved upon, viz.: to expend the profits of the paper in its improvement. A formal resolution was adopted instructing the Editor "to advertise for schools, colleges, and other institutions of the Church, at one half the established rates; and that these terms be not deviated from in any case." We were glad to see our brethren from abroad and hope for many such meetings.

SENDING OUT ACCOUNTS.

We are now sending out the accounts of the Advocate as rapidly as possible. We send a list to the preacher, and individual accounts to the subscribers, at the same time. We send accounts to all who have not paid to January, 1861, it matters not how small the amount; because we wish all accounts to begin and end with the year. We are as careful as possible; but should there be mistakes, let us know immediately. Let all pay up to 1861, and the accounts will be much more convenient to our subscribers, and also to ourselves.

ONLY A DOLLAR AND A HALF.

From the 1st of April until the end of the year, the price of the Advocate will be only $1 50. With the first issue in April we shall increase the edition, so as to be able to supply new subscribers from that number on. How many new subscribers can our preachers and friends furnish us at that price? Do, brethren and friends, make an effort, a general effort, a vigorous effort, an enthusiastic effort, a long-continued effort, to largely increase our list.

BALTIMORE AND VIRGINIA CONTROVERSY.

The papers of the Southern Methodist Church, as a rule, we are happy to see, have but little to say on the exciting sectional questions that now, more than ever, agitate the country. Not even the tempting relation they sustain to the slavery question—a relation sustained by no other religious papers in the South—has caused them to depart from this course. We have examined our leading Advocates for weeks together, without finding a single article in which the slavery controversy is introduced. During all the excitement occasioned by Harper's Ferry, Helper's book, and the contest for Speaker, our press maintained a noble, dignified, and "wise reticence." Assuming, without argument, the relation of master and servant, as did the Apostles, to be of God, these organs of a non-political Church—a Church, like the primitive one, without legislation for or against slavery, but with legislation for the Christian culture of both master and servant—have devoted themselves to the dissemination of a pure Christian literature.

Though aware of the temptations existing among our brethren along the border, and making, as we trust, all due allowance for them, we must be permitted to say that we regret the fierce controversy that has for some time been conducted between the Northern and Southern Methodist Churches, in Virginia and Maryland. That there should be, at this day, a Northern Methodist Church in those slave-holding States—anti-slavery, as it is, in its whole official history—is, to us, strange enough; nevertheless, it is a fact, and must be so accepted. Our Church is not responsible for that fact, nor has she any duties growing out of it. Since the controversy is begun, however, we may be permitted to speak of it. The position of the Baltimore Conference has always, since 1844, been one of most pitiful inconsistency: belonging to an avowedly anti-slavery Church, and yet in slave-holding territory; denounced by the abolition wing of that Church as conniving at slavery, and denounced by slave-holders as being abolitionists; they have been helplessly indefensible. They formerly led the van in the anti-slavery movements of that Church. All their recent troubles are legitimate reapings of that sowing. Of late years, however, they have been earnestly preparing to resist the tide of abolition fanaticism, which is sweeping over the whole Northern Church. They have repudiated the regular Church organs, and established a paper of their own. Though officially unchanged in position, they should, we think, have been credited with these evidences of improvement. A public body cannot immediately change an official history, and official relations, for which their fathers, and not themselves, are principally responsible. The Church South, itself, is a pertinent illustration of this view. Especially should they have been treated with great delicacy and forbearance in view of the Harper's Ferry raid, and the distressing embarrassments with which it surrounded them. Magnanimity demanded it. At any rate, our Church is neither in charge of their consciences nor their destiny. No advantage should have been taken of the occasion, especially by the religious press, more particularly ours. Time, at least, should have been allowed them.

It may be said that such impunity would only have encouraged them to maintain their unjust position towards the South. That may be. Persecution, or that which can be thus construed, however, is of more evil tendency still. At any rate, the State is the party concerned in the political relations of the Baltimore Conference, and not the Southern Church. Had such views obtained, public opinion would have done its office, and a section of our Church, on the border, would have been saved from an ungracious attitude. Our Church, with its absence of all legislation on the subject, is not confined to slave territory, nor is it the business of our Church, as such, nor of its organs, to fight the political battles of the day. What Southern Methodists do on this behalf, should be done in their character as citizens, and not as Methodists. The general relations of the subject, to the Bible, and to Christian civilization, are, of course, within the legitimate range of our press; but there is a special phase of it that belongs only to the secular press. These remarks have been occasioned by reading, in the Richmond Advocate, what we regard as a very unfortunate controversy between the editor of that paper, Rev. L. Rosser, D.D., and Rev. J. C. Granbery. Both seem to be agreed as to the anti-slavery position of the Baltimore Conference, but Mr. Granbery seems to protest against the attacks made upon it by the Richmond Advocate. Mr. Granbery seems to think Dr. Rosser has acted without due discretion and charity, and Dr. Rosser seems to think Mr. Granbery has acted without due discretion, and with injustice to the South. Without deciding upon the merits of this issue, the whole case affords a strong confirmatory illustration of the position taken in this article—of the evil of engaging in such a controversy at all. However just may be Dr. Rosser's charges against the Baltimore Conference, constructively, Mr. Granbery is equally just in his plea for charity and discretion, under the circumstances. Both of these gentlemen, we can imagine, may have been more zealous in behalf of their respective views than is warranted by either discretion or charity. We sincerely trust that the controversy may not do harm to the Church. Baltimore is being taught by Providence

JUNIOR EXHIBITION AT CENTENARY.

Mr. Editor: Perhaps a brief notice of the "Annual Junior Exhibition" just ended, may not be entirely devoid of interest to the many readers of the Advocate, most of whom, doubtless, are, in a measure, patrons of Southern education, and hence take, or should take great interest in the prosperity and welfare of Centenary College. These exhibitions present various features of interest, both to the public and to the students. By the students they are looked forward to as seasons of a "general jubilation." Especially are they interesting to the members of the two literary societies, as great rivalry exists between them; and the ambitious student has here fair fields for the exercise of his powers of oratory and composition, and sometimes triumphs are achieved which foreshadow brilliant successes in life. The public generally manifest their interest in these exhibitions by assembling in large collections, and, though unknowingly, confer a great favor upon the speakers, and often contribute more than anything else to their success. There is no boy who would not much rather address a large assembly than a small one; and when he is once upon the stage, however modest he may be, however hard he may have had to struggle to bring himself to "the notch," the appearance of a full house immediately inspires him with a determination to gain applause and approbation. How different it is when there is a meager attendance! Once on the stage, at one glance he takes in every countenance, then a disagreeable feeling as if every pair of eyes was upon him, upon the heels of which comes one of restlessness and dread, and anxiety to leave the stage, the consequence of which is, that he hurries through his speech, affording little or no pleasure to the audience, and in most cases not doing himself justice.

The first night of the exhibition (March 1st) was taken up with "select orations" by speakers chosen from the Preparatory Department, and the Freshman and Sophomore classes; and never has it been my pleasure to witness better exhibitions of college oratory. The speakers from the Freshman class were unusually good performers exhibiting more intonation and command of voice than I have ever known from college boys. Among the seven speakers there was not one who could not with justice be called a good declaimer. Two or three deserve especial notice. "Eulogy on Washington," by J. S. Levron, was truly a refreshing performance; "John C. Calhoun," by J. R. Freeman, was doubtless spoken as the author of the speech intended it should be spoken, it being a vindication of that great statesman upon the floor of the Senate. We predict for Mr. Ducote, who entertained the house with "Conservatism," a great triumph in the art of oratory, if he only gives his attention rightly to the study of it. The morning of the 2nd was appointed for the exhibition of the two Literary Societies; and as we understand that great rivalry and competition exist between those institutions in their public exhibitions, we refrain from casting any decision in favor of either side; suffice it to say, that all acquit themselves in a manner very creditable to the college and the societies they represented. The following is the programme: "By following divine traces Science arrives at her destination," by E. Waskom, of Texas. Conservatism the mediator between the past and the future," J. P. Carter, of Miss.; "Progress," by S. H. Rose, of Miss.; "God and Right—the war-cry of mankind," by Geo. Defrese, of La.; "The last act in the world's drama," J. W. Ard, of Miss.; "Nil Desperandum," Wm. M. Johnston, of Texas; "The finished mission," Wm. R. Campbell, of La.; "History the guiding star of nations," by J. McCollum, of Louisiana.

"Nil Desperandum," by Wm. M. Johnston, was decidedly the best, and gained the encomiums of other and more competent judges than your correspondent. I suppose it was the most perfect speech I ever heard from a college stage. He has certainly a style of his own, and great descriptive powers; added to which there was a pleasing beauty and chastity of language, clothed in which the ideas came to the ears of the auditors with such force and impressiveness, as to elicit the spontaneous applause of the whole house. The speaker in question would doubtless achieve great triumphs in the literary world, as his style is peculiarly adapted to that intricate field of labor and usefulness. "The last act in the world's drama," by J. W. Ard, was a good production, and had it been spoken with sufficient distinctness would have created pretty much of a sensation. Your correspondent being admirably located for hearing, can testify to its merit. Other speeches of the day could bear criticism would time and space allow. The evening of the 2nd was occupied with the "Exhibition of the Junior class," two members of which deserve special commendation for the fact that, in addition to their "junior speeches," they, on the morning of the same day, delivered addresses in representation of their Societies, and in each case reflected honor upon their "Alma Mater." They were Messrs. Kase and Johnston (the author of "Nil Desperandum). Mr. Johnston on this occasion delivered a poem entitled "Allvecsis," and as in the case of his speech before mentioned, carried off the palm; his effort being decidedly the most pleasing and entertaining performance of the evening. For beauty of conception, reflement of sentiment, and fitness of arrangement, his poem bore upon the face of it evidence of thought that could hardly have been expected to emanate from the brain of one apparently so young in years and experience, and would do honor to some of our first-class poets. We listened to "Allvecsis" with pleasure, and could, were it published, read it with renewed relish and gusto in print. On the whole the exhibition was one of talent, and in some cases genius, just budding into vigorous existence. The attendance was as good as usual—particularly on the last night. More than usual interest was manifested by the audience.

Our College is daily rising in importance, her sphere of influence is daily enlarging, and directed by her present able President and corps of competent Professors, we may safely predict the day to be not far distant when she will assume a commanding position among the first colleges of the South. Let all true Southerners come forward in the true spirit of Southern magnanimity, and co-operate with those who have labored so long and faithfully, and not with full success, in raising an "endowment fund." Centenary has been struggling for a long time against every imaginable kind of obstacles—difficulties as varied as they have been threatening, and only until lately have the clouds begun to disperse, and her prospects brighten. During all that time, in the face of adversity, she has acted well her part, and sent forth many a young genius on his mission of good, as living evidences of her worth. Surely the gallant sons of our noble South cannot look with indifference upon such efforts without extending their aid. Let them aid Centenary in the performance of a mission equally dear to our country, the Church, and Christianity in common. Place her in an independent position, free of all financial responsibilities, whence she can without fear stretch forth her arms over the land, and grapple with the giant, Ignorance; place her in a situation in which she will be enabled to give her whole and undivided attention to the cause of learning, and a new and important impetus will have been given to Southern education and Southern enterprise, and the history of Louisiana will record no event fraught with important results to our State, and destined to be a turning point in her career.

SPECTATOR.

Jackson, La., March 3d, 1860.

LETTER FROM REV. R. ABBEY.

Mr. Editor: Waiting for the cars, I drop you a line. I see our Mississippi legislature recently passed a strong non-commercial intercourse resolution, recommending that Southern people withhold their commercial patronage from the traders of such States and communities as continue their incessant intermeddling with the business and civil affairs of the South, so much to our annoyance and detriment.

Without undertaking to express a decided opinion as to the expediency or necessity of such recommendation, it does become me to invite the attention of those gentlemen to one branch of commerce, in which our Southern correspondence with Northern producers and vendors has been and still is immensely large, and wherein the evils complained of are a hundred fold greater than those branches which they particularly specify. There is not much danger, comparatively, of a lasting and permanent character, in the importation and use of Boston shoes and Merrimac carpets, because an indelible imprint of abolitionism cannot be stamped upon them.

But how is it in this country in regard to the importation and use of millions upon millions of books of a thousand kinds, not only made by abolitionists but abolition-made books, which are circulated and read in almost all our families all over the land? We have not only aided their commerce, but we circulate for them their abolitionism all over the South.

Will not the Legislators, and the Press, and the conservators of the country, speak out on this subject?

It may not be well known generally, but it is well known to many of us, who have had our eyes and our labors directed particularly to this point, that the teachings of abolitionism of the most dangerous kind is purchased by the million in the South, and by us placed in the hands of our families, our children, and our people generally, for their teaching and instruction!

Is it not time that we pause and think a little about matters so grave as this?

I say abolitionism of the most dangerous kind. I do not regard such a book as the Helper tomfoolery a dangerous book. The teachings of a ruffian who advertises himself a cut-throat and a robber, are not dangerous. The speeches of Hale, Giddings, and Seward, do but little harm, if they were on every center-table and in every reading-room in the South. From a known ruffian we look for falsehood. From a known fanatic we look for silly stuff to laugh at.

The imported printed abolitionism calculated to do harm among us is the silent, still, unobtrusive and seemingly unintended suggestions and single paragraphs, and incidental remarks, insidiously interlaced and hid away in sermons, religious lessons for children, and religious and juvenile literature generally, and in the more direct teachings of school books.

One not accustomed to these arts would be surprised to see with what cunning and ingenuity this precious commodity is smuggled in among us. In many of our school books it is well known to exist to an alarming extent, and in miscellaneous religious reading it is still worse. It is seldom outspoken, but is dropped in unawares with astonishing piety in the most unlooked for places, and in the most dangerous ways.

Now, I ask, what about patronising this kind of commerce?

Nor can Northern publishers protect us. Some of them would if they could. But they cannot read every word in their issues.

Then, where is our protection? And I answer: In setting up and encouraging Southern Publishing Houses.

But "books cannot be manufactured on a large scale to advantage in the South."

I am aware this has been the popular sentiment, but I am also aware it has been demonstrated to be untrue.

Driven to the necessity of self-protection in the matters above referred to, the Southern Methodist Church set up a Publishing House in the South, at Nashville, Tennessee, and this House has done one important thing for the country. It has demonstrated the practicability of Southern book manufactures. Its catalogue and its work will compare favorably with any at the North. The House is as solidly founded to day as any in the Union. The only difficulty is, it is unable to meet a heavy and rapidly increasing demand. It is rapidly increasing and will soon be the largest Publishing House in the Union. Its business now, together with that of its surrounding Depositories, in many of the principle cities of the South, about fifteen in number, is at the rate of four or five hundred thousand dollars a year.

If the house had the means of enlarging its manufacturing faculties sufficiently, its business this year would double the last. And I think its business another year, including that of the Depositories, would not fall short of a million of dollars.

Although this is a Church institution, its issues range through the entire field of literature, except novels and the like, from the very best volumes, including school books, to the largest and smallest works of every valuable sort.

This is the first attempt at Southern enterprise in this line. Will it not be followed by other capitalists?

R. ABBEY.

THE STATE THE SUPPORTER OF IDOLATRY, AND AT WAR WITH THE CHURCH.

Mr. Editor—Some of your readers are very much gratified that you have suggested the propriety of a decision by the "proper authorities" in the State, on "Freedom to worship God," and hoping that the question may be stirred till appropriate action is had, I send you the following reflections.

"Freedom to worship God," as revealed in the Old and New Testaments, without let or hindrance. Ah, that is a sacred right, and one that may not be molested with impunity. But what about the right to worship an idol, or liberty to organize and defend associations of Free-love, of Fourierism and of Mormonism, which are baptised religions, and claimed to be the worship of the true God? Where is the clause either in the Constitution of the country, or the enactments of either the States or of the general Government, that authorizes and defends the right to commit these abominations? Some of us have not been able, thus far, to detect such a clause or law. Yet some there are, and not a few, claiming to be citizens of enlightened and Christian America, who contend that liberty to do these abominations are secured to them by the Constitution of the United States, and that they are among the "inalienable rights of man;" rights that are as sacred to the government, and as much entitled to the protection of the law, as those of home and family, and as the pure and unadulterated worship of the Holy God even.

Now, we are frank to confess that if it shall appear after investigation that our Constitution and laws do even tolerate these abominations, not to say defend them, we go in for having them repealed, and others enacted which shall set this matter right—laws which shall show to the world, and teach our own people, that we may not dare to assume the fearful prerogative to declare by our conventions or legislative enactments that idolatry and the gratification of the baser passions, and unholy ambition of corrupt associations, are among the inalienable rights of man.

But if it shall appear that our laws do not either defend or authorize these abominations, let it be so declared by the authorities, and let measures be adopted for the suppression of those associations already in existence, and which will declare unmistakeably that these things cannot exist by the sanction of our law. If it be so, that our institutions and laws give the same prominence to an idol that they do to the only living and true God, it is no longer true that the Church proper and the State are at peace—that war and opposition have passed away from them—that they are friends, and act harmoniously, though separate in organization, and to a good degree in obligations, but having the same object in view, at least so far as the welfare of society is concerned, each watching the other's interest, and both in every possible, lawful way promoting the general good.

These things cannot be so if the above interpretation be correct, for that necessarily constitutes the State the opponent, and to some extent the persecutor of the Church. The State opposes the Church to the same extent that she gives countenance and support to these corrupt and false systems. She may not oppose the Church directly, but she does it indirectly, by upholding and defending these organizations who labor for her downfall and utter destruction, and if this be the fact, which must be so beyond question, from the premises, then were the fathers of American Independence mistaken when they supposed that freedom from State oppression had been secured to them and their descendants for ever, when British misrule was broken, and the American constitution and government was formed.

As Americans we have been accustomed to censure strongly the errors committed, or wrong done by the Church of Rome, where the State was made subordinate to the Church, and with terms equally severe have we denounced the blunder or unrighteousness of the British government in reversing the order, in making the Church subordinate to the State; and for America has been claimed the wisdom of giving to these subordinate powers of the Divine Ruler their appropriate places, that neither were to be above or subordinate to the other, but that they were to be equal in point of origin and aim, and both subordinate to the authority of Heaven's laws, and in harmonious action laboring for the suppression of vice and the promotion of the general good. The one mainly for the harmony and well-being of man as a social being; the other having more direct reference to man's happiness as a spiritual and immortal being.

But if the American Constitution, and the laws authorised thereby, make no distinction between the worship of the Holy God and the worship of idols, and if these associations of corruption are to receive the same protection at the hands of those in authority that the Church and the faithful of God and of the land do, then Americans have not made much improvement on the errors and wrongs of Great Britain. The Church and pure morality have still the odds of the State's influence against them in their efforts against error and corruption.

That this has been, and now is the state of the case, in some of the states and territories of this Union, facts abundantly attest; the propriety, at least the constitutional right of which, has been advocated, not by the low and vulgar only, but by those in authority. In California idol temples stand erect beside the Temple of the Lord. And Judges have decided that it is unconstitutional to require the observance of the Christian Sabbath when it conflicts with the religious faith of the subject. The stories of Mormon shame, and of Spiritualist wickedness, and others of the same class, which claim authority and protection under the law, and who, to the shame and confusion of our government, have so far as the arm of the law is concerned, remained unmolested in their false assumptions and work of ruin; the stories of these have been told so often they need not be repeated again.

And now, are these things right? Are they constitutional? That they are right, no good citizen will assume; and if they are constitutional, the Constitution is wrong itself, and ought to be altered. But if they are not constitutional, and in violation of that sacred article, then let the government see to it that its prohibitions are duly enforced, that the government itself be not a party to the wrong, and in the day of retribution share in the curse to be visited on the guilty party.

ALPHABET.

LETTERS FROM TEXAS.—NO. X.

There was another book which I picked up on the center-table at Dr. Boring's: "A tale of the Alamo," by Miss Evans. So unobservant am I, that the brow of this authoress was growing verdant as that of Daphne before my attention was called to her. I asked who she was, and was told that she was a young lady who had once lived in San Antonio, but was then residing in Mobile. I read the story with much interest, and was doubly gratified in remembering that she was a woman, and a Southern woman. She is, if I am not misinformed, yet younger than Miss Burney when she wrote "Evelina," and she considered herself at that time but a child. It is useless for me, however, to be calling forth the notes of a penny whistle, when for the last month or two Fame has been playing upon her trumpet the air of "Beulah," with variations.

But at length, the story of the Alamo is finished—not without a sigh. Our poor troops were all cut to pieces. This could not be helped, for History is standing looking over the shoulder of Romance, and woe be to her if she departs from the recorded chronicles; but why should the burning-hearted Spanish girl consume in her own fires, and why should the little consumptive girl wither away under the very life-giving eye of love? Ah, these novelists "be bloody-minded" people, and the quill of the novelist is more destructive than any "six shooter."

Now let me disentangle myself from these mournful Mexican memories, let me leave the spot where the indifferent Spaniard is shrugging his shoulders beside the pyre in whose flames ascend a Crocket, a Travis, and a Bowie, and turn to the refreshing, ever-blooming pages of Jean Paul—The Only. Here is his "Walpurgis Night," and here is the German who has left his home, his beloved wife and babes, to be absent on business, a few days in the city. Here is the stranger, the queer-looking stranger in the scarlet cloak, who, our German fancies, bears some family resemblance to the Prince of Darkness. The German finishes his business and returns home in the night. The dear ones are asleep, he will not disturb them; he throws himself upon a sofa in the summer-house; but before he has had time to fall into slumber, the scarlet-cloaked stranger appears; he asks the German to accompany him to the tavern and take a bowl of punch. While they are drinking their punch a traveling party arrives, and in the lady of the party the German recognizes a former lady-love, the recollection of whose charms had been obliterated by the loveliness of his wife; but now the old dream comes back. The lady retires to her sitting room and sends her servant for him. Once more he is in the presence, and is sitting beside her who was "the lady of his love;" she confesses to him that her marriage has been unhappy. She has wed a stern, cold nobleman, and her heart returns to the couch of roses which his hands had prepared for her in other days. Meanwhile the husband enters, catches her by the hair and drags her around the room. The German lover madly seizes a knife and plunges it into the heart of the husband. Then comes the shrieks of the infuriated and pursuing crowd. The German seizes a torch and rushes down stairs. Being closely followed, he hurls the torch among the straw in the stable, and flies—flies—ever for life! Across the fields he runs, panting; but suddenly, bells are ringing, confused noises are filling the atmosphere; the whole sky is reddening, as with a final vengeance. The torch has done its work, and all the village of his nativity is in flames. Deeper and deeper into the forest he plunges. At length far off, he comes to the road—a gentleman is passing in his gig. The gentleman stops his horse, descends from the gig, and goes back to look for something he has lost. The opportunity to escape cannot be permitted to pass. The murderer and incendiary mounts the gig, seizes the reins and as the owner returns and attempts to stop him, he drives over him, crushing the body beneath the wheels. At this moment, he recognizes in the man whom he has murdered his own brother. In mute horror he descends, and now comes forward once more the stranger in the scarlet-cloak, and cries out: "Now fall down and worship me!" In agony he falls upon his knees, the cold sweat streaming down his face; confused noises mingle in the atmosphere—jibes and jeers, and taunting laughs; then a low tittering. Suddenly beside him stands his wife, and the little rogues his children. He looks around him; he is in the summer-house. Then he has not committed murder or burned the village, nor driven over the body of his brother—O no! no! and that day his old lady-love comes, sure enough; but she is happily married and can do without him; and his recollections of the past float away like ships that return no more in the great ocean of joy that overspreads the face of his wife; and the stranger with the scarlet cloak is there, no more demoniacal, but a right benevolent gentleman. That is capital—that story of Jean Paul, The Only, where every body lives, and every body is happy; yet it has deep wisdom, for you and for me, my friend! And now let us look at this print which lies upon our table—this exquisite face from the pencil of Raphael, this light of Art, which arose beyond the blue waves of the Mediterranean, and pours its effulgence upon our hearts here in our far Western home.

JANE T. H. CROSS.

LETTER FROM TEXAS.

At the last session of the Texas Conference I was appointed to the Egypt and Wharton circuit, the nearest appointment of which is only 40 miles from my wife's house. But this is nothing for a Methodist itinerant. It is no great sacrifice to be away from one's family twenty-four days out of every month, especially when the voice of God and His Church say, "Go." Our fathers in the ministry would have esteemed this but light work. But as I dislike egotism, I will pass to something else.

Fifteen miles below Columbus, and east of the Colorado, is Eagle Lake. This, as its name imports, is a body of fresh water covering about 5,000 acres, and is supplied by springs that boil up through a bed of gravel and sand at the bottom. It abounds with fish and alligators.

At the eastern extremity of the lake is the present terminus of the Harrisburg and Colorado railway, and within the last six months a thriving village has grown up at this place. In this vicinity are several wealthy and intelligent planters, who are patrons of our missionary operations among the slaves. We have a missionary—Rev. B. A. Kemp—in this field the present year, and we confidently hope that before long we shall have a temple erected to the worship of God, either at the village or in its vicinity.

Travelling down the river fifteen miles farther, we come to Egypt. Egypt in Texas is not a city, town, or village, but a settlement, the central point of which is the residence of Capt. Wm. J. E. Heard, an old Texian, one of the heroes of San Jacinto, and a steward in the Church of Christ. His hospitable mansion has sheltered many a way-worn itinerant in his toilsome pilgrimage. There is a store, post-office and blacksmith shop kept on the captain's premises. On the outside of the store door hangs a board with this inscription on it, "No Whiskey here." Success to all such merchants. At the time of the settling of Austin's first colony, the settlers on "old Caney" cut down and burned off the cane, and with hand-spikes made holes in the ground, dropped corn in and covered it with the foot, and then turned it out to grass. Thus the first crop of corn in Austin's colony was raised without any fence, plow, or hoe. The colonists higher up the river failed to make corn owing to a drought, and therefore they had to go down to buy corn, and how natural it was to call the place Egypt.

My old friend, Capt. Jesse Burnham, who now resides in Burnett county, and who was one of Stephen F. Austin's first 300 colonists, informed me that, for nine months after he settled in Fayette county, he had no bread in his house. He was poor and had but poor health, but he would work one day and hunt game the next, and thus he kept his family from starving. His first bread was brought up on horseback from Egypt, a distance of about 50 miles.

Near Capt. Heard's we have a comfortable little church in which your humble correspondent endeavors to dispense the word of life on two Sundays in each month, in the forenoon to the whites, and to the blacks in the evening. Besides, I preach to the slaves on several plantations in the neighborhood.

Wharton, the seat of justice for Wharton county, is a small town on the east bank of the Colorado river, and twelve miles below Egypt, and sixty miles above Matagorda. Wharton, though but a small town, is environed with perhaps the best body of good land in this or any other State. My mature opinion is, that for the production of cotton "Old Caney" can't be excelled.

We have but a small membership at Wharton, and no church edifice. I preach in the court house on two Sundays in each month; and though our prospects are somewhat discouraging, yet there are some favorable signs, one of which is that harmony prevails between Christians of different denominations, and a bi-weekly prayer-meeting is kept up by the united efforts of Baptists and Methodists. A railroad from Columbia, on the Brazos, to Wharton, is being built, and its friends look forward to its completion with considerable interest and solicitude, believing that all the various enterprises in the country will be promoted by it.

WESLEY SMITH.

March 1st, 1860.

LETTER FROM DR. N. B. POWELL.

Mr. Editor—After listening to your very interesting speech in the recent Conference, in relation to the status of the Advocate, with your avowed wish and determination to make it, not only more edifying and instructive to its numerous readers and patrons, but "fifty per cent better in 1860 than it was in 1859," I felt determined to have my name enrolled upon your list, and hope to be refreshed weekly by the perusal of your graphic and spicy editorials.

I have on my table to-day a new work, a book from which I have learned many strange and highly interesting facts; appreciating it very highly, you will pardon me for calling your attention, and that of your numerous readers, to its perusal; its title is: "The Book and its Story." In its preface the author says, "we are persuaded that its perusal will spread a larger amount of Biblical knowledge than any other work, the value of which cannot be told in gold and silver." In speaking of Egypt, he tells some wonderful things of her ancient structures, which seem to bid defiance to the ravages or destructive tooth of time. In allusion to her pyramids, he says: "Three of these astonishing buildings stand eleven miles west of the Nile; the largest is built of hewn stones, some of them thirty feet long. A French engineer has calculated that the stones of that huge pile, called the 'Great Pyramid,' would suffice to build a wall all round France, nine spans eighteen hundred miles—a wall one foot thick and ten feet high. In the Pyramid of Ghizeh has been found the coffin of the King for whom it was built, King Mycerinus. The lid of the Sarcophagus, more than 4000 years old, is now to be seen in the British Museum. Some suppose Job spoke of these when he referred to 'the men who build desolate places for themselves.'" Read this precious book.

Your friend and brother in Christ Jesus,

N. B. POWELL.

Chunnenuggee, Ala., March 4, 1860.

The Confederation of the Young Men's Christian Associations of North America, will be held in this city next month.

A GREAT FACULTY.

These was one faculty in the mind of St. Paul which is too much overlooked, too little appreciated, and seldom imitated. A wonderful faculty it was, and always fruitful in wonders of speech, and deed, and heroism. And that faculty was—Forgetfulness. "One thing," said the Apostle, "one thing I do, forgetting the things that are behind, I press toward to the mark for the prize." And this forgetting was the secret of his pressing forward. The swift foot hastening onward, the earnest and aspiring soul, the vivid imagination, and the faithful struggle, all were born of this wise forgetfulness.

We prefer to remember. The past is very dear to our hearts. If we have made a mole-hill of gold, if we have learned a few trifles and had a few successes, if we have done some charitable things, and preached a score of marked sermons, thenceforth they occupy the chamber of memory, and rightly called so, since the soul generally sleeps therein. But Paul was a wiser man, a profounder thinker, and he had too much heart to live on his memories. Every day was a new day, with night and shadows darkly and silently hung between him and yesterday. Every day called him to be more of an apostle, more of a hero, more of a saint, more like Jesus. Thus it was that he grew into commanding stature; thus, he rose, and rising, shone over broader spaces, and with a brighter light.

Our manhood soon reaches its limit. We grow awhile, and roots, branches, fruit get to their boundary. If some attain respectability, they are satisfied. Others acquire fame, and they take to the dormitory. One preacher is able to secure a good station, and his soul stops growing; and another makes himself a fair scholar, and thinks that his work is done. Middle life gives a quietus to numbers, and age suspends the conscience of most Christians as to farther toil. Not so Paul; whether Paul the young or Paul the aged, one thing he did and that was to press on. Determined to live, his manhood answered every claim; he continued to grow because he continued to work; he grew inwardly and outwardly; and in the fruits of his life and labor, the ages of the Church have found food and refreshment.

This is just the spirit we need. To forget is a blessed art. But it is hard to learn and hard to practice. We are born to grow ever and forever. No matter what has been done, no matter what heights attained, to stop growing is to die.

EXTRAVAGANT WOMEN.

We have a word to say on the subject of woman's extravagance. It is now a staple topic among our newspapers, and if our women are not reformed in this respect, surely printer's ink will not be to blame.

That extravagance in womanly dress and style of living is fast becoming a national evil, cannot be doubted. But are our women to have all the censure? Is this vice of vanity, of excessive waste of money, to be charged on them alone? So the most of our editors seem to think. But there is another side to this question, and the plain fact is simply this, that men are just as much to blame as women. Men can correct the evil to a large extent, and they will correct it whenever they see the enormous proportions it is destined to assume. Women never do serious harm to society unless our sex uphold them in it. Naturally they are powerfully influenced by us, and all their instincts, no less than the conventional rules of life, prompt them to submit more or less to that public opinion which men create. They are not an independent fraternity, a private parliament, to organize and execute usages and laws for the control of society, nor do they ever attempt it, except in extreme cases of social degeneracy. Constituted as American society is, our women are proverbial for faithfulness to the will of their husbands; our daughters are generally obedient to parental authority; and them so soon as men determine to arrest this folly, it will hang a check.

The fault is mainly with the men. Women dress mostly to please them. There are exceptions, of course, but the vanity of husbands and fathers has quite as much to do with the origin of the extravagance as the vanity of women, and much more to do with its support and increase. If women are freely supplied with money, and then sustained by the opinions of men, nothing is more certain than wasteful expenditure. Now, then, let us take our share of the condemnation; let us reform our own personal tastes and habits, and after a little plain dealing with our own hearts, we shall have moral power enough to restrain this love of show and splendor in our women.

RELIGION IN ITALY.

An American lady writing to one of our papers from Florence, Italy, says: "There were two weeks since no less than four places of worship open here where preaching was allowed in Italian. There was one body calling themselves Methodist Evangelical; they met almost every evening in the week; all took off their hats and remained standing during the prayers, ejaculating reverently the amen at the close with one loud voice, and the meeting was crowded to overflowing. There was another three times a week; and as I heard the clergyman was very eloquent, I asked an Italian lady to take me with her some evening. She did not come, and afterward said it was so crowded that the air became oppressive, ladies had fainted, and it was almost impossible to get them out. At this point the archbishop made such a fuss that the preacher was advised to leave the city for the present, but no order was issued to close the meetings. His friends however persuaded him to go, fearing some personal attack upon him.

WHAT GOOD PERIODICALS MAY DO.

"Show us," says Emerson, "an intelligent family of boys and girls, and we will show you a family where newspapers and periodicals are plentiful. No one who has been without these silent private tutors can know their educating power for good or evil. Have you never thought of the innumerable topics of discussion which they suggest at the breakfast-table, the important public measures with which thus early our children become familiarly acquainted—great philanthropic questions of the day to which unconsciously their attention is awakened, and the general spirit of intelligence which is evoked by these quiet visitors? Anything that makes home pleasant, cheerful, and chatty, thins the haunts of vice and the thousand and one avenues of temptation, and should certainly be regarded, when we consider its influence on the minds of the young, as a great moral and social blessing."

BAD NEWS FROM EUROPE.

By the last steamer, with European advices to Feb. 26th, we learn that an alliance had been formed between Austria and Russia, the latter guaranteeing the former possession of Hungary and Venetia against insurgents and foreign foes. Worse still, France, influenced by this new coalition, takes ground against the annexation of Tuscany to Piedmont, favoring a separate kingdom under the nephew of Victor Emmanuel, admitting, however, the annexation of Parma and Modena. Napoleon's relation to the Pope is unchanged.

FRANKLIN FEMALE COLLEGE.—We were visited last week by Rev. J. E. Douglas, President of Franklin Female College, at Holly Springs, Miss., whom we were glad to meet, and whose institution, we are happy to learn, is in a flourishing condition. Mr. Douglas is an experienced and successful teacher, and the Holly Springs school promises well under him.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

MARCH 14, 1860.

LETTER FROM BALTIMORE.

Mr. Editor: According to a previous arrangement a large Methodist gathering, called a "Methodist re-union," took place on Thursday evening, in the large hall of the Maryland Institute, for the benefit of the "Home of the Friendless," an institution under the charge of the ladies of the different evangelical denominations of our city. It has been reported that about three thousand persons were present; the tickets being fifty cents each, would yield for this benevolent enterprise the sum of fifteen hundred dollars. This meeting was under the superintendence of a committee from thirty Methodist Episcopal Churches and Chapels of Baltimore city. It had been announced in the secular press that among the speakers who were expected to be present was, Bishop Pierce, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and Hon. John McLean, of the U. S. Supreme Court, neither of whom, it was alleged at the meeting, could be present, owing to other engegements. John S. Rerdy, Esq., was chosen President. A large band of instrumental musicians, assisted by a select company of vocal singers from several Methodist choirs, entertained the audience occasionally with some soul-stirring pieces of music. The meeting was opened by prayer from Rev. N. J. H. Morgan. The venerable Rev. Alfred Griffith was the first who addressed the assembly. He referred to the history of Methodism in this country, and to the Baltimore Conference fifty-two years ago—when he commenced travelling as an itinerant preacher. The Baltimore Conference then extended as far as Lake Erie, and down the Ohio river, across to the Blue Ridge mountain, down to the Rapahannock river to the Chesapeake bay. That territory, which was then traveled over by 83 preachers, now has not less than one thousand. Persecution and reproach was then attached to the name of Methodist. The preachers then traveled over circuits five hundred miles anre every four weeks, their annual allowance being eighty dollers. In 1814 he was stationed in Baltimore city, and witnessed with great interest the conflict then going on between the United States and Great Britain. He concluded by noticing the great progress which Methodism had made in this country since tha early period at first alluded to. At the conclusion of this address, the choir and audience sang the beautiful and appropriate hymn commencing with "And are we yet alive." The next speaker was the talented Rev. Henry Biscom Ridgeway, of the High-street station. His speech glowed with living eloquence from beginning to end. His theme was chiefly the social element, as one great cause of Methodist prosperity. He was followed by Revs. B. N. Brown, Henry Slicer, and Dr. Thomas Sewall. Dr. Geo. C. M. Roberts exhibited some relics from the Methodist Historical Society; among which was a box which Bishop Asbury always carried with him; also the Bishop's tea-cannister, in which he carried ten to use in those parts of the country where none could be otherwise obtained. Dr. Roberts took occasion to relate an anecdote connected with the Bishop's tea making. A lady in one of the New England States insisted on making tea for the Bishop herself. Being granted the privilege of doing so, she took the cannister, and emptied the whole contents into a pot of boiling bacon, and brought up the boiled tea leaves with the bacon in the same dish. This anecdote caused great sensation among the audience present. A portrait of Bishop Asbury was also exhibited. It is supposed to be the only one in this country, and was taken in the year 1787. This likeness of the Bishop was accidentally found in the house of a servant, who not knowing its value had it pasted on a fire-board. A letter was read from that aged and venerable man of God, the Rev. Henry Smith, of "Pilgrim's Rest," now ninety years and ten months old, in which he expressed his regret in not being able to be present owing to his very feeble and infirm condition.

On last Sabbath, a new Methodist Episcopal Church, situated on Greenmount Avenue, was dedicated to the worship of God Rev. Drs. A. A. Reese and T. B. Sargeant officiated on the occasion.

Our State Legislature, at Anapolis, recently passed a resolution censuring the Hon. H. Winter Davis, of Md., for having voted for Pennington for Speaker of the House of Representatives. The vote was nearly unanimous—only two voting in the negative. The new Police Bill for Baltimore has also passed both Houses. Our city authorities, however, refuse to co-operate with the Police Commissioners appointed by said Bill. The objection is an constitutional grounds. The matter, consequently, goes before our Superior Court, and from thence to the Court of Appeals for decision before the law can become effective.

The Charter for our city passenger railway is before the Legislature. The grant made last summer by our city council was sold to Philadelphia capitalists, and about sixteen miles of street railway have been finished. The fare according to that grant is five cents, one-fifth to go to purchase a public park. Other parties, responsible Baltimoreans, are applying for a charter to supersede the present, Brock & Company, railway operators, and they propose to complete the city railways for a three cent fare. The matter has not been decided on as yet. Our Legislature is to elect a U. S. Senator; it is thought that the Hon. J. A. Pierce will be re-elected. M.

Baltimore, Feb. 25th, 1860.

REPLY OF THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT TO THE ENCYCLICAL LETTER OF THE POPE.

Sir—You are informed of the encyclical letter which the Pope has addressed to all the patriarchs, bishops and primates of the Catholic Church, and in which his Holiness, explaining from his own point of view the origin and nature of the difficulties presented by the actual condition of the Romagna, exhorts the pastors and the faithful throughout the world to combine all their efforts and their zeal in maintaining and defending the rights of the Holy See over those provinces.

Not doubting that this document will have attracted the serious attention of the Government to which you are accredited, I deem it my duty to inform you of the opinions entertained in regard to it by the Government of His Majesty.

I shall not stop at present to answer the reproaches, more or less marked, which are aimed by the Encyclical letter against the line of conduct followed by the Emperor in respect to the Holy See, in the difficult conjunctures of recent days. History, in its impartiality, will one day decide upon whom rests the responsibility of events—whether upon the Sovereign whose efforts have constantly tended to anticipate them, or upon those who, refusing all concessions and every reform, and taking refuge in an inexplicable inactivity, have left the state of affairs to grow worse, even to that point where evil often becomes irremediable.

What has particularly struck with sad surprise the Government of His Majesty is the forgetfulness which, in a case of so much importance, the Court of Rome exhibits of diplomatic usage, in carrying directly into the field of religion a question which belongs conspicuously to the temporal order. We see, with a sentiment of regret as sincere as it is profound, the Holy Father appeal to the conscience of the clergy and excite the ardor of the faithful upon a subject which can only be profitably discussed between one Government and another.

There is certainly no question of assailing in the slightest degree the spiritual power of the sovereign pontiff, nor the independence which he needs in order to exercise it within the limits of his rights. The question of the Romagna, now as in other epochs, has arisen from political circumstances; it is also under its political aspect that it must be examined, in seeking for the best means of satisfying necessities in which, I repeat, the Pontifical Government would not have found itself fatally involved, if, instead of waiting with improvidence for the situation to develope itself, it had listened to our counsels and seconded our efforts.

No, whatever may be said by the spirit of party, which does not fear to put on the appearance of religious zeal; whatever may be done to make it believe that the interests of the faith are in peril, thank God there is no question between the Government of His Holiness and that of the Emperor but a purely secular one. We can, therefore, discuss it without doing violence to the sentiments of deference and respect that all France honors herself for entertaining towards the common Father of the faithful, and of which His Majesty is always happy to give the first example.

I do not hesitate to say it, Sir, the Court of Rome has not been happily inspired in endeavoring to establish (according to the encyclical letter) a sort of indissoluble connection between two orders of interests which can not be mingled or confounded without danger. In the early ages of the Church, when the tendencies of civilization were theocratic, this confusion was natural and possible; it was easily accepted by every one because it answered to the state of their mission and consciences. It is thus that it was originally one of the elements of the papacy, and aided in the formation and development of her territorial sovereignty.

History, however, being closely questioned, it would be clearly seen that it was not entirely in invoking motives borrowed from the divine mission, and in demanding in sort in the name of heaven, that the Papacy—sometimes with the aid of the population itself, sometimes by that of foreign sovereigns—succeeded in putting itself in possession of a part of Italy. It must be proclaimed for the honor of the Holy See, that the Popes found in their wisdom, their intelligence, their love of order and justice—in a word, in the better government that they offered to the people in those times of violence and of anarchy—one of the essential elements of their political authority.

I shall not insist upon this point of view, fearing if I dwell upon it now, that it might be thought I seek allusion to passing events in the contrast, and wish to borrow from the past a lesson applicable to the present time. Nothing is further from my thoughts. I shall, however, be permitted to say, that in our eyes, in consequence of a progress which the Government of the Emperor can only consider as a reciprocal benefit acquired for modern society, the separation has been accomplished between the two dominins, that of religions order on the one hand and civil order on the other. "The Holy See has not then put itself less in disagreement with the general spirit of the epoch, than with international law, in appealing to conscience, in the name of the, faith, on behalf of an interest which, rightly understood, is simply temporal.

I add that this attempt is far from having in its support the authority and precedents of history. In fact, it is not the first time that within a period not far removed from our own the situation of the Romagna and its possessions have been the subject of a political debate. In 1797, after events of which he must, as Sovereign, accept the responsibility, the Pope ceded his provinces to France by the treaty of Tolentino, at the same time that he renounced the ancient rights of the Holy See to the territory of Avignon; and, however lively might be his regret for the diminution of his domains, Pius VI undoubtedly believed that he could subscribe to this agreement without failing in his duties as Sovereign Pontiff and guardian of the Faith. The two contracting parties were not the only ones to see in this transaction only a temporal fact having no bearing what ever on religion.

The preliminaries signed at Leoben, two months later, between France and Austria, attest that Vienna did not differ from France on this subject. After having entertained during the war great relations with the Court of Rome, she lent herself nevertheless to a combination which, assigning to her a part of the Venitian States, indemnified this Republic by transfering to her the possession of the three Legations of the Romagna, of Ferrara, and of Bologna. The treaties of Campo Formio and of Luneville still further consecrated under another form the separation of these provinces, and in the different arrangements which were then agreed upon, it was never supposed that the Governments which took part in them were meddling with the prerogatives of the Holy See in reference to its spiritual power and religious interests.

If there is a disposition to examine other points of coincidence in history, who does not remember that, at the beginning of this century, certain ecclesiastical territories, such as the Bishop of Salzburg, the provostship of Berchtesgarden, the bishoprics of Trent, of Brixen and of Eichstadt, were used, upon the demand of Austria, to indemnify the dispossessed Archdukes in Italy? In respect to these territories, as well as the Legations and the Electorate of Mayence, no indemnity was recognized between the temporal right of the possessor and the interest of religion; the ecclesiastical character of the sovereigns was no obstacle to the arrangements which circumstances rendered necessary.

The participation of the Court of Vienna in these various transactions, forbids the supposition that new principles are applied by the action of France. Nothing proves this more clearly than what took place some years later. Pope Pius VII returned to Rome and resumed the exercise of his temporal power when, by a secret treaty signed at Naples, Jan. 11, 1814; the Emperor Francis, with the view of attaching the King Joachim to the cause of the European coalition, and agreed, "for the purpose of acquiring a strong military frontier in accordance with the political necessities of the two powers, to secure to him an accession calculated upon the footing of 400,000 souls, to encroach upon the Roman States, and to use his good offices to cause this concession to be approved and sanctioned by the Holy Father."

So freely admitted at that time was this principle of dividing the Legations and even the Marches between the kingdoms of Naples and Austria, and so independent of all special circumstances was its application regarded, that the next year the King of the two Sicilies, reseated at Naples upon his throne, endeavored to maintain for his own profit the clause we have just cited.

Austria, for her part, was more fortunate in her pretensions, since she preserved, at the expense of the Holy See, a part of the Legation of Ferara, upon the left bank of the Po—a territory which had never belonged to the State of Venice. The Pope protested in vain against this arrangement, just as he protested against the non-restoration of the County of Avignon and the territory of Parma to the Holy See. His reclamations, which he based at once upon his ancient rights and upon considerations of advantage to the Church, were not admitted by the Powers; and we shall not be contradicted by the documents relating to the negotiations of 1815, if we add that the Romagna at that time came very near being separated from the Pontifical States. More than one arrangement, conceived with this object, was discussed in the Congress of Vienna, and it is known that Prussia, for instance, proposed to dispose of the Legations in favor of the King of Saxony, who would have received them as compensation: "it was not without difficulty that the Pope succeeded in preserving them, and caused the right which he invoked to prevail against the opinion, so worthy of notice, adopted by the plenipotentiaries, that the legations had fallen, by right of conquest, to the disposal of the allies. Nevertheless, the discussion, in regard to the Roman States, was constantly conducted, even by the Catholic powers, upon the basis of considerations exclusively temporal.

Here, Sir, is the only inference which I wish to draw from the examples I have quoted, which show to what an extent the doctrine embodied in the last Encyclical letter, if it conforms to the ideas of the Court of Rome to day, is found to be in direct contradiction with the most positive principles of politics. I have no intention of resorting to argument against the recognized rights of the Holy See, but I have endeavored to furnish you the means of correcting, in your vicinity, the erroneous impressions, which cause an opinion put forth upon a purely temporal question to be regarded as an assault upon the indefeasible and sacred rights of the Catholic Church.

(Signed) Thouvenel.

THE CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS OF NEW ORLEANS.

The joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives has submitted to the Assembly a report upon the condition of the various charitable institutions of the State, and from this document we condense the following information: The Orphans' Home, which was established in New Orleans in consequence of the epidemic of 1853, has one hundred and eleven inmates, and is maintained by private charity and the assistance granted by the State. It is reported on as well managed, and is free from debt.

St. Mary's Catholic Orphan Boys' Asylum, Third District, has three hundred and four inmates, and is admirably well managed. The annual expense of this asylum is about $19,000; the receipts are $4500 from rents of property donated by Dr. Mercer and the late S. Henderson, leaving a deficiency of $14,500 to be supplied by the bounty of the State, the city and private charity, fairs, concerts, etc. This establishment has recently purchased a tract of two hundred acres for $24,000, on which they propose to establish a model farm.

The New Orleans Female Orphan Asylum, Camp street, has three hundred and twenty orphans in charge. At the age of twelve the inmates are transferred to the St. Elizabeth House of Industry, to be instructed in needlework, housewifery, etc. The number of inmates has become so large that it has been found necessary to send a portion of them to another building in charge of some of the sisters, and also to establish an infant branch. The whole institution is presided over by Sister Regis and her fifteen sisters, and is admirably managed. It owes $20,000, and its means of support are what the Legislature and city grant, the surplus of their Church income, private charity, a vegetable garden, and $150 for house rent, a bequest of one of the sisters.

The House of the Good Shepherd was established in the month of February, 1859, and sixty-four inmates have been admitted. It is designed to reclaim the erring daughters of dissipation and licentiousness, and its workings will doubtless be as satisfactory as those of like institutions elsewhere. It is presided over by Sister Mary, of St. Theresa, a lady of fine education and every way adapted to that responsible situation, and deserves the favorable attention of the Legislature.

The Asylum for Jewish Widows and Orphans was established in 1853, after the epidemic. It has sixty-five inmates, adults and children of both sexes. It is well managed. The city appropriated $650 to its support, and there are two hundred and sixty annual subscribers who pay $12 each. The remainder is made up by private charity and such aid as the State may grant.

The St. Joseph German Catholic Orphan Asylum, Fourth District, has one hundred and thirty-five orphan inmates. It is wisely and carefully conducted. The children are well instructed, and the girls are learned trades, and can remain as long as they desire, but the boys leave at the age of fourteen. The city gives fourteen dollars for every child, and the butchers give meat every day. It has no other support but this and what is received from the State and private charity.

The St. Elizabeth House of Industry has one hundred and ten female orphans between between twelve and eighteen years of age. It is presided over by Sister Angelica, and was established in 1855 as a counterpart of the Camp street Asylum. The inmates of the latter are transferred to this at the age of twelve years, and are learned trades, needlework and housewifery. They can leave or remain at the age of eighteen years. It was designed that the institution should be self-sustaining, and, doubtless, will be, when freed from debt incurred in erecting a suitable building. The Superior asks nothing for support, but desires State aid to get rid of its debt of $17,000. The institution lost $4,600 worth by fire the past winter.

The Industrial School of the Third District is presided over by Sister Althouse. It contains seventy orphan girls, who are educated and taught to sew, cook and do all household work. It has to rely on charity alone to support it, as it has no income, and never received any aid from the State. The Society for the Relief of Orphan boys, Fourth District, was chartered in 1829. It has sixty-seven inmates, and possesses property of such value that if sold and the money put at interest the income would be ample to sustain it. Ladies of Providence, Third District, has ninety-two inmates, widows, children, and infirm old men. In former years the State assisted it, but for several years has failed to give anything. It is obliged to refuse applicants for admission from utter inability to support them.

St. Anna's Asylum for destitute widows and children has thirty-one widows and twenty-nine children as inmates. It was established in 1853 by Dr. W. N. Mercer, who purchased the ground and erected the building, at an expense of $50,000. It was named St. Anna in memory of his only daughter who had died previously—a noble monument. The Benevolent Association of the Sons of Louisiana is classed by the committee among the Charitable Institutions of New Orleans, receiving its incorporation in 1856 with the sole object of aiding and assisting the poor and the sick. It has done and is doing much good in relieving the distressed, and is a most worthy association, composed alike of native and adopted citizens.

That admirable institution, the Charity Hospital, commenced its career as a private hospital and was continued so from 1759 to 1811, when it was given to the city of New Orleans. In 1830 it became a State institution, and has so remained since. From 1830 to 1840 it was supported by a tax derived from licensed gambling houses, which was ample. In 1845 the Legislature levied a tax of $2 50 per head on all emigrants landing from foreign vessels at this port. This income was large and so continued for a time, but from $75,000 collected in 1851 it has dwindled down to $11,000 in 1859. In consequence of the diminution of its revenue, it is becoming more and more a burden to the State Treasury every year, yet it is an institution of incalculable necessity and must not be allowed to want. Considerable repairs to the main and out-buildings are necessary this year, and one half the cost of paving the square of Common street in front of the building, will have to be paid by the Board of Administrators. The claims of the Hospital upon the Legislature stand first among benevolent institutions. Over twelve thousand patients have been received during the past year.—Crescent.

THE PAPAL SOVEREIGNTY.

Another meeting of the friends of Papacy in the United States has been held in Cincinnati, at which it was resolved that, as Catholics, they hold it to be essential to the independence and dignity of the Pope that he should be a temporal Prince and have "subjects." They are, therefore, for supporting him in his demand, that no part of his present dominion should ever be alienated, that as a sovereign of Italy he must be exempted from all the conditions by which other sovereigns hold their crowns, and be monarch in spite of complaining subjects, by the aid, if he require it, of foreign arms to repress the risings of the discontented.

The position does not justify the deductions. The spiritual head of a communion of Christians, numbering so many millions, which live under so many different governments, in all parts of the world, may be rationally supposed to need a place for his residence, where there is no superior civil authority, and where he may be approached freely through ports and avenues of his own, from every foreign part. That great Catholic body have a full right to hold to this opinion, and to counsel and act together for the purpose of securing that much personal freedom and political independence to the Pontiff, whom their faith teaches them to reverence as the infallible exponent on earth of Divine Truth. The multitudes of all nations who deny this mission, cannot on their own principles deny to its followers the right to provide, within their own body, for such a temporal state and power for the Pope, as will be ample for these purposes. For six hundred years Rome has been consecrated in the recognition of Catholics as the central seat of the Papacy, and for centuries still older portions of Italy have belonged to the Popes in temporal sovereignty.

But there is nothing in history or in the plea of a Catholic necessity for Papal sovereignty that makes it an indispensable deduction from these concessions that the seat of the temporal dominion of the Popes must be at Rome, or that his dominions shall be exactly those which he now claims—subject to no permissible reduction in territory or in his civil powers over them. The Pope has not always had a temporal dominion in Rome, nor always a spiritual dominion there. The States of the Church have grown up by slow degrees, like the territorial dominions of other sovereigns, and have had their periods of increase and of diminution, in the fluctuations of temporal politics, like other sovereignties. The Popes have made wars and shared in the fortunes of war. They have acquired territories by gift, by conquest, and by purchase; and have lost them by arms, as other belligerent powers have. The fact that no part of the territorial possessions of the Sovereign Pontiff can ever be discovered from the rest, has never obtained, in the history of Italy, and is contradicted by the many wars between the Papal authorities and the Catholic sovereigns, in which territory has been won and lost. It would prove indeed too much, for the doctrine would require that all which has ever submitted to the authority of the Pope must return to that allegiance as perpetually inalienable—and to be carried out in full, would require still further that the temporalities, which are never to decrease, should be increased to an indefinite extent, if the temporal policy and political exigencies of the Roman States should call for an accession of territory and power in order to make it able to resist by force any attack whatever that might be apprehended from any secular empires—and to be able finally, by the force of arms, to protect itself against all possible attack from any powers or combination of powers whatever. To exclude this conclusion, it is necessary to admit that the question of the amount of territory and degree of independence, which ought to be assured to the Pope by the Catholic body, is one open to free discussion, to be entertained as any other civil question between States. In this light, it is regarded among Catholics themselves, in Europe, where a large number of Catholics do not admit that there is no liberty to question the right or the expediency of remodelling the territorial possessions, and the internal administration of the States of the Church. It is so regarded by many Catholics, and all who are not Catholics, in the United States.—Picayune.

DOMESTIC.

Extensive Embezzlement of Post-Office Certificates.

Washington, March 10.—Mr. C. S. Baylugton, appointed by Mr. W. Forney as clerk in the stationery room of the House, obtained from a confidential friend nearly $200,000 in transferable post office certificates. This being accomplished, he proceeded to New York, where he sold these certificates for eighty cents on a dollar. He is supposed to have taken his departure for Europe. The Government will lose nothing by him. At the time he obtained this amount he had not as yet entered upon the duties of his office.

FOREIGN.

Extension of the French Empire.

The most important news by the steamship Africa is the statement made by Lord Granville, in the House of Lords, on the 17th ult., that a communication had been received from the French Government to the effect that in the event Central Italy was annexed to Sardinia, the frontier of France would not be deemed secure without the possession of Savoy and the county of Nice. Substantially the same statement was made in the Commons by Lord John Russell, while the Morning Post, Lord Palmerston's peculiar organ, holds the following language:

This question no longer adds to the complications of Europe. It arises out of circumstances not within the control of France. The Emperor Napoleon had foreseen and urged a confederation in Italy. The course of events pointed in the direction of an Italian Kingdom. In such an event it was obvious that great inconvenience would arise from the French slopes of the Alps being a portion of that kingdom. Hence the suggestion for the cession of Savoy.

The French Government has now, however, expressed its willingness to defer to the decision that may be arrived at by the Great Powers of Europe on the question; and all fear of collision may therefore be considered as definitively obviated.

The extension of the French Empire to the Italian Alps, therefore, may be considered a fait accompli.

Russia and America.

The Russian news by the Africa, includes the following interesting items:

The telegraphic project of an American to unite Europe with America across the whole of Asia to America, via Behring's Straits, is now before the Russian Government, and it is thought will be adjusted soon. The engineers who have had charge of the survey of the route from Kuzan to the Amoor, will be here soon with their report.

The Russian Treaty with China has not been ratified. The Amoor question bothers the Chinese; but the Russians have great guns there now, and steam—that settles the question.

The Russian Government will pursue the same course in her negotiations with China that the United States has; in fact, act in concert. The mission still holds on in Pekin to see what will turn up out of the English French invasion.

The Russian winter is very mild, and consequently we have no sunshine or moonlight. The weather has been dark and cloudy.

The acknowledged public debt of Russia is 1,500,000,000 of silver roubles—75 cents to the rouble. 600,000,000 of this is in the bank paper notes of the Government in circulation, and at ten per cent. discount for gold.

Contemplated Movements at Rome.

The Roman correspondence of the Brussels Nort, the Russian organ in Europe, writes: Violent measures are said to be in contemplation here among the highest personages in the government. The first would be the excommunication of the King of Sardinia and of the sovereigns who may assist him; next, the placing their kingdoms under interdict; then, the convocation by the Pope of a general council to examine the question whether or not the fall of the temporal power of the Pope may not be ascribed to the imprudent concessions made by the Holy See in concordats, and whether those concessions ought not to be retracted as contrary to the principles of the church.

Hundred Millions of Goods on Exhibition.

A letter from St. Petersburg has the following on the late great fair of Novorgoul: The total amount of merchandize brought to the fair it estimated at 105 millions of roubles (4 fr. each); the capital representing the exchange of merchandize amounted to 200 millions. In addition to merchants from every country in Europe, there were present dealers from Persia, Arabeala, Georgia, Bonkhara Khiva, &c.; who brought goods for sale to the amount of four millions. The total value of European goods and those from the colonies was 10,904,800 roubles, of which sales were effected for the sum of 9,365,000 roubles. The amount of Russian merchandize was 76,713,000 roubles, the sales only being for 3,541,000. The value of the tea brought to the fair was 8,976,000 roubles, but the sales only amounted to 130,000.

Collision at Sea—Loss of Forty Lives.

St. Johns, N. F., March 10.—The Nova Scotian brings intelligence that the coast of England had been visited with another severe gale, which had done considerable damage to shipping. The steamer Odiome, a regular passenger packet running between Dublin and London, while on her regular trip from London came in collision with the schooner Herdine, during the gale, making almost a complete wreck of the steamer, and so disabling her that she went down in twenty minutes after the accident happened.

The disaster occurred on the 19th ult. The steamer had a large number of passengers aboard, some 40 or 50 of whom are supposed to be killed or drowned.

Plot to Assassinate Napoleon.

A report has been currently circulated from Paris that another plot has been discovered against the life of the Emperor Napoleon, and that many are secretly being arrested on suspicion of being engaged in it.

The Moorish War.

A dispatch from Madrid announces that the Spanish army in Morocco have gained another victory over the Moors. The Spanish army were encamped before the town of Tangier, when the Moorish garrison made a spirited sally in large force, with a view of driving the Spanish from their position, but were repulsed with heavy loss. The Spanish loss in the engagement was also very severe, they having sustained a loss of 333 killed, 24 missing, and 146 wounded.

Precarious State of Italy.

The latest advices from Turin are to the effect that King Victor Emanuel is about to sanction an address to the Sicilians, who are being so cruelly persecuted, encouraging them to oppose, by force, the unjust oppression under which they suffer.

The fact that the greatest activity prevails in all departments of the Piedmontese army and navy, gives confidence to the central and southern Italian people that Victor Emanuel is about to actively co-operate in the amelioration of their condition.—In consequence of these indications much excitement prevails in Southern Italy, and large numbers are anxious to volunteer in the noble struggle to free their unhappy country from its oppressors.

Southern Pacific Railroad.—A letter from Fort Buchanan, Arizona, of the 17th ult., says: The new life infused into the Southern Pacific railroad (through Texas) gives reason to hope for its completion to El Paso. If this is effected, our California friends may rest assured that the first railroad across the continent will touch the ocean at some other point than San Francisco. The distance, an almost level country to salt water, is only six hundred miles, while to San Francisco it is thirteen hundred. The route from El Paso hither has to pass through some rough country, but here to Banyinas the country is almost a perfect level, requiring but little grading and no bridging. Stranger things might happen than that this road should be extended through to the Gulf in less than five years. The right of way can easily be obtained, and the public land of Sonora appropriated to aid the enterprise.

MARRIAGES.

"It is not good for man to be alone."

By Bishop Kavanaugh, March 6th, 1860, at the residence of Mr. John Gardiner, Mobile, Ala., Rev. J. M. Bigand, of the Alabama Conference, to Miss Sarah E. Pennington, of Mobile, late of Choctaw Co., Ala.

On 24th January, 1860, by Rev. P. E. Green, Mr. John M. Spruttiff, of Fayette, to Miss Elizabeth Moore, of Brookhaven, Miss.

On the 2nd February, 1860, by Rev. P. E. Green, Mr. A. J. Smith, of South Carolina, to Miss Elizabeth Thomas, of Brookhaven, Miss.

On the 6th March, 1860, by Rev. P. E. Green, Mr. Frank Heisenhoof, of New Orleans, to Mrs. S. H. Selph, of Lawrence County, Miss.

On the 21st January, 1860, at the residence of the bride's father, in Tuscaloosa, Ala., by Rev. James H. Cottrell, Mr. H. Lewis, of Montevallo, Ala., to Miss Rose Garland, eldest daughter of L. C. Garland, L. L. D., President of the State University.

On the 22nd February, 1860, at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. J. J. Latham, Mr. Joseph Booth to Miss Rebecca Mosley, all of Lowndes County, Ala.

On the 21st February, 1860, at the residence of Mr. Joseph Bates, by Rev. James Walton, Mr. William H. Manrrer to Miss Bettie Mitchell, all of Holmes County, Miss.

On the first of March, at the residence of Mr. Jesse Scruggs, by Rev. J. P. Jones, Mr. John E. Crockett, and Miss Sarah M. Slater, both of Clarke county, Alabama.

RECEIPTS, BY THE POST-OFFICE,

From March 6th to March 13th, 1860.

A—T S Abernathy, jun., $2.
B—J Bancroft, $2; F H Baldwin, $10; H D Berry, $5; G W Brown, $2; J Hayes, $2.
C—R N Croswell, $3.
D—W P Dickinson, $15; J G Deskin, $10; H H Bantzler, $2 00 D Duncan, $10; J F Dickinson, $1.
E—J W Ellis, $5.
F—G Feant, $2; T M Featherston, $5; T Florence, $5.
G—J N Glover, $3.
H—H A M Henderson, $1; H J Hunter, $2.
J—J R Johns, $1 50; R J Jones, jun., $2; A H Jones, $2.
K—W Klock, $5.
L—J R Lewis, $4.
M—W P Miller, $3; J L M'Voy, $2; G J M'Kenzie, $2; N. M'Millan, $5; J J Millsaps, $25; W M Motley, $5.
N—J Nicholson, $5;
P—U B Phillips, $3; N H Powell, $2.
R—W C Robinson, $2.
S—T F Smothers, $3; J F Scurlock, $5.
T—W R Talley, $5.
W—P J Walker, $5; B E Watkins, $2; P Williams, $3 50; J O Woodman, $5.
Y—N B Young, $8.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

ADVERTISING IN THE ADVOCATE.

The business public are slowly learning that the Advocate is the Great Advertising Paper of the South and West. Advertisements in it are more valuable than in any half dozen other papers.

1.—It has the largest circulation west of Charleston, and South of Cincinnati; larger than any other two weeklies in New Orleans, and is increasing rapidly—will, in a few years double its present circulation.

2.—Of medium size, and not crowded with advertisements, an advertisement is not lost in it, but can be easily found.

3.—In our "Editorial Notices," which we give to every advertisement, we specify the page and column on which an advertisement may be found. We seek to make every advertisement valuable to the advertiser and to the paper.

4.—The circulation is spread out over Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, principally; Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas, partially.

5.—It is the only weekly of large and widely spread circulation in the great and growing metropolis of the South.

Accounts.—They are now going out, both to preachers and subscribers.

OUR OWN NOTICES.

TAKE TWO.—We frequently hear it said, or have it written to us, "I wish to take your paper, but I am already taking the ——— Advocate, and I should regret to give up an old friend." Of course you should not. But who, in this rich and prosperous country, cannot afford to take two good papers? That practice is a quarter century behind the times. Sustain your own paper by all means; but every body needs a good paper from New Orleans, whatever else they may have. Send for the New Orleans Advocate.

A CITY EXAMPLE. A brother who is a clerk in one of the largest dry goods establishments in the city, and superintendent of a Sunday-school, and who has no leisure at all, is constantly bringing us the names and money of new subscribers to the Advocate. "Go thou and do likewise."

ADVERTISING.—By advertising, this paper was largely supported in the days of its weakness. By advertising it is to be made strong enough to enlarge. Many of our friends do us injustice here. We sometimes receive a long advertisement of a Church interest, expected to be inserted gratis, when, for the same space, we are getting from other people $250 a year. This is a fact. Our advertising columns are worth to us from $600 to $1000 a year.

Patronizing Conference interests, like quarterly meeting notices, hereafter will be advertised, three insertions at one time, and noticed editorially, gratis, provided the advertisements are not more than three squares. Otherwise, the regular rates will be charged, in advance at that. Those now owing, must pay up before advertising at all.

BRETHREN AND FRIENDS IN NEW ORLEANS, the New Orleans Christian Advocate is published in your own city You call that city the "Commercial Metropolis of the South." Ought not your paper, circulating as widely as your trade, to have a large circulation at home? Our brethren and friends abroad, who know and esteem those of you engaged in business say, "I suppose you have a fine circulation and hearty support in New Orleans!" You see what is expected of you. Is it not a just expectation? The Advocate ought to have ten times its present circulation in New Orleans. Will not every present subscriber recommend others to take it? They will do so, I you ask them.

OUR CITIES AND TOWN AND VILLAGES. Have you ever thought of the number of cities, towns, and villages within the bounds of the circulation of the Advocate? They are counted by hundreds. How easy it would be for the pastor, the local preachers, and the members and friends, to greatly enlarge, if not double our list in each place! Try it, and let me know the result. Try it now, in the beginning of 1860.

IF YOU WANT PARSONAGES, circulate the Advocate. It is on that side.

DO YOU WISH A LARGE MISSIONARY COLLECTION? Get all the people to take the Advocate, and by the time you are ready for the collection, the people will be prepared.

HOW TO PROMOTE A REVIVAL? Nothing is better calculated to do it than general circulation of the Advocate among the people. Besides its general religious reading, its revival intelligence is inspiring.

A LITERARY TASTE.—All your children should acquire it It is a charm and a joy. The Advocate is a literary as well as religious paper. It is worth more than thousands of books now called popular literature.

CONFERENCE AGENTS. How much these could do for the Advocate! Yet how little they do! And yet how much they require the Advocate to do for them! Let us make a "reciprocity treaty."

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.—They are coming in at the rate of nearly a hundred a week. Cannot each preacher send one each week. Let the laity—ladies and gentlemen—join in the work.

COMMERCIAL.

Monday Evening, March 12th, 1860.

We condense the following statement from the New Orleans Price Current of the 10th instant:—

The active movement in our leading staple, Cotton, has been checked by the delay in the arrival of later advices from Europe and operations latterly have been of a moderate character. In Sugar and Molasses a fair amount of business has been done, with some fluctuation in the rates, which have largely declined for the latter. In Tobacco there has been some movement, but mostly conducted very privately. In Western Produce the transactions have been to a moderate extent with an easier market for the principal articles.

COTTON.—With respect to prices, we have to remark that for the lower grades, and for mixed lots averaging about Low Middling to Middling the market has been in favor of buyers, while clean Middling and the better grades, which are very scarce, have been firm at our outside figures. We, however make no further change in our quotations.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 1,850,625 bales, against 1,457,027 bales to same date last year, and the increase of the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 691,120 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 628,525 bales to Great Britain, and of 114,351 to France, while to other foreign ports there is a decrease of 64,661 bales.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	5 @ 6½	Good Middling.....	11¾@12
Ordinary.....	7¼@ 7¾	Middling Fair.....	12¼@12¾
Good Ordinary.....	8¾@ 8¾	Fair.....	—@—
Low Middling.....	9¾@10	Good Fair.....	—@—
Middling	10¾@11	Good and Fine.....	—@—

SUGAR.—The sales of the week amount to 7000 hhds. We quote for Inferior and Refining 3 to 4¼; Common to Good Common 5 to 6; Fair to Fully Fair 6¼ to 7; Prime to Choice 7¼ to 8; Centrifugal and Clarified 5¾ to 9 cents per pound. The above quotations apply to round lots, but small orders of 5 hhds and under, could not be filled without paying a further advance of ¼ to ½c per pound.

MOLASSES.—Total receipts of the week 10,000 barrels. The prices obtained during the week were: Inferior to Fair, 25 to 33 cents per gallon; and Prime to Choice, 34 to 35 cents; half barrels, 28 to 36 cents per gallon.

FLOUR.—About 12,000 bbls have been sold during the past week, at from $6 40 to $6 55 for superfine, $6 25 to 7 00 for ordinary to good extra, and $6 75 to $7 50 per bbl. for choice extra brands.

GRAIN.—The receipts of Corn continue light. About 47,000 sacks have been sold at from $0 63 to 0 70 for ordinary, and $0 85 for good white. Oats have been in moderate request at $1 70 to $1 75 for ordinary to choice lots. Wheat sells at $1 15 per bushel for prime red.

PORK.—The principal sales reported through the week were at $17 75 to $18 75 per bbl. for Mess.

BEEF.—We quote Prime Mess at $14 00 per bbl. for extra brands.

BACON.—Shoulders 8 to 8½; Ribbed Sides 10 to 10½; Clear Sides 11 to 11½; Sugar-cured Hams 12 to 12½ cents per pound.

LARD.—We quote 10½ to 10¾c for prime to choice primo, in tes., and 11¼ to 11¾c. for kegs.

BUTTER.—Western generally selling at 12 to 10 cents per pound, according to quality; and Cheese 11 to 11¾c.

BAGGING AND BALE ROPE.—We quote Kentucky Bagging at 13½ to 14 cents per yard; India Bagging, 12½ to 13¼c; Bale Rope, hand spun, 7¾c to 8c, and machine made, 8¼ to 9 cents per pound.

GUNNY BAGS—Limited parcels sell at 10 cents for light and 10½ to 11c. to heavy and extra heavy bags.

COFFEE.—We quote fair at 11¾ to 13, and prime at 13¼c. per pound.

NAVAL STORES.—A good demand for Spirits Turpentine, mostly on speculation. Sales of some 600 bbls at 45 to 46. Latterly holders have been asking 47½ to 50c per gallon, the market closing at the outside rate. Of Rosin some 3000 bbls have sold at $1 55 to $1 60 for Common and No 2, and $1 72 to $2 per bbl of 280 pounds for Low No. 1. The finer qualities are scarce and in request. Tar dull and nominal. Stock of same 5000 bbls on hand.

LIVE-STOCK.—Beef Cattle—Western, 7 to 9¼c. per lb. net; Texas—ordinary to fair $15 to 16, and choice $18 to 35 per head.

Hogs, selling at 9 to 10c. per pound net.

PINFEATHERS.—NO. II.

The second character we propose to examine as being a pinfeather in the wings of Christianity, we will introduce to you as Mr. B. Mr. B. is an honorable, moral gentleman, always about when some noble deed is to be performed by the community in which he lives. He is, moreover, a man of an amiable disposition of mind, courteous and kind in his manners, and charitable almost to a fault for a man of his means. He has always been a friend to Christianity, a believer in its sublime doctrines, and a supporter of all its institutions; but he has never yet sought a change of heart, or united himself in church relationship with the people of God. However, his wife has, perhaps, been a member of our church for a number of years. And, believe me, Mr. Editor, Mr. B. would feel himself insulted, nay, outraged, if he were to get a hint that, after all, we were about to write him down a pinfeather in the wings of Christianity; and would, perhaps, throw down your paper in disgust for suffering his character slandered to such an extent. Nevertheless, it is true. But you must keep it closely, else it may come to his ears, and mischief be done.

The fact is, though Mr. B. believes himself to be a true friend to Christianity, he is standing in its gate, and will not enter in himself, nor suffer such as would to do so. And while he has manifested an outward friendship for Christianity, which has no doubt been sincere in its professions, he has materially hindered its progress by the position he has taken. He has said by that position, that Christianity is not to be admired and treated with outward friendship; all his life has gone to say, "this rock will not do for me to fix my hopes of eternal salvation upon." Meanwhile, Satan has set him forth as a worthy example—though all unconscious to himself—and successfully tempted many, who would have been shocked at an example more glaringly wicked, to follow him.

Mr. B., while urged to throw his example and influence on the side of the Church, pleads that he has very little of either; this he probably does not believe, but it is a genteel way he has of repelling the demands of Christianity. Could he open his spiritual eyes and see the numbers he has in leading strings, as a master-workman for Satan, he would tremble to the centre of his composed and placid nature. He would feel that he was hindering the onward march of Christianity; that in pretending to be its friend, he has placed himself as a pin-feather in its wings, to be borne along as a cumbrous weight.

Again, he is so fearful of getting into the way, that he is afraid to attach himself to the Church, lest he should seem to be a hypocrite, or as Mr. A.; and he would rather remain unconnected with the Church, lead a quiet, moral, unpretending life, than be a hypocrite, or even as Mr. A. What a specious argument, as though a man to be religious had to be a hypocrite, or as Mr. A.! No wonder he has not been converted to Christianity, when we find he has set such an estimate upon its character as is exhibited in the lives of the hypocrites and the deceived. Let him see this, and feel himself a pinfeather in the wings of Christianity.

But, Mr. B., is it not true that the way of the transgressor is hard? Then, the very means by which you have been trying to keep off of the path of hypocrisy, have thrown you more surely upon it. While that inward conflict of strife between two worlds was going on in your soul, you held out colors of peace to the Church and world, and sat calmly amidst the terrific storm that threatened to bury you beneath its ruins. Now, to all this is there no dissembling? Is it not downright hypocrisy?

Mr. B., the only difference between yourself and the hypocrite in the Church is, that you act your part on one side of the question, while he acts his on the other; and we leave you to prove which of the two positions is the most erroneous. In all this have you not planted yourself as a fatal pin-feather in the wings of Christianity, as they spread abroad to bring the news of peace and joy to the sorrowing children of earth's woe blessings.

And now, if Mr. B. is convinced of his [illegible] as to be a true friend to Christianity, the position, and wishable course, and immediately, let him take the only position, God, and never rest until he finally attach himself to the Church of Jesus Christ, and rest until he rests a pardoned sinner in the embrace of his loved Redeemer.

It is a fact self evident to our natures, that all men in the right use of their reason are seeking happiness, and finding none, out of Christ, in the wide range of the world. Now suppose that every member of the Church lived up to all their high privileges, and not only professed, but lived lives of holy joy, and every friend of Christianity would place themselves under its hallowing influence, and testify experimentally that the been is found in the religion of Jesus, what would be the effect on the world? What a rush would be made for the temples of God! Could all these with earnest solicitude, that feel as well as speak, cry out, "Ho, every one that thirsts, come ye to the waters," the earth would tremble beneath the tread of its inhabitants as they pressed on to drink from this well of life, or to sit down at the marriage feast of the lamb. But, alas, how different! instead of this onward march to God, the world bears us with a cold, careless concern. Why is this? It is found, perhaps, in this very thing: the world sees that the friends and professors of Christianity are not satisfied, that there is in them a great lack of spiritual life, that the salvation they recommend to others has not produced the desired effect in themselves; and they teach the world this lesson, by the lives they live, by seeking their happiness from the same sources it derives its pleasures from, and if very readily concludes that the pleasures of Christianity are inferior to those of the world, else its friends would be content with what it furnishes them.

Let us convince the world that there is a true germ of happiness in Christianity, that springs up into eternal life; and let us do this by seeking a constant witness of the Spirit that we are born again, that the life we live, we live by faith of the Son of God. Let us show forth a holy Church, full of vital piety, full of comforts divine, full of soul stirring religion, and be assured it will interest the world, and many will flee to take refuge beneath its balmy wings. May we be satisfied with the comforts of our holy religion, and, being satisfied, let us no longer go to the world, but invite those of it to come to us, and find joys substantial and true!

METHODIST.

Children's Column.

NO BIBLE PICTURE THIS WEEK.

When we parted last week, we said, "good bye till next week." Now, little readers, good morning. Hope you are all alive, well, and happy. We are sorry to tell you that we have no "BIBLE PICTURE" this week. What is the reason? Well, the sun is certain to rise and set, and the night and morning are certain to come. They depend upon God, and he never "tires down," nor goes to sleep. But the Editor is a man, and like all other human beings, gets tired, wears out, has to rest, and has to sleep. Then, also, he has little children, and they get sick sometimes, and he has to attend to them. Then, again, he sometimes has a great deal of company, and he is so glad to see them that he stops a little while from his work, and gets behind, and the time for the paper to be printed comes, and there is no "PICTURE" for the children. Well, you must look at the clouds and the sky, and the young green leaves, and the trees and woods, and make pictures out of them, until next week.

WAITING FOR FATHER.

In passing the late residence of a near relative, (in my boyhood) my attention was arrested by a little child about four or five years of age, who sat by the gate, gazing intently up the road which led to the grave-yard. When asked what he was doing there all alone, he said, "I am waiting for Father to come home." Oft in mature years has this occurrence presented itself to my mind. And when I look upon the land marks which line the distant shore, and my imagination leads me to the gates of the City of God, methinks I see myriads of lovely little ones, "waiting for Father to come home." Parents, it fills your heart with joy, on earth, to hear the shouts of welcome, as you return to your families after days of absence. How much more should you rejoice at the happy thought, that at the portals of the New Jerusalem, stand those who passed away from you in the morning of life, and who are eagerly waiting for you to come home: and who are ready to strike upon their harps of gold notes of everlasting joy to welcome you to God. Shall they, like the little one mentioned at the outset, watch in vain for your return? or, shall they be permitted to meet you at the brink of the River of Life, and lead you into that City, where sickness and sorrow, and pain and death, are felt and feared no more.

"IGNATIUS."

Clinton, La., March, '60.

A NIGHT ON THE ICE.

We had been to a picnic, in the Canadian backwoods, some six or seven miles beyond the Tircouaga, and were returning home in two light one-horse sleighs, the first containing Mr. Norton and his elder daughter, the second her sister and myself. The night was calm and beautiful in its dim snow-light, and the red glow of the northern streamers above our heads flashed and leaped and quivered in a thousand brilliant coruscations; while strangely and sweetly through the gray old woods sounded the clear girlish voices of the sisters, as from the different sleighs they sang in alternate stanzas one of the quaint old ballads of the Middle Ages. At length we reached the banks of the Tircouaga, which lay between us and our home, a mirror of ice, and we at once commenced its passage. As we swept quickly on, it seemed to me that some other sound mingled with the firm foot-falls of the horses, and the chime of their bells—a low threatening murmur like the echo of a distant tempest. But Mr. Norton drove gayly on, as if he either heard it not, or else thought nothing of it, and I dismissed it from my mind until, as we drew near the centre of the river, strange dark spots, like cloud-shadows, began to flock its gleaming surface.

The next instant one appeared right in Mr. Norton's path, and too close for him to avoid. With a long leap the horse bounded over it, and as the sleigh was drawn quickly after, there was a plash that told it had struck against water. I could see Mr. Norton spring hurriedly up.

"Back, back, for your lives!" he cried to us; "the ice is breaking up!"

I turned to follow his directions, but it was too late—two or three such spots lay between us and the bank. I looked around—they were rapidly appearing on every side; and then I remembered to have heard that the ice of the Tircouaga was treacherous in consequence of hot springs in the bed of the river, which at times burst forth; and that particularly in the early part of the winter the morning would see the river covered with ice, of which before evening not a trace would remain.

Perceiving how matters were, Mr. Norton bade us follow him, and quickly, for that not a moment was to be lost; and then dashed off at a rapid pace for the opposite bank, leaping the chasms, and speeding lightly on over the frozen portions, as if he hoped by swiftness to diminish the danger; and with the same breathless speed we hastened on in his rear.

Meanwhile, larger and yet more numerous grew those dark blue spaces, and longer and more frequent our horses' leaps,—At length there came a climax mine could not venture. I looked eagerly round for some more favorable spot; but as my eye glanced onward, it fell on constantly-widening water, until it had gone the circuit, and, with a sensation of surprise and horror, I perceived that we stood upon an ice-island, from which the surrounding ice was rapidly retreating. I looked after Mr. Norton; but, unsuspicious of what had happened, he was still making his way with arrowy speed across the ice; so I felt we were left to our own efforts, for escape, and my utter inexperience rendered the chances few indeed, unless we should again draw near enough to the main ice to leap the space between; and none can tell how anxiously I watched each movement of our raft as it began to yield to the influences of the current.—But each fathom that we were swept down the river seemed to bear us an equal distance from its icy borders, and we soon found ourselves floating on a comparatively open space of water and surrounded by numerous ice-islets.

I could have almost echoed poor Annie's cry of agony when the certainty of our position burst upon her, so fearful was it. Alone at midnight, on a fragment of ice, floating down a rapid river, whose future course I knew not, while on each side stretched tracts of crumbling ice, and beyond them rose banks of inaccessible steepness!—What could exceed the desolation of such a position, and what hope could it leave to us of life? While, to complete our misery, we had not even the power to struggle against our fate, but must passively await its coming upon us.

How deeply I pitied my young companion, as she sat there weeping such bitter tears. It was hard for her to part with life after sixteen years of such bright and joyous experience as here had been; hard to lay it down thus suddenly and fearfully, absent from all she loved, and yet harder the unresolvable tears for her father's and sister's safety which our own danger had awakened. I tried to utter words of consolation as I wrapped the poor girl in the buffalo robes from the chill night air that our inaction rendered doubly cold. She looked a sad contrast to the bright creature of the last few hours, whose joyous hallaal strains were yet lingering in my ears. But when the first shock was over, poor Annie struggled bravely with her grief, and during the remainder of that long, dreary night of peril she sat calmly by my side, the most patient and resigned companion man ever had in danger.

Meanwhile, the river was bearing us swiftly on past rocky headlands, and dark pine-forests, waving above lofty cliffs, on to yet wilder and sterner regions, where it seemed even the red man would scarce pitch his wigwam. Sometimes the river swept us smoothly along on its broad bosom, at others it contracted into narrower limits, and hurried on with a quicker current; and as our frail raft was swayed about by the broken water, we oftimes thought either that it would part, or we be swept from its slippery surface, while every now and then our poor horse beat the ice wildly with his hoof, and, as he recognized its unsoundness, his long shrill cries of distress and terror rang far and wide over the river, and quivered through the dismal woods beyond.

Day at length broke upon us, still floating down that lonely river, between its frowning banks, and on our raft, whose limits were now small indeed. Death seemed close upon us in one of his most repulsive forms, and we no longer pretended blindness to his coming, but spoke together as they should whose hour was at hand.

Suddenly the river took an abrupt bend, and, aided by the waters of another river, which here fell into it, spread almost to the dimensions of a lake; but still it was bordered by those monotonous, wall-like banks, shutting out every hope. At length we sighted something like a chasm divide the cliff down to the water's edge. I sprang to my feet in a moment. Here was at least a chance of life—the first that during all those wretched hours had presented itself—and I resolved at once to profit by it.

Without a moment's delay the horse was unharnessed, the shafts, and Annie was tied securely upon it. I cut loose from the few words of encouragement, namely to his back; then with a doomed to so many [illegible] and hope to the poor young girl, my hand, and [illegible] hardships and dangers, I took the bridle in my mouth, and then commenced swimming to the shore.

But the struggle was a long and arduous one, for we were more than a mile from the land, and both the horse and I were cramped and stiffened with cold. Many a time I thought the effort was in vain, and that neither the horse nor I would ever reach the shore, that to my weariness seemed to recede as we advanced. Moreover, the current pressed strongly against us, striving to sweep us down beyond our goal, against the steep rocky barrier that lined the water. Fortunately the hot springs had raised the temperature of the water, for poor Annie's form was almost hidden in it, as the waves gurgled and surged around her, sometimes even sweeping above her head. But the young girl's courage rose with the occasion, and she bore unmurmuringly this new phase of suffering.

But they strive hard whose prize is life, and after more than an hour of hope, and doubt, and fear, we reached the land we had never hoped to tread again. As we emerged from the water the wintry wind pierced through our saturated clothing, with an icy chill that seemed to threaten to freeze them on us. Providentially, in our need, we found a settler's house near at hand, where we obtained dry clothes, refreshment, and the loan of a horse and sleigh, in which we were soon speeding along the road to Tircouaga. As we proceeded, fresh fears for her father's and sister's fate assailed poor Annie, which were only set at rest when she found herself in their arms.

THE LAMBS FOLDED.

It was on a cold December day that I hurried through the fast falling snow to the house of a dear friend. We had been schoolmates, and strangely and closely our lives had been entwined in latter years. She had sent me word that her little daughter was very sick, perhaps dying. The child was of the same age, and had been the playmate of my own and only daughter, who but a few weeks before I had laid from off my own bosom, in the cold earth.

"Thn Elder Shepherd of the fold
Came, covered with thn storm, and paid one cold,
And begged for the sweet lamb to hold,
And I bade her go."

Gladly would I now have staid away from this house of anxiety, for my still bleeding heart was but little prepared to bear so severe a test, but, passing groups of children, merry over their holiday toys, and life-wearied beggars who plitifully asked alms, I soon reached my friend's home. Thn sweet face of a little boy met me at the door, and he whispered, tremblingly, "Our Minnie is going away to live with the angels and your little Bessie." And true, Minnie breathed but a few hours more: then fixing her blue eyes on her little playmate brother, she died. When I saw her lying cold with her marble hands crossed, with a white flower on her pulseless bosom, I thought, surely death is very beautiful.

It was with the old year this child of so much love died, and with the New-Year the young mother arose, resigned to God's will, and thanked Him, that He had spared her yet one child.

Ah! the reaper was still hovering very near; and in a few more days the heavy door of the vault was again opened, and thn coffin in which little Louis slept was placed therein, beside his sister's.

To those who have never suffered anch bereavement, no words are adequate to express a parent's sorrow, and the chilling void which the death of a little child must leave. Everywhere he is missed: at thn table, and around the family altar, the vacant chair every day reminds us he has gone. The silent hall which rung with his voice, always first to greet us when we returned home, tells us he has gone. The empty crib, over which we nightly leaned, praying that the Father's hand would shield our lamb from harm, tells us he has gone. Sometimes, in an unguarded moment, we think we hear the little step, and turn to take the dear one in our arms, when suddenly thn painful truth arises, that he has gone.

"We will go to him, but he can never coma to us," we say, and so, very soon we learn to think of the departed as happier far than we could have made them. Cheerfully, then, look up, all you that have been bereaved, and trust to the love of Him,

Who only lent his own
To stay with you a little while,
And then to journey home.

The waves that lash and pitilessly beat against you, can never harm your child. Over the stormy river he has crossed safe, and on the endless, boundless shore of God's eternity, he was taken into arms of love, which will never weary of ench cling him, till you meet again.

A home, from which all the children are taken, is desolate indeed. Over the grief of such parents let us step lightly. "The stranger," and he that has not been afflicted, must "not intermeddle." Dark and long the night, but the morning always comes. Fearful the storm, but the calm blue sky is ever beyond. So seems dark and long, my dear friend, the night of your affliction, but the light will dawn. So stormy seems life's river, when death has blighted your fairest hopes, but beyond, away beyond, on the other peaceful shore, stands One who does not willingly afflict; and beside Him, safe, are your departed ready to welcome you, if you will, into joys which know no night, and no storm, or any other change.—New York Observer.

THE SARDINIAN COLORS IN ROME.—The editor of the New York Albion, writing from Rome to that excellent journal, gives the following curious incident of current life in the Eternal City: "Wednesday last," he says, "was a festival day. It is the custom on this occasion—thn Pope having performed High Mass at St. Peters in the morning—for public and private buildings to be decorated with lights at Sundown. The illumination were by no means general in the latter—indeed they were conspicuously otherwise. But this is not the curious point. Few and feeble as they were, the exhibitors had contrived, in a really large number of instances, to introduce in their variegated lamps the Sardinian colors—greco, red and white—which, I need scarcely say, are beyond measure obnoxious to the Government of His Holiness. I was absolutely surprised at the boldness with which this heretical predilection was set forth, though I have not heard that it was followed by any repressive or vindictive proceedings on the part of the police. It is said also—though for this I cannot vouch—that the powers of the Vatican had interfered to the various parochial administrations of the city certain sums of money, as is usual, to be expended in giving brilliancy to the display, but that one and all had declined the offer.

Obituaries:

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

MRS. MARY JANE CORDILL, died in peace, at her residence in Tensas parish, La., Feb. 9th, 1860. She was the daughter of Stephen and Sarah Harmon; born in Jefferson county, Miss., Feb. 28th, 1828. She was married to Mr. Joseph Cordill, Dec. 26th, 1844, and joined the M. E. Church in 1856. Sister Cordill was a woman of many virtues, a loved and useful member of society. The privation of her genial influence—so sudden, in the meridian of life—is sadly felt by those she lived to bless. The virtues that adorned the character of our sister still live in our memory, and minister a melancholy pleasure. If she had faults, like the solar spots concealed in light, they were covered with many virtues. Her domestic character combined all the traits which Solomon designates as constituents of a virtuous woman—Prov. xxxi. She filled the office of guardian angel by her assiduous attention to the wants of a large family of children and servants. "In her tongue was the law of kindness, she looked well to the ways of her household, her children rise up and call her blessed; her husband also praiseth her." Her social character was cast in a fine mold; on which were permanently impressed benevolence, sympathy, kindness. She was courteous to all, and conscientous in the discharge of her duties as neighbor. Her religious character was marked by sacred regard for the word of God; and love for the people of God. She treated the ministers of Christ with marked respect; pastoral visits were regarded as favors. She prepared the stand, and books, and assembled the family, and invited the minister to invoke God's blessing upon the household. To the writer, the many reminiscences of those occasions is pleasant still. Last new year's day she commenced her Bible, and resolved to read it through with renewed attention and prayer. She requested her husband to join her in the course, and to read for her when she could not. But her exalted spirit is gone to the better Home.

"The voyage of life's at an end,
The mortal affliction is past;
The age that in heaven she'll spend,
For ever and ever will last."

J. D. ADAMS.

DIED, suddenly, in this city, of hemorrhage of the lungs, January 9, 1860, Mrs. Adeline C. Given, wife of Henry F. Given, Esq., in the forty-sixth year of her age. Her remains will be taken to Smithland, Ky., for interment.—N. O. Crescent.

MRS. ADALINE C. GIVEN was born in Livingston county, Ky., April 30, 1814. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, in Smithland, Ky., in 1844, under the pastoral ministrations of Rev. F. M. English, and lived a consistent member till her death. She was the subject of great affliction for many years, but was buoyant and cheerful amidst them all. No pains or expense were spared, upon the part of her devoted husband, to have her restored to health, or minister to her comfort while living. But for this, I suppose she would have been in the grave long since. Many of the preachers of the Louisville Conference remember Sister Given with gratitude for her marked hospitality when they were in this station. She had a room in her residence here, specially given for the benefit of the preachers, called the "preachers' room;" and having spent the winters, a few years past, in New Orleans, she had there also the "preachers' room." How happy the weary minister to find such a home! She requested Brother G. to continue to keep house and accommodate the preachers as before. Just before her death, when calm, she conversed upon the subject of religion—declared her confidence in the Savior, and her readiness to depart and be with him. She talked of the hallowed prospect of meeting Brother Casey in heaven, who was once in this station, and died in the triumph of Christian faith last year. O, blessed meeting of pastor and member! She exhorted her husband to be faithful; and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus to await the resurrection morn, when she will arise in the image of Jesus, and live in a land where "the inhabitants shall no more say, I am sick."

"The soul of our sister is gone
To heighten the triumph above;
Exalted to Jesus's throne,
And clasped in the arms of his love."

J. C. PETRIE.

SISTER JANE ROUSE died in Marion county, Mississippi, January 25, 1860, in the 70th year of her age, and the 50th year of her attachment to the Methodist Church. Giving an account of her Christian experience a few days before her death, she said, "The Lord told me to ask and I should receive; I did so and received. He told me to seek and I should find; I did so. The Lord told me to knock and the door would be opened; I did knock and the door was opened to me. The Lord done all he said he would; fulfilled all his promises." In a word, Sister Rouse lived a Christian, and died shouting thanks to the Lord.

T. B.

PROFESSIONAL.

JAS. J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Livingston, Alahema.
[su24] ☞ Will Practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties.

DR. E. D BEACH, HAVING RESUMED THE practice of Medicine, offers his Professional services to the citizens of New Orleans.

N. B.—Special attention paid to diseases of the RECTUM, viz: FISTULA IN ANO, ETC.—Fistula in ano cured by the use of the knife, cautery, or ligature, expeditiously cured without Nn. 6, Bercean street, [illegible] Canal. No confinement whatever. Office [illegible] near Canal. ap27.

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY AT LAW, BATON Rouge.
REFERENCES—Henderson & Gaines, and Chinn & Bolton, New Orleans; W. S. Pike and A. Matta.....Baton Rouge.

B. D. & A. W. ROBERTS, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Floyd, Carroll Parish, Louisiana.
ja19

FCQUA AND KILBOURNE, ATTORNEYS AT LAW, CLINTON, LOUISIANA, practice in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana, and East Baton Rouge.
References—Payne & Harrison, Byrne, Vance & Co., W. and C Letchford and Co., Broadwell & Haynes, and Pritchard & Flower, New Orleans. mar 7-1y

W. P. WINANS. J. V. HEITH
WINANS & HEATH, Attorneys and Counsellors at Law, SHREVEPORT, LA.,
Office—Market Street.
Will practice in the courts of Caddo, De Soto, Bossier, Claiborne, and Bienville.

G. SPENCER MAYO, Attorney at Law, HARRISONBURG, LA.,
Will practice in the Courts of Catahoula, Concordia, Caldwell and Franklin Parishes.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

W. A. BROADWELL. A. F. HAYNES.
BROADWELL & HAYNES, (Formerly BROADWELL & PAYNE)
COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
No. 40 UNION STREET, N. O.

HAVING RETIRED FROM BUSINESS, I TAKE PLEASURE IN soliciting for my former partners, BROADWELL & HAYNES, the patronage and confidence of my friends, believing their experience, capacity and means, will merit its continuance, and enable them to give general satisfaction. [jel] M. U. PAYNE.

W. R. STUART. DR O. A. JAMES.
New Orleans. Madison Parish, La.
STUART & JAMES,
No. 42 Union street New Orleans,
HAVE ASSOCIATED THEMSELVES TOGETHER for the purpose of conducting a COTTON FACTORAGE and GENERAL COMMISSION BUSINESS; are prepared to make the usual Advances to planters, in the way of supplies, etc., and respectfully solicit patronage

B. M. LOWE & CO., COTTON FACTORS AND General Commission Merchants, No. 97 GRAVIER STREET, New Orleans.
ap6

PILCHR, GOODRICH & CO., COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS and Commission Merchants, No. 47 Carondelet, corner Union street, New Orleans. jy11-1y

A. H. May & Co., COTTON FACTORS AND GENERAL COMMISSION Merchants, No 94 Gravier street New Orleans. ao21y

J. C. PAYNE. J. F. HARRISON.
U. W. HUTCHINSON. WM S. DAMERON
Payne & Harrison. COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 51 Union street, New Orleans. dec7-1y

S. L. WALKER, MONT. C. CUTCHINSON
Nnw Orleans. Caddo Parish, La.
Walker & Hutchinson, COTTON FACTORS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 67 Carondelet street, New Orleans. je28

J. BOYD & Co., Cotton Factors, Receiving & Forwarding Merchants, No 4 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.
apr 17-1y

LEONARD FASH. F. S. LAURENS
LEONARD FASH & Co., COMMISSION MERCHANTS, And Dealers in Western Produce, 61 MAGAZINE STREET, NEW ORLEANS.
Oct 24.

LANE, SALTER & CO., [Successors to LANE, MAYFIELD & Co.] COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 79 St. Charles street, New Orleans. jy6-1y

JOHN F WYCHE & Co., COTTON FACTORS and COMMISION MERCHANTS, No 119 Common street, New Orleans. my2-1y

TEXAS LAND AND STOCK FOR SALE.

FOR SALE a tract of land situated in Sao Patricio County, within a few miles of the coast, containing about 4 540 acres, well timbered with musquee, oak, pecan, &c., and having near its centre a never-failing lake of clear, fresh water.
To parties desirous of emigrating to Texas either for farming or stock-raising purposes, this land offers inducements unsurpassed by any location in the State.

ALSO,

One tract containing about 2,50 0 acres, situated on the Sans Creek, in Refugio County, within five miles of saltwater, and about the same distance from the town of St. Mary's, the terminus of the proposed Aransas and San Diego Railroad.

Titles to both the above tracts perfect.

A Stock of Cattle will be sold with either of the above tracts, if desired.
For terms and further particulars address the undersigned, at New Orleans La.
dec21 3m P. R. BYRNE, 41 Magazine street.

PHILIP RAHM
EAGLE MACHINE WORKS, RICHMOND, VA.,
MANUFACTURES Stationary and Portable Steam Engines of any required power and superior design and workmanship, combining several improvements with simplicity and durability, best adapting them for plantation use.
Circular Saw Mills, Grist Mills, Shafting for Gin Houses, Irrigating Pumps, and Machinery generally. My Machinery will be fully guaranteed to perform as represented, and an experienced mechanic sent to erect it when desired. An illustrated Catalogue, with prices, sent by mail when requested.
Samples of Machinery on exhibition at my office, No. 81 St. Charles street, New Orleans.
P. HENRY TAYLOR, Agent.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

THESE MACHINES have recent and great improvements for Floe Sewing, and their sale is rapidly increasing. They are used in preference to all others at the largest and most fashionable dressmaking establishments in New Orleans, also at all the large hotels and principal boarding houses, and in hundreds of private families, and give universal satisfaction.
They are sold if desired, on a trial, with any and all other Sewing Machines.
WALTER HENNETT, Agent.
33 Camp street.

TEACHER WANTED.

A LADY, who can come well recommended, as a Teacher of Piano Music, and SINGING, who has also been educated in the French Language, speaks it correctly, and teaches it thoroughly.
Or a Gentleman or Lady, well recommended, as a Teacher of French, Drawing, Painting, &c.
Enquire at this Office.

EDUCATIONAL.

DOLBEAR'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, OF THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS,
Founded in 1832—Chartered by the Legislature of Louisiana, with Agricultural and Mechanical Departments—
Capital Stock, $250,000.
In the new and spacious Iron edifice, known as
STORY BUILDING,
South-east corner of Camp and Common Streets,
ENTRANCE ON BOTH STREETS, OPEN DAY AND EVENING.

FACULTY:
RUFUS DOLBEAR, PRESIDENT.
MATHEMATICAL DEPARTMENT.
GEO. F. BRACKETT, Professor.
BOOK-KEEPING DEPARTMENT.
RUFUS DOLBEAR, Lecturer.
J. W. BLACKMER, Professor.
ENGLISH DEPARTMENT.
HON. J. N. CARRIGAN, A.M., late Sup't Education, La.; Prof. and Lecturer on Commercial Law, etc
and M. B. MCCARTHY, Professor.
FRENCH DEPARTMENT.
MARC. ROUX, Professor.
DEPARTMENT FOR PENMANSHIP.
RUFUS DOLBEAR, Lecturer.
J. R. GRIFFITH, Professor.
SPANISH DEPARTMENT.
MANUEL MARINO, Professor.
GERMAN DEPARTMENT.
UHO. UESSNER, Professor.
LATIN AND GREEK DEPARTMENT.
M. MARINO and O. GUESNON, Professors.
ITALIAN DEPARTMENT.
RHETORIC, LOGIC, AND ELOCUTION.

This is the only chartered Commercial College in the South-West, and the oldest in the United States, and has stood for
FOR MORE THAN A QUARTER OF A CENTURY
On its own merits alone.
Persons from 12 to 60 years of age, can attend to any branch they may wish.
Board can be had with the Professor, or other good families speaking English, French, Spanish or German, from $5 to $6 per week.
Catalogues with terms, opinions of the press and leading men of the nation, etc., sent to all who desire them.
N.B.—To prevent mistakes or impositions, Students intended for this College should bring this advertisement as special directions, as there are every winter temporary rooms open for a few months, all of course making wonderful promises and promises, and posting flaming placards to enlighten the people of New Orleans and of the South! When three or more form Clubs and enter at the same time, ten per cent will be deducted from tuition.
☞ Citizens and strangers are invited to visit.
feb1 1y RUFUS COLBEAR, President.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
Corner of Camp and Common Streets,
ENTRANCE NO. 80 COMMON STREET.
[Established in 1856.]
OPEN DAY AND EVENING THE ENTIRE YEAR.
A full course of instruction in this institution embraces Double Entry Book-keeping, Commercial Calculation, Commercial Law, and Penmanship. Gentlemen can enter for the full course, or any branch they desire, and at any time, as there is no class system, no copying from books, and no memorizing of arbitrary rules.

FACULTY:
GEO. SOULE M.A., Principal and Professor of the Theory and Practice of Double Entry Book-keeping, Lecturer on the Science of Accounts, Exchange, Commercial Correspondence, etc.
W. J. KENNEDY, Professor of Practical Accountant, Associate Professor in Book-keeping Department.
J. M. DIRKHAMMER, Esq., Lecturer on Commercial Law.
H. C. SPENCER, Professor of Plain, Ornamental, and Epistolary Penmanship.
GEO. SOULE, Teacher and Lecturer on Commercial Calculations.
J. B. ANDERSON, Esq., Special Lecturer on Exchange, Business Customs, Commercial Ethics, etc., etc.
LEON LAUGHIN, Professor of Languages.
This is the only Commercial School in the city where Double Entry Book-keeping is taught practically, and as practiced in the New Orleans business houses.
Each of our young gentlemen has his respective desk, and proceeds to the opening, conducting, and closing of books, under all the variety of circumstances that can possibly occur in the various departments of business.
Merchants, Book keepers, and young gentlemen wishing instruction, are respectfully requested to call and examine our practical forms and peculiar manner of teaching.
For complete and simple full information, and Balance-sheet Circulars, the most unique and elegant work of the kind ever executed in the United States, address, GEO. SOULE, New Orleans.

FELICIANA FEMALE INSTITUTE, JACKSON, LA.
THE exercises of the second term of the school for the year will commence on the first of March. Pupils entered at any time, and charged from the time of entrance.
Extensive grounds and houses have been added to the premises.
A good library, a new and complete apparatus, a full and competent corps of teachers, comfortable and newly furnished apartments, afford the best facilities for a thorough education.
BOARD OF TRUSTEES:
WM. R. WATKINS, D.D., President.
J. N. EVANS, Secretary.
Prof. W. H. N. MACHUTER, WM LIPSCOMB,
JOHN W. BURROSS, Esq., Col. S. M. BRYAN,
F. Y. D. HAGAMAN, Esq., Rev. A. O. MILLER
Rev. JOHN C. MILLER. JOHN MCKOWEN, Esq
Hon. JOHN MCVEA.
Dm TIDS W. BROWN, Principal.

KENNER ACADEMY:
A Boarding and Day School, for Boys and Young Men.
VICTOR SCHELHAA, PRINCIPAL.
THIS Institution is located in the town of Kenner, Jefferson Parish, La., two miles from New Orleans, by railroad, and sixteen miles by river. The location is extremely delightful and pleasant. The health of the place is unsurpassed during the whole year.
The course of study is thorough, embracing the English, French, Spanish, German, Latin, and Greek languages. Students can be prepared for any class in college, or for business pursuits.
The Academy Year is divided into Two Sessions of Five Months each, commencing on the First of October and March, respectively. Scholars will be received at any time during the year; none for less time than one session.
For further particulars see circulars, or address Principal.

Huntsville Female College.
THE undersigned, by direction of the Board of Trustees of the HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE, take great pleasure in announcing to its patrons, and the public generally, that they have elected the Rev. JOHN G. WILSON, of Limestone County, Ala., to the Presidency of said College, rendered vacant by the death of the lamented Erwin. Mr. Wilson is favorably known as an eloquent Minister of Ion Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is a native of Tennessee, and graduated, with distinction, at a southern University. His great purity of character, his long experience as a successful teacher of youth, his ripe scholarship, prudent discipline, and gentlemanly manners, afford ample guaranty to parents and guardians, that they may safely entrust the education of their daughters and wards to the institution over which he has been called to preside. Mr. Wilson, with his lady, will reside in the College Building, after the 30th inst.; at which time, he will enter upon the discharge of his official duties, assisted by the efficient corps of teachers at present employed in the Institution.
WM ACKLEN,
President of the Board of Trustees.
JAMES H. SCRUGGS, Secretary.
Huntsville, Alabama, Jan. 21st, 1860.

Homer College, Homer, La.
FACULTY:
Rev. D. CLEGG, President, and Professor of Moral, Mental, and Natural Science.
J. W. STAFY, Professor of Ancient Labgueges and Literature.
J. B ORRTHE, Professor of Mathematics and Modern Languages.
WILLIAM CLEGG, Tutor, Preparatory Department.
TERMS PER SESSION—Preparatory Department, First Division, $15; Second, $20. Collegiate Department, $25. Contingent Fee, $1. Matriculation Fee, $5.
Second Session will open 1st February, 1860.
Board, Lodging, &c., $60.
J. C. BLACKMAN, Pres B. T.
J. M. THOMASON, Sec.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy,
FOR YOUNG LADIES,
RESUMED its Exercises on the First Monday in Corcoma last. A well chosen Faculty will spare no pains or care to make this institution a pleasant and profitable place for young Lady students.
The buildings are large, well-ventilated, and well furnished. The grounds ample and beautiful.
For information and Circulars, apply to,
Rev. B. JONES, Port Gibson, Miss.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.
SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.
SAVE THE PIECES!
ECONOMY! DISPATCH!
☞ "A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE."
Accidents will happen, even in well-regulated families, it is very desirable to have some cheap and convenient way for repairing Furniture, Toys, Crockery, &c.
SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE
meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be with out it. It is always ready, and up to the sticking point. There is no longer a necessity for reaping chairs, spindle-ed veneers, headless dolls, and broken ornaments. It is just the article for comic, useful, and other ornamental work, so popular with ladies of refinement and taste.
This admirable preparation is used cold, being chemically held in solution, and possessing all the valuable qualities of the best cabinet-makers' Glue. It may be used in the place of ordinary mucilage, being vastly more adhesive.
"USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE."
N.B.—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cents.
Wholesale Depot, 48 Cedar-street, New York.
Address HENRY C. SPALDING & Co
Box No. 3,600, New York.
Put up for Dealers in Cases containing four, eight, and twelve dozen—a beautiful Lithographic Show-Card accompanying each package.
☞ A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times its cost annually to every household.—☜
Sold by all prominent Stationers, Druggists, Hardware and Fancy Goods Dealers, Grocers, and Fancy Stores.
Country merchants should make a note of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE, when making up their list. It will stand any climate. jan 25 1y

NO. 3 CAMP STREET. EUREKA!
SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES!
For Plantation, Family, and Manufacturers' use
Prices—$65, $80, $100, $115, $125.
These Machines have no equal; they possess all the latest improvements, the last being November 19th, 1859. Their mechanism is so simple and durable that a child can easily understand and operate them. They work with two threads, using Howe's patent shuttle, making the lock stitch, and presenting the same stitch on both sides of the fabric sewn—They will run, stitch, hem, fell, bind and gather.
☞ ALL MACHINES WARRANTED ☜
Every variety of Thread, Silk, Needles, and other findings for sale.
Principal Southern Salesroom, No. 3 Camp st.
E. L. MIMMO, Agent.

WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE.
A Certain Remedy for Worms.
Physicians generally now use WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE, this medicine is a simple vegetable preparation and can always

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X. — NUMBER 12.
WHOLE NUMBER 475.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21, 1860.

$3 00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE
OFFICE — 112 CAMP ST

INTRODUCTION OF PROTESTANTISM INTO MISSISSIPPI.—NO. V.

Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Editor: That form of Evangelical Christianity known as Methodism, was first introduced into the city of New York in 1766. Previous to the Revolutionary war it had spread extensively through the colonies; during the war it was surprisingly maintained, and after the close of the war its spread became general in the United States.

Toward the close of the last century the ever wakeful eye of Bishop Asbury rested with increasing interest on the far famed "Natchez country," which was evidently designed to be settled speedily by an American population. At the Conference held in Charleston, South Carolina, January 1st, 1799, he fixed on the man, in the person of the Rev. Tobias Gibson, who should be the first to explore this country, as the standard bearer of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Gibson had been eight years in the pastoral work, was every way worthy and well qualified for such an important trust. He was unmarried, and possessed a handsome estate for the times, in addition to which his failing health required a more Southern climate. He also had an intelligent, wealthy, and influential family connection already settled in the vicinity of Natchez, by whom he would be cordially received and hospitably entertained. His name appears in the printed Minutes as preacher in charge of Little Pee Dee and Aosen circuit in 1799, with Britain Capel and Lewis Myers as his colleagues; but this appointment was doubtless made with the understanding that he was to leave his circuit in the hands of his co-laborers, and on the opening of Spring proceed as a Missionary to the Natchez country.

On the 10th of October, 1799, he celebrated the rites of matrimony between my parents, about twelve miles from Natchez; and it is an established fact in the family that he first visited them the preceding April. He was continued here in 1800, and his name so appears in the printed Minutes. He entered on the object of his mission immediately on his arrival, and, within the next three years, succeeded in forming Churches in nearly all the important settlements in the western portion of the territory, between Fort Adams and the Walnut Hills, near the present site of Vicksburg. His first Church was organized in Washington, the territorial seat of Government, six miles from Natchez.

Soon after, he visited Kingston to look after the remains of the Congregational Church formed there in 1763 by Rev. Samuel Swayze, which since his death in 1785, had been as "sheep without a shepherd." Here he found a people already prepared of the Lord, and ready to receive him; for notwithstanding their Calvinistic proclivities, but few of this extensive connection seemed inclined to unite with the Baptists. They had been accustomed to an educated ministry, and the elevated talents, polished manners, and overflowing affection of Mr. Gibson, corresponded with their previous training and modes of thinking. He also found a considerable branch of the "Swayze connection" settled near Selsertown, where he collected a church at an early day.

In 1803 Moses Floyd volunteered to come to the assistance of Mr. Gibson, and in 1801 he was further recruited by Hezekiah Harriman and Abraham Amos. Tobias Gibson died April 5th, 1804, in what is now Warren county, and the place of his interment may be seen about six miles from Vicksburg, a little to the left of the road leading to Warrenton, where long cherished affection has placed a suitable monument to mark his resting place.

These numbers being intended merely, as the running title imports, to give a history of the introduction of Protestantism into Mississippi, I may here close, only adding another number to exhibit some of its first fruits.

I have said but little about the rapid and constant progress of the Methodist Episcopal Church in our country, because we have the printed Minutes from the beginning, to furnish us the statistics whenever we wish to refer to the subject. I have no materials at hand to furnish me with anything very reliable to say about the introduction of either the Presbyterian or Protestant Episcopal Churches into Mississippi. I may say, however, that very early in the present century Rev. Joseph Hullen and Rev. William Montgomery, of the Presbyterian Church, came as Missionaries to the Mississippi territory and labored long, acceptably and usefully in their Master's cause. They were subsequently followed by other ministers of the same denomination.

Rev. Adam Cloud, who for several years previous to 1788 had been a traveling Methodist preacher in the North, but about that time withdrew from our Church, and subsequently took orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church, also came as a Missionary to the territory early in the present century.

The Methodists and Baptists have always been, and still are, by large majorities, the leading denominations in Mississippi.

J. G. Jones.

DICKENS ON THEATRE PREACHING.

Charles Dickens, in the "Uncommercial Traveller," a series of papers he is writing for Harper's Weekly, thus describes a religious service at a Theatre. The night before he had attended a pantomime at the same place:

There must have been full four thousand people present. Carefully estimating the pit alone, I could bring it out as holding little less than fourteen hundred. Every part of the house was well filled, and I had not found it easy to make my way along the back of the boxes to where I sat. The chandeliers in the ceiling were lighted; there was no light on the stage; the orchestra was empty. The green curtain was down, and packed pretty closely on chairs on the small space of stage before it were some thirty gentlemen, and two or three ladies. In the centre of these, in a desk or pulpit covered with red baize, was the presiding minister. The kind of rostrum he occupied will be very well understood if I liken it to a boarded-up fire-place turned toward the audience, with a gentleman in a black surtout standing in the stove and leaning forward over the mantle-piece.

A portion of Scripture was being read when I went in. It was followed by a discourse, to which the congregation listened with most exemplary attention and uninterrupted silence and decorum. My own attention comprehended both the auditory and the speaker, and shall turn to both in this recalling of the scene, exactly as it did at the time.

"A very difficult thing," I thought, when the discourse began, "to speak appropriately to so large an audience, and to speak with tact. Without it, better not to speak at all. Infinitely better to read the New Testament well, and to let that speak. In this congregation there is infinitely one pulse; but I doubt if any power short of genius can touch it as one, and make it answer as one."

I could not possibly say to myself as the discourse proceeded that the minister was a good speaker. I could not possibly say to myself that he expressed an understanding of the general mind and character of his audience. There was a supposititious working man introduced into the homily to make supposititious objections to our Christian religion and be reasoned down, who was not only a very disagreeable person, but remarkably unlike life—very much more unlike it than anything I had seen in the pantomime. The native independence of character this artisan was supposed to possess, was represented by a suggestion of a dialect that I certainly never heard in my uncommercial travels, and with a coarse swing of voice and manner anything but agreeable to his feelings I should conceive, considered in the light of a portrait, and as far away from the fact as a Chinese Tartar. There was a model pauper introduced in like manner, who appeared to me to be the most intolerably arrogant pauper ever relieved, and to show himself in absolute want and dire necessity of a couse of Stone Yard. For, how did this pauper testify to his having received the Gospel of humility? A gentleman met him in the work-house, and said (which I myself really thought good-natured of him), "Ah, John, I am sorry to see you here. I am sorry to see you so poor." "Poor, Sir!" replied that man, drawing himself up, "I am the son of a Prince! My father is the King of Kings. My father is the Lord of Lords. My father is the ruler of all the Princes of the Earth," etc. And this was what all the preacher's fellow-sinners might come to, if they would embrace this blessed book—which I must say it did some violence to my own feelings of reverence to see held out at arm's-length at frequent intervals, and soundingly slapped, like a slow lot at a sale. Now, could I help asking myself the question, whether the mechanic before me, who must detect the preacher as being wrong about the visible manners of himself and the like of himself, and about such a mealy-lip-server as that pauper, might not, must unhappily for the usefulness of the occasion, doubt that preacher's being right about things not visible to human senses?

Again. Is it necessary or advisable to address such an audience continually as "fellow-sinners?" Is it not enough to be fellow-creatures, born yesterday, suffering and striving to-day, dying to-morrow? By our common humanity, my brothers and sisters, by our common capacities for pain and pleasure, by our common laughter and our common tears, by our common aspiration to reach something better than ourselves, by our common tendency to believe in something good, and to invest whatever we love or whatever we lose with some qualities that are superior to our own failings and weaknesses as we know them in our own poor hearts—by these, Dear me!—Surely, it is enough to be fellow-creatures. Surely, it includes the other designation and some touching meanings over and above.

Again. There was a personage introduced into the discourse (not an absolute novelty, to the best of my remembrance of my reading), who had been personally known to the preacher, and had been quite a Crichton in all the ways of philosophy, but had been an infidel. Many a time had the preacher talked with him on that subject, and many a time had he failed to convince that intelligent man. That he fell ill, and died, and before he died he recorded his conversion—in words which the preacher had taken down, my fellow-sinners, and would read to you from this piece of paper. I must confess that to me, as one of an uninstructed audience, they did not appear particularly edifying. I thought their tone extremely selfish, and I thought they had a spiritual vanity in them which was of the before-mentioned refractory pauper's family.

All slangs and twangs are objectionable everywhere, but the slang and twang of the conventicle—as bad in its way as that of the House of Commons, and nothing worse can be said of it—should be studiously avoided under such circumstances as I describe. The avoidance was not complete on this occasion. Nor was it quite agreeable to see the preacher addressing his pet "points" to his brokers on the stage, as if appealing to those disciples to shore him up, and testify to the multitude that each of those points was a clincher.

But in respect of the large Christianity of his general tone; of his renunciation of all priestly authority; of his earnest and reiterated assurance to the people that the commonest among them could work out their own salvation if they would, by simply, lovingly, and dutifully following our Saviour, and that they needed the mediation of no erring man; in these particulars, this gentleman deserved all praise. Nothing could be better than the spirit, or the plain emphatic words of his discourse in these respects. And it was almost significant and encouraging circumstance that whenever he struck that chord, or whenever he described anything which Christ himself had done, the array of faces before him was very much more earnest, and very much more expressive of emotion, than at any other time.

And now I am brought to the fact, that the lowest part of the audience of the previous night was not there. There is no doubt about it. There was no such thing in that building that Sunday evening. I have been told since that the lowest part of the audience of the Victoria Theatre has been attracted to its Sunday services. I have been very glad to hear it, but on this occasion of which I write the lowest part of the usual audience of the Britannia Theatre decidedly and unquestionably staid away. When I first took my seat and looked at the house my surprise at the change in its occupants was as great as my disappointment. To the most respectable class of the previous evening was added a great number of respectable strangers attracted by curiosity, and drafts from the regular congregations of various chapels. It was impossible to fail in identifying the character of these last, and they were very numerous. I came out in a strong, slow tide of them settling from the boxes. Indeed, while the discourse was in progress, the respectable character of the auditory was so manifest in their appearance that when the minister addressed a supposititious "outcast," one really felt a little impatient of it, as a figure of speech not justified by anything the eye could discover.

The time appointed for the conclusion of the proceedings was eight o'clock. The address having lasted until full that time, and it being the custom to conclude with a hymn, the preacher intimated, in a few sensible words, that the clock had struck the hour, and that those who desired to go before the hymn was sung could go now without giving offence. No one stirred. The hymn was then sung, in good time and tune and unison, and its effect was very striking. A comprehensive benevolent prayer dismissed the throng, and in seven or eight minutes there was nothing left in the Theatre but a light cloud of dust.

That these Sunday meetings in Theatres are good things I do not doubt. Nor do I doubt that they will work lower and lower down in the social scale, if those who preside over them will be very careful on two heads: firstly, not to disparage the places in which they speak, or the intelligence of their hearers; secondly, not to set themselves in antagonism to the natural inborn desire of the mass of mankind to recreate themselves and to be amused.

There is a third head, taking precedence of all others, to which my remarks on the discourse I heard have tended. In the New Testament there is the most beautiful and affecting history conceivable by man, and there are the terse models for all prayer and for all preaching. As to the models, imitate them. Sunday preachers—else why are they there, consider? As to the history, tell it. Some people cannot read, some people will not read, many people (this especially holds among the young and ignorant) find it hard to pursue the verse form in which the book is presented to them, and imagine that those breaks imply gaps and want of continuity. Help them over that first stumbling-block by setting forth the history in narrative, with no fear of exhausting it. You will never preach so well, you will never move them so profoundly, you will never send them away with half so much to think of. Which is the better interest: Christ's choice of twelve poor men to help in those merciful wonders among the poor and rejected, or the pious bullying of a whole Union-full of paupers? What is your changed philosopher to wretched me, peeping in at the door out of the mad of the streets and of my life, when you have the widow's son to tell me about, the ruler's daughter, the other figure at the door when the brother of the two sisters was dead, and one of the two ran to the mourner, crying, "The Master is come and calleth for thee?" Let the preacher who will thoroughly forget himself and remember no individuality but one, and no eloquence but one, stand up before four thousand men and women at the Britannia Theatre any Sunday night, recounting that narrative to them as fellow-creatures, and he shall see a sight!

QUACK DOCTORS.

THE BLACK DOCTOR—LOUISIANA LEGISLATURE.

Our readers have all heard, we suppose, of Doctor Vries, the celebrated "Black Doctor"—of his so-called wonderful cures, his great fame, and his pecuniary success. Recently we learn that the "Black Doctor" has been condemned by the Tribunal of Correctional Police at Paris to undergo 15 months' imprisonment, and to pay a fine of 500f. This fellow, however, was no ordinary quack doctor. The "Black Doctor" professed that he was inspired by supernatural influences in the choice and method of his treatment. He endeavored to impose on the public the belief that he was possessed of infallible specifics, the products of tropical regions, in cases of cancer, asthma, dysentery, and other diseases of an equally formidable character. In place of the ordinary practice of medical men the "Black Doctor" was wont to proceed upon the system of payment for cure before the treatment was commenced. An unfortunate person—let us suppose a woman—afflicted with a cancer, which had defied the skill of regularly trained medical men, presented herself at his apartment for consultation. His language was, "give me one, two, five, ten thousand francs, and I will make you sound." When we consider the awful position of a person so placed—the utter worthlessness of money in comparison with health and life—and the despair of relief from the scientific professors of medicine, is there any wonder that this bold promiser found many ready dupes? More lamentable than the case of the wretched patient was that of the agonized parent, the husband or wife, the son or daughter, who came to the study of the Black Doctor, perfectly willing to sacrifice the last shilling, so that the life which was dearer to them than their own, or all the world besides, might be preserved. In the vast majority of instances the case, as doctors say, had been "given over," so that the appeal to this miserable quack was made in sheer desperation. He would then take advantage of that distressing condition, and impose his own terms for the cure. Mark the difference between this practice and that of the ordinary dispenser of quack medicines. As long as an impostor confines himself to the mere sale of a quack medicine—say, a pill of such marvellous virtue that he who takes it according to the direction may make sure of four score years of uninterrupted life and health, the buyer is simply a fool for his pains. Men and women will continue to purchase such trash as long as any one has the audacity to proclaim its efficacy. With the purchase of a box or two of pills, generally compounded of some perfectly harmless materials, and with the disappointment of foolish hopes, there is an end to the matter. Not so with the physician, real or pretended, who invites the world of sufferers to come to his door, and offers them relief from their miseries if they will put themselves implicitly into his hands. They are absolutely in his power, or at his mercy—from day to day he prescribes and alters the treatment, still holding out illusive hopes of relief, which will never be realized until his patients are in their graves.

We are glad to see that the Legislature of Louisiana has passed a bill requiring all practitioners of medicine in the State to have recorded a diploma from a regular medical college, and that every attempt to practice without it subjects them to a fine of $20. The fine is not large enough, but it is better than nothing. New Orleans, and all large cities, are over-run with medical impostors.

AFFAIRS ON THE RIO GRANDE.

From the Brownsville Flag of the 23d ult. we extract the following: We stated last week that there were reports in circulation to the effect that the mustered-out Rangers, who had left for their homes, had driven off stock from Rancho Viejo, but that out of respect to the name of Texas we could not believe them. Since then we have been convinced, not only of their truth, but of the truth of other reports about them, of still more flagrant violations of law and order. It would really seem that some of the Rangers, who came here under patriotic pretences, really came to rob and plunder our people, and to disgrace the name of Texan, but more especially that of Texan Ranger.

We are inclined to think that the recent outrages committed by those graceless scamps should be made known in detail to the Rangers under the command of Capts. Ford and Littleton, who we are well assured would take steps to reprobate the conduct complained of in a suitable and commendable manner. If these things are to continue, let us pray for the reign once again of a Mexican banditti. But they are not going to continue, for the Rangers now on duty, as well as many who have returned to their homes, are gentlemen and soldiers, and will take such action as the circumstances of the case will justify.

About twenty days before the fight at the Bolsa, the mail carrier between this place and Rio Grande City, on his upward trip, was seized by Cortina and taken across the river to the banditti camp, where the mail bag was cut open, and the contents after being read in part, were destroyed. The carrier was then informed that this was the second time he had been taken prisoner while in the employ of Americans, and that an example had got to be made in order to stop the d——d Gringos. The carrier begged off on the ground that he was working for a Mexican mail contractor, and that he had no other means of supporting his family. From that time until the Rangers crossed the river he was in Cortina's camp, and cognizant of most that transpired. He saw mail matter brought from the offices at Matamoras, Comargo and Reynosa, and heard the contents of many letters publicly discussed. During the whole time not a day passed that Cortina was not fully apprised of the movements making against him. He was in daily communication with Matamoras, from which place he received, with the arrival of every expressman, assurances that the authorities were not going to trouble him—to rest easy on that point. He heard the project of taking the Ranchero openly discussed, of what her freights would consist, and the probable amount of specie on board. All agreed that inasmuch as no shipments had previously been made the amount of silver would be great, and that a rich haul awaited them. Sometimes the men complained that the time for the sacking of the Rio Grande City was put off until they were cheated out of it by the attack from the Rangers; whereupon Cortina would assure them that the steamer Ranchero should be taken, when their hands would be untied.

When the steamer Hove in sight, Cortina's forces, about two hundred strong, were in full preparation for the attack, and opened a fire upon her, though the point at which she was to have been taken had not been reached by the boat. As soon as the steamer rounded to and the fight commenced on the Mexican side, Cortina sent an express to Matamoras for assistance, confidently expecting he could hold out until succor should arrive. But he was compelled after about two hours to evacuate. The carrier escaped with, or was taken away by Cortina's guard. Next morning the expressman returned to Cortina with the message that the assistance sent for could not be had, for the reason that not a soldier could be spared from Matamoras; but word was sent to whip the Gringos if they could, that their hearts were with Cortina. The carrier did not know to just whom the expressman was sent nor from whom he brought the message. When Cortina received this answer to his express, he cursed and swore, and said the people of Matamoras had violated their pledge. Forces, however, were sent out from Matamoras, but for what purpose we respectfully leave such as are conversant with the general facts to determine; simply adding that Cortina retreated, after his defeat at the Bolsa, to the Mesa, six miles distant, where he has since remained, without so much as having been once disturbed.

At the time the mail carrier made these statements, we thought best not to make them public, but to trust to subsequent events to prove or disprove them. Not much to our surprise, all the important features of his statement have been fully corroborated. The Rangers now encamped within a few miles of Cortina's rendezvous are daily obtaining information which reflects a good deal of light upon past events. They learn from reliable rancheros that the Mexican troops sent out from Matamoras approached no nearer Cortina's camp than six miles, where a night was spent followed by a return to Matamoras. The same farce over and over again has been enacted, and each time Cortina has been dispersed, according to the printed reports. Some of the Mexican rancheros who want to see quiet once more on the frontier, have crossed the river and offered to guide Col. Ford and his Rangers to Cortina's camp. They all say, "we have offered the same to the Mexican troops, but they will not fight Cortina." They agree that Gen. Garcia and Cortina have had an interview, which is not improbable, since the example was established by the Texas Commissioners.

They have informed Col. Ford of the whereabouts and pretended ownership of various stocks of cattle that have been stolen from this side, and have informed him of the re-branding of them so as to obliterate the old or original brands, all of which, they say, is just as well known to the Mexican authorities as to our own people. For a week past our soil has not been invaded, but this is entirely owing to the vigilance of the U. S. Cavalry and Rangers, who are strung along the river for a distance of fifty miles. Col. Ford is encamped on the river directly opposite the banditti, and has got matters so arranged that Cortina cannot make any considerable movement without his knowledge. From these facts the public can tolerably well judge whether the forces under Cheno Cortina are dispersed, and in just about what condition our affairs have been for a week, and are likely to be for a month to come.

CHURCH AND STATE COLLISIONS.

While the Protestant Church of Hungary is engaged in a contest with the Austrian government for its freedom, the Free Church of Scotland is engaged in a similar contest with the British courts. The question of the spiritual independence of the churches has come up anew in connection with the Cardoss Free Church minister who has been deposed by the authorized courts of the Free Church for drunkenness. Mr. M'Millan having taken the case into the Civil Court, demanding to have the sentence of his church reduced and set aside, or else to have awarded to him 17,500 dollars damages, and the Court of Law having in its preliminary decision gone in favor of M'Millan, the people of Scotland have become profoundly alarmed.

The Law Court refused to recognize the Free Church, or any non-conforming church, as a church, but simply as a voluntary association. Not, having unchurched the Free Church, it assumes a civil right to exist, which could accrue only through the existence of a church constitution; for where would be the office from which M'Millan was deposed without a church constitution? There must be a constitution; and according to its provisions, M'Millan is ordained to a spiritual office to which attach certain worldly emoluments. These emoluments accrue because there are certain spiritual duties to be discharged, and as a maintenance in the discharge of those duties.

Now the Court of Law steps in and declares though the church may be free to appoint to this office, it is far otherwise as to deposition from it, and requires the Free Church to submit the contract and the sentence pronounced, that the judges may determine whether M'Millan is rightly or wrongly deposed. This is clearly an infringement on the spiritual freedom of the church by bringing her action within the sphere of compulsion. The Free Church will not yield. To do so would be to do worse than surrender all that for which she contended during the long Non-Intrusion struggle—more than all for which she, in 1843, relinquished her State connexion and emoluments. Every free church in Britain will support her, as having their rights menaced and their freedom perilled along with hers. This ignorant and foolish claim will be resisted, and successfully, too, whatever the struggle may cost. And great good will be the result of this struggle. The Non-conforming churches, having a common ground, common rights, and common interests, will be brought into closer bonds; bringing out, too, at the same time, into distinct relief, the great principle, that purely spiritual acts create no civil rights, it will vindicate the essential spirituality of Christ's kingdom.

WHAT THE SULTAN IS LIKE.

Frederika Bremer, in a recent magazine article, thus describes the Turkish Sultan:

"A little man in a dark coat, a dark red cap with a long black tassel on his head, and a pale, unpleasing countenance, comes down the steps, with as little dignity as a shopman. Can that really be the Sultan? Yes, it must be the Sultan, because the elderly military personages by his side reply with an expression of deep reverence to some remarks of the little man, and the stout lady with the children steps hastily forward into his path, as if she would stop his further advance. He starts, makes a half-step backward, and contracts his eyebrows most threateningly. Yet he listens to what she has to say, but listens with a gloomy expression, and then casts an inquiring glance on his brother-in-law, the High Admiral. He utters a few words of explanation, shrugging is shoulders, and then another word or two, which seem to say, "What do I know about your husband?"—motions the stout lady out of the way, and walks on to the shore, talking gayly with the gentlemen who attend him. He steps into the caique, from which the canopy has been removed; puts on his gloves, distorts his face in looking up at the sun, and so doing exhibits his tobacco-stained teeth; while his plain, uninteresting countenance assumes a most disagreeable expression. This, then, is the man who is called "God's Shadow on the Earth," and who rules with absolute sway over the lives and happiness of 35,000,000 of human beings! I have seen many crowned heads, but none who seemed to me so devoid of dignity, so devoid of any thing remarkable as this "Shadow of God on Earth." Nevertheless, the throne must produce an effect either for good or for evil. Travelers who see Abdul Medjid only at public audiences usually observe merely the lifeless, automatic character of his exterior. I now saw him under other circumstances. He was lively, and his countenance, although pale, indicated more youthful strength and health than I had been led to expect. "That is," I was told, "because within the last few years he has drank something stronger than Champagne, and this has given him strength. Besides, he was to-day in a good humor. But he generally looks very gloomy." For the rest, Abdul Medjid has the Turkish family features, the oval countenance, with somewhat prominent cheek-bones, the nose broad at the nostrils, and arched; the dark-brown, well-cut, but not large, eyes; and the finely-penciled eyebrows. They struck me as finest when contracted with their threatening expression, and the countenance then appeared most significant. If they could contract with a grave earnestness, Abdul Medjid would be a man of high character. Naturally mild of disposition, a good son, good brother, unwilling, although a despot, to sign a death-warrant, Abdul Medjid is not wanting in the softer feelings. That which he wants is real earnestness, real strength. So, at least, it seems to me. He does not throw himself seriously into any thing, but lets all go as it may and will. "Allah Kerim!"

THE ARCTIC PROBLEM.

Captain M'Clintock's book, Captain Osborne's articles in Once a Week, a paper by an Arctic officer in the first number of the Cornhill Magazine, and a brief and luminous resume of the history of Arctic adventure from the earliest times in Harper's Monthly for March, bring down the records of polar exploration to the latest moment—the discovery of the fate of Sir John Franklin and his ships and some of his men. Dr. Hayes, who is well known as the companion of Kane in his last voyage, has also just issued a narrative of an over-ice journey to communicate with a civilized settlement in Greenland; and the Doctor proposes to head another expedition to complete surveys, and, if possible, discover what yet remains to a full knowledge of the fate of the Franklin expedition; perhaps also—who knows?—to sail into the Polar Sea, where Kane and his companions fancied the ships of Franklin might yet be drifting.

The fascination of such a search and of the Arctic life in general, has been manifested during the last hundred years, especially, by the incessant departure of ships for the North, and by the wild, eager interest with which the world hangs upon the story of the voyage. The expeditions of Parry and Ross, of Back and Franklin and Richardson—the detail of strange life among the strange Northern people—the description of the irresistible might of inchoate nature, so to speak, have a charm like that of the "Arabian Nights." Who was ever tired of it? It is the very reverse of fairy land, and yet as interesting. Of late years we have had no man who was so popularly a hero as Dr. Kane. One evening, after his first voyage, when he lectured in the old Tabernacle, the building was crowded by a throng who stared at him with curious wonder, as if he had been the Califf Haroun al Raschid.

And yet to how many—certainly to the Lounger who writes these lines—the whole Arctic world was confused as that same fairy land, or the England of Arthur. There were certain names that had a kind of clear, polar music in them, but no meaning of locality. "Lancaster Sound," "Prince Regent's Inlet," "King William's Land," "Melville Bay," were names as familiar as Camelot and Caerleon, but as exquisitively vague. Somehow M'Clintock's book has cleared them up, and given them a permanent place in memory as they have a fixed one upon the map. Undoubtedly it is not because the other writers are not clear enough if you study them with a map, but that for the first time the Lounger read carefully with the map before him. The style of M'Clintock also is so simple and clear that the dullest of Loungers can easily follow him, and rise with a perfectly lucid idea of the situation of Franklin's party when their ships were finally lost and their fatal retreat began. How gladly one thinks that the untiring heart of a woman secured the knowledge of the explorer's fate! Captain M'Clintock, indeed, the loyal friend both of Lady Franklin and her husband, declares, and Sir Roderick Murchison confirms it in his preface, that Franklin was really the discoverer of the Northwest Passage, and that had he only taken a course to the east instead of the west of King William's Land, he might have sailed through into Behring's Straits; for there was no land, there was only ice between the spot in which the Erebus and Terror were lost, and a point which had been reached by ships from the west.

If he were a discoverer, then, he was an unconscious one. Nor is it an effort in which success is essential to fame. The great moral of the Arctic exploration is this, that as man was sent into the world to replenish and subdue it, so there is no obstacle that he will not overcome in subduing it.—Harper's Weekly.

NATURE OPPOSING THE PROGRESS OF MAN.

The following passage from Mr. Buckle's History of Civilization indicates in glowing colors the obstacles which the prodigality of nature may oppose to the progress of man:

Brazil, which is nearly as large as the whole of Europe, is covered with a vegetation of incredible profusion. Indeed, so rank and luxuriant is the growth, that nature seems to riot in the very wantonness of power. A great part of this immense country is filled with dense and tangled forests, whose noble trees, blossoming in unrivaled beauty, and exquisite with a thousand hues, throw out their produce in endless prodigality. On their summits are perched birds of gorgeous plumage, which nestle in their dark and lofty recesses. Below, their base and trunks are crowned with brushwood, creeping plants, innumerable parasites, all swarming with life. There, too, are myriads of insects of every variety; reptiles of strange and singular form; serpents and lizards, spotted with deadly beauty; all of which find means of existence in this vast workshop and repository of Nature. And, that nothing may be wanting in this land of marvels, the forests are skirted by enormous meadows, which, reckless with heat, and moisture, supply nourishment to countless herds of wild cattle, that browse and latten on the herbage; while the adjoining plains, rich in another form of life, are the chosen abode of the subtlest and most ferocious animals, which prey on each other, but which it might almost seem no human power can hope to extirpate.

But, amid this pomp and splendor of Nature, no place is left for man; he is reduced to insignificancy by the majesty with which he is surrounded. The forces that oppose him are so formidable, that he has never been able to make head against them—never able to rally against their accumulated pressure. The whole of Brazil, notwithstanding its immense apparent advantages, has always remained entirely uncivilized; its inhabitants wandering savages, incompetent to resist those obstacles which the very bounty of Nature had put in their way. In their country, the physical causes are so active, and do their work on a scale of such unrivaled magnitude, that it has hitherto been found impossible to escape from the effects of their united action. The progress of agriculture is stopped by impassable forests, and the harvests are destroyed by innumerable insects. The mountains are too high to scale; the rivers too wide to bridge. Everything is contrived to repress the human mind, and keep back its rising ambition. It is thus that the energies of Nature have hampered the spirit of man. And the mind, cowed by the unequal struggle, has not only been unable to advance, but, without foreign aid, it would undoubtedly have receded. Brazil, the country where, of all others, physical resources are most powerful, where both vegetable and animals are most abundant, where the soil is watered by the noblest rivers, and the coast studded by the finest harbors—this immense territory, which is more than twelve times the size of France, contains a population not exceeding six millions of people. Professor Ansted adds to this his testimony to the effect that the native Indians seem irredeemable, and sunk in the most wretched barbarism; and that there appears no prospect whatever of any improvement in the district, since man can find no spot on which to commence its operations.

PROBABLE DOWNFALL OF AUSTRIA.

The London correspondent of the New York Tribune, in his letter of Feb. 3d, writes as follows: When, after the battle of Solferino, Napoleon gave at Villa Franca a respite to Francis Joseph, Austria had still one precious chance for her salvation. Her armies had been defeated, her finances were ruined, Lombardy lost, and Hungary disaffected; but a liberal, straightforward policy, might have achieved wonders. But Francis Joseph threw his chance away. In the first moment of disappointment he indeed promised reforms; he dismissed Count Grunne from the palace, and Baron Hach from the ministry; he talked of economy, and Huber, the new Minister, found it necessary to study the demands and aspirations of the Hungarians. A few weeks, however, were sufficient to set all hopes of reform at naught. Admiral Rauscher, the late tutor of the Emperor, explained to him that concessions lead always to revolutions. Mr. Hubner was soon dismissed, and Count Grunne returned to one of the dependencies of the palace, into the Stallburg, as chief equerry of the Emperor, and furnished there an apartment for Miss Kate Renz, the daughter of the manager of an equestrian amphitheater. The fair damsel had long before attracted the attention of the Emperor, and had even accompanied him to the Italian campaign, and ridden at his side at the fatal field of Solferino. But she had been discarded by her imperial lover during his short fit of reform. The Jesuits knew well how to make use of any lever for attaining their ends, and thus Count Grunne and Kate Renz gained Francis Joseph once more over to despotism and the Concordat. The orgies held in the Imperial Stallburg have now completely demoralized the Emperor, who since the last campaign has into the bargain learned to get drunk every day. Despised as a man, despised as an Emperor, Francis Joseph is still blind to the dangers which surround him. By a wanton disregard of the political situation, he has managed to isolate Austria in Europe. His relations with Russia are cold, he quarrels with Prussia; he is hostile to France, and England forsakes him. Instead of trying to conciliate the deeply disaffected Hungarians, he has managed to rouse there the Protestants to a religious enthusiasm, which now braves persecution and seeks martyrdom. His decree for the organization of the Protestant churches was unanimously rejected by the Protestants of Hungary; still he insists upon enforcing it, and seems to be anxious to find a new pretext for publishing martial law and erecting gibbets. He brutally insulted the Hungarian deputation, and the return of the deputation to Hungary was greeted at Pesth with enthusiasm. Every body now sees that the die is cast, and that the year 1860 must finally set at rest the question of Hungary.

REMINISCENCES OF DEFOE.

While Addison, in the early part of the eighteenth century, was doing what no man ever could do or ever has done better, and was engaged upon the famous eighth volume of the Spectator, there appeared a proclamation in the London Gazette, charging a seditious pamphlet upon "a middle-sized spare man, about forty years old, of a brown complexion, and dark-brown hair, but wears a wig: a hooked nose: a sharp chin: gray eyes: a large mole near his mouth, owner of the brick and pantile works near Tilbury fort in Essex."

The spare man was found, and sentenced to stand in the pillory; and stood there—while the crowd cheered him, and drank his health, and threw flowers at him. He was a man whom we might hardly have loved. He seemed peculiarly made for his own time rather than for all time. The mention of his name excites no special tenderness, like the names of Steele and Goldsmith, of Fielding and Scott—his mere name is not half so famous as Addison's, and yet he has written the most permanently popular book in English literature.

He lost in the game of politics, in which Addison won; yet he was not a politician in any mean sense. He was a tough Presbyterian and London tradesman, who had been a grim moral gladiator all his life: one of the stalwart Englishmen who, at every period of English history, have transmitted the torch of civil and religious liberty unimpaired and brightly burning. King William valued no counselor more, and had no more faithful friend. But having lost—having, at the age of fifty-four, to begin life anew—Daniel Defoe descended from the pillory, wiped from his brow the sweat of his long and bitter struggle, and did begin life anew by writing "Robinson Crusoe."

It is a story without a heroine, and without the usual resources of the novel. There is no lovemaking—no sentiment—no philosophy—no moralizing in it. But Dr. Johnson asks, in the name of the world, if there was ever anything else written by mere man that was wished longer by its readers. Other literary philosophers and critics say that, of all works of fiction, it is perhaps the most interesting and instructive. Forester calls Defoe the father of the English novel; and not only does the French boy, and the German, and the Spanish, and the Italian, and every European and American child, know "Robinson Crusoe" even to our own day. It is in the detailed development of real life, and the influence of character upon circumstances and fate, that "Robinson Crusoe" is so superior to any book that had then appeared. There is not a touch of what we call "the ideal" in it, as there is in "Peter Wilkins" and in many other stories of the school. Every boy feels, in reading it, that "Robinson Crusoe" did nothing that he could not easily do, and therefore it is like the best history.

A PROTEST AGAINST EARLY RISING.

Dr. Hall, in the February number of his Journal of Health, says:

One of the very worst economies of time is that filched from necessary sleep. The wholesale but blind commendation of early rising, is as mischievous in practice as it is errant in theory. Early rising is a crime against the noblest part of our physical nature, unless it is preceded by an early retiring. Multitudes of business men in large cities count it a saving of time if they can make a journey of a hundred or two miles at night by steamboat or railway. It is a ruinous mistake. It never fails to be followed by a want of general well-feeling for a week afterwards. When a man leaves home on business, it is always important that he should have his wits about him; that the mind should be fresh and vigorous, the spirit lively, buoyant and cheerful. No man can say that it is thus with him after a night on a railroad, or on the skulf of a steamboat.

The first great recipe for sound, connected and refreshing sleep, is physical exercise. Toil is the price of sleep.

We caution parents, particularly, not to allow their children to be waked up in the morning; let nature wake them up, she will not do it prematurely; but have a care that they go to bed at an early hour; let it be earlier and earlier, until it is found that they wake up of themselves in full time to dress for breakfast. Being waked up early, and allowed to engage in difficult or any studies late and just before retiring, has given many a beautiful and promising child a brain fever, or determined ordinary ailments to the production of water on the brain.

WASHINGTON "IN FUN."

Who has ever conceived of Washington as humorous, or "full of fun?" Yet there is now going on that interminable journey, "the rounds of the press," a reminiscence of him that illustrates not only his business method and wisdom, but also a rich latent humor, not generally credited to him. It is a contract with his gardener, one Philip Barter, who seems to have had such a taste for the "ever-joyful" bottle as to be unrelishable. The contract is, formally drawn up, in verbose legal terms, signed by Washington, and by Barter, who could only make his mark, and also by witnesses, George A. Washington and Tobias Lear. The body of it is as follows:

Articles of agreement made this twelfth day of April, Anno Domini one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven, by and between George Washington, Esq., of the parish of Truro, in the county of Fairfax, State of Virginia, on the one part, and Phillip Barter, gardener, on the other—witness, that the said Phillip Barter, for and in consideration of the covenants hereafter mentioned, doth promise and agree to serve the said George Washington for the term of one year, as a gardener, and that he will, during the said time, conduct himself soberly, diligently, and honestly; and that he will faithfully and industriously perform all and every part of his duty as a gardener, to the best of his knowledge and abilities, and that he will not at any time suffer himself to be disguised with liquor except on times hereinafter mentioned.

In consideration of these things being well and duly performed on the part of Philip Barter, the said George Washington doth agree to allow him (the said Philip) the same kind and quality of provisions he has heretofore had, and likewise, annually, a decent suit of clothes, befitting a man in his station; to consist of coat, vest and breeches; a working jacket and breeches of homespun, besides two white shirts; three check do.; two linen overhauls; as many pairs of shoes as are necessary for him; four dollars at Christmas, with which he may be drunk four days and four nights; two dollars at Easter to effect the same purpose; two dollars at Whitsuntide to be drunk for two days; and a dram in the morning and a drink of grog at dinner at noon.

SKETCH OF MR. CURRY OF ALABAMA.

A Washington correspondent of the New York Times has the following description of this distinguished Representative of Alabama:

"Mr. Curry is a very striking man, and your correspondent regrets that he came just one day too late to hear the famous speech by him, made early in the session, which still rings in the ears of Congress. He is rather tall, exceedingly well built and graceful, with very thick and well pomaded dark hair, combed straight back from the forehead without partition; a broad and acute brow; shading dark eyes full of electricity and penetration; a sharp, gimlet-pattern of a nose, pushing its way into all proper subjects; a long upper lip; resting on a strong and well-shaped mouth; small ears, a pale complexion, gold spectacles jauntily worn, and

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21, 1860.

SENDING OUT ACCOUNTS.

We are now sending out the accounts of the Advocate as rapidly as possible. We send a list to the preacher, and individual accounts to the subscribers, at the same time. We send accounts to all who have ont paid to January, 1861, it matters not how small the amount; because we wish all accounts to begio and end with the year. We are as careful as possible; bnt should there be mistakes, let us know immediately. Let all pay up to 1861, and the accounts will be much more convenient to our subscribers, and also to ourselves.

ONLY A DOLLAR AND A-HALF.

From the 1st of April until the end of the year, the price of the Advocate will be only $1 50. With the first issue in April we shall increase the edition, so as to be able to supply new subscribers from that number on. How many new subscribers can our preachers and friends furnish us at that price? Do, brethren and friends, make an effort, a general effort, a vigorous effort, an enthusiastic effort, a long-continued effort, to largely increase our list.

A COLLEGE HISTORY.

In the summer of 1852 the writer of this article, theo pastor of the Methodist Church at Tuskegee, Ala., attended the Commencement of Oak Bowery Female College, in the quiet and beautiful village of Oak Bowery, in Chambers county, Ala., under the Presidency of that elegant Christian gentleman and devoted mioister, Rev. Thos. B. Russell. The only Institntion of learnlog of any promise, besides this, within the bonnds of the Alabama Conference of the Methodist Church, was the Centenary Institute at Summerfield, Dallas conoty, the first edncational institotion ever reared by that Conference. The Oak Bowery institution had beeo recently inangurated for the benefit of East Alabama, Centenary being intended for the centre and the west. Although the Oak Bowery school had enjoyed a good degree of prosperity, yet upon a consideration of its financial basis and prospects, it was evident that it did not promise to realize the ideal of the female institution demanded by the wants of E. Alabama. A friendly consultation was held between the writer, Pres. Russell, and Hon. David Clopton, who was the Commencement orator. Mr. Russell admitted doubts of the success of Oak Bowery. Mr. Clopton and the writer then resolved to inaogurate the enterprise of establishing in Tuskegee a female college eqoal to any lo the United States.

On returning home, it was proposed to the people. The seed was living, the soil was good, and the springtime had come. The college was resolved loto shape oo paper at a public meeting. Many doubted, however. The Alabama Conference, in grave session, doubted. The writer was the agent, not by appointment, hot side-wise. The "long agony" of putting the enterprise through to success, is a history. Souls were tried. The cream of some lives was skimmed. Some brethren of other churches opposed and hindered. Methodists of other places wanted the college located with them, and were tardy in helping. Many of all churches, and some of no church, preached up that old delusion and impossibility, the nnion of all creeds in the same institntion. The enterprise went forward, and reached a point from whence light could be seen on the other side of the surrounding gloom. Money was raised lo astonishing amonnts, for those times. Nothing like it had been seen before.—Alabama was not then awake; she is now. The writer went to Texas as the editor of the Christian Advocate at Galveston. Went out of a long agooy loto a longer one. Rev. Mark S. Andrews, the succeeding pastor, be came also the succeeding agent; and he succeeded in more senses than one. Rev. Samuel Armstrong, now of the Louisiana Conference, succeeded him.

And now, there stands Tuskegee Female College—"beautiful for situation," for architecture, for social surroundings, and for the lovely and highly cultivated young ladies that annually go out from her halls to beautify nnd bless the land. It is yonng lo years, and therefore not known widely; bot its superior, we venture to say, for sound, elegant, Christian woman-culture, is not to be found in this country. That rare man, Rev. A. A. Lipscomb, D.D., has been at its head ever since it was organized. He is a second Arnold, and his school is for girls in America what Rugby was for boys in England. Recently he resigned the Presidency, but continues his Lectureship of Art, Poetry, and Literature. Bnt before he resigned, he had trained aoother rare man for the place, Rev. Geo. W. F. Price, A. M. They were David and Jonathan before, and while they remain together it is a sort of joint presidency, like the Emperorship of Japan. There is, however, no danger that "hara-kari" will have to be committed in their case.

Bnt we are in advance of our story. While the Tnskegee female college enterprise was going on, Mr. Price, who was then Principal of the female Institntion at Auburn, Ala., inspired by the movement, got up a memorial to the Alabama Conference, to establish a Conference male college. We recollect the grim sympathy with which we corresponded with him from Galveston on the subject. We had a little experience. The Conference was partner in La Grange College, now the prosperous Wesleyan University at Florence, but had no college exclusively its own. The hope of Mr. Price, and of those who joined him, was to have the college located at Auburn. The Conference entertained the proposition, but would not determine the location, nor even commit itself to the enterprise, until a specified amonot, $100,000 we believe, had been snbscribed. A board of commissioners was appointed to receive proposals and snbscriptioos, and determine npon the location. Greensboro and Auburn were the competitors for the location. The excitement ran high. A newspaper war ensued. Snbscriptions were heavy on both sides. The whole country was interested. We could feel the nndnlations at Galveston. The time came. Greensboro being the richest, presented the commissioners the largest bonos. It was a difficult decision the commissioners had to make. The college was located at Greensboro, and the commissioners agreed to recommend the Conference to locate a college at Auburn. As to what the Conference did—well, we were not present. We were in Galveston. Greensboro, however, was adopted as the college of the Conference, according to the original programme. Auburn, undismayed, went forward, and built a college any how, and at the last session of the Alabama Conference, it was adopted also. They have made the fortune of each other.—Let the brotherly rivalry continne, in union and peace.

"What hath God wrought?" Centenary, the old mother school, is one of the most successful female institutions in the country, and steadily growing. Hundreds of young men and young ladies receive a thorough and pious education there every year. The Southern University at Greensboro is in successful operation, and will raise its endowment to half a million. Of Tuskegee, in this article, and of the University in previous articles, we have spoken. In addition to these, fine male and female institutions have been built at Glennville, and one at Channcenggee, and are now prosperous.

And the East Alabama Male College at Auburn has its building completed, has a large number of students the first term, and will raise its endowment to $150,000. The Auburn Signal gives a good report of this institotion. It says: "It has just entered npon the exercises of its second term, after a vacation of some weeks, including the Christmas holidays. We are pleased to know that there has been quite a large nnmber of accessions. Its friends are greatly gratified, and will, no donht, rally to it and co-operate with it, with incrensing zeal and liberality. The Institntion is organized, and is ably and skilfully conducted in all its internal appointments and arrangements. The Faculty, in addition to their other qualifications, are industrious and zealous, and are already placing the Institntion in the very highest position of character, efficiency and nsefolness. 'A high moral standard is sought to be reached here; nod it seems to he no object of special anxiety with the Faculty to guard well the morals of the young men committed to their charge. The College is well snpplied with Apparatus nnd a Cabinet, nod a library is now being formed fully equal to all the wants of the students. Pres. Sasnet is every way a first rate officer, nnd as a man, in all his relations, a model for the youth of our State. The whole Faculty, indeed, deserve the fullest confidence and warmest sympathies of the public."

Since the beginning of the movemeot to build the Tnskegee Female College, less thao eight years ago, upwards of $600,000 has been raised by the Methodist Church in the Alabama Coofereoce, for educational purposes alone. They have learned how to do these things. Instead of subscribing a hnndred dollars or so, single individuals endow Professorships to the tune of twenty-five thousand dollars each. What is better, Alabama Methodists are doing just as liberal things for all other interests as they are for that of education.

CHIEF JUSTICE LUMPKIN AND CHRISTIAN UNITY.

Hon. Joseph Henry Lumpkin, one of Georgia's noblest sons, who, since the first organization of the Supreme Court of that State, has been continued as Chief-Justice, writes a letter to Rev. Joshua Knowles, editor of the Educational Repository and Family Monthly, in which occur the following wise and Christian words: "Although a Presbyterian by Church relation, it has been my happy lot to enjoy throughout my Christian life—now nnmbering more than thirty years—the fruits of the Savior's Sacerdotal Prayer, offered the same night in which he was betrayed, that all his followers might be one, that the world might believe that the Father hath sent him. I love, ont of a fervent heart, all who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and who are laboring for the coming of his blessed Kingdom. When I am with the Methodists I am a Methodist; and when with other denominations I am one of them, so far as I am permitted to be. My heart swelled with pride—laudably I hope—while I was conducted through your Book Concern, at Nashville. Your people have contributed munificently to the cause of Education within the last quarter of a century. This is another movement in the right direction. I bid you God speed in the praiseworthy enterprise."

Since readiog these words we have been qoestioning mentally as follows: which is aptest to live in the hearts of the Christian people of this land, and be qnoted in future christian assemblies, and be embalmed in poetry and literatnre, and be chosen as part of the epitaph of the writer—this simple utterance of a Christinn layman, or the keenest and most sarcastic "hit" of the most eminent ecclesiastical contronersinlist in the land? Then we questioned again, as follows: although the "Holy Catholic Church" is divided into different branches, as society is into differeot families, and though they entertain different views in reference to the accidents and non-essentials of Christianity, while they all hold to the head, which is Christ—yet, nntwithstanding, would they not all live in peace, and harmoniously labor for the glory of Christ, through the success of their respective branches, if the few militant preachers nnd editors who afflict all the churches were to cease their profitless warfare? Theo other questions arose: is not the usnal excuse for these religious controversies—that they are in self-defence, a specious nnd deceptive one? Do not both sides make the same plea? And when, as is often the case, the plea is just, and the self-defence party has been greatly provoked, is any good done by the conflict? Is the gratification of local and personal desire to chastise an aggressive member of another church, to be accepted as representative of the church to which the self-constituted Gideon belongs? Is it not generally the case that the self-styled defender of the faith is actnated by egotism, vanity, self-conceit, and an unsanctified desire for a combat of some kind, rather than by a desire to do good, nnd glorify God? Are oot many of the positions taken, and arguments used, such as are not in harmony with the received standards of the Church, and with her authoritative interpretations of the Bible? And yet is not the Church held responsible far both the spirit and doctrine of those who thus represent her? Ought not this popular plea of the necessity of controversy in order to self-defence to be abandoned? If others do wrong, attack us, aod disturb the peace of Zion, should we not attend to our own duty, and follow peace, and thus set them a better example? If teaching on controverted points bo necessary, should it not be given in the nsual modes and tone of the pulpit, and lecture-room, and press, without any controversy at all? And, finally, should not the Christian press be free from this everlasting din of war between the professed children of the Prince of Peace, which is the grief of all good Christians, the disappointment of all good citizens, and the disgust of all who seek to elevate nnd refine the popular Christian Literature of the land?

These are mere qnestions. Who will answer?

THE COLLEGE A RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATION.

Not long since we published an editorial in these columns on "Preaching in our Colleges," in which we took the ground that the President should be the College Preacher, and that preaching should be regarded as one of his highest functions. Not long after, in an article on Dr. Wightman's inaugural at the opening of the Southern University, we indicated the same views, and were happy to find that his views were in harmony with ours. The rapid increase of male colleges in the South, their surprising growth and prosperity within the last ten years, and the power they are to exercise upon the character of the present and future generations of the young men of the South, give to this subject an increasing and solemn importance. Religion is the health and salvation of all character and all institutions. Especially is this true in this country. Not that religion is not equally necessary everywhere, and among all men. But religion is especially necessary to everything American. The war of the Revolution, the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and the Union, the Farewell Address of Washington, the ideas and institutions of the entire government, are all based upon and pervaded by a strong religious faith and sentiment. All that is peculiarly excellent in American character and institutions will pass away whenever they lose the spirit and saving health of religion.

These things being true, it follows that our young men ought to be religiously educated. It should be a matter of care and solicitude with all concerned that there should be no such thing as education without religion. Indeed, there is, there can be, no true education without it, and, therefore, both for the sake of religion and education, all schools and colleges should be organized upon a religious basis, should be complete religious organizations within themselves. Of course no elaboration of this argument is necessary in the case of the colleges belonging to the different churches; though it may be necessary, however, to stir up, by way of remembrance, the minds of many concerned in them.

One of the most encouraging indications of the times in this direction is seen in the strong religious influence pervading the University of Virginia; although it is not religiously organized, as every college should be—the great objection to State institutions. There is no provision for preaching, or for religious instruction of any kind, by the University, as such—everything relating to religion is left to the voluntary principle. But Professors, as well as students, unite in meeting the religious wants of the institution. There are about six hundred students, this term.

There is an active Young Men's Christian Association, and by it the whole field of labor is divided into seventeen districts. In each district there is a committee to establish prayer meetings, to distribute tracts, to induce their fellow-students to attend the prayer meetings and church, to endeavor to bring them into the Association, and, in short, to 'watch for souls as they that must give an account.' These district prayer meetings are held on some evening in the week, during time taken from the hours of recreation, and yet, notwithstanding this fact, such is the bold they have taken, and such the power of the personal influence of the members of the Association, that they have an average attendance of two hundred students—sixty or seventy of these are not professors of religion. On Sabbath afternoon they have a union prayer meeting, which is largely attended. Every Sabbath they have fifty young men actively engaged in preaching the gospel; some in the Sabbath-schools at the University, and others as missionaries to different parts of the surrounding country. There is a morning Sabbath-school in the chapel of the University, and in the afternoon a school for colored children. In both departments they have the efficient co-operation of the ladies of the University. In another part of the building, a meeting is held for instructing adult negroes.

Some of the missionary stations are five miles distant from the University. To supply these destitute localities with the Bread of Life, the self-denying followers of the meek and lowly Jesus forego the privileges of the sanctuary during the day. The plan pursued at these places is to collect the children in Sabbath-schools, the adults in Bible classes, and all in meetings for prayer and exhortation. Also, to visit the families, distribute tracts," &c.

We trust to see the day when every College in the land, whether formally organized on a religious basis or not, is actually a sort of Church of the living God. Let the young men of the South be religiously educated, and the hopes expressed in another column will be realized, and the attendant fears abated.

SUPPRESSION OF THE "UNIVERS."

A few weeks since, the telegraphic advices from Europe informed us of the suppression of the principal organ in Paris and in Europe of Ultramontanism and Jesuitism. The cause was that it had published the Encyclical Letter of the Pope, which French editors were expected to lenve unnoticed, it being a document threatening, in the choicest language at command, spiritual perdition to the Emperor. On the same day a decree was signed at the Tuileries by which "the journal l'Univers" was "suppressed." The Univers had received its two "avertnings," and still went on craving and earning the full penalty. That penalty is not absolute but only local extinction. Already prepared far extirpation from the soil of France, the Univers cheerfully becomes an emigrant, and crossing the frontier to a short and convenient distance, sets up again in Brussels. Though the report of the Minister of the Interior, on which the Emperor's decree proceeded, says not a word of the offensive Encyclical, hnt passed it over in that mournful or contemptuous silence with which the French journals were desired to treat it, yet it is evident that M. Billault had calculated on the appearance of the Letter in the Univers, and had got his prologue ready beforehand to justify the Imperial fulmination against the offender, when he should dare to make the capital of France recho the thnnder of the Vatican. The decree, dated the 29th nlt., published in the Monitenr, at Paris, signed by M. Billault, says:

The Univers was the organ of a religious party whose pretensions were every day becoming in more direct opposition to the privileges of the State. The incessant efforts of this party tend to dominate the French clergy, to confound the religious opinions, to agitate the country and to undermine the fundamental bases on which the relations between the church and civil society are founded. The war made against our most ancient and national traditions, is most dangerous to religion, which it compromises, because the French clergy have never separated their respectful submission to the Holy See in spiritnal matters from their duties of patriotism. The religious press had misunderstood the mission of moderation and peace which it had to accomplish. The Univers, above all, insensible to the warnings which have been given it, goes every day to the extreme limits of violence. It is to it we owe those violent discussions in which regretable attacks are made in answer to its provocations, and the scandal occasioned by which is a matter of profound sadness for the clergy as for all good citizens.

The true interests of the church, as well as those of public peace, imperiously demand that an end should be put to these excesses. A government founded on the national will does not fear discussion, but it ought to be able to protect effectually, against those who would overthrow or compromise them, public order, the independence of the State, and the authority and dignity of religion.

It is with that object that I propose to your majesty to apply to the Univers the 22d article of the decree of February 17, 1852, and to pronounce the suppression of that periodical. The doctrines and the pretensions which that journal would resuscitate among us are not new; the old French monarchy has always energetically combatted them; great bishops have sometimes given powerful assistance in the struggle. Your majesty will not show yourself less careful than your predecessors in making respected the principles consecrated by our national traditions.

The Monitenr of the 31st says that the government had only deplored the irritating character of the controversy on religious questions. The Univers having been suppressed, any violent articles in reply to its provocation are henceforth without motive and without excuse. The whole press will understand that these grave questions must be discussed with that quietness and moderation which are required by the interests of the public peace and respect for religion." This is the most significant fact yet recorded in regard to the change of the policy of the Emperor. The Univers has long been the most powerful organ of the Roman Catholic Church in France. It has ever been in the hands of the Jesuits, and has always been found in favor of the most thorough Ultra-Montane doctrines and measures—an enemy alike to all true constitutional liberty in the State and independence in the Church. It has been as much opposed to the idea of a Gallican Church as of a French Republic. It was regarded as the most pestiferous journal in Europe. Its suppression is the most hopeful proof we have yet seen that Louis Napoleon is not going to allow himself to be brow-beaten by the Hierarchy of Rome. It is incredible that Mr. Veuillot, Pius IX, and Napoleon III. can ever be one again, as they were but lately. We have made allowance for the Emperor of the French, as being religiously an honest Romanist, though politically too much enlightened not to see that the temporal power of the Papacy creates the plague spot in Italy. Now, however, he has personal cause to question whether the Bishop and Sovereign of Rome is infallible in spiritual any more than in temporal matters. In fact, the spiritual infallibility is both questioned and conditioned, that is, virtually denied, in the authoritative article which appeared in the Constitutional. Louis Napoleon is getting fresh light, and doubtless sees and feels much more than he discloses.

Pius IX. makes the return of the Legations, by force of the Emperor's arms, to his obedience the condition of Louis Napoleon's individual salvation, if there is any meaning in those masked menaces—"Actuated by that paternal charity with which we are bound to watch over the eternal safety of all, we recalled to his mind that we all should one day have to render a strict account before the tribunal of Christ, and undergo a most severe judgment, and that therefore each of us ought to do everything what depended on him to merit mercy rather than justice. Such are the things which, among others, we answered to the very great Emperor of the French; and we consider it our duty to communicate them to you, and to the whole Catholic universe."

The Univers has no right to complain, for there has been no journal so hostile to the principles of literary, as well as political and religious freedom. Pius IX. may bewail the silencing of his organ in France, but cannot deny that from his point of view it is the essential prerogative of power to paralyze mind. When he permits the Scriptures themselves, and independent periodicals, to be published and circulated in Rome, he may exclaim against the supression of his faithful journal in Paris.

THE YOUNG MEN OF THE SOUTH.

The young men of the South are at once a cause of pride, of pleasure, and of anxiety, to the Christian citizen and patriot. Inheriting all the elements of noble spirit and character, surrounded by all the influences and facilities of a clime most genial and beautiful, citizens of a country abounding in present and prospective wealth, they have within their compass a glorious destiny, while, at the same time, they are in danger of a deplorable degeneracy. The greatest advantages are always attended by the greatest dangers. Adam and Eve, one day the residents at Eden, were, the next, outcasts upon the earth.

The young men of the South have all the motives necessary to inspire them to strive for noble and useful lives. But it is probable that but few of them have fully felt the force of one motive we now propose to mention, viz: their relation to the civilization of their section of the country, and the interest that section consequently has in their character. In addition to their own aspirations and hopes—in addition to the love and pride and hopes of their fathers and mothers and friends—the South, whose sons they are and whose citizens and representatives they are to become, looks anxiously to her future, as shadowed forth in their early promise. Her peculiar civilization, and the institutions and ideas that constitute its elements, are to be judged in the eyes of an antagonistic world by their character and destiny. They are to be the fruits of Southern civilization, and the tree is to be known by its fruits.

Let the young men of the South remember that they are to represent a civilization, a social organization, and corresponding institutions, ideas, character and manners, unknown elsewhere in the bounds of the civilized world. Let them remember also, that this is peculiarly and eminently the age of philosophic inquiry, that the philosophy of society and government is just passing out of a rudimental development, that every principle and institution is judged by its results, and that truth is mighty and will prevail. Already are Southern institutions and character being vindicated. European opinion, as manifested by the tone of the London Times, and other indices of public sentiment, is already favorably modified. And the same happy tendency is becoming more and more manifest among our fellow citizens of the North. Time, greater facilities of intercourse, the increase of knowledge, and the right development of the promising elements of Southern character, are the only things necessary to gain the victory in that warfare with semi-infidel error and fanaticism which now agitates the country and threatens the Republic.

In future numbers we hope to be able to elaborate the thought here suggested more in detail. In what we now say, and in what we may say in future, we are inspired by no sectional spirit. We simply aim to do our duty to our whole country, by doing our duty to a particular class of its citizens.

WONDERS OF THE FAR WEST.

Western Texas, that is, the extreme west, and the regions beyond, even to the Pacific, are becoming more and more known, as emigration, and scientific, military, and railroad explorations progress. We recollect with much pleasure the account given us in Galveston, one cold day, in the winter of 1855, in a conversation of an hour or two, by Rev. D. D. Lore, on his return from his missionary tour in New Mexico. We have felt an increased interest in that direction ever since. The Overland Mail route, the telegraph enterprise to the Pacific, and the Pacific railroad bill, all now agitated in Congress, have increased this interest. Recently, Dr. A. S. Newberry delivered a lecture in Washington City on the expedition of 1857–58, which was ordered out by Congress, for the purpose of attempting, through the navigation of the Colorado (not the Colorado in Texas, but in New Mexico), a more ready and convenient access to the Indian regions of North-western New Mexico, inhabited by the Navajoes, and also to the Southern parts of the Territory of Utah. The National Intelligencer gives a report of the Lecture.

The Colorado is about one thousand miles long, and was ascended by Lieut. Ives' expedition in the little steamer Explorer, fitted up with special reference to the character of the trip it was to undertake, for the distance of five hundred miles. In passing up the Colorado, the scenery and surroundings were often of a very peculiar and even mythical sort of character. Parts of the distance through which the Colorado flows appear like vast caverns, so that a traveller on the table lands may see water for days together and yet perish of thirst, for such is the vastness of the depth to the water from the summit of the river's banks, or rather such is the perpendicularity of those banks that they can, for the most part, neither be ascended nor descended. The vast ravines or passages through which this river descends to the Gulf of California are termed canons, whilst the table lands are called mesas, a Spanish word, but now quite thoroughly naturalized among the Anglo-Saxon inhabitants and travelers in those western regions. Some of the canons through which the Colorado and its tributaries pass, have banks with perpendicular walls fully three thousand feet in height, but this is in the lower part of its course; further up, as table land overlops table land, these canons increase to five thousand feet, and at one portion of the river there is a chasm with perpendicular sides not less than six thousand feet high.

The tributaries of the Colorado as the Grand and Green rivers, have lofty banks of porphyry, of a red tinge, and except occasionally, along the edges of the stream below, exhibit no signs of animal existence or vegetable product. Though in many respects sublime and grand beyond the power of verbal description, there is a devastation, a desolation in the landscape, that begets no desire ever to visit these scenes again. The whole country looks as if it belonged to some other planet than this. On ascending the Colorado, and observing the mountain sides, all the ribs of which the earth's crust is geologically composed may be seen rising one above the other. First, and below all, is the granite, then the palæozoic, the carboniferous, the new red sandstone, cretaceous, and, on the table lands or plains, the sedimentary. On approaching the Rocky Mountains, these strata lose their regular horizontal arrangement, and become disposed vertically, plainly showing that the country here has suffered some great convulsion. This the lecturer deemed to be that of the elevation of the mountain chain from the general level of the rest of the continent. He does not think these great chains were the result of erosion, which might nevertheless have been the case with some others, as the Cumberland mountains, for instance.

In his travels in New Mexico considerable areas of excellent soil were found along the banks of the river San Juan, a tributary of the Colorado. Much of it is of high fertility, a sort of neutral ground for the Utahs and Navajoes, through which passed a clear, beautiful stream, the San Juan, abounding in trout. This is south of the junction of the Grand and Green rivers, and the fertile strip runs, say at a mile wide, for a distance of two hundred miles, and is susceptible of a considerable population. At another place on this river the party found plentiful evidences of former populousness, where there is not now a living soul. Ruins exist which indicate that a population of at least one hundred thousand, and probably two or three times that number, had lived in peace and plenty there, but from atmospheric changes and the excessive drainage by means of those river drains above spoken of which run hundreds or thousands of feet below the level of the table lands, the surface had become bereft of a supply of the fluid indispensable to existence. In all directions remains of human dwellings, with walls built of square and even polished stones, and handsomely plastered and filled up within, may be met with, and broken pottery in the greatest profusion. It has been said that the depopulation of these regions took place when the people were called south to defend the country against the inroads of the Spaniards at the time of the conquest of Mexico, a fact which is probably only in part true.

It is reasonable to suppose that the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico are the descendants of these ancient inhabitants, since there is a general similarity between their dwellings and these ruins already referred to. But the Pueblos along the Rio Grande and in Eastern New Mexico have, by intercourse with the Spaniards, contracted many habits and ideas, particularly of a religious character—for they are ardent Catholics—from their conquerors, and thus it is only among the remote Moquis that we have an opportunity of seeing the true aborigines of New Mexico in their native and unsophisticated state. They live far west of the Rio Grande, beyond the country of the Navajoes, in a dry region, placing their villages on the tops of lofty, isolated strips of table land, like islands in an ocean. For water they depend on reservoirs, most carefully constructed and preserved. These are in the crevices of the mountains, and are formed by the dribbling of the water from small springs. The Moquis are a mild, well-behaved people, exceedingly industrious, neat and moral, and their exterior shows them to be quite disconnected in race with the hawk-billed Indians of the more eastern regions of North America. The Moquis raise corn and cotton sufficient for their uses, besides vegetables and edibles. They worship the sun and moon with great devotion, and have a very high veneration for water—which is to them so valuable an article—or rather for the good spirits that preside over water and springs. As may be supposed, their food is simple, their bread being mostly the tortilla, a very thin cake rolled up and eaten with salt aler being dipped in water. In the art of weaving blankets they are very dexterous and successful, and several specimens of their work in this way were exhibited.

DR. BASCOM AND DR. BOND.

In the recent controversy between the Richmond Advocate, of the Southern Church, and the Baltimore Advocate, of the Northern Church, Dr. Bond, the editor of the latter, and the son of the famous Dr. Bond who, as editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal, divided the Church, seems to have forgotten, in his heat, that propriety which has heretofore characterized his course.—He gives, without an attempt at proof, or a conscionsness, seemingly, of the necessity of it, the following as an "item of secret history."

Hedor, afterwards Bishop Bascom, of the Church South, was a confederate of Alfred Griffith in the preparation of that awful resolution. Dr. Bascom was bitterly disposed against Bishop Andrew, and resolved to deal heavily with him. He opened his heart to Mr. Griffith, and after long consultation, suggested to him to prepare the resolutions; Mr. Griffith agreed to do so.—It was arranged that on the next morning, a half hour before the meeting of Conference, Dr. Bascom would meet Mr. Griffith in the vestibule of the church, and take charge of the resolutions which were to be offered by him and seconded by Mr. H.—Accordingly he was in the vestibule and received the resolutions but, after reading them, he said that he had come to the conclusion during the night to take no active part in the matter. Mr. Griffith turned from him, and seeing Mr. Davis stated the facts, when Mr. Davis put his name to the paper—and, at the winding up, Dr. Bascom stood forth as the writer of the grandiose protest against his own resolutions, and became Bishop of the Southern Church.

That there is not one word of truth in the above, we are fully satisfied. Dr. Bascom's character and entire history contradict it. More than this, his colleagates from the South, several of whom we have heard speak of it since the publication of the above, contradict it flatly and unthoritatively. Dr. Bascom went up to the General Conference of 1844 fully foreseeing the result, anticipating the necessity of division, stood firmly to the South throughout the contest, and had so thoroughly studied the whole subject, and was so entirely imbued, with the argument of the case, that he was able to present his immortal "Protest" of the minority almost as soon as he could accomplish the mere labor of its penmanship. In this matter, Dr. Bond is simply expending some of his inherited hatred of Bascom. But, really, it is a hyenaism, a species of thuggery, we had not expected of him. He tells a tale that never was heard of while Bascom was alive. During the whole contest succeeding the General Conference of 1844, while Bascom was provoking the deadliest opposition from the North by his writings on the slavery question, this argument, strangely enough, was never hurled at him. But now that he is dead, and when the two wings of Methodism are comparatively at peace, without a word of proof, or a shadow of plausibility; this story is trumped up, for what object a generous and noble mind finds it difficult to conceive.

THE SOUTHERN CHURCH AND AFRICA.

Rev. C. W. Thomas, whose book on the West Coast of Africa has just been published, is writing, in the Southern Christian Advocate, a series of articles in advocacy of the establishment of missions by the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church in that country.—He recommends, as mission-stations, particularly, St. Paul, the capital of the Portuguese colony of Loando, and Careysburg in Liberia. The only difficulties he apprehends are, the machinations of the Romanists in the first, and those of the abolitionists in the last. He thinks the first may be avoided; of the last we have no fear; negroes have a preference for Southern men and slave-holders, the world over. We do not see, we never did see, any reason against our establishing missions in Africa. Indeed, we see no reason why we should not send two or three more missionaries to China, to accompany Mrs. Lambuth on her return home. We see no reason why we have not had missions long ago in Central and South America. We see no reason why we should not send more men to California and Oregon. We see no reason why we should not take additional steps to preach the gospel to the hundreds of thousands of negroes who are yet without it, on the plantations of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas, and Florida.

If we were likely to do any thing more than we are doing in the missionary cause—if we were likely ever to take any steps beyond the old beaten track—if we were likely ever to have a well organized, fruitful, living, progressive missionary system—then we should be in favor of this African movement. But until we are likely to do something, we do not know that it will be of any advantage to propose doing a part of it, without the prospect of even accomplishing that. We do not need a "revival" in our missionary system, so much as we need a "new creation." Without it we are "dead"—if not in "trespasses," at least in the great "sin" of missionary omission.

THE LONDON RELIGIOUS DAILY.

For the last two or three years the entire apparatus of advertising and agitation has been employed to secure shareholders and funds for the origination of a daily newspaper, which was to eclipse the Times, and take a large and comprehensive view of politics, religion, and things in general, such as never yet had been achieved.

But, although some were induced to take shares, and the names of a few clergymen and Dissenting ministers at last appeared as directors, the scheme has not succeeded as well as had been hoped. It seemed, however, necessary that something should be done, and a reprieve is, therefore, granted to the Times, whilst it is announced that, for the present, the issue of a weekly paper must suffice, under the name of the Dial.

Several numbers of the Dial have already appeared, as we learn from an English letter, and not a few are startled at the unmistakeable latitudinarianism of the journal, which has called forth the rebuke of the Morning Advertiser in an article headed, "Infidelity recommended in a Religious Journal." The second issue of the Dial had an article on the atheistical Holyoake, in which he is lauded as a man "not far from the kingdom of God," and the last issue had an article of admiration of Theodore Parker, although the writer candidly admits that Mr. Parker is shunned not only by the evangelical Christians in America, but that their "prevailing intolerance," as the Dial calls it, is shared by the more respectable of the Unitarian body.

This seems a strange commencement for a newspaper which advertises two clergymen of the Church of England, one Independent minister, and Dr. Jabez Burns, General Baptist, as among its directors. All those of its proprietors who receive and revere the Bible as of God, must feel that they incur as serious moral responsibility in supporting a paper which eulogizes the works of a man, and the man himself, who glories in his hostility, not only to evangelical religion, but to the Bible itself, whose claims to be considered a Divine revelation he scornfully rejects.

OLDEST MANUSCRIPT OF THE BIBLE.

The new MS. Bible discovered by Prof. Tischendorf in the library of the monastery on Mount Sinai is to be printed in St. Petersburg with great magnificence, under his care and at the cost of the Imperial Government. A letter adds:

Prof. Tischendorf finds strong reasons for fixing its date in the first half of the fourth century; and he says, that as a means of determining the text of the sacred writings, especially those of the Apostles, it is far more important than even the MS. of the Vatican. The age of the new MS. has already been the subject of lively controversy, a concerted attack having been made upon Prof. Tischendorf's deductions by a number of St. Petersburg Academicians. His replies were, however, so satisfactory that his opponents have become converts to his belief.

This MS. is the oldest MS. of the Bible which has been preserved in the Christian world. It is far older than any other except the Vatican MS., to which it is superior in age and in completeness; for the MS. of the Vatican lacks five books entirely and one in part. Its authority is also confirmed by the quotations of the early Fathers, which agree with it more nearly than with any other MS.

Prof. Tischendorf has already filled ten folio volumes, with Bible documents, and may be presumed to know as much about the correct version of the Bible as anybody. His seventh edition of the New Testament is the standard. He will illustrate this edition profusely with fac-similes; and while he is sure that the original MS. will, as soon as it becomes known, be esteemed throughout Christendom as a great national treasure for Russia, he hopes to make the editio princeps of it a worthy monument of Imperial munificence, and one which the whole Christian world shall receive with grateful thanks.

ABOMINABLE BOOKS.

I notice some of the Mobile papers advertising Fremaid's "Funny," which has just been issued by a New York house. The book is one of the most licentious and demoralizing that was ever brought forth from that hot-bed of immorality, Paris. Written in the most brilliant imagery, the work does, nothing less, than boldly advocate partial infallibleness. The hero loves a married woman, and all his heartrending agonies turn upon his jealousy of the husband. I am pleased to see that a Savannah bookseller suppressed the sale of "Fanny," as soon as its vicious character became known to him.—New York Correspondence of Montgomery Advertiser.

Whenever our eyes rest on the announcement of a bad book, we feel that a power for evil has been let loose on society which no man can measure in the depth and scope of its consequences. Nor are we ever more gratified than when we see our secular papers, as in the instance above, lifting up an earnest protest against this gigantic iniquity. The amount of mischief done by such books, the poisonous influence inoculating the blood of thousands of human hearts, the inevitable ruin wrought by their sentiments, is beyond all computation. Bad books are the worst of evils. The same wickedness in men or women startles us into disgust and abhorrence, but in books, it is so artfully, so delicately, so insidiously infused into the soul that few, very few, are on their guard against its effects. Books are living things. The strongest life of the world is in them, and through that life we are thinking, feeling, acting, more or less, every hour of our being. Books are the silent legislators of society, forming its tastes, habits, manners; and therefore, the urgent need of care and watchfulness over what we read. Men take their deepest impress from books, not from associations with society and hence, the necessity for pure and wholesome reading.

DEATH OF DR. LIGHT.

At the last session of the Mississippi Conference we saw Rev. Dr. George D. Light for the first time. A healthier, heartier old gentleman, apparently, we never saw. In preaching, he seemed to lack neither mental nor physical strength. But in the midst of life we are in death. We learn that he died very suddenly at the residence of Rev. C. K. Marshall, at Vicksburg, recently. He was in his usual health as he passed through Jackson on his way to Vicksburg; indeed, some friends who saw him at the depot, remarked that they never saw him look better. On entering the house of Dr. Marshall he complained of feeling very unwell, and on taking a seat immediately ceased to breathe. He was that day just seventy years old, thus filling up exactly the Scripture term of life. His disease was rheumatism of the heart. He was a minister of the Methodist Church of high standing, and highly esteemed, as a Christian and a gentleman. Thus "one generation after another passeth away."

APOLOGETIC.

We regret to find that in our remarks upon the firemen's parade on Sunday, a few weeks since, we did injustice, and unintentionally of course, to the Postmaster of this city, S. F. Marks, Esq. The Mr. Marks who was connected with the celebration on that day was not the Postmaster. We are truly glad to find that a gentleman filling so important a position in this community did not sanction by his presence a proceeding, so discreditable to it; and we hereby make the amende honorable with the greatest pleasure. We confess that our mortification on the occasion was greatly increased by the fact that the procession was accompanied by several of our public men, and, particularly, as we thought, by the Postmaster. We had no more doubt that he was named I. N. Marks than we have of the initials of our own name. We trust this explanation will be satisfactory. We hope to be able to distinguish between the different "marks" hereafter.

THE BIBLE READ BY MOHAMMEDANS.

A letter from Constantinople states that more than 9000 Bibles have been sold to the Turks of that city, during the last four years. "The Bible is now sold in the streets, side by side with the Koran. The Turks say that not less than 10,000 of their nation in that city alone, are seriously reading the Christian Scriptures. Many in other parts of the Empire are thus engaged. At Jerusalem, eight soldiers and seven officers of the Turkish army meet regularly with one of Bishop Gobat's assistants, for the purpose of reading the Bible. A Turkish soldier was seen in Constantinople, reading it in the public street, and as he read, the tears streamed down his cheeks. The Bible-reading is not without fruit. Twenty or more converts have professed their Christian faith recently in Constantinople, most of them within a year past. New cases of inquiry arise every week. Thirty or forty regularly attend the Turkish service of Rev. Mr. Williams, a converted Mussulman."

"WHAT A BLIND MAN SAW IN ENGLAND."

Many new and striking "lectures" have been delivered by eminent men during the present season; but we (says the Christian Advocate and Journal,) think we are fully justified in saying that none has been more eminently successful than that of the Rev. W. H. Milburn; with the above title. Its combination of eloquence and humor with ample and varied information, its exquisite pictures of English scenery and domestic life, and especially its genial and graphic portraitures of distinguished men, give it all the elements required for great and deserved popularity. Immense audiences, of all classes of auditors, have listened to it with admiration and delight. Those who have heard it before will need no urging to go again.

Centenary of American Methodism.—From our exchanges we see that public opinion among Methodists, as to whether the Centenary should be celebrated in 1860 or '66, is about equally divided. If there is an iota of proof that American Methodism existed before 1766

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

MARCH 21, 1860.

THE CHINA MISSION.

Ms. Editor: You have announced that Sister Lambuth, the wife of our Missionary in China, had arrived in America. Yes a fine representation of the China Mission has been at my house: Sister Lambuth and her sweet little boy, Walter Thornton, with two native Chinese boys, John R. Lambuth and C. K. Marshall, preceded by a very large box of Chinese curiosities and specimens—almost a museum in itself.

My object in this communication is, to call the attention of every member of the Mississippi Conference, and all our dear liberal friends, to the fact that Sister Lambuth starts back to China about the 10th of April. Brethren, sisters, what you do do quickly. Brother Lambuth could not leave the mission. He has sent over his little children to be educated free from the influence of heathenism, among their relations, and two Chinese boys to be trained in civilized, and Christian life, and carry back its benefits to China. This has been done at an expense of at least $500 out of his own pocket, unless you help. Help—help now! Do not wait till to-morrow. Go put your money in the mail at once; send it to Rev. John R. Lambuth, Canton, marked inside from—(A. B.)—for Mrs. Mary Lambuth. The money is not only needed to replace that $500, but for woollen clothing, provisions, books for the scholars in China, and for a church and house-rent. Brethren, send up that money promised me for a church in China. Bro. Lambuth will send it on now. The Citizens' Bank in New Orleans will furnish you with a draft on London, on which there will be little or no loss in China.

And now, O my brethren—O my young brethren of the Mississippi Conference, what an commentary is the course of this devoted sister on the purposes, plans, practice and delays of our young men, pledged to the Missionary work, and that of our Conference! Yonder is the husband in China hard at his work. See the young, pious, energetic wife sailing over two oceans and many seas, bays and rivers—17,000 miles—bearing her two children and two Chinese boys, to be educated, and sent back to teach their countrymen the way to heaven. But does she come here to rest and enjoy the pleasures of civilized life with her friends? No, no! She hardly arrives in the dead of winter, in New York, before she is off with her boys to Tennessee and Mississippi; arrived there, she and her husband's father are off to Sharon, Canton, Vicksburg; next Sunday at Pearl River Church, and Tuesday she expects to start back and arrange for her departure, leaving the children and boys behind, to engage again in her blessed work in China.

Dr. Drake said at our Conference there were two young men ready, Dr. Watkins said the money was or would be ready.—Where are they? If all things are ready, come on. Send them with the recommendation of the Quarterly Conference and the Presiding Elder, and their doctors and others, and I will warrant the Bishop in charge of the China Mission will start them with Sister Lambuth. I depend more on her judgment than on the opinions of half a dozen speculating divines. In the former there is reality: here are the Chinese boys, with whom she converses and reads the Chinese language with as much facility as her own native tongue; they are already taught the way to heaven. One of them told me when he came to America he thought all were Christians, but he had found out that men in America were bad like bad China men. Then, turning, began to catechize me: "Are you a Christian? Do you love God? Are you going to heaven?" I showed him a Chinese god, and asked what he thought of it. He said, "Bad China man's god. My God is here," laying his hand on his bosom, "is here and away, away up yander," pointing towards heaven. Here is a reality. It, young men, can I more you? Mrs. Lambuth says they need at least six more missionaries. I charge you before God and our Lord Jesus Christ, who is ready to judge the quick and the dead, "confer not with flesh and blood." Come, awake, you and your wife; and if you have no wife, get one, and be off. Dr. Drake, who said you were ready, and Dr. Watkins, that the money is ready, will help you to be off in just five weeks from this day. I am a dying man. My venerable friend Dr. Light has gone. I shall soon follow. If this be the last act of my life, I glory in it, and say, as did Coxe, of Africa: "Let a thousand Missionaries fall before China is given up!" Now, brethren and sisters, send on the money, either as above, or to Dr. Kelly, Franklin, Tenn.; and let our sister go back full—"with enough and to spare."

T. C. THORNTON.

P.S.—More, if able, hereafter, about this mission and its prospects.

LETTER FROM NEW YORK.

Mr. Editor: For the last two years at least, the old John street Church in this city has been practically "a house of prayer." From one to three prayer-meetings a day have been held in it without intermission in that time. The second anniversary of these meetings was celebrated a few days ago, and was an occasion of some interest.

You remember that a few years ago there was an effort made to sell the old John street building and with the proceeds build a house further up town. The defeat of that project was wise, in my judgment. The plan was opposed chiefly, if I remember right, upon the ground of the venerable antiquity and associations of the old spot of ground. But apart from all considerations of this sort, I see great necessity for just such a house in this part of the city. You know in New York there is an "up town" and a "down town;" as the up town has extended and increased, the men of property have all removed further up, leaving the lower part of the city devoted to business, and the residence of laboring people. And the John street church is the only Methodist place of worship in this part of the city.

I clip the following from the New York Times of yesterday. I presume the information is correct, though I had not heard of it before. It is what might be expected.

SECESSION OF THE VIRGINIA METHODIST CHURCHES FROM THE PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE.—On Sunday of last week, (the 17th of February), remarks the Petersburg (Va.) Express, two large and influential churches in the county of Accomac, formerly belonging to the Philadelphia Conference, by a unanimous vote, placed themselves under the supervision of the preacher in charge of the Eastville Circuit of the Virginia Conference. Extraordinary efforts were made by their Northern pastor and sister churches to retain them, but both congregations determined to change their communion without a single dissenting voice, thus proving their allegiance to the Old Dominion and to her institutions by severing their connection with a Northern, and connecting themselves with a Southern Conference. These two churches, the Editor adds, have set a noble example which should be followed by every church in Virginia and Maryland connected with the Northern Conference.

Sober men are beginning to get sober. It is believed that the tone of the religious press in this quarter will change materially before long. I know of individual persons in high official position in the Northern Methodist Church, whose views in regard to slavery and abolition have modified very materially of late. The line between the two parties in the Church in this region—the abolitionists and conservatives—is deepening and widening every day.

And, by the way, right here; I regret that our Southern papers, correspondents, etc., have not let the Baltimore Conference alone more than they have. They have been trying to get right and be right, and do right, too, but we have scarcely given them a free, unmolested opportunity to do so. It is difficult to force a man to turn Splendor.

An official report represents that there has been a diminution of no less than 4000 families in New York in the year '59. This is attributed to the want of remunerative labor in the manufacturing districts of the city, and this is, perhaps, attributed to a falling off in Southern trade, and this to the folly of social interference. I have strong hopes that the time is not far distant when men men will understand better than they seem to at present, the rights and relations of sections and communities of people.

R. ARMEY.

EXCITING NEWS FROM THE TEXAN FRONTIER.

MORE INDIAN MURDERS.

The Belton Independent publishes a letter of the 2d inst., from which we extract the following:

A company of seven or eight men from Comanche (the county seat) struck a trail of horses yesterday on Sweet Water, and followed it up to the head; thence over on Salt creek, where they found an Indian camp, which, from appearances, they still occupied, though not at home. There were twelve head of horses hobbled and grazing around the camp. Several carcasses of horses lay scattered about in the vicinity of the camp, and their hides used as a covering to their teats. Sitting near one of these teats, against a tree, they found a rifle, which they took possession of. In a ravine near by they found about forty pounds of cured beef, wrapped up in a green hide, and covered with brush and leaves, which showed conclusively that they intended returning. Acting upon this supposition, they drove the horses into town, and at midnight eight men started back to guard the camp; but they were destined not to reach there, as in one-half-mile from town they met in the road some fifteen Indians on horseback. The boys instantly charged them, and the Indians fled, too, being pushed too closely, they turned and commenced acting on the offensive. The men had by this time pretty well fired out, and made a precipitate flight to town. Two men were wounded, and it is believed mortally. Their names are James and Kenneth McKenzie, brothers. It is not known for certain that any Indians were killed; the boys say that several fell from their horses, but no signs could be found this morning.

The intention of the Indians was, undoubtedly, to attack Comanche, and only failed in their attempt by this meeting. They were not the same Indians that belonged to the camp where the horses were found, because these Indians had left the camp on foot, as they were trailed a mile or so. There has been a good deal scouting around, and from every indication of camps, trails, etc., taken in connection with the number of Indians that have been seen, there are, at the lowest estimation, fifty Indians in the county. Part of the horses that were recovered were re-taken, last Tuesday, in broad day light, not over three hundred yards from the court house, in the town of Comanche; and the Indians were seen in the act.

The Indians have become perfectly indifferent, and do not try to conceal themselves. I do not believe there are a dozen horses in the county fit for service—but being the case, we are almost helpless, and the Indians are aware of the fact. The citizens in the vicinity of the county seat are all forting up, and look for a regular movement all the way down. The settlers in the James settlement on the Leon and Sabana have stampeded, and are now in Stephensville. If you have any men who want a little excitement, send them up; and if you have a stout, able-bodied horse to spare, and will send him to me, I shall be under the highest obligations to you. I am almost sick with excitement and impatience. We are nearly in hearing of their devilish yells, but can not go half way to meet them.

The same paper furnishes us another column the following later intelligence from the scene of disturbance: Mr. Lon. Price came to town as we were going to press, having left Comanche on last Saturday night. His reports are of the most exciting character, and truly distressing. The two McKenzies, who were wounded in the fight, have since died. The Indians on Saturday evening came to Mr. John Taggart's, and drove a horse into the yard to catch it, and while there murdered two children. Mr. Taggart and his little girl had gone to one of the neighbors, and Mrs. Taggart says she saw the bonnet and shawl of her little girl on the Indian, hence the strong supposition is that Mr. Taggart and the daughter are killed. On the same evening Gideon Force man was murdered within three miles of Comanche. The cow driver has been out for several days, and can find no cattle, so they conclude that their cattle are all driven out of the country. The people at Dora and Comanche are all forted up and out of provisions, and, with their cattle gone, are in a desperate condition to live. They send down for help, and want some provisions, for which the money will be paid at any price. Mr. Price said he ate two meals without any bread, and that it was not there to procure. The Indians are well armed both with bows and guns, and can use them like white men. The two men who were killed in the fight were in the hottest of the battle, and one of them said he killed an Indian. They were shot through with arrows. Lieutenant White, with ten men, left Comanche on last Sunday morning, with the intention of trying his hand with them; so we shall wait with no little anxiety to hear the result of the scout.

